Inter regalia /Întar râgîl(î)ya/. In English law, among the things belonging to the sovereign. Among these are rights of salmon fishing, mines of gold and silver, forests, forfeitures, casualties of superiority, etc., which are called "regalia minora," and may be conveyed to a subject. The regalia majora include the several branches of the royal prerogative, which are inseparable from the person of the sovereign.

Interregnum /Întârângnâm/. An interval between reigns.
The period which elapses between the death of a sovereign and the election of another. The vacancy which occurs when there is no government.

Interrogation. In criminal law, process of questions propounded by police to person arrested or suspected to seek solution of crime. Such person is entitled to be informed of his rights, including right to have counsel present, and the consequences of his answers. If the police fail or neglect to give these warnings, the questions and answers are not admissiable in evidence at the trial or hearing of the arrested person. Miranda v. State of Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694. See also Confession; Custodial Interrogation; Miranda Rule.

Custodial Interrogation. Questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person has been taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way. See also Miranda Rule.

Interrogatório /Îterogatôwrâ/. In French law, an act which contains the interrogatories made by the judge.
to the person accused, on the facts which are the object of the accusation, and the answers of the accused.

Interrogatories /intəˈrogət(ə)ri/yz/. A set or series of written questions drawn up for the purpose of being propounded to a party, witness, or other person having information of interest in the case.

A discovery device consisting of written questions about the case submitted by one party to the other party or witness. The answers to the interrogatories are usually given under oath, i.e., the person answering the questions signs a sworn statement that the answers are true. Fed.R. Civ.P. 33.

The court may submit to the jury, together with appropriate forms for a general verdict, written interrogatories upon one or more issues of fact the decision of which is necessary to a verdict. See Fed.R. Civ.P. 49.

See also Discovery; Special interrogatories.

In terrorem /in tɛrˈrərəm/. Lit. In fright or alarm or terror. In terror or warning; by way of threat. Applied to legacies given upon condition that the recipient shall not dispute the validity or the dispositions of the will; such a condition being usually regarded as a mere threat. See In terrorem clause.

In terrorem clause. A provision in a document such as a lease or will designed to frighten a beneficiary or lessee into doing or not doing something; e.g. clause in a will providing for revocation of a bequest or devise if the legatee or devisee contests the will. A condition "in terrorem" is a provision in a will which threatens beneficiaries with forfeiture of their legacies and bequests should they contest validity or dispositions of will. Taylor v. Rapp, 217 Ga. 654, 124 S.E.2d 271, 272.

In terrorem populi /in tɛrˈrərəm pɒˈpɪlə/. Lat. To the terror of the people. A technical phrase formerly necessary in indictments for riots.

Interrupto /inˈtɛrpətəʊ/ow/. Lat. Interruption. A term used both in the civil and common law of prescription.

Interruptio multiplex non tollit preemptionem semel obtentam /ˌɪntəˈrɛptəʊʊkwən ˌmʌltəˈplɛks nɒn tɒlt prəˈskrɪphəʊnəm ˌsɛməl əbˈtɛntəm/. Frequent interruption does not take away a prescription once secured.

Interruption. A break in continuity or uniformity. The occurrence of some act or fact, during the period of prescription, which is sufficient to arrest the running of the statute of limitations. It is said to be either "natural" or "civil," the former being caused by the act of the party; the latter by the legal effect or operation of some fact or circumstance. Interruption of the possession is where the right is not enjoyed or exercised continuously; interruption of the right is where the person having or claiming the right ceases the exercise of it in such a manner as to show that he does not claim to be entitled to exercise it.

Inter rusticos /intəˈrʌstəkəʊz/. Among the illiterate or unlearned.

Intersection. As applied to a street or highway means the space occupied by two streets at the point where they cross each other. Space common to both streets or highways, formed by continuing the curb lines. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickson, 27 Tenn.App. 752, 173 S.W.2d 714, 718.

Point of intersection of two roads is the point where their middle lines intersect. But the term may also mean the point which each of two approaching vehicles will reach at the same moment. "Intersection" may also apply where street or highway runs into but without crossing another; e.g., a "T" intersection.

Inter se or inter sese /ˌɪntə sɛs(ə)/. Lat. Among or between themselves; used to distinguish rights or duties between two or more parties from their rights or duties to others.

Interspousal. Between husband and wife.

Interspousal immunity. See Husband-wife tort actions.

Interstate. Between two or more states; between places or persons in different states; concerning or affecting two or more states politically or territorially. See also Intra-state commerce.

Interstate agreements. See Interstate compact.

Interstate and foreign commerce. Commerce between a point in one State and a point in another State, between points in the same State through another State or through a foreign country, between points in a foreign country or countries through the United States, and commerce between a point in the United States and a point in a foreign country or in a Territory or possession of the United States, but only insofar as such commerce takes place in the United States. The term "United States" means all the States and the District of Columbia. 18 U.S.C.A. § 831.

Interstate commerce. Traffic, intercourse, commercial trading, or the transportation of persons or property between or among the several states of the Union, or from or between points in one state and points in another state; commerce between two states, or between places lying in different states. Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 6 L.Ed. 23; Wabash, etc. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U.S. 557, 7 S.Ct. 4, 30 L.Ed. 244. It comprehends all the component parts of commercial intercourse between different states. Furst v. Brewster, 282 U.S. 493, 51 S.Ct. 295, 296, 75 L.Ed. 478. See Balancing of interests.

Interstate Commerce Act. The act of congress of February 4, 1887 (49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.), designed to regulate commerce between the states, and particularly the transportation of persons and property, by carriers, between interstate points, prescribing that charges for such transportation shall be reasonable and just, prohibiting unjust discrimination, rebates, draw-backs, preferences, pooling of freights, etc., requiring schedules of rates to be published, establishing a commission to carry out the measures enacted, and prescribing the powers and duties of such commission and the procedure before it.

Interstate Commerce Commission. The I.C.C. was created by Congress to regulate, in the public interest, carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act which are engaged in transportation in interstate commerce and in foreign commerce to the extent that it takes place within the United States. Surface transportation under the Commission's jurisdiction includes railroads, trucking companies, bus lines, freight forwarders, water carriers, oil pipelines, transportation brokers, and express agencies. The regulatory laws vary with the type of transportation; however, they generally involve certification of carriers seeking to provide transportation for the public, rates, adequacy of service, purchases, and mergers. The I.C.C. assures that the carriers it regulates will provide the public with rates and services that are fair and reasonable.
INTERSTATE COMPACT

Interstate compact. A voluntary agreement between two or more states which is designed to meet common problems of the parties concerned. Compacts on major matters must receive the consent of the U.S. Congress as specified in Article I, Section 10 of the Constitution. They usually relate to such things as conservation, boundary problems, education, port control, flood control, and penal matters.

Interstate extradition. The reclamation and surrender, according to due legal proceedings, of a person who, having committed a crime in one of the states of the Union, has fled into another state to evade justice or escape prosecution. Art. IV, § 2, U.S.Const. See Extradition; Interstate rendition.

Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act. Federal Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1701 et seq.), the purpose of which is to provide purchasers and lessees of undeveloped land with the information they need in order to make an informed decision with regard to the land being sold or leased. As indicated by its title, this is a "disclosure" act.

Interstate law. That branch of law which affords rules and principles for the determination of controversies between citizens of different states in respect to mutual rights or obligations, in so far as the same are affected by the diversity of their citizenship or by diversity in the laws or institutions of the several states.

Interstate rendition. Right of one state to demand from asylum state surrender of a fugitive from justice from the demanding state when the fugitive is found in the asylum state. Art. IV, § 2, U.S.Const. Application of Dugger, 17 Ariz.App. 297, 497 P.2d 413. Nearly all states have adopted the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act. See Extradition.

Interval ownership. Type of ownership of second (i.e. vacation) home whereby the property is owned for only an interval (e.g. two weeks or a month) of the year. Each owner receives a deed covering his interval period.

Intervening act. Such act of third person in order to break chain of causation and obviate liability for original breach of duty must be a superseding cause and one which original wrongdoer was not bound to anticipate as the natural or ordinary result of his acts. Littell v. Argus Production Co., C.C.A.Kan., 78 F.2d 955, 957. See also Intervening cause.

Intervening agency. To render an original wrong a remote cause, an "intervening agency" must be independent of such wrong, adequate to produce the injury, so interrupting the natural sequence of events as to produce a result different from what would have been produced, and one that could not have been reasonably expected from the original wrong. An independent "intervening agency" which will protect the original wrongdoer must be the efficient cause of the injury of which complaint is made, and not a negligent act or omission of such agency concurring with or succeeding the original negligence permitted by the original wrongdoer to continue and which in the natural course of events results in such injury. In short, the result prevented by the intervening agency must be the injury complained of, and not the resultant for that injury. Swanson v. Slagal, 212 Ind. 394, 8 N.E.2d 993, 1000. See also Intervening cause.

Intervening cause. The "intervening cause," which will relieve of liability for an injury, is an independent cause which intervenes between the original wrongful act or omission and the injury, turns aside the natural sequence of events, and produces a result which would not otherwise have followed and which could not have been reasonably anticipated. An act of an independent agency which destroys the causal connection between the negligent act of the defendant and the wrongful injury; the independent act being the immediate cause, in which case damages are not recoverable because the original wrongful act is not the proximate cause. An "intervening efficient cause" is a new and independent force which breaks the causal connection between the original wrong and injury, and itself becomes direct and immediate cause of injury. Phillabaum v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 315 Ill. 131, 145 N.E. 806, 808.

In criminal law, a cause which comes between an antecedent and a consequence; it may be either independent or dependent, but in either case it is sufficient to negate criminal responsibility. See also Interfunction; Intervenying agency.

Intervening damages. See Damages.

Intervenor. An intervenor is a person who voluntarily interposes in an action or other proceeding with the leave of the court. See Intervention.

Intervention. The procedure by which a third person, not originally a party to the suit, but claiming an interest in the subject matter, comes into the case, in order to protect his right or interpose his claim. The grounds and procedure are usually defined by various state statutes or Rules of Civil Procedure; e.g., Fed.R. Civil P. 24. Intervention may exist either as a matter of right (Rule 24(a)) or at the discretion of the court (Rule 24(b)).

In English ecclesiastical law, the proceeding of a third person, who, not being originally a party to the suit or proceeding, but claiming an interest in the subject-matter in dispute, in order the better to pro-

Inter virum et uxorern /inter váyrum ed áksörum/. Between husband and wife.

Inter vivos /inter váywvors/. Between the living; from one living person to another. Where property passes by conveyance, the transaction is said to be inter vivos, to distinguish it from a case of succession or devise. So an ordinary gift from one person to another is called a “gift inter vivos,” to distinguish it from a gift made in contemplation of death (mors causa) or a testamentary gift.

Inter vivos gift. Gift made when donor is living and provides that gift take effect while donor is living as contrasted with testamentary gift which is to take effect on death of donor (testator).

Inter vivos transfer. A transfer of property during the life of the owner. To be distinguished from testamentary transfers where the property passes at death.

Inter vivos trust. Trust created during lifetime of settlor and to become effective in his lifetime as contrasted with a testamentary trust which takes effect at death of settlor or testator. See also Trust.

Intestatiblis /intéstéybalas/. Lat. A witness incompetent to testify.

Intestable. One who has not testamentary capacity; e.g., an infant, lunatic, or person civilly dead.

Intestacy /intéstásie/. The state or condition of dying without having made a valid will, or without having disposed by will of a part of his property.

In testamentis plenius testatoris intentionem scrutamur /in těstaménwas pléniosy těstátorás intěntšiyónwam skrúwtéymar/. In wills we more especially seek out the intention of the testator.

In testamentis plenius voluntates testamentium interpretantur /in těstaménwas pléniosy wółántéyédyz těst-táňsh(y)am íntárpréntántar/. In wills the intention of testators is more especially regarded.

In testamentis ratio tacita non debet considerari, sed verba solum spectari debent; adeo per divinationem mentis a verbis recedere durum est /in těstaménwas réysh(y)ow tášdo nón dékot kánsidéráray, séd várba sówłam špektéráy débant, ádiyow pér dávńéyšiyónwam méntas éy várbas rásyódiy dy(y)úram ést/. In wills an unexpressed meaning ought not to be considered, but the words alone ought to be looked to; so hard is it to recede from the words by guessing at the intention.

Intestate. Without making a will. A person is said to die intestate when he dies without making a will, or dies without leaving anything to testify what his wishes were with respect to the disposal of his property after his death. The word is also often used to signify the person himself. Thus, in speaking of the property of a person who died intestate, it is common to say “the intestate’s property;” i.e., the property of the person dying in an intestate condition. Compare Testate.

Intestate laws. State statutes which provide and prescribe the devolution of estates of persons who die without disposing of their estates by will.

Intestate succession. A succession is called “intestate” when the deceased has left no will, or when his will has been revoked or annulled as irregular.

Intestato /intéstéydow/. Lat. In the civil law, intestate; without a will.

Intestatus /intéstęyds/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, an intestate; one who dies without a will.

Intestatus decedit, qui aut omnino testamentum non fecit; aut non jure fecit; aut id quod fecerat ruptum irritumve factum est; aut nemo ex eo heres exstitit. A person dies intestate who either has made no testament at all or has made one not legally valid; or if the testament he has made be revoked, or made useless; or if no heir has come forward.

In testimonium /in těstamówn(i)ýam/. Lat. In witness; in evidence whereof.

In the course of employment. The phrase “in the course of” employment, as used in workers’ compensation acts, relates to time, place and circumstances under which accident occurred, and means injury happened while worker was at work in his or her employer’s service. Peter Klewitt Sons’ Co. v. Industrial Commission, 88 Ariz. 164, 354 P.2d 28, 30.

Intimacy /intámasiý/. As generally applied to persons, it is understood to mean a proper, friendly relation of the parties, but it is frequently used to convey the idea of an improper relation.

Intimate. Close in friendship or acquaintance, familiar, near, confidential. Atkins Corporation v. Touny, 6 Cal.2d 206, 57 P.2d 480, 484. To communicate indirectly; to hint or suggest.

Intimation. In the civil law, a notification to a party that some step in a legal proceeding is asked or will be taken. Particularly, a notice given by the party taking an appeal, to the other party, that the court above will hear the appeal.

Intimidation. Unlawful coercion; extortion; duress; putting in fear.

To take, or attempt to take, “by intimidation” means willfully to take, or attempt to take, by putting in fear of bodily harm. Such fear must arise from the willful conduct of the accused, rather than from some mere temperamental timidity of the victim; however, the fear of the victim need not be so great as to result in terror, panic, or hysteria.

Intitle. An old form of “entitle.”

Into. A preposition signifying to the inside of; within. It expresses entrance, or a passage from the outside of a thing to its interior, and follows verbs expressing motion. It has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, “at,” “inside of,” and “to,” and has been distinguished from the words “from” and “through.”

Intol and uttol. Toll or custom paid for things imported and exported, or bought in and sold out.
In totem verbs /in tódáydam várbás/. In so many words; in precisely the same words; for word for word.

In toto /in tówdow/. In the whole; wholly; completely; as the award is void in toto.

In toto et pars continetur /in tówdow ét párz köntoñyûtár/. In the whole the part also is contained.

Intoxicating liquor. Any liquor used as a beverage, and which, when so used in sufficient quantities, ordinarily or commonly produces entire or partial intoxication. Any liquor intended for use as a beverage or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol, either obtained by fermentation or by the additional process of distillation, in such proportion that it will produce intoxication when imbibed in such quantities as may practically be drunk. Frisvold v. Leaky, 15 Cal.App.2d 752, 60 P.2d 151, 153. See also Alcoholic liquors.

Intoxication. Term comprehends situation where, by reason of drinking intoxicants, an individual does not have the normal use of his physical or mental faculties, thus rendering him incapable of acting in the manner in which an ordinarily prudent and cautious man, in full possession of his faculties, using reasonable care, would act under like conditions. Hendy v. Geary, 105 R.I. 419, 252 A.2d 435, 441.

A disturbance of mental or physical capacities resulting from the introduction of substances into the body. Model Penal Code, § 2.08.

The fact that a person charged with a crime was in an intoxicated condition at the time the alleged crime was committed is a defense only if such condition was involuntarily produced and rendered such person substantially incapable of knowing or understanding the wrongfulness of his conduct and of conforming his conduct to the requirements of law. An act committed while in a state of voluntary intoxication is not less criminal by reason thereof, but when a particular intent or other state of mind is a necessary element to constitute a particular crime, the fact of intoxication may be taken into consideration in determining such intent or state of mind.

Under most state statutes dealing with driving while intoxicated, “intoxication” includes such by alcohol or by drug or by both.

Confirmed habits of intoxication caused by voluntary and excessive use of liquor is a ground for divorce under many state divorce statutes.

See also Habitual drunkenness; Intemperance.

Public intoxication. Public intoxication is being on a highway or street or in a public place or public building while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, narcotics or other drug to the degree that one may endanger himself or other persons or property, or annoy persons in his vicinity.

Intoximeter. A trade name for scientific breath testing device that operates on assumption that concentration of blood alcohol bears fixed relation to concentration of alcohol in the deep lung, or alveolar air. Also commonly called breathalyzer test.

Intra /intra/. Lat. In; near; within. “Infra” or “inter” has taken the place of “intra” in many of the more modern Latin phrases.

Intra annu spatium /intra énay spéysh(ý)ám/. Within the space of a year.

In traditionibus scriptorum, non quod dictum est, sed quod gestum est, inspicitur /in tradishiyownab skriptóran, nón kwód diktám ést, séd kwód jéstam ést, snípíssadár/. In the delivery of writings, not what is said, but what is done, is looked to.

Intra fidem /intra fáydam/. Within belief; credible.

In trajectu/in tratajk(y)uw/. In the passage over; on the voyage over.

Intraliminal /intraлиманал/. In mining law, the term “interaliminal rights” denotes the right to mine, take, and possess all such bodies or deposits of ore as lie within the four planes formed by the vertical extension downward of the boundary lines of the claim; as distinguished from “extraliminal,” or more commonly “extralateral,” rights.

Intra luctus tempus /intra läktas témps/. Within the time of mourning.

Intra menia /intra miyn(i)ya/. Within the walls (of a house). A term applied to domestic or menial servants.

Intramural. Within the walls. Existing within. The confines of an institution or governmental body. The powers of a municipal corporation are “intramural” and “extramural”; the one being the powers exercised within the corporate limits, and the other being those exercised without.

In transitu/in trénizat(y)uw/. In transit; on the way or passage; while passing from one person or place to another. In the course of transportation.

Intra parietes /intra paráydyiz/. Between walls; among friends; out of court; without litigation.

Intra præsidia /intra prásid(i)ya/. Within the defenses. See Infra præsida.

Intra quatuor marias /intra kwóduwar mëria/. Within the four seas.

Intrastate commerce. Commerce within a state, as opposed to commerce between states (i.e. interstate). See also Balancing of Interests; Commerce; compare interstate commerce.

Intra vires /intra váyryiz/. An act is said to be intra vires (“within the power”) of a person or corporation when it is within the scope of his or its powers or authority. It is the opposite of ultra vires (q.v.).

Intrinsecum servitium /intrínzásam sarvish(i)ym/. Lat. In old English law, common and ordinary duties with the lord’s court.

Intrinsic. Internal; inherent. Pertaining to the essential nature of a thing.

Intrinsice fraud. That fraud which occurs within framework of actual conduct of trial and pertains to and affects determination of issues presented therein, and it may be accomplished by perjury, or by use of false or forged instruments, or by concealment or misrepresentation of evidence. Auerbach v. Samuels, 10 Utah 2d 152, 349 P.2d 1112, 1114. Fraud is "intrinsic fraud" where judgment is founded on fraudulent instruments or perjured evidence or the fraudulent actions pertain to an issue involved in original action and litigated therein. Alleghany Corp. v. Kirby, D.C. N.Y., 218 F.Supp. 164, 183.

Species of fraud which renders the document void as, for example, an instrument signed by one who had neither knowledge nor reasonable opportunity to obtain knowledge of its character or its essential terms, is not enforceable even by a holder in due course because such fraud is intrinsic. U.C.C. § 3–305(2)(c).

Intrinsic value. The true, inherent and essential value of thing, not depending upon accident, place or person but same everywhere and to everyone. King v. U. S., D.C.Colo., 282 F.Supp. 767, 776. The value of the thing itself, rather than any special features which make its market value different.

Introduction. The part of a writing which sets forth preliminary matter, or facts tending to explain the subject.

Intromission. Introduction; admission.

In English law, term means dealings in stock, goods, or cash of a principal coming into the hands of his agent, to be accounted for by the agent to his principal.

Intruder. One who enters upon land without either right of possession or color of title. In a more restricted sense, a stranger who, on the death of the ancestor, enters on the land, unlawfully, before the heir can enter. Williams v. Alt, 226 N.Y. 283, 123 N.E. 499, 500. Also one who intrudes on office and assumes to exercise its functions without legal title or color of right thereto. State ex rel. City of Republic v. Smith, 345 Mo. 1158, 139 S.W.2d 929, 933; Alleger v. School Dist. No. 16, Newton County, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 660, 663. See Encroachment; Intrusion; Trespass.

Intrusion. Act of wrongfully entering upon or taking possession of property of another. See also Encroachment; Trespass.

At common law, a species of injury by ouster or amotion of possession from the freehold, being an entry of a stranger, after a particular estate of freehold is determined, before him in remainder or revision. Boylan v. Deinzer, 45 N.J.Eq. 485, 18 A. 119, 121.

Intrust. To confer a trust upon; to deliver to another something in trust or to commit something to another with a certain confidence regarding his care, use or disposal of it. See also Bailment; Fiduciary; Trust.

Intuitus /antiswazas/. Lat. A view; regard; contemplation. Diverso intuitu (q.v.), with a different view.

Inundation. To flood or swamp. The overflow of waters by coming out of their natural bed or confines. See also Backwater; Flood; Water; Water course.

Inure /inyůr/. To take effect; to result. In property law, to come to the benefit of a person or to fix his interest therein.

Inurement /inyůrmant/. Useful, beneficial; serving to the use or benefit of a person or thing. Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U.S. 578, 25 L.Ed. 618.

Inutilis labor et sine fructu non est effectus legis /inůwdaðað daybr et sənii frəkt(ə)yən nən est afěktəs lýjəs/. Useless and fruitless labor is not the effect of law. The law forbids such recoveries whose ends are vain, chargeable, and unprofitable.

In utroque jure /in yatrəkwikwi jůri/. In both laws; i.e., the civil and canon law.

Invadiare /inwədywirə/. To pledge or mortgage lands.

Invadiatio /inwədywirəsh(ə)yəw/. A pledge or mortgage.

Invaditus /inwədywirədəs/. One who is under pledge; one who has had sureties or pledges given for him.

Invalid. Vain; inadequate to its purpose; not of binding force or legal efficacy; lacking in authority or obligation. See also Illega; Void; Voldable.

Invasion. An encroachment upon the rights of another. The incursion of an army for conquest or plunder. Act of invading; intrusion; encroachment.

Invasiones /inwəvyiz(h)iwəniwiz/. The inquisition of serjeanties and knights' fees.

Invasion of corpus principal. Payments made from the sum created to generate income (e.g. trust res) and not from the income so generated.

Invasion of privacy. The unwarranted appropriation or exploitation of one's personality, publicizing one's private affairs with which public has no legitimate concern, or wrongful intrusion into one's private activities, in such a manner as to cause mental suffering, shame or humiliation to person of ordinary sensibilities. Shorter v. Retail Credit Co., D.C.S.C., 251 F.Supp. 329, 330. Violation of right which one has to be left alone and unnoticed if he so chooses. Such invasion may constitute an actionable tort. See Eavesdropping; Privacy Acts.

Invecta et illata /inwɛktə ed iliətə/. Lat. In the civil law, things carried in and brought in. Articles brought into a hired tenement by the hirer or tenant, and which became or were pledged to the lessor as security for the rent.

Inveigle. To "inveigle" means to lure or entice or lead astray, by false representations or promises, or other deceitful means.

Inveniens libellum famosum et non corruppens punitur /inwɛn(y)n(ə)yən(d)əz lábləm fəməwəsm et nən kərəmpənd(ə)z pywəndərs/. He who finds a libel and does not destroy it is punished.

Invent. To find out something new; to devise, contrive, and produce something not previously known or existing, by the exercise of independent investigation and experiment; particularly applied to machines, mechanical appliances, compositions, and patentable inventions of every sort. To create. E. W. Bliss Co.

inventor /in'ventər/ n. One who invents or has invented. One who finds out or contrives some new thing; one who devises some new art, manufacture, mechanical appliance, or process; one who invents a patentable contrivance. See Invention.

inventory /in'vərətər/ n. A detailed list of articles of property; a list or schedule of property, containing a designation or description of each specific article; quantity of goods or materials on hand or in stock; an itemized list of the various articles constituting a collection, estate, stock in trade, etc., with their estimated or actual values. In law, the term is often applied to such a list made by an executor, administrator, or assignee in bankruptcy.

Goods held for sale or lease or furnished under contracts of service; also, raw materials, work in process or materials used or consumed in a business. U.C.C. § 9-109(4). Also, written schedule of such goods.

inventive /in'ventiv/ adj. Lat. Found. Thesaurus inventus, treasure-trove. Non est inventus, [he] is not found.

inventorship /in'ventorship/ n. The status of an inventor. See Inventor.

Invention /in'ventən/ n. In patent law, the act or operation of finding out something new; the process of contriving and producing something not previously known or existing, by the exercise of independent investigation and experiment. Also the article or contrivance or composition so invented. Smith v. Nichols, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 112, 22 L.Ed. 566; Hollister v. Mfg. Co., 113 U.S. 59, 5 S.Ct. 717, 28 L.Ed. 901.

Invention is a concept; a thing involved in the mind; it is not a revelation of something which exists and was unknown, but is creation of something which did not exist before, possessing elements of novelty and utility in kind and measure different from and greater than what the art might expect from skilled workers. Pursche v. Atlas Scraper & Engineering Co., C.A.Cal., 300 F.2d 467, 472. The finding out—the contriving, the creating of something which did not exist, and was not known before, and which can be made useful and advantageous in the pursuits of life, or which can add to the enjoyment of mankind. Not every improvement is invention; but to entitle a thing to protection it must be the product of some exercise of the inventive faculties and it must involve something more than what is obvious to persons skilled in the art to which it relates. Mere adaptation of known process to clearly analogous use is not invention. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. v. U.S. Rubber Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 79 F.2d 948, 952, 953.

Inventive skill has been defined as that intuitive faculty of the mind put forth in the search for new results, or new methods, creating what had not before existed, or bringing to light what lay hidden from vision; it differs from a suggestion of that common experience which arises spontaneously and by a necessity of human reasoning in the minds of those who had become acquainted with the circumstances with which they had to deal. Hollister v. Mfg. Co., 113 U.S. 59, 5 S.Ct. 717, 28 L.Ed. 901. Invention, in the nature of improvements, is the double mental act of discerning, in existing machines, processes or articles, some deficiency, and pointing out the means of overcoming it.

For “Examination of invention”, see Examination. See also Patent.

Inventions /in'venchənizəm/ n. See Invention.

inventorship rights. See Inventor.

investigator /in'vestəgər/ n. Any person who investigates. See Investigator.

Investigation /in'vestəgəشن/ n. The act of investigating. See Investigate.

Investigate. To follow up step by step by patient inquiry or observation. To trace or track; to search into; to examine and inquire into with care and accuracy; to find out by careful inquisition; examination; the taking of evidence; a legal inquiry. See also Discovery; Inspection.

Investigatory powers. Authority conferred on governmental agencies to inspect and compel disclosure of facts germane to the investigation. See also Inquest; Inspection laws; Search-warrant; Subpoena.

Investitative fact /in'vestətiv/ n. The fact by means of which a right comes into existence; e.g., a grant of a monopoly; the death of one's ancestor.

Investiture /in'vestəʃər/ n. A ceremony which accompanied the grant of lands in the feudal ages, and consisted in the open and notorious delivery of possession in the presence of the other vassals, which perpetuated among them the era of their new acquisition at the time when the art of writing was very little known; and thus the evidence of the property was reposed in the memory of the neighborhood, who, in case of disputed title, were afterwards called upon to decide upon it.

In Ecclesiastical law, investiture is one of the formalities by which the election of a bishop is confirmed by the archbishop.

Investment. An expenditure to acquire property or other assets in order to produce revenue; the asset so acquired. The placing of capital or laying out of money in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment. Securities & Exchange Commission v. Wickham, D.C.Minn., 12 F.Sup. 245, 247. To purchase securities of a more or less permanent nature, or to place money or property in business ventures or real estate, or otherwise lay it out, so that it may produce a revenue or income. See also Investment contract.

To clothe one with the possession of a fief or benefice. See Investiture.

For 'Capital investment', see Capital. See also Legal investments; Legal list; Prudent Man Rule.

Investment advisor. Any person who, for compensation, engages in the business of advising others, either directly or through publications or writings, as to the value of securities or as to the advisability of investing in, purchasing, or selling securities, or who, for compensation and as a part of a regular business, issues or promulgates analyses or reports concerning securities. Uniform Securities Act, § 401(f).

Investment banker. An underwriter, the middleman between the corporation issuing new securities and the public. The usual practice is for one or more investment bankers to buy outright from a corporation a new issue of stocks or bonds. The group forms a syndicate to sell the securities to individuals and institutions. Investment bankers also distribute very large blocks of stocks or bonds—perhaps held by an estate. Thereafter the market in the security may be over-the-counter or on a stock exchange.

Investment banking. Underwriting and selling primarily new issues of stocks and bonds to investors. See Investment banker.

Investment bill. Type of bill of exchange purchased at a discount and intended to be held to maturity in the form of an investment.

Investment company. Any issuer which: (1) is or holds itself out as being engaged primarily, or proposes to engage primarily, in the business of investing, reinvesting, or trading in securities; (2) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of issuing face amount certificates of the installment type, or has been engaged in such business and has any such certificates outstanding; or (3) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of investing, reinvesting, owning, holding, or trading in securities, and owns or proposes to acquire investment securities having a value exceeding 40 percent of the value of such issuer's total assets (exclusive of Government securities and cash items) on an unconsolidated basis. Investment Company Act, § 3.

A company or trust which uses its capital to invest in other companies. There are two principal types: the closed-end and the open-end, or mutual fund. Shares in closed-end investment companies are readily transferable in the open market and are bought and sold like other shares. Capitalization of these companies remains the same unless action is taken to change. Open-end funds sell their own new shares to investors, stand ready to buy back their old shares, and are not listed. Open-end funds are so called because their capitalization is not fixed; they issue more shares as demanded. See also Mutual fund.

Investment contract. A contract, transaction or scheme whereby a person invests his money in a common enterprise and is led to expect profits solely from the efforts of the promoter or a third party. S. E. C. v. W. J. Howey Co., 328 U.S. 293, 298, 66 S.Ct. 1100, 1103, 90 L.Ed. 1244, 1249. The placing of capital or laying out of money in a way intended to secure income or profit from its employment. State by Spannas v. Coin Wholesalers, Inc., Minn., 250 N.W.2d 583.

To fall within scope of the federal securities acts an "investment contract" must involve three elements: (1) an investment of money, (2) in a common enterprise, and (3) an expectation of profits solely from the efforts of others. Hector v. Wiens, C.A.Mont., 533 F.2d 429, 432.

Investment credit. See Investment tax credit.

Investment property. Generally, any property purchased for the primary purpose of profit. The profit may be from income or from resale.

Investment security. Under U.C.C., an instrument issued in bearer or registered form as a type commonly recognized as a medium for investment and evidencing a share or other interest in the property or enterprise of the issuer. § 8–102(1)(a). See also Investment contract; Security.

Investment tax credit. Federal legislation designed to stimulate investment by business in capital goods and equipment by allowing a percentage of the purchase price as a credit against corporate taxes due and not merely as a deduction from taxable income. See also Recapture of investment tax credit.

Investment trust. A company which sells its own stock and invests the money in stocks, real estate, and other investments. See also Mutual fund; Real estate investment trust.

In vinciples /ɪnˈvɪŋkəlɪs/. In chains; in actual custody. Applied also, figuratively, to the condition of a person who is compelled to submit to terms which oppression and his necessities impose on him.

Inviolability /ɪnˈvaɪələbələti/. The attribute of being secured against violation. Safe from trespass or assault.
INVIOLATE

Invitatio. In the law of negligence, and with reference to trespasses on realty, invitation is the act of one who solicits or incites others to enter upon, remain in, or make use of, his property or structures thereon, or who so arranges the property or the means of access to it or of transit over it as to induce the reasonable belief that he expects and intends that others shall come upon it or pass over it. Thus the proprietor of a store, theatre or amusement park "invites" the public to come upon his premises for such purposes as are connected with its intended use.

The differences in duties of care owed as between and among licensees, business guests and social guests have been eliminated in many jurisdictions so that today reasonable care is owed to all lawful visitors and this phrase includes all but trespassers. Mounsey v. Ellard, 363 Mass. 693, 297 N.E.2d 43.

An invitation may be express, when the owner or occupier of the land by words invites another to come upon it or make use of it or of something thereon; or it may be implied when such owner or occupier by acts or conduct leads another to believe that the land or something thereon was intended to be used as he uses them, and that such use is not only acquiesced in by the owner or occupier, but is in accordance with the intention or design for which the way or place or thing was adapted and prepared and allowed to be used.

See also Attractive nuisance doctrine; Invitee.

Invitation to bid. Type of advertisement used by one who desires bids to be submitted for a particular job; it usually contains sufficient specifications to permit an intelligent bid.

Invited error. Underlying basis for rule of "invited error" is that where one party offers inadmissible evidence, which is received, opponent may then offer similar facts whose only claim to admission is that they negative or explain or counterbalance prior inadmissible evidence, presumably upon the same fact, subject or issue. Wynn v. Sundquist, 259 Or. 125, 485 P.2d 1085, 1090. See also Error.

Invitee. A person is an "invitee" on land of another if (1) he enters by invitation, express or implied, (2) his entry is connected with the owner's business or with an activity the owner conducts or permits to be conducted on his land and (3) there is mutuality of benefit or benefit to the owner. Madrazo v. Michaels, 1 Ill.App.2d 583, 274 N.E.2d 635, 638.

The leading English case of Inedermaur v. Dames laid down the rule that as to those who enter premises upon business which concerns the occupier, and upon his invitation express or implied, the latter is under an affirmative duty to protect them, not only against dangers of which he knows, but also against those which with reasonable care he might discover. The case has been accepted in all common law jurisdictions, and the invitee, or as he is sometimes called the business visitor, is placed upon a higher footing than a licensee. The typical example, of course, is the customer in a store. There is however a conflict of decisions as to whether certain visitors are to be included in the definition of invitee. The minority view is that there must be some economic benefit to the occupier before his duty to the visitor attaches. The majority view holds however that the basis of liability is not any economic benefit to the occupier, but a representation to be implied when he encourages others to enter to further a purpose of his own, that reasonable care has been exercised to make the place safe for those who come for that purpose; e.g. persons attending free public lectures, persons using municipal parks, playgrounds, libraries and the like. The element of "invitation" however must exist.

See also Licensee; Public invitee.

Invito /inváydow/. Lat. Being unwilling. Against or without the assent or consent.

Invito beneficium non datur /inváydow bénafish(i)(y)m nón dédydar/. A benefit is not conferred on one who is unwilling to receive it; that is to say, no one can be compelled to accept a benefit.

In vocibus videndum non a quo sed ad quid sumatur /in wóssabas váedéndam nón éy kwów séd éd kwid saméydar/. In discourses, it is to be considered not from what, but to what, it is advanced.

Invoice. A written account, or itemized statement of merchandise shipped or sent to a purchaser, consignee, factor, etc., with the quantity, value or prices and charges annexed, and may be as appropriate to a consignment or a memorandum shipment as it is to a sale. Joseph B. Cooper & Son, Inc. v. Finlay Dep'ts., Inc., 11 Misc.2d 382, 174 N.Y.S.2d 265, 269. Document showing details of a sale or purchase transaction. A list sent to a purchaser, factor, consignee, etc., containing the items, together with the prices and charges of merchandise sent or to be sent to him. A writing made on behalf of an importer, specifying the merchandise imported, and its true cost or value. See also Consular invoice.

Invoice book. A book in which invoices are copied.

Involuntary. Without will or power of choice, opposed to volition or desire. An involuntary act is that which is performed with constraint (q.v.) or with repugnance, or without the will to do it. An action is involuntary, then, which is performed under duress, force, or coercion.

As to involuntary Bankruptcy; Indebtedness; Non-suit; and Trust, see those titles.

Involuntary alienation. A loss of or parting with property by attachment, levy, sale for taxes or other debts. See also Involuntary conveyance.

Involuntary confession. Confession is "involuntary" if it is not the product of an essentially free and unrestrained choice of its maker or where maker's will is overborne at the time of the confession. People v. Pickerel, 32 Ill.App.3d 822, 336 N.E.2d 778, 780. Term refers to confessions that are extracted by any threats of violence, or obtained by direct or implied promises, or by exertion of improper influence. Phillips v. State, Okl.Cr., 330 P.2d 209, 214. See also Interrogation.
Involuntary conversion. The loss or destruction of property through theft, casualty, or condemnation. Any gain realized on an involuntary conversion can, at the taxpayer’s election, be considered nonrecognizable for Federal income tax purposes if the owner reinvests the proceeds within a prescribed period of time in property that is similar or related in service or use. I.R.C. § 1033.

Involuntary conversion for federal income tax purposes must result from (1) destruction of property in whole or in part; or (2) theft; or (3) actual seizure; or (4) requisition or condemnation or threat or imminence of requisition or condemnation. Hitke v. C. I. R., C.A.Ill., 296 F.2d 639, 643, 644.

Involuntary conveyance. A transfer of real property without the consent of the owner, such as in a divorce, in condemnation, etc. See also Involuntary allotment; Sheriff’s sale.

Involuntary deposit. In the law of bailments, one made by the accidental leaving or placing of personal property in the possession of another, without negligence on the part of the owner, or, in cases of fire, shipwreck, inundation, riot, insurrection, or the like extraordinary emergencies, by the owner of personal property committing it out of necessity to the care of any person.

Involuntary discontinuance. A discontinuance is involuntary where, in consequence of technical omission, misleading, or the like, the suit is regarded as out of court, as where the parties undertake to refer a suit that is not referable, or omit to enter proper continuances.

Involuntary lien. A lien, such as a tax lien, judgment lien, etc., which attaches to property without the consent of the owner, rather than a mortgage lien, to which the owner agrees.

Involuntary manslaughter. The unlawful killing of a human being in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to felony, or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection. An unlawful homicide, unintentionally caused by an act which constitutes such disregard of probable harmful consequences to another as to constitute wanton or reckless conduct. Com. v. McCauley, 355 Mass. 554, 246 N.E.2d 425, 428. See also Manslaughter.

Involuntary payment. One obtained by fraud, oppression, or extortion, or to avoid the use of force to coerce it, or to obtain the release of the person or property from detention.

Involuntary servitude. The condition of one who is compelled by force, coercion, or imprisonment, and against his will, to labor for another, whether he is paid or not. Ex parte Wilson, 114 U.S. 417, 5 S.Ct. 935, 29 L.Ed. 89; In re Slaughterhouse Cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 69, 21 L.Ed. 394; Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U.S. 275, 17 S.Ct. 326, 41 L.Ed. 715. Slavery, peonage, or compulsory labor for debts; all of which are prohibited by the 13th Amendment, U.S.Const.

Involuntary transfer. See Involuntary conveyance.

Involuntary trust. An implied trust which arises because the law imposes trust-like consequences on certain transactions where, for example, an agent breaches his fiduciary duty and buys property in his own name which rightfully should have been purchased for the benefit of his principal (constructive trust) or A supplies the funds for purchase of property by B with the understanding that A will own it but title will be taken in the name of B (resulting trust).

In witness whereof /in witness (h)wèróv/. The initial words of the concluding clause in deeds: “In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands”, etc. A translation of the Latin phrase “in cujus rei testimonium”.

Iota. The minutest quantity possible. Iota is the smallest Greek letter. The word “jot” is derived therefrom.

IOU. A memorandum of debt, consisting of these letters (“I owe you”), a sum of money and the debtor’s signature, is termed an “IOU”.

Ipsae leges cuplunt ut jure regantur /ipsiy lijijiy kyúwipjyant àt jùrijy rægæntor/. The laws themselves require that they should be governed by right.

Ipsa /ipsiy/. Lat. He himself; the same; the very person.

Ipsæ dixit /ipsiy dïksat/. He himself said it; a bare assertion resting on the authority of an individual.

Ipsissimis verbis /ipsismas vâbós/. In the identical words; opposed to “substantially”.

Ipsæ facto /ipsow fákto/. By the fact itself; by the mere fact. By the mere effect of an act or a fact.

Ipsæ jure /ipsow jùrij/. By the law itself; by the mere operation of law.

IRA. Individual Retirement Account.

Ira furor brevis est /âýryra füýràr brîývas ēst/. Anger is a short insanity.

Ira motus /âýryra mówódz/. Lat. Moved or excited by anger or passion. A term sometimes formerly used in the plea of son assault desmesne.

IRAN. Individual Retirement Annuity.

IRB. Individual Retirement Bond.

I.R.C. Internal Revenue Code.

I.R.D. Income in respect of decedent.

Ire ad largum /âýryra åd lårgum/. Lat. To go at large; to escape; to be set at liberty.

Iron-safe clause. A clause in policies of fire insurance, requiring the insured to preserve his books and inventory in an iron or fireproof safe, or in some secure place not exposed to a fire which would destroy the building. This provision casts on the insured the responsibility for the loss of books and records if due to the wrongful act or negligence of himself or his employees in failing to comply with the requirement.

Irrational. Unreasonable, foolish, illogical, absurd; a person may be irrational in such sense, and still not be insane in the legal sense.
IRRECONCILABLE DIFFERENCES

Irreconcilable differences. No-fault ground for dissolution of marriage under many state divorce statutes. See also Irretrievable breakdown of marriage.

Irretrievable /ɪr rɪˈtɹɪvəbəl/. A term used to indicate a certain class of contractual obligations recognized by the law which are imposed upon a person without his consent and without regard to any act of his own. These are distinguished from irretrievable obligations which are the result of a voluntary act on the part of a person upon whom they are imposed by law. A clear example of an irretrievable obligation is the obligation imposed on every man not to strike another without some lawful excuse. A recusuable obligation is based upon some act of a person bound, which is a condition precedent to the genesis of the obligation. These terms were first suggested by Prof. Wigmore in 8 Harv.Law Rev. 200.

Irregular. Not according to rule; improper or insufficient, by reason of departure from the prescribed course.

As to irregular Deposit; Indorsement; Process; and Succession, see those titles.

Irregularity. The doing or not doing that, in the conduct of a suit at law, which, conformably with the practice of the court, ought or ought not to be done. Violation or nonobservance of established rules and practices. The want of adherence to some prescribed rule or mode of proceeding; consisting either in omitting to do something that is necessary for the due and orderly conducting of a suit, or doing it in an unseemly time or improper manner. The technical term for every defect in mechanics of proceedings, or the mode of conducting an action or defense, as distinguishable from defects in pleadings. Term is not synonymous with "illegality."

In Canon law, any impediment which prevents a man from taking holy orders.

Irregular judgment. One rendered contrary to the course and practice of the court. Duplin County v. Ezzell, 223 N.C. 531, 27 S.E.2d 448, 450.

Irrelevancy. The absence of the quality of relevancy, as in evidence or pleadings. The quality or state of being inapplicable or impertinent to a fact or argument. Irrelevancy, in an answer, consists in statements which are not material to the decision of the case; such as do not form or tender any material issue. Such irrelevancy in pleadings may be stricken on motion of party. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(f). See also Immaterial; Irrelevant; Irrelevant allegation.

Irrelevant. Not relevant; immaterial; not relating or applicable to the matter in issue; not supporting the issue or fact to be proved. Evidence is irrelevant where it has no tendency to prove or disprove any issue of fact involved. Irrelevant evidence is commonly objected to and disallowed at trial. Fed. Evid.R. 402. See also Immaterial; Impertinence; Irrelevancy.

An allegation is irrelevant, where the issue made by its denial has no effect upon the cause of action or no connection with the allegation. In this connection, "redundant" is almost a synonym for "irrelevant."

Irrelevant matters may be stricken from pleadings on motion of party. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(f).

Irrelevant answer. See Answer.

Irreparable damages. See Damages.

Irreparable harm. See Injury (Irreparable injury).

Irreparable Injury. See Injury.

Irrepleviable /ɪr rɪˈplɛvɪə bəl/. That cannot be reapplied or delivered on sureties. Spelled also, "irrepleivable" /ɪr rɪˈplɛvɪə bəl/.

Irresistible force. A term applied to such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable; as the inroads of a hostile army.

Irresistible impulse. As used as insanity defense, an "irresistible impulse" means an impulse to commit an unlawful or criminal act which cannot be resisted or overcome because mental disease has destroyed the freedom of will, the power of self-control, and the choice of actions. Snider v. Smyth, D.C.Va., 187 F.Supp. 299, 302. The "irresistible impulse" test for insanity is a test which is broader than the M'Naghten test. Under the "irresistible impulse" test a person may avoid criminal responsibility even though he is capable of distinguishing between right and wrong, and is fully aware of the nature and quality of his acts, provided that he establishes that he was unable to refrain from acting. Com. v. Walzack, 468 Pa. 210, 360 A.2d 914, 919. See also Insanity; M'Naghten Rule.

Irretrievable breakdown of marriage. As a no-fault ground for divorce means one in which either or both spouses are unable or unwilling to cohabit and for which there are no prospects for reconciliation. Harwell v. Harwell, 233 Ga. 89, 209 S.E.2d 625. In some jurisdictions, the sole ground for so-called no-fault divorce. See also Irreconcilable differences.

Irrevocable letter of credit. A confirmed irrevocable letter of credit, irrevocable letter, or a confirmed credit is a contract to pay on compliance with its terms, and needs no formal acknowledgment or acceptance other than is therein stated. See also Letter of credit.

Irrigation company. A private corporation, authorized and regulated by statute in several states, having for its object to acquire exclusive rights to the water of certain streams or other sources of supply, and to convey it by means of ditches or canals through a region where it can be beneficially used for agricultural purposes, and either dividing the water among stockholders, or making contracts with consumers, or furnishing a supply to all who apply at fixed rates.

Irrigation district. A public and quasi-municipal corporation authorized by law in several states, comprising a defined region or area of land which is susceptible of one mode of irrigation from a common source and by the same system of works. These districts are created by proceedings in the nature of an election under the supervision of a court, and are authorized to purchase or condemn the lands and waters necessary for the system of irrigation proposed and to construct necessary canals and other works, and the water is apportioned ratably among the landowners of the district.

Irrogare /ɪˈrɒɡərɪ/ Lat. In the civil law, to impose or set upon, as a fine. To inflict, as a punishment. To make or ordain, as a law.

Irrotulatio /ɪˈrɒtʃələˈʃɪʃ(ə)ʊ/ L. Lat. An enrolling; a record.

I.R.S. Internal Revenue Service.

Is. This word, although normally referring to the present, often has a future meaning, but is not synonymous with “shall have been.” It may have, however, a past signification, as in the sense of “has been.”

Island. A piece of land surrounded by water. Land in a navigable stream which is surrounded by water only in times of high water is not an island within the rule that the state takes title to newly formed islands in navigable streams.

Isolated sale. Isolated sale which does not entail implied warranty of merchantability is one which occurs only once or at least very infrequently within ordinary course of business. McHugh v. Carlton, D.C.S.C., 369 F.Supp. 1271, 1277.

Is qui cognoscit /ɪs kwəˈkɒnɒsɪt/ L. Lat. The cognizor in a fine. Is qui cognoscitur /ɪs kəˈwʊəw kɒnɒsədər/ the cognizee.

Issuable. Leading or tending to, or producing, an issue; relating to an issue or issues.

Issuable defense. In common law pleading, a technical expression meaning a plea to the merits, properly setting forth a legal defense, as distinguished from a plea in abatement, or any plea going only to delay the case.

Issuable plea. In common law pleading, a plea to the merits; a traversable plea. A plea such that the adverse party can join issue upon it and go to trial. It is true a plea in abatement is a plea, and if it be properly pleaded, issues may be found on it. In the ordinary meaning of the word “plea,” and of the word “issuable,” such pleas may be called “issuable pleas,” but, when these two words are used together, “issuable plea,” or “issuable defense,” they have a technical meaning, to-wit, pleas to the merits.

Issuable terms. In the former practice of the English courts, Hilary term and Trinity term were called “issuable terms,” because the issues to be tried at the assizes were made up at those terms. But the distinction was superseded by the provisions of the judicature acts of 1873 and 1875.

Issue, v. To send forth; to emit; to promulgate; as, an officer issues orders, process issues from a court. To put into circulation; as, the treasury issues notes. To send out, to send out officially; to deliver, for use, or authoritatively; to go forth as authoritative or binding. When used with reference to writs, process, and the like the term is ordinarily construed as importing delivery to the proper person, or to the proper officer for service, etc. With respect to securities, refers to act or process of offering stocks or bonds for sale to public or institutional investors.

In financial parlance the term “issue” seems to have two phases of meaning. “Date of issue” when applied to notes, bonds, etc., of a series, usually means the arbitrary date fixed as the beginning of the term for which they run, without reference to the precise time when the money or the state of the market may permit of their sale or delivery. When the securities are delivered to the purchaser, they will be “issued” to him, which is the other meaning of the term.

In commercial law, means the first delivery of an instrument to a holder or a remitter. U.C.C. § 1-102(1)(a).

Issue, n. The act of issuing, sending forth, emitting or promulgating; the giving a thing its first inception; as the issue of an order or a writ.

See also Date of issue.

Pleading and Practice

A single, certain, and material point, deduced by the allegations and pleadings of the parties, which is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other. A fact put in controversy by the pleadings; such may either be issues of law or fact. An “issue” is a disputed point or question to which parties to action have narrowed their several allegations and upon which they are desirous of obtaining either decision of court on question of law or of court or jury on question of fact. Muller v. Muller, 235 Cal.App.2d 341, 45 Cal.Rptr. 182, 184.

Real or feigned. A real or actual issue is one formed in a regular manner in a regular suit for the purpose of determining an actual controversy. A feigned issue is one made up by direction of the court, upon a supposed case, for the purpose of obtaining the verdict of a jury upon some question of fact collaterally involved in the case. Such issues are generally ordered by a court of equity, to ascertain the truth of a disputed fact. They are also used in courts of law, by the consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading; and by this practice much time and expense are saved in the decision of a cause. The name is a misnomer, inasmuch as the issue itself is upon a real, material point in question between the parties, and the circumstances only are fictitious.

Ultimate issue. Signifies either such an issue as within itself is sufficient and final for the disposition of the entire case or one which in connection with other issues will serve such end. First State Bank of Seminole v. Dillard, Tex.Civ.App., 71 S.W.2d 407, 410.

See also Failure of issue; Feigned issue; Genuine issue; Issue of fact; Issue of law; Issue preclusion; Lawful issue; Legal issue; Ultimate issue.

Descendant's Estates

All persons who have descended from a common ancestor. Offspring; progeny; descent; lineage; linage descendants. In this sense, the word includes not only a child or children, but all other descendants in whatever degree, and it is so construed generally in deeds. But, when used in wills, it is, of course, subject to the rule of construction that the intention of the testator, as ascertained from the language used by him; and hence issue may, in such a connection, be restricted to children, or to descendants living at the death of the testator, where such an intention clearly appears.

The term "issue" and "descendants" have been held to be co-extensive and interchangeable. In re Radt's Will, 6 Misc.2d 716, 167 N.Y.S.2d 817, 818.

The word "issue" in a will is generally a word of limitation, and when so used, is sometimes said to be equivalent to "heirs of the body". But it has been pointed out in other cases that this word is not as strong a word of limitation as the words "heirs of the body", and yields readily to a context indicating its use as a work of purchase.

The term is commonly held to include only legitimate issue. Large v. National City Bank of Cleveland, Ohio Prob., 170 N.E.2d 309, 312; contra Will of Hoffman, 53 A.D.2d 55, 385 N.Y.S.2d 49. The general rule in most states is that the illegitimate child may inherit from his mother but not from his father, but may inherit from both if legitimated.

Many state intestacy statutes provide that an adopted child is "issue" of his or her adopted parents.

Securities

Any of a corporation's securities offered for sale at a certain time, or the act or process of distributing (i.e. offering) such for sale. A class or series of bonds, debentures, etc., comprising all that are emitted at one and the same time. See also Distribution; Issuer; Offering; Prospectus; Underwriter; When issued.

Hot issue. A public offering where securities, after their initial sale to the public, are resold in the open market at prices substantially higher than the original public offering price.

New issue. A stock or bond sold by a corporation for the first time. Proceeds may be used to retire outstanding securities of the company, for new plant or equipment, or for additional working capital.

Issue of fact. An issue of fact arises when a fact is maintained by one party and is controverted by the other in the pleadings. General Elec. Co. v. Employment Relations Bd., 3 Wis.2d 227, 88 N.W.2d 691, 701. An issue which arises upon a denial in the answer of a material allegation of the complaint or in the reply of a material allegation in the answer.

Issue of law. An issue of law arises where evidence is undisputed and only one conclusion can be drawn therefrom. Chaison v. Stark, Tex.Civ.App., 29 S.W.2d 500, 503. An issue of law arises upon a demurrer to the complaint or answer, or to some part thereof. Calif.C.C.P. § 589.

In making motion for summary judgment, party must show that only issues of law exist for court to consider; i.e. must show that there is no genuine issue of material facts. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56.

In pleading, an issue upon matter of law, or consisting of matter of law, being produced by a demurrer on the one side, and a joinder in demurrer on the other. The term "issue" may be so used as to include one of law raised by demurrer to the complaint, as well as one raised by answer.

Issue preclusion. Term means that when a particular issue has already been litigated, further litigation of same issue is barred. Hawkeye Sec. Ins. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., Iowa, 189 N.W.2d 373, 379. As it relates to civil actions, concept of "issue preclusion" is in substance that any fact, question or matter in issue and directly adjudicated or necessarily involved in determination of action before court of competent jurisdiction in which judgment or decree is rendered on merits, is conclusively settled by judgment therein and cannot be relitigated in any future action between parties or privies, either in same court or court of concurrent jurisdiction, while judgment remains unreversed or unvacated by proper authority, regardless of whether claim or cause of action, purpose or subject matter of two suits is same. Palma v. Powers, D.C.III., 295 F.Sup. 924, 833. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Res (Res judicata).

Issuer. With respect to obligations on or defenses to a security, "issuer" includes a person who: (a) places or authorizes the placing of his name on a security (otherwise than as an authenticating trustee, registrar, transfer agent or the like) to evidence that it represents a share, participation or other interest in his property or in an enterprise or to evidence his duty to perform an obligation evidenced by the security; or (b) directly or indirectly creates fractional interests in his rights or property which fractional interests are evidenced by securities; or (c) becomes responsible for or in place of any other person described as an issuer in this section. U.C.C. § 8-201(1). Every person who issues or proposes to issue any securities; generally the legal entity owning the securities and which has the responsibility for causing the same to be offered publicly or privately.

Bank or other person issuing a credit. U.C.C. § 5 - 103(1)(c). A bailee who issues a document except that in relation to an unaccepted delivery order it means the person who orders the possessor of goods to deliver. Issuer includes any person for whom an agent or employee purports to act in issuing a document if the agent or employee has real or apparent authority to issue documents, notwithstanding that the issuer received no goods or that the goods were misdescribed or that in any other respect the agent or employee violated his instructions. U.C.C. § 7 - 102(g).

Issue roll. In English practice, a roll upon which the issue in actions at law was formerly required to be entered, the roll being entitled of the term in which the issue was joined. It was not, however, the practice to enter the issue at full length, if triable by the country, until after the trial, but only to make an incipitur on the roll. It was abolished by the rules of Hilary Term, 1834.

Issues and profits. As applied to real estate, comprehend every available return thereof, whether it arise above or below the surface. "Issues" are goods and profits of the land. Costanzo v. Harris, 71 Wash.2d 254, 427 P.2d 963, 965.

Ita est /áýda ét/. Lat. So it is; so it stands. In modern civil law, this phrase is a form of attestation added to exemplifications from a notary's register when the same are made by the successor in office of the notary who made the original entries.

Ita lex scripta est /áýda lêks skriptam ét/. Lat. So the law is written. The law must be obeyed notwithstanding the apparent rigor of its application. 3 Bl. Comm. 430. We must be content with the law as it stands, without inquiring into its reasons. 1 Bl. Comm. 32.

Ita semper fiat relatio ut valeat dispostitio /áýda sêmpar fêyat raléýsh(y)ow ât vêlîyam dispzish(y)ow/. Let the interpretation be always such that the disposition may prevail.

Ita te Deus adjivet /áýda te dióys ãjîvat/. Lat. So help you God. The old form of administering an oath in England, generally in connection with other words, thus: Ita te Deus adjivet, et sacrosancta Dei Evangelia, So help you God, and God's holy Evangelists. Ita te Deus adjivet et omnes sancti, So help you God and all the saints.

Ita utere tuo ut alienum non ledas /áýda yúwdari t(y)oww ăd šelîyiynam nôn liyâs/. Use your own property and your own rights in such a way that you will not hurt your neighbor, or prevent him from enjoying his. Frequently written "Sic utere tuo", etc. (q.v.).

Item /áýdam/. Also; likewise; in like manner; again; a second time. This word was formerly used to mark the beginning of a new paragraph or division after the first, whence is derived the common application of it to denote a separate or distinct particular of an account or bill. One of the portions, equal or unequal, into which anything is divided, or regarded as divided; something less than a whole; a number, quantity, mass, or the like, regarded as going to make up, with others or another, a larger number, quantity, mass, etc., whether actually separate or not; a piece, fragment, fraction, member or constituent. A separate entry in an account or a schedule, or a separate particular in an enumeration of a total. An "item" in an appropriation is an indivisible sum of money dedicated to a stated purpose. Commonwealth v. Dods-son, 176 Va. 281, 11 S.E.2d 120, 124, 127, 130, 131.

ITINERANT VENDOR

Any instrument for the payment of money, though not negotiable; but not money. U.C.C. § 4–104(1)(g).

Itemize. To set down by items. To state each item or article separately. Used commonly with reference to tax accounting.

Itemized deductions. Certain personal expenditures allowed by the Internal Revenue Code as deductions from adjusted gross income if an individual taxpayer chooses not to use the standard deduction and total itemized deductions exceed the standard deduction (zero bracket amount). Examples include certain medical expenses, interest on home mortgages, state sales taxes, and charitable contributions.

Iter /áýdar/. Lat. In the civil law, a way; a right of way belonging as a servitude to an estate in the country (praedium rusticum). The right of way was of three kinds: (1) iter, a right to walk, or ride on horseback, or in a litter; (2) actus, a right to drive a beast or vehicle; (3) via, a full right of way, comprising right to walk or ride, or drive beast or carriage. Or, as some think, they were distinguished by the width of the objects which could be rightfully carried over the way; e.g., via, 8 feet; actus, 4 feet, etc.

In old English law, a journey, especially a circuit made by a justice in eyre, or itinerant justice, to try causes according to his own mission.

In maritime law, a way or route. The route or direction of a voyage; the route or way that is taken to make the voyage assured. Distinguished from the voyage itself.

Iterato /idrêýsh(y)ow/. Lat. Repetition. In the Roman law, a bonitary owner might liberate a slave, and the quiritur owner's repetition (iterato) of the process effected a complete manumission.

Iter est jus eandi, ambulandi hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum /áýdar ést jás iûndây, ãmîyam hîmaw, nó nysh(y)am jámëntam ajînday vêl vãhîk(y)alam/. A way is the right of going or walking, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage.

Itinera /aýtînâra/. Eyres, or circuits.

Itinerant. Wandering or traveling from place to place; formerly applied to justices who made circuits. Also applied in various statutory and municipal laws (in the sense of traveling from place to place) to certain classes of merchants, traders, and salesmen.

Itinerant peddling. The going about of a merchant from place to place, meeting and dealing with his customers where he finds them. Good Humor Corporation v. City of New York, 264 App.Div. 620, 36 N.Y.S.2d 85, 91.

Itinerant vendor. This term is variously defined in statutes; e.g., a person engaged in transient business either in one locality or in traveling from place to place selling goods. See also Hawker; Peddler.

Jac. An abbreviation for “Jacobus”, the Latin form of the name James; used principally in citing statutes enacted in the reigns of the English kings of that name; e.g., “St. 1, Jac. II.”

Jacens /ˈjɛksənz/ : Lat. Lying in abeyance, as in the phrase “hereditas Jacens”, which is an inheritance or estate lying vacant or in abeyance prior to the ascertainment of the heir or his assumption of the succession.

Jacens hereditas /ˈjɛksən(ə)z ˈhɛrdɪtəs/ : See Hereditas Jacens.

Jack. A kind of defensive coat-armour worn by horsemen in war; not made of solid iron, but of many plates fastened together. Some tenants were bound by their tenure to find it upon invasion.

Jacobus /ˈjəkəbəs/ : A gold coin an inch and three-eighths in diameter, in value about twenty-five shillings, so called from James I., in whose reign it was first coined. It was also called broad, laurel, and broad-piece. Its value is sometimes put at twenty-four shillings, but Macaulay speaks of a salary of eight thousand Jacobuses as equivalent to ten thousand pounds sterling.

Jactation /ˈjæktəˈʃæn/ : Boasting of something which is challenged by another. A false boasting; a false claim; assertions repeated to the prejudice of another’s right.

The species of defamation or disparagement of another’s title to real estate known at common law as “slander of title” comes under the head of jactation, and in some jurisdictions (as in Louisiana) a remedy for this injury is provided under the name of an “action of jactation.”

Jactation of marriage. In English ecclesiastical law, the boasting or giving out by a party that he or she is married to some other, whereby a common reparation of their matrimony may ensue. To defeat that result, the person may be put to a proof of the actual marriage, falling which proof, he or she is put to silence about it. 3 Bl.Comm. 93. The High Court has jurisdiction over such actions.

Jactitatio of tithes. In English ecclesiastical law, the boasting by a man that he is entitled to certain tithes, to which he has legally no title.

Jactivus /ˈjæktɪvəs/ : Lost by default; tossed away.

Jactura /ˈjæktʊrə/ : In the civil law, a throwing of goods overboard in a storm; jettison. Loss from such a cause.

Jactus /ˈjæktəs/ : A throwing of goods overboard to lighten or save the vessel, in which case the goods so sacrificed are a proper subject for general average. See Jettison.

Jactus lapilll /ˈjæktʊs ləˈpɪl/ : The throwing down of a stone. One of the modes, under the civil law, of interrupting prescription. Where one person was building on another’s ground, and in this way acquiring a right by usucapio, the true owner challenged the intrusion and interrupted the prescriptive right by throwing down one of the stones of the building before witnesses called for the purpose.

Jail. A gaol; a prison; a building designated by law, or regularly used, for the confinement of persons held in lawful custody. A place of confinement that is more than a police station lockup and less than a prison. It is usually used to hold persons either convicted of misdemeanors (minor crimes) or persons awaiting trial. See also Gaol.

Jail delivery. See Gaol.

Jailer. A keeper or warden of a prison or jail.

Jailhouse lawyer. Inmate of a penal institution who spends his time reading the law and giving legal assistance and advice to inmates.

Jail liberties. See Gaol.

Jamundling, Jamundling. Freemen who delivered themselves and property to the protection of a more powerful person, in order to avoid military service and other burdens. Also a species of serfs among the Germans. The same as commendati.

Janus-faced. An argument looking in both directions at the same time, e.g., urging jurors not to be swayed by sympathy, but adding that any sympathy should be in favor of the arguing counsel's client. Davis v. Franson, 141 Cal.App.2d 263, 296 P.2d 600, 606.

Jaques. In old English law, small money.

Jason clause. Clause in bills of lading which obligates cargo owners to contribute in general average in cases of danger, damage, or disaster resulting from faults or errors in navigation or in management of vessel, her machinery or appurtenances, provided that shipowner shall have exercised due diligence to make vessel in all respects seaworthy, and to have her properly manned, equipped, and supplied. Merkleen v. Johnson & Higgins, D.C.N.Y., 3 F.Supp. 897, 898.

Javelina-men /je'v(a)ləmən/. In old English law, yeomen retained by the sheriff to escort the judge of assize.

Jay walking. Proceeding diagonally across a street intersection. Also, crossing a street between intersections, or at a place other than a crosswalk.

J.D. Short for "Juris Doctor" or "Doctor of Jurisprudence." This is now the basic law degree, replacing the "L.L.B." in the late 1960's.

Jedburgh justice /jɛdɜrə jəstəs/. Summary justice inflicted upon a marauder or felon without a regular trial, equivalent to "lynch law." So called from a Scotch town, near the English border, where raiders and cattle lifters were often summarily hung. Also written "Jeddart" /jɛdərt/ or "Jedwood" /jɛd wor/ justice.

Jencks Act or Rule. A criminal defendant in the Federal Court is entitled to access to government documents for assistance in cross-examination of witnesses in order to impeach for prior inconsistent statements. Jencks v. U. S., 353 U.S. 657, 77 S.Ct. 1007, 1 L.Ed.2d 1103. Following this case, a federal statute was enacted to the same effect; 18 U.S.C.A. § 3500.

Jefealle /jɛfi'əl/. L. Fr. I have failed; I am in error. An error or oversight in pleading.

Jeopardy. Danger; hazard; peril.

The danger of conviction and punishment which the defendant in a criminal action incurs when a valid indictment has been found, and a petit jury has been impaneled and sworn to try the case and give a verdict in a court of competent jurisdiction. Hanley v. State, 83 Nev. 461, 434 P.2d 440, 442. The condition of a person when he is put upon trial, before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon an indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance. For purpose of prohibition against double jeopardy, a court proceeding which may result in incarceration places a person, adult or juvenile, in "jeopardy." Pain v. Duff, C.A. Fla., 488 F.2d 218, 225.

The terms "jeopardy of life and liberty for the same offense," "jeopardy of life or limb," "jeopardy for the same offense," "in jeopardy of punishment," and other similar provisions used in the various constitutions, are to be construed as meaning substantially the same thing.

See also Double Jeopardy; Former Jeopardy; Legal Jeopardy.

Jeopardy assessment. If the collection of a tax appears in question, the IRS may assess and collect the tax immediately without the usual formalities. Also, the IRS has the power to terminate a taxpayer's taxable year before the usual date if it feels that the collection of the tax may be in peril because the taxpayer plans to leave the country.

Jetsam /jɛtsəm/. Goods which, by the act of the owner, have been voluntarily cast overboard from a vessel, in a storm or other emergency, to lighten the ship. See also Jacobus; Jettison.

Jettison /jɛdəsən/. The act of throwing overboard from a vessel part of the cargo, in case of extreme danger, to lighten the ship. The thing or things so cast out; jetsam. A carrier by water may, when in case of extreme peril it is necessary for the safety of the ship or cargo, throw overboard, or otherwise sacrifice, any or all of the cargo or appurtenances of the ship. Throwing property overboard for such purpose is called "jettison," and the loss incurred thereby is called a "general average loss." See also Jacobus; Jetsam.

Jetty. A projection of stone or other material serving as a protection against the waves.

Jeux de bourse /ʒuː də bɜːs/. Fr. In French law, speculation in the public funds or in stocks; gambling speculation on the stock exchange; dealings in "options" and "futures."

A kind of gambling or speculation, which consists of sales and purchases which bind neither of the parties to deliver the things which are the object of the sale, and which are settled by paying the difference in the value of the things sold between the day of the sale and that appointed for delivery of such things.

J.N.O.V., Abr. Judgment non obstante veredicto; judgment notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

Job. The whole of a thing which is to be done. A specific task or piece of work to be done for a set fee or compensation. Employment position. Criminal act (e.g. robbery).

Jobber. One who buys and sells goods for others. One who buys or sells on the stock exchange; a dealer in stocks, shares, or securities. One who buys and sells articles in bulk and resells them to dealers. A merchant buying and selling in job lots. In general, a wholesaler; one who buys and sells small lots; a middleman. Person who does piecework. See also Middleman.

Jocelot /jo'z(o)lət/. A little manor or farm.

Jocus /jʊ'kwəs/. In old English law, a game of hazard.

Jocus partitus /jʊ'kwəs pərdəsəs/. In old English practice, a divided game, risk, or hazard. An arrangement which the parties to a suit were ancienly sometimes allowed to make by mutual agreement upon a certain hazard, as that one should lose if the case turned out in a certain way, and, if it did not, that the other should gain.
JOHN DOE

John Doe. A fictitious name frequently used to indicate a person for the purpose of argument or illustration, or in the course of enforcing a fiction in the law. The name which was usually given to the fictitious lessee of the plaintiff in the mixed action of ejectment. He was sometimes called "Goodtitle." So the Romans had their fictitious personages in law proceedings, as Titius, Seius.

The name "John Doe" is, and for some centuries has been, used in legal proceedings as a fictitious name to designate a party until his real name can be ascertained. State v. Rossignol, 22 Wash.2d 19, 153 P.2d 882, 885.

Join. To unite; to come together; to combine or unite in time, effort, action; to enter into an alliance.

Joider. Joining or coupling together; uniting two or more constituents or elements in one; uniting with another person in some legal step. or proceeding; union; concurrence.

The consent to an agreement or document by a party who has an interest in the subject matter of the agreement or document, but who is not himself an active party to the agreement or document.

Collusive joider. The joider of a defendant, commonly a nonresident, for purpose of removal to or conferring jurisdiction on a Federal Court. Bentley v. Halliburton Oil Well Cementing Co., D.C.Tex., 174 F.2d 788, 791.

Compulsory joider. A person must be joined in an action if complete relief cannot be afforded the parties without his joider or if his interest is such that grave injustice will be done without him. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19(a). See Joider of parties, below.

Joider in demurrer. In common law pleading, when a defendant in an action tenders an issue of law (called a "demurrer"), the plaintiff, if he means to maintain his action, must accept it, and this acceptance of the defendant's tender, signified by the plaintiff in a set form of words, is called a "joider in demurrer."

Joider in issue. In common law pleading, a formula by which one of the parties to a suit joins in or accepts an issue in fact tendered by the opposite party. Also called "similiter".

Joider in pleading. In common law pleading, accepting the issue, and mode of trial tendered, either by demurrer, error, or issue, in fact, by the opposite party.

Joider of claims. Under rules practice, a party asserting a claim to relief as an original claim, counterclaim, cross claim or third party claim may join as many claims as he has against an opposing party whether they are legal or equitable. Fed.R.Civ.P. 18(a); New York C.P.L.R. § 601.

Joider of defendants. Two or more defendants may be charged in the same indictment or information if they are alleged to have participated in the same act or transaction or in the same series of acts or transactions constituting an offense or offenses. Such defendants may be charged in one or more counts together or separately and all of the defendants need not be charged in each count. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 8(b).

Joider of error. In proceedings on a writ of error in criminal cases, the joider of error is a written denial of the errors alleged in the assignment of errors. It answers to a joider of issue in an action.

Joider of indictments or informations. The court may order two or more indictments or informations or both to be tried together if the offenses, and the defendants if there is more than one, could have been joined in a single indictment or information. The procedure shall be the same as if the prosecution were such single indictment or information. Fed.R.Crim.P. 13.

Joider of issue. The act by which the parties to a cause arrive at that stage of it in their pleadings, that one asserts a fact to be so, and the other denies it.

Joider of offenses. Two or more offenses may be charged in the same indictment or information in a separate count for each offense if the offenses charged, whether felonies or misdemeanors or both, are of the same or similar character or are based on the same act or transaction or on two or more acts or transactions connected together or constituting parts of a common scheme or plan. Fed.R.Crim.Proc. 8(a).

Joider of parties. The act of uniting as parties to an action all persons who have the same rights or against whom rights are claimed, as either co-plaintiffs or co-defendants. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19 and 20.

Necessary and indispensable parties. Prior to 1966 the federal, and most state, courts used classifications to determine if a person should or must be joined in an action. The label "indispensable" was used if the connection to the action of the absentee party was so close that the action should be dismissed unless the party was joined. The label "necessary" was used if the party was one who ought to be joined if this was possible. These classifications proved unsatisfactory and in 1966 Fed.Rule of Civil Proc. 19 was replaced with a new Rule 19, "Joider of Persons needed for Just Adjudication." Rule 19(a) defines the class of persons who are needed for just adjudication. If an absentee meets this test, and is subject to process, the court must require that he be joined. If the absentee is needed for just adjudication and is not subject to process, Rule 19(b) states the factors to be considered in deciding whether to proceed in his absence or to dismiss the action.

Proper parties. If a party has some relation to the action, but it is not so close as to make him a person needed for just adjudication within Rule of Civil Proc. 19(a), he is a "proper" party, and the plaintiff has an option whether to join him if the tests of Rule 20 are met.

Joider of remedies. Whenever a claim is one theretofore cognizable only after another claim has been prosecuted to a conclusion, the two claims may be joined in a single action; but the court will grant relief in that action only in accordance with the relative substantive rights of the parties. In particular, a plaintiff may state a claim for money and a claim to have set aside a conveyance fraudulent as to him, without first having obtained a judgment establishing the claim for money. Fed.R.Civ.P. 18(b).

Misjoinder. The improper joining together of parties to a suit, as plaintiffs or defendants, or of different causes of action. Misjoinder, however, is not a ground for dismissal. The improper party is merely dropped on motion of any party or on courts own motion. Fed.R.Civ. P. 21. Relief from prejudicial joinder of offenses or defendants in an indictment or information is permitted under Fed.R.Crim.P. 14.

Misjoinder in a criminal prosecution is the charging in separate counts of separate and distinct offenses arising out of wholly different transactions having no connection or relation with each other. Optner v. U.S., C.C.A.Mich., 13 F.2d 11, 13.

Nonjoinder. The omission to join some person as party to a suit, whether as plaintiff or defendant, who ought to have been so joined. An omitted party may be added on motion of any party or on courts own motion. Fed.R.Civ.P. 21.

Permissive joinder. All persons may join in one action as plaintiffs if they assert any right to relief jointly, severally, or in the alternative in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all these persons will arise in the action. All persons (and any vessel, cargo or other property subject to admiralty process in rem) may be joined in one action as defendants if there is asserted against them jointly, severally, or in the alternative, any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any questions of law or fact common to all defendants will arise in the action. A plaintiff or defendant need not be interested in obtaining or defending against all the relief demanded. Judgment may be given for one or more of the plaintiffs according to their respective rights to relief, and against one or more defendants according to their respective liabilities. Fed.R.Civ.P. 20(a).

Joint. United; combined; undivided; done by or against two or more unitedly; shared by or between two or more; coupled together in interest or liability.

The term is used to express a common property interest enjoyed or a common liability incurred by two or more persons. Thus, it is one in which the obligors (two or more number) bind themselves jointly but not severally, and which must therefore be prosecuted in a joint action against them all; distinguished from "joint and several" obligation.

As to joint Ballot; Committee; Contract; Covenant; Creditor; Flat; Fine; Indictment; Obligation; Obligee; Obligor; Owner; Rate; Resolution; Session; Tenancy; Tenant; Trespass; Trespasser; Trustee; Will, see those titles. As to joint-stock banks, see Bank; joint-stock company, see Company; joint-stock corporation, see Corporation.

Joint action. An action brought by two or more as plaintiffs or against two or more as defendants. See Joinder.

Joint adventure. Any association of persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge. A "joint adventure" exists where there is a special combination of two or more persons jointly seeking to profit in some specific venture without actual partnership or corporate designation; it is an association of persons to carry out a single business enterprise for profit, for which purpose they combine their property, money, effects, skill, and knowledge. Fulton v. Fulton, Mo.App., 528 S.W.2d 146, 155. See also Community of interest; Joint enterprises; Joint venture.

Joint and several contracts. Contracts in which the parties bind themselves both individually and as a unit (jointly).

Joint and several liability. A liability is said to be joint and several when the creditor may sue one or more of the parties to such liability separately, or all of them together at his option. A joint and several bond or note is one in which the obligors or makers bind themselves both jointly and individually to the obligee or payee, so that all may be sued together for its enforcement, or the creditor may select one or more as the object of his suit. Term also refers to the liability of joint tort-feasors. See Contribution; Joint tort-feasors.

Such liability permits the Internal Revenue Service to collect a tax from one or all of several taxpayers. A husband and wife that file a joint income tax return usually are collectively or individually liable for the full amount of the tax liability.

Joint authorship. As to literary property, such exists where there is a common design to the execution of which several persons contribute. Mere alterations, additions or improvements, whether with or without the sanction of the author, will not entitle the person making them to claim to be a joint author of the work. Joint labor in furtherance of a common design. Edward B. Marks Music Corporation v. Jerry Vogel Music Co., D.C.N.Y., 140 F.2d 266, 267.

Joint bank account. An account in the names of two or more persons who have equal right to it, generally with the right of survivorship.

Joint debtors. Persons united in a joint liability or indebtedness. Two or more persons jointly liable for the same debt.

Joint debtors' acts. Statutes enacted in many of the states, which provide that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several defendants, and that, "in an action against several defendants, the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper". The name is also given to statutes providing that where an action is instituted against two or more defendants upon an alleged joint liability, and some of them are served with process, but jurisdiction is not obtained over the others, the plaintiff may still proceed to trial against those who are before the court, and, if he recovers, may have judgment against all of the defendants whom he shows to be jointly liable. Hall v. Lanning, 91 U.S. 160, 168, 23 L.Ed. 271.

Joint defendants. Persons who are sued and tried together. In criminal law, persons who are indicted for the same crime and tried together. See Joiner; Trial.

Joint enterprise. Also called "common enterprise". The joint prosecution of common purpose under such circumstances that each has authority express or implied to act for all in respect to the control, means or agencies employed to execute such common purpose. Elements necessary to constitute a "joint enterprise" are: (1) an agreement among the group's members, either express or implied; (2) a common purpose that the group intends to carry out; (3) community of pecuniary interest among members of the group in that purpose; and (4) an equal right to a voice in control and direction of the enterprise which gives an equal right of control. Fredrickson v. Kluever, 82 S.D. 579, 152 N.W.2d 346, 348. See also Joint adventure; Joint venture.

Joint estate. Joint estate involves unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession, and joint tenants must have the same interest accruing under the same conveyance, commencing at the same time, and held under the same undivided possession. Mosser v. Dolsay, 132 N.J.Eq. 121, 27 A.2d 155. See also Joint tenancy.

Joint executors. Co-executors; two or more who are joined in the execution of a will. See also Coexecutor.

Joint feasors in pari delicto /jɔɪnt fɪˈzɛrərz ɪn pɛrˈɛs dəlɪktə/. Phrase means as between persons who by concert of action intentionally commit the wrong complained of; there is no right of contribution. Commercial Cas. Ins. Co. v. Leonard, 210 Ark. 575, 196 S.W.2d 919, 920.

Joint indictment. See Indictment.

Joint inventions. These are made when two or more persons jointly work or collaborate in devising and putting into practical form the subject-matter of patent. Altoona Publix Theatres v. American Tri-Ergon Corporation, C.C.A.Pa., 72 F.2d 53, 56.

Jointist. A person established in a definite place of business, for the purpose of illegally selling intoxicants. One who opens up, conducts, or maintains any place for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors.

Joint liability. One wherein joint obligor has right to insist that co-obligor be joined as a codefendant with him, that is, that they be sued jointly. Schram v. Perkins, D.C.Mich., 38 F.Supp. 404, 407. See Contribution; Joiner.

Joint lives. This expression is used to designate the duration of an estate or right which is granted to two or more persons to be enjoyed so long as they both (or all) shall live. As soon as one dies, the interest determines.

Jointly. Unitedly, combined or joined together in unity of interest or liability. Soderberg v. Atlantic Lighterage Corporation, D.C.N.Y., 15 F.2d 209. In a joint maker; in concert; not separately; in conjunction. To be or become liable to a joint obligation. Kaspar American State Bank v. Oul Homestead Ass'n, 301 Ill.App. 326, 22 N.E.2d 785, 786; Creighton v. Continental Roll & Steel Foundry Co., 155 Pa.Super. 165, 38 A.2d 337, 342. Participated in or used by two or more, held or shared in common.

Jointly acquired property. Property accumulated by joint industry of husband and wife during marriage. See also Community property.

Jointly and severally. See Joint and several contracts; Joint and several liability.

Jointly owned property. See Community property; Joint bank account; Joint tenancy.

Joint negligence. In case of "joint negligence" of several people, proximately causing accident, they act together in concert and either do something together which they should not do or fail to do something which they are together obligated to do under circumstances. Russo v. Aucoin, La.App., 7 So.2d 744, 747. See also Contribution; Joint tort-feasors.

Joint offense. One offense committed by two or more persons jointly. Crime committed by the participation of two or more persons. See Conspiracy.

Joint rate. See Joint through rate; Rate.

Jointress, jointuress. A woman who has an estate settled on her by her husband, to hold during her life, if she survives him.

Joint return. See Joint tax return.

Joint-stock association. An unincorporated business enterprise with ownership interests represented by shares of stock. It was recognized at common law and by statute is generally treated as an entity for certain purposes.

Joint-stock company. See Joint-stock association.

Joint stock insurance company. An insurance company having a subscribed capital and policyholders having nothing to do with management. Ohio Farmers Indemnity Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Ohio, 108 F.2d 665, 667.

Joint tax return. Tax return filed for federal or state taxes by a husband and wife together and each is individually liable. Such return includes the income of both spouses, though one spouse need not have any income. It is normally more beneficial from a tax standpoint for spouses to file a joint return than separate returns.

Joint tenancy. See Tenancy.

Joint through rate. Transportation charge applicable from a point on one transportation line to a point on another transportation line. Occurs when freight is to be shipped to its destination by more than one carrier.

Joint tort. Where two or more persons owe to another the same duty and by their common neglect such other is injured, the tort is "joint." See Joint negligence; Joint tort-feasors.

Joint tort-feasors. Term refers to two or more persons jointly or severally liable in tort for the same injury to Joint trial. The trial of two or more persons for the same or similar offenses conducted within the framework of one trial. See also Jointer; Trial.

Jointure. A freehold estate in lands or tenements secured to the wife, and to take effect on the decease of the husband, and to continue during her life at the least, unless she be herself the cause of its determination. Property provision for wife, made prior to marriage, in lieu of dower.

Joint venture. A legal entity in the nature of a partnership engaged in the joint prosecution of a particular transaction for mutual profit. Tex-Co Grain Co. v. Happy Wheat Growers, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 542 S.W.2d 934, 936. An association of persons jointly undertaking some commercial enterprise. It requires a community of interest in the performance of the subject matter, a right to direct and govern the policy in connection therewith, and duty, which may be altered by agreement, to share both in profit and losses. Russell v. Klein, 33 Ill.App.3d 1005, 339 N.E.2d 510, 512.

A one-time grouping of two or more persons in a business undertaking. Unlike a partnership, a joint venture does not entail a continuing relationship among the parties. A joint venture is treated like a partnership for Federal income tax purposes.

See also Community of interest; Joint venture; Joint enterprise.

Joint venture corporation. See Corporation.

Joint verdict. Jury verdict covering more than one party to the action and combining two or more verdicts in one. See also Verdict.

Joint will. See Will.

Joker. In political usage, a clause in legislation that is ambiguous or apparently immaterial, inserted to render it inoperative or uncertain without arousing opposition at the time of passage.

Jones Act. Federal statute passed in 1920 which provides that a seaman injured in the course of his employment by the negligence of the owner, master or fellow crew members can recover damages for his injuries. 46 U.S.C.A. § 688. Similar remedies are available under the Act to the personal representative of a seaman killed in the course of his employment. See also Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

Jornale /jɔrnəˈli/ /jûr/ . In old English law, as much land as could be plowed in one day.

Josh. To ridicule or tease, or make fun of in a joke, to lure or tease by misrepresenting the facts.

Jourr /ʒʊˈwɜːr/. A French word, meaning to enjoy; to have enjoyment of; or to possess.

Jour /ʒʊˈør/. A French word, signifying "day."

Jour en banc /ʒʊr ən bɛ̃/. A day in banc. Distinguished from "jour en pays" (a day in the country), otherwise called "jour en nisi prius."

Jour in court /ʒʊr ən koʊr/. In old practice, day in court; day to appear in court; appearance day. "Every process gives the defendant a day in court."

Journal. A daily book; a book in which entries are made or events recorded from day to day. The place where transactions are recorded as they occur. The book of original entry.

In maritime law, the journal (otherwise called "log" or "log-book") is a book kept on every vessel, which contains a brief record of the events and occurrences of each day of a voyage, with the nautical observations, course of the ship, account of the weather, etc. In the system of double-entry bookkeeping, the journal is an account-book into which are transcribed, daily or at other intervals, the items entered upon the day-book, for more convenient posting into the ledger.

In the usage of legislative bodies, the journal is a daily record of the proceedings of either house. It is kept by the clerk, and in it are entered the appointments and actions of committees, introduction of bills, motions, votes, resolutions, etc., in the order of their occurrence.

Journal entry. A recording in a journal of equal debits and credits, with, when necessary, an explanation of the transaction.

Journal entry rule. Regularity of enactment of statute may be inquired into by examining legislative journals.

Journalists' privilege. In the law of defamation, a publisher is protected in actions of defamation if the publication constitutes fair comment on the subject of public officers and employees in matters of public concern. Such privilege is qualified and hence is lost on proof of malice which, in this context, consists in publishing material either knowing it to be false or heedless in the reckless disregard of whether it is true or false when, in fact, it is false. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. See also Shield laws.

Journeyman. A craftsman who has progressed through an apprenticeship and is qualified in his trade.

Journeys account. In English practice, a new writ which the plaintiff was permitted to sue out within a reasonable time after the abatement, without his fault, of the first writ. This time was computed with reference to the number of days which the plaintiff must spend in journeying to reach the court; hence the name of journeys account, that is, journeys accounts or counted.

Joyriding. The temporary taking of an automobile without intent to deprive owner permanently of the vehicle. People v. Rivera, 185 Colo. 337, 524 P.2d 1082, 1083.
Jubere /jubiri/ Lat. In the civil law, to order, direct, or command. The word jubeo (I order), in a will, was called a "word of direction," as distinguished from "precatory words." To assure or promise. To decree or pass a law.

Judex /jüwdéks/ Lat. In Roman law, a private person appointed by the prætor, with the consent of the parties, to try and decide a cause of action commenced before him. He received from the prætor a written formula instructing him as to the legal principles according to which the action was to be judged. Hence the proceedings before him were said to be in judicio, as those before the prætor were said to be in jure. A judge who conducted the trial from beginning to end; magistratus.

The practice of calling in judices was disused before Justinian's time: therefore, in the Code, Institutes, and Novels, judex means judge in its modern sense. The term judex is used with very different significations at different periods of Roman law.

In later and modern civil law, a judge.

In old English law, a juror. A judge, in modern sense, especially—as opposed to justiciarius, i.e., a common-law judge—to denote an ecclesiastical judge.

Judex ad quem /jüwdéks ædw kwém/ A judge to whom an appeal is taken.

Judex equitatem semper spectare debet /jüwdéks lykwatéydam semper spekteriay débét/ A judge ought always to regard equity.

Judex ante oculos equitatem semper habere debet /jüwdéks æntiik élkalows lykwatéydam semper habiriyi débét/ A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes.

Judex a quo /jüwdéks æy kwó/ In civil law, the judge from whom, as Judex ad quem is the judge to whom, an appeal is made or taken.

Judex bonus nihil ex arbitrio suo faciat, nec proposito domestico voluntatis, sed juxta leges et iura pronunciet /jüwdéks bównæs náy(h)al #ekz arbiitriyow s(y)wówow fésyw(i)y et, nek prëppzdow damésasíy volántéydas, sed jüxta líjyjyz ët jüra pránfshyiyi/ A good judge should do nothing of his own arbitrary will, nor on the dictate of his personal inclination, but should decide according to law and justice.

Judex damnatur cum nocens absolvitur /jüwdéks dannyaéydar küm nósem(d)z abzoéyvdr/ The judge is condemned when a guilty person escapes punishment.

Judex datus /jüwdéks déydas/ In Roman law, a judge given, that is, assigned or appointed, by the prætor to try a cause.

Judex debet judicare secundum allegata et probata /jüwdéks débät jüwdakériy sekádım elagnéydas et próbédyas/ The judge ought to decide according to the allegations and the proofs.

Judex delegatus /jüwdéks délagnéydas/ A delegated judge; a special judge.

Judex est lex loquens /jüwdéks ëst léks lwokwén(d)z/ A judge is the law speaking [the mouth of the law].

Judex fiscalis /jüwdéks faskéylas/ A fiscal judge; one having cognizance of matters relating to the fiscus (q.v.).

Judex habere debet duos sales,—salem sapientie, ne sit insipidus; et saltem conscientie, ne sit diabolus /jüwdéks hahiriy débát dé(y)üwows séllyiz: séllyam sápíyénshiyiy niy sid ansipadás ét séllyam kón(sh)iyénshiyiy, niy sid díyéybalas/ A judge should have two salt,—the salt of wisdom, lest he be insipid [or foolish]; and the salt of conscience, lest he be devilish.

Judex non potest esse testis in propria causa /jüwdéks nón pówdast ěši téśtas in prówpripía kóz/ A judge cannot be a witness in his own cause.

Judex non potest injuriām sībi datam punīre /jüwdéks nón pówdast anjuārīm sībā dēydam pumānřiyī/ A judge cannot punish a wrong done to himself.

Judex non reddit quos quand petens lps e requirī /jüwdéks nón rēčet plās kwām kwōd pēdan(d)z īpsī rlakwyrat/ A judge does not give more than what the complaining party himself demands.

Judex ordinarius /jüwdéks órdanmnr(i)yys/ In the civil law, an ordinary judge; one who had the right of hearing and determining causes as a matter of his own proper jurisdiction (ex proprìa jurisdictìone), and not by virtue of a delegated authority. According to Blackstone judices ordinarii determined only questions of fact. 3 Bl.Comm. 315.

Judex pedaneus /jüwdéks paděnyiīyas/ In Roman law, inferior judge; deputy judge. The judge who was commissioned by the prætor to hear a cause was so-called, from the low seat which he anciently occupied at the foot of the prætor's tribunal.

Judex questionis /jüwdéks kwĕs(h)chiyóñnas/ A magistrate who decided the law of a criminal case, when the prætor himself did not sit as a magistrate. The director of the criminal court under the presidencу of the prætor.

Judex selectus /jüwdéks salěktas/ A select or selected judex or judge. The judges in criminal suits selected by the prætor. These judices selecti were used in criminal causes, and between them and modern jurors many points of resemblance have been noticed; 3 Bl.Comm. 366.

Judge. An officer so named in his commission, who presides in some court; a public officer, appointed to preside and to administer the law in a court of justice; the chief member of a court, and charged with the control of proceedings and the decision of questions of law or discretion. Todd v. U. S., 158 U.S. 278, 15 S.Ct. 889, 39 L.Ed. 982. A public officer who, by virtue of his office, is clothed with judicial authority. State ex rel. Mayer v. City of Cincinnati, 80 Ohio App. 119, 19 N.E.2d 902. Presiding officer of court. State v. Horn, 336 Mo. 554, 79 S.W.2d 1044, 1045. Any officer authorized to function as or for judge in doing specified acts. In re Roberts' Estate, 49 Cal. App.2d 71, 120 P.2d 933, 937.

"Judge," "justice," and "court" are often used synonymously or interchangeably.

See also Magistrate.
Judge advocate. An officer of the Judge Advocate General's Corps of the Army or the Navy or an officer of the Air Force or the Marine Corps who is designated as a judge advocate. 10 U.S.C.A. § 801.

In American usage, the term "judge advocate" no longer refers to any of the parties involved in a court-martial. Instead, it refers to the principal legal adviser on the staff of a military commander (usually with a more definitive title, such as Staff Judge Advocate, Post Judge Advocate, or Command Judge Advocate) or, more broadly, to any officer in the Judge Advocate General's Corps or Department (i.e., branch) of one of the U.S. armed forces. British usage is different.

Judge advocate corps. Staff of Judge Advocate General.

Judge Advocate General. Senior legal officer and chief legal advisor of the Army, Navy, and Air Force and, except when the Coast Guard is operating as a service in the Navy, the General Counsel of the Department of Transportation. 10 U.S.C.A. § 801.

Judge de facto. One who holds and exercises the office of judge under the color of lawful authority and by a false pretense or fiction of law that has not full force as the law, as where he was appointed under an unconstitutional statute, or by an usurper of the appointing power, or has not taken the oath of office.

Judge-made law. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which construe away the meaning of statutes, or find meanings in them the legislature never intended. It is perhaps more commonly used as meaning, simply, the law established by judicial precedent and decisions. Laws having their source in judicial decisions as opposed to laws having their source in statutes or administrative regulations.

Judge pro tempore /sɛn prɔw tɛmpɔrɪ/. One appointed for the term or some part thereof, during which time he exercises all the functions of the regular judge. State ex rel. Hodshire v. Bingham, 218 Ind. 490, 33 N.E.2d 771.

Judge's minutes, or notes. Memoranda usually taken by a judge, while a trial is proceeding, of the testimony of witnesses, or documents offered or admitted in evidence, of offers of evidence, and whether it has been received or rejected, and the like matters.

Judge trial. Trial conducted before a judge without a jury. Jury waived trial; bench trial; non-jury trial.

The official and authentic decision of a court of justice upon the respective rights and claims of the parties to an action or suit therein litigated and submitted to its determination. The final decision of the court resolving the dispute and determining the rights and obligations of the parties. The law's last word in a judicial controversy, it being the final determination by a court of the rights of the parties upon matters submitted to it in an action or proceeding. Towley v. King Arthur Rings, Inc., 40 N.Y.2d 129, 386 N.Y.S.2d 80, 351 N.E.2d 728, 730. Conclusion of law upon facts found or admitted by the parties or upon their default in the course of the suit. Decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein, Allegheny County v. Maryland Casualty Co., C.C.A.Pa., 132 F.2d 894, 897; State v. Siglea, 196 Wash. 283, 82 P.2d 583, 584. Decision or sentence of the law pronounced by the court and entered upon its docket, minutes or record. Determination of a court of competent jurisdiction upon matters submitted to it. State ex rel. Curran v. Brookes, 142 Ohio St. 107, 50 N.E.2d 995, 998. Determination or sentence of the law, pronounced by a competent judge or court, as the result of an action or proceeding instituted in such court, affirming that, upon the matters submitted for its decision, a legal duty or liability does or does not exist.

Term "judgment" under rules practice includes "decree". Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(a). Terms "decision" and "judgment" are commonly used interchangeably.

The term "judgment" is also used to denote the reason which the court gives for its decision; but this is more properly denominated an "opinion."

See also Amendment of judgment; Decree; Entering judgments; Judgment in rem; Judgment quasi in rem; Rendition of judgment; Simulated judgment; Vacation of judgment; Void judgment.

Specific Types of Judgments

Agreed judgment. A judgment entered on agreement of the parties, which receives the sanction of the court, and it constitutes a contract between the parties to the agreement, operates as an adjudication between them and when court gives the agreement its sanction, becomes a judgment of the court. Traveler's Ins. Co. v. U. S., D.C.Tex., 283 F.Supp. 14, 28.

Alternative judgment. One that by its terms might be satisfied by doing either of several acts at the election of the party or parties against whom the judgment is rendered and from whom performance is by the judgment required. A judgment for one thing or another which does not specifically and in a definite manner determine the rights of the parties.

Appealable judgment. One which disposes of all parties and issues in case. Chuning v. Calvert, Mo.App., 452 S.W.2d 580, 582. See also Final judgment, Infra.

Arrest of judgment. See Arrest of judgment.

Assets in futuro, judgment of. One against an executor or heir, who holds at the time no property on which it can operate.
Cognovit actionem. See Cognovit actionem.

Cognovit judgment. See Cognovit judgment; also, Confession of judgment, below.

Conditional judgment. One whose force depends upon the performance of certain acts to be done in the future by one of the parties; as, one which may become of no effect if the defendant appears and pleads according to its terms, or one which orders the sale of mortgaged property in a foreclosure proceeding unless the mortgagor shall pay the amount decreed within the time limited.

Confession of judgment. At common law, judgment entered where defendant, instead of entering plea, confessed action, or withdrew plea and confessed action. Judgment where a defendant gives the plaintiff a cognovit or written confession of the action by virtue of which the plaintiff enters judgment. The act of a debtor in permitting judgment to be entered against him by his creditor, for a stipulated sum, by a written statement to that effect or by warrant of attorney, without the institution of legal proceedings of any kind; voluntary submission to court's jurisdiction. O'Hara v. Manley, 140 Pa.Super. 39, 12 A.2d 820, 822. Such agreements for confession of judgment are void in many states; e.g. Mass.G.L. c. 231, § 13A.

The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by a term authorizing a confession of judgment if the instrument is not paid when due. U.C.C. § 3-112.

See also Cognovit judgment.

Consent judgment. A judgment, the provisions and terms of which are settled and agreed to by the parties to the action. Hargis v. Hargis, 252 Ky. 198, 66 S.W.2d 59; Matthews v. Looney, 132 Tex. 313, 123 S.W.2d 871, 872. See also Consent (Consent decree); and Agreed judgment, supra.

Contradictory judgment. A judgment which has been given after the parties have been heard, either in support of their claims or in defense. Used in Louisiana to distinguish such judgments from those rendered by default.

Declaratory judgment. See Declaratory judgment.

Default and inquiry, judgment by. It establishes right of action of kind properly pleaded in complaint, determines right of plaintiff to recover at least nominal damages and costs, and precludes defendant from offering any evidence on execution of inquiry to show that plaintiff has no right of action. Such type judgment is obsolete.

Default judgment. A judgment rendered in consequence of the non-appearance of the defendant. Fed. R.Civ.P. 55(a). One entered upon the failure of a party to appear or plead at the appointed time. The term is also applied to judgments entered under statutes or rules of court, for want of affidavit of defense, plea, answer, and the like, or for failure to take some required step in the cause.

Judgments rendered on defendant's default are: Judgment by default; Judgment by non sum informatus; judgment nil dicit. Judgments rendered on plaintiff's default are: Judgment of non prosequitur and judgment of nonsuit (from non sequitur, or ne sicut pas).

Deficiency judgment. A judgment in favor of a creditor for the difference between the amount of the indebtedness and the amount derived from the judicial sale held in order to satisfy the indebtedness. Cameron Brown South, Inc. v. East Glen Oaks, Inc., La.App., 341 So.2d 450, 456. See also Deficiency judgment.

De melioribus damnis. See De melioribus damnis.

Demurrer, judgment on. Such concludes party demurring, because by demurring, a party admits the facts alleged in the pleadings of his adversary and relies on their insufficiency in law. See Demurrer.

Dismissal, judgment of. See Dismissal.

Domestic judgment. A judgment is domestic in the courts of the same state or country where it was originally rendered; in other states or countries it is called foreign. See Foreign judgment, infra.

Dormant judgment. One which has not been satisfied or extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be issued upon it without first reviving the judgment. Or one which has lost its lien on land from the failure to issue execution on it or take other steps to enforce it within the time limited by statute.

Execution of judgment. See Execution of judgment or decree.

Face of judgment. See Face of judgment.

Final judgment. One which puts an end to an action at law by declaring that the plaintiff either has or has not entitled himself to recover the remedy he sues for. So distinguished from interlocutory judgments. A judgment which disposes of the subject-matter of the controversy or determines the litigation as to all parties on its merits. A judgment which terminates all litigation on the same right. Appeals in federal courts will only lie from "final" judgments. 28 U.S.C. § 1291. See Final decision; Final decision rule.

Foreign judgment. One rendered by the courts of a state or country politically and judicially distinct from that where the judgment or its effect is brought in question. One pronounced by a tribunal of a foreign country, or of a sister state. Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U.S. 287, 11 S.Ct. 92, 34 L.Ed. 670. Several states have adopted the Uniform Foreign Money Judgments Recognition Act, and also the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act.

General verdict subject to a special case, judgment on. Where at the trial the parties agree on the facts and the only question is one of law and a verdict pro forma is taken and the jury find for the plaintiff generally but subject to the opinion of the court on a special case.

In personam or inter partes. See Judgment in personam or inter partes.

In rem. See Judgment in rem.

Interlocutory judgment. One given in the progress of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate and does not finally determine or complete the suit. One which determines some preliminary or subordinate point or plea, or settles some step, question, or default arising in the progress of the cause, but does not adjudicate the ultimate rights of the parties, or finally put the case out of court. Thus, a judgment or order passed upon any provisional or accessory claim or contention is, in general, merely interlocutory, although it may finally dispose of that particular matter. An “interlocutory judgment” is one which reserves or leaves some further question or direction for future determination. State ex rel. Great Am. Ins. Co. v. Jones, Mo., 396 S.W.2d 601, 603. See Interlocutory appeal.

Judgment notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

Judgment of conviction. A judgment of conviction shall set forth the plea, the verdict or findings, and the adjudication and sentence. If the defendant is found not guilty or for any other reason is entitled to be discharged, judgment shall be entered accordingly. The judgment shall be signed by the judge and entered by the clerk. Fed.R.Crim.P. 32(b).

Judgment on pleadings. After the pleadings are closed but within such time as not to delay the trial, any party may move for judgment on the pleadings. If, on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56, and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such a motion by Rule 56. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(c). This device resembles closely a demurrer to the extent that it attacks the pleadings on the same basis as a demurrer.

Junior judgment. One which was rendered or entered after the rendition or entry of another judgment, on a different claim, against the same defendant.

Merits, judgment on. One rendered after argument and investigation, and when it is determined which party is in the right, as distinguished from a judgment rendered upon some preliminary or formal or merely technical point, or by default and without trial. A decision that was rendered on the basis of the evidence introduced. Normally, a judgment based solely on some procedural error is not a judgment on the merits. The latter kind of judgment is often referred to as a “dismissal without prejudice.” A party who has received a judgment on the merits cannot bring the same suit again. A party whose case has been dismissed without prejudice can bring the same suit again so long as the procedural errors are corrected (i.e., cured) in the latter action.

Money judgment. One which adjudges the payment of a sum of money, as distinguished from one directing an act to be done or property to be restored or transferred. A judgment, or any part thereof, for a sum of money or directing the payment of a sum of money. For enforcement or satisfaction of money judgment, see Execution. Several states have adopted the Uniform Foreign Money Judgments Recognition Act.

Nihil dicit. See Nihil dicit.

Nil capit per breve or per bil(a) (that he take nothing by his writ, or by his bill). A judgment in favor of the defendant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

Nil dicit, judgment by. Judgment for plaintiff rendered when defendant has appeared but has failed to answer or when answer has been withdrawn or abandoned and no further defense is made. Bredeson v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 513 S.W.2d 110, 112. At common law, it may be taken against defendant who omits to plead or answer whole or any separable substantial portion of declaration. It amounts to judgment by confession with reference to cause of action states. Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Ware, Tex.Civ.App., 73 S.W.2d 1076, 1077. Under current rules practice, such judgment is substantially identical with default judgment. See also Nihil dicit.

Nisi. At common law, judgment nisi was a judgment entered on the return of the nisi prius record, which, according to the terms of the postea indorsed thereon was to become absolute unless otherwise ordered by the court within the first four days of the next succeeding term. See also Nisi; Show cause order.

Nolle prosequi, judgment of. One entered against plaintiff when, after appearance and before judgment, he declares that he will not further prosecute his suit. Merchants Mut. Casualty Co. v. Kiley, 92 N.H. 323, 30 A.2d 681, 683. See also Nolle prosequi.

Non obstante veredicto. See Non obstante veredicto.

Non pros. (Non prosequitur he does not follow up, or pursue). See Non prosequitur.

Nonsuit. See Nonsuit.

Non sum informatus. See Non sum informatus.

Notwithstanding verdict. See Non obstante veredicto.

Nul til record. See Nul til record.

Nunc pro tunc. One entered on a day subsequent to the time at which it should have been entered, as of the latter date. See Nunc pro tunc.

Offer of judgment. Before trial, a party defending against a claim may serve upon the adverse party an offer to allow judgment to be taken against him for the money or property or to the effect specified in his offer, with costs then accrued. If after service of the offer the adverse party serves written notice that the offer is accepted, either party may then file the offer and notice of acceptance together with proof of service thereof and thereupon the clerk shall enter judgment. Fed.R.Civ.P. 68.

Personal judgment. One imposing on the defendant a personal liability to pay it, and which may therefore be satisfied out of any of his property which is within the reach of process, as distinguished from one which may be satisfied only out of a particular fund or the proceeds of particular property. Judgments in which court has personal jurisdiction over parties. State v. Dreyer, 188 Kan. 270, 362 P.2d 55, 57.

Pro retorno habendo. A judgment that the party have a return of the goods.

Quod computet. See Quod computet.

Quod partes replacitent. See Quod partes replacitent.

Quod partitio fiat. Interlocutory judgment in a writ of partition, that partition be made.
Quod recuperet. See Quod recuperet.
Relicta verificatione. See Relicta verificatione.
Repleader, judgment of. See Repleader.
Respondeat ouster. When the issue in law arises on a dilatory plea, and is determined for the plaintiff, the judgment is only that the defendant "do answer over," called a judgment of respondeat ouster; it is interlocutory only.
Retракт. See Retракт.
Revival of judgment. See Revival.
Stet processus. See Stet processus.
Verdict, judgment on. The most usual of the judgments upon facts found, and is for the party obtaining the verdict. See also Verdict.
Warrant of attorney. See Warrant.
Judgment book. A book required to be kept by the clerk, among the records of the court, for the entry of judgments. Such is called a "civil docket" or "criminal docket" in the federal and many state courts. Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Judgment docket.
Judgment creditor. One who has obtained a judgment against his debtor, under which he can enforce execution. A person in whose favor a money judgment is entered or a person who becomes entitled to enforce it. Owner of an unsatisfied judgment.
Judgment debt. One which is evidenced by matter of record. A debt, whether on simple contract or by specialty, for the recovery of which judgment has been entered up, either upon a cognovit or upon a warrant of attorney or as the result of a successful action.
Judgment debtor. A person against whom judgment has been recovered, and which remains unsatisfied. The term has been construed to include a judgment debtor's successors in interest.
Judgment docket. A list or docket of the judgments entered in a given court, methodically kept by the clerk or other proper officer, open to public inspection, and intended to afford official notice to interested parties of the existence or lien of judgments. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Docket; Judgment book.
Judgment, estoppel by. The estoppel raised by the rendition of a valid judgment by a court having jurisdiction. The essence of estoppel by judgment is that there has been a judicial determination of a fact. Price v. Clement, 187 Okl. 304, 102 P.2d 595, 597. It rests upon principles forbidding one to relitigate matter in dispute between parties which has been determined by competent court, on ground that record of judgment imports absolute verity. Where subsequent proceeding is on same cause of action between same parties a former adjudication is conclusive. Kimpton v. Spellman, 351 Mo. 674, 173 S.W.2d 886. Ordinarily, "estoppel" of judgment does not extend to matters not expressly adjudicated. Sonken-Galamba Corporation v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., C.C.A. Mo., 124 F.2d 952, 958; and a judgment or decree without prejudice does not work an "estoppel". In re McDermott, C.C.A.III., 115 F.2d 582, 584. See also Collateral estoppel doctrine; Issue preclusion; Judicial estoppel; Res (Res judicata).

Judgment execution. The formal or written evidence of the judgment which commands the officer to seize the goods and property of the judgment debtor to satisfy the judgment. Procedure on execution is governed by Fed.R.Civil P. 69. See Execution.

Judgment file. The docket in which the entry of a judgment is recorded and preserved as a permanent court record. Fed.R.Civ.P. 79; Fed.R.Crim.P. 55. See also Docket; Judgment docket.

Judgment in personam or inter partes /j'ямант в персóвном/ /интар пárдзья/. A judgment against a particular person, as distinguished from a judgment against a thing or a right or status.

Judgment in rem. An adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular thing or subject matter, by a tribunal having competent authority. Booth v. Copley, 283 Ky. 23, 140 S.W.2d 662, 666. It is founded on proceeding instituted against or on some thing or subject matter whose status or condition is to be determined, Eureka Building & Loan Ass'n v. Shultz, 139 Kan. 435, 32 P.2d 477, 480; or one brought to enforce a right in the thing itself, Federal Land Bank of Omaha v. Jefferson, 229 Iowa 1054, 295 N.W. 855, 857; Hobbs v. Lenon, 191 Ark. 509, 87 S.W.2d 6, 11. It operates directly upon the property. Hobbs v. Lenon, 191 Ark. 509, 87 S.W.2d 6, 11; Guild v. Wallis, 150 Or. 69, 40 P.2d 737, 742. It is a solemn declaration of the status of some person or thing. Jones v. Test, Tex.Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 617, 620. It is binding upon all persons in so far as their interests in the property are concerned. Booth v. Copley, 283 Ky. 23, 140 S.W.2d 662, 666; Hobbs v. Lenon, 191 Ark. 509, 87 S.W.2d 6, 11. See also Judgment quasi in rem.

Judgment in Retракт /j'ямант в Retракт/. A judgment which is usually based upon and follows a settlement out of court, and like a judgment on the merits is a bar and estops plaintiff from again proceeding in another suit on same cause of action. Steele v. Beaty, 215 N.C. 680, 2 S.E.2d 854, 856, 857. See Retракт.

Judgment lien. A lien binding the real estate of a judgment debtor, in favor of the holder of the judgment, and giving the latter a right to levy on the land for the satisfaction of his judgment to the exclusion of other adverse interests subsequent to the judgment. Right to subject land of judgment debtor to satisfaction of judgment. A charge on or attachment of property of one who owes a debt and is subject to a judgment thereon. See also Execution.

Judgment note. A promissory note (also called cognovit note) embodying an authorization to an attorney, or to a designated attorney, or to the holder, or the clerk of the court, to enter an appearance for the maker and confess a judgment against him for a sum therein named, upon default of payment of the note. Such are invalid in many states. See Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Judgment paper. In English practice, a sheet of paper containing an incipitur of the pleadings in an action at law, upon which final judgment is signed by the master.

Judgment proof. Descriptive of all persons against whom judgments for money recoveries are of no effect; e.g., persons who are insolvent, who do not have sufficient property within the jurisdiction of the court to satisfy the judgment, or who are protected by statutes which exempt wages and property from execution.

Judgment quasi in rem. A judgment based on the court’s jurisdiction over the defendant’s interest in property within the jurisdiction of the court and not on the court’s jurisdiction over the person of the defendant (in personam) or over the thing itself (in rem).

Judgment record. In English practice, a parchment roll, on which are transcribed the whole proceedings in the cause, deposited and filed of record in the treasury of the court, after signing of judgment. In American practice, the record is signed, filed, and docketed by the clerk. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 79. See also Docket; Judgment docket.

Judgment recovered. A plea by a defendant that the plaintiff has already recovered that which he seeks to obtain by his action. This was formerly a species of sham plea, often put in for the purpose of delaying a plaintiff’s action. Under current rules practice, the defense of prior judgment would be raised as an affirmative defense. Fed.R.Civ.P. 6(c).

Judgment roll. See Roll.

Judgment void on its face. A judgment or order is “void on its face” when its invalidity is apparent upon inspection of judgment roll. Application of Behymer, 130 Cal.App. 200, 19 P.2d 829, 830.

Judicandum est legibus, non exemplis. /jûwdskaːndəm ˆst liːjəbəs nɔn ɐɡzəmpləs/. Judgment is to be given according to the laws, not according to examples or precedents.

Judicature /jûwdskaːriə/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, to judge; to decide or determine judicially; to give judgment or sentence.

Judicatior /jûwdskəiˈʃiːə(ɹ)/. Lat. In the civil law, judging; the pronouncing of sentence after hearing a cause.

Judicatories /jûwdskatɔrɪəz/juwdkat(o)riyz/. The term as used designates that department of government which it was intended should interpret and administer the laws.

Judicature. The state or profession of those officers who are employed in administering justice; the judiciary. A judiciary, tribunal, or court of justice. Jurisdiction, the right of judicial action; the scope or extent of jurisdiction.

Judicature acts (England). The acts under which the present system of courts in England was organized and is continued.

The statutes of 36 & 37 Vict., c. 66, and 38 & 39 Vict., c. 77, which went into force November 1, 1875, with amendments in 1877, 40 & 41 Vict., c. 9; 1879, 42 & 43 Vict., c. 78; and 1881, 44 & 45 Vict., c. 68, made very important changes in the organization of, and methods of procedure in, the superior courts of England, consolidating them together so as to constitute one supreme court of judicature, consisting of two divisions,—her majesty’s high court of justice, having chiefly original jurisdiction; and her majesty’s court of appeal, whose jurisdiction is chiefly appellate.

See also Judicary Acts.

Judices non tenetur exprimere causam sententiae sue /jûwdsiːjəs nɔn tənətər əskrəˈprɛməri kɔzəm sɛntɛnˈʃiːə(ɹ)sə ˈsjuː/. Judges are not bound to explain the reason of their sentence.

Judices ordinarii /jûwdsiːjəs oʊrdənəriˌi/. Lat. Plural of judex ordinarius (q.v.).

Judices pedanei /jûwdsiːjəs pəˈdəniˌi/. Lat. Plural of judex pedanus (q.v.).

Judices selecti /jûwdsiːjəs səˈlekti/. Lat. Plural of judex selectus (q.v.).

Judicium in curia regis non adhibentur, sed stent in robore suo quosque per errorem aut attinentem adnullentur /ˌʃiːdiʃiə(ɹ)ˈiːna kəˌriəs nɔn ədənələntər, sed stent in rəˈbɔrə səˈyuwəkwəʃiŋ pər əˈroɾəm ɔd stɨtŋətəm ədənələntər/. Judgments in the king’s court are not to be annullished, but to remain in force until annulled by error or attain.

Judicium in deliberationibus crebro matrescutum, in accelerato processu nunquam /ˌʃiːdiʃiə(ɹ)ˈiːna dələˌbəriˈeʃiə(ɹ)əmni ˈkɾebru məˈtrəskətəm, in əskəˌleəriˈəʊd prəˈsəʃiːə(ɹ)əw nəŋkwəm/. Judgments frequently become matured by deliberations, never by hurried process or precipitation.

Judicial. Belonging to the office of a judge; as judicial authority. Relating to or connected with the administration of justice; as a judicial officer. Having the character of judgment or formal legal procedure; as a judicial act. Proceeding from a court of justice; as a judicial writ, a judicial determination. Involving the exercise of judgment or discretion; as distinguished from ministerial.

Of or pertaining or appropriate to the administration of justice, or courts of justice, or a judge thereof, or the proceedings therein; as, judicial power, judicial proceedings. State v. Freitag, 53 Idaho 726, 27 P.2d 68.

As to judicial Action; Confession; Day; Discretion; Document; Estoppel; Evidence; Factor; Mortgage; Notice; Process; Record; Sale; Sequestration; Writ, see those titles. As to quasi judicial, see that title.
Judicial act. An act which involves exercise of discretion or judgment. It is also defined as an act by court or magistrate touching rights of parties or property brought before it or him by voluntary appearance, or by prior action of ministerial officers. An act by member of judicial department in construing law or applying it to a particular state of facts. State ex rel. Hare v. Board of Com'rs of Creek County, 188 Okl. 194, 107 P.2d 542, 545. An act of administrative board if it goes to determination of some right, protection of which is peculiar office of courts. Belk's Dep't Store v. Guilford County, 222 N.C. 441, 23 S.E.2d 897, 902. An act which imposes burdens or confers privileges according to finding of some person or body whether a general rule is applicable or according to discretionary judgment as to propriety. An act which undertakes to determine a question of right or obligation or of property as foundation on which it proceeds. The action of judge in trying a cause and rendering a decision. Application of Giltz, 178 Misc. 198, 33 N.Y.S.2d 629, 630, 631.

See also Decision; Decree; Judgment; Order.

Judicial action. An adjudication upon rights of parties who in general appear or are brought before tribunal by notice or process, and upon whose claims some decision or judgment is rendered. Action of a court upon a cause, by hearing it, and determining what shall be adjudged or decreed between the parties, and with which is the right of the case.

Judicial activism. Judicial philosophy which motivates judges to depart from strict adherence to judicial precedent in favor or progressive and new social policies which are not always consistent with the restraint expected of appellate judges. It is commonly marked by decisions calling for social engineering and occasionally these decisions represent intrusions into legislative and executive matters.

Judicial acts. See Judiciary Acts.

Judicial admission. See Admission.

Judicial Article. Article III of the U.S.Const. which creates the U.S. Supreme Court; vests in Congress the right to create inferior courts; provides for life tenure for Federal Court judges; and specifies the powers and jurisdiction of the Federal Courts. See Judicial branch; Judicial power; Judicial system; Judiciary Acts.

Judicial authority. The power and authority appertaining to the office of a judge. Jurisdiction; the official right to hear and determine questions in controversy.

Judicial bonds. Generic term for bonds required by court for appeals, costs, attachment, injunction, etc.

Judicial branch. Branch of state and federal government whose function it is to interpret, construe, apply, and generally administer and enforce the laws. This branch, together with the executive and legislative branches forms our tripartite form of federal and state government. See Judicial Article; Judicial power; Judicial system; Judiciary Acts.

Judicial business. Such as involves the exercise of judicial power, or the application of the mind and authority of a court to some contested matter, or the conduct of judicial proceedings, as distinguished from such ministerial and other acts, incident to the progress of a cause, as may be performed by the parties, counsel, or officers of the court without application to the court or judge. See Judicial act; Judicial action.

Judicial cognizance. Judicial notice, or knowledge upon which a judge is bound to act without having it proved in evidence. See Judicial notice.

Judicial comity. Principle in accordance with which courts of one state or jurisdiction give effect to laws and judicial decisions of another state out of deference and respect, not obligation. See also Full faith and credit clause.

Judicial council. Provision is made in 28 U.S.C.A. § 332 for the Chief Judge of each Circuit Court of Appeal to call a council of all the judges of the circuit twice each year. The primary function of the councils is to assure expeditious and effective administration of the business of the courts.

Judicial cy pres /judishal sii pra/. Doctrine of "judicial cy pres" is a principle of construction based on a judicial finding of donor's intention as applied to new conditions. Rohlff v. German Old People's Home, 143 Neb. 636, 10 N.W.2d 686, 687. When only minor features of a trust for charity become impossible or impracticable of performance and it cannot properly be said that general scheme of testator has failed, doctrine of "judicial cy pres" operates to avoid failure of charity. Noel v. Olds, 78 U.S.App.D.C. 155, 138 F.2d 581, 586, 587. See also Cy-pres.

Judicial decision. Application by a court or tribunal exercising judicial authority of competent jurisdiction of the law to a state of facts proved, or admitted to be true, and a declaration of the consequences which follow. In re Knoffler's Estate, 73 Ohio App. 383, 52 N.E.2d 667, 668. See also Decision; Decree; Judgment; Opinion; Order.

Judicial department. See also Judicial branch.

Judicial discretion. Term is a broad and elastic one which is equated with sound judgment of court to be exercised according to rules of law. People v. Russel, 70 Cal.Rptr. 210, 215, 448 P.2d 794. The option the trial judge has in doing or not doing a thing that cannot be demanded by a litigant as an absolute right. Kasper v. Helfrich, Mo.App., 421 S.W.2d 66, 69. See also Judicial duty.

Judicial district. One of the circuits or precincts into which a state is commonly divided for judicial purposes; a court of general original jurisdiction being usually provided in each of such districts, and the boundaries of the district marking the territorial limits of its authority; or the district may include two or more counties, having separate and independent county courts, but in that case they are presided over by the same judge.

Judicial duty. One that requires exercise of judgment or choice of alternatives in its performance. One that requires exercise of judgment or decision of a question of fact. State ex rel. Coast Holding Co. v. Ekwall, 144 Or. 672, 26 P.2d 52. One that requires use of discretion or examination of evidence and decision of questions of law and fact. One that legitimately pertains to an officer in judicial department. Harding v. McCullogh, 236 Iowa 556, 19 N.W.2d 613, 617; Ex parte Lewis, 328 Mo. 843, 42 S.W.2d 21, 22. See also Judicial act; Judicial action; Judicial discretion.

Judicial errors. Errors into which the court itself falls are "judicial errors." An error of this character occurs when the judgment rendered is erroneous in some particular, requiring it to be changed. See Error.

Judicial estoppel. Under doctrine of "judicial estoppel," a party is bound by his judicial declarations and may not contradict them in a subsequent proceeding involving same issues and parties. Sajles v. Jones, 17 Ariz.App. 593, 499 P.2d 721, 726. Under this doctrine, a party who by his pleadings, statements or contentions, under oath, has assumed a particular position in a judicial proceeding is estopped to assume an inconsistent position in a subsequent action. Yarber v. Pennell, Tex.Civ.App., 443 S.W.2d 382, 384. The doctrine of "judicial estoppel" is the doctrine of the conclusiveness of the judgments. State v. Ohio Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 470, 478, 479. See also Judgment, estoppel by; Res (Res judicata).

Judicial evidence. The means, sanctioned by law, of ascertaining in a judicial proceeding the truth respecting a question. See Evidence.

Judicial function. The exercise of the judicial faculty or office. The capacity to act in the specific way which appertains to the judicial power, as one of the powers of government. The term is used to describe generally those modes of action which appertain to the judiciary as a department of organized government, and through and by means of which it accomplishes its purposes and exercises its peculiar powers. See also Judicial act; Judicial action; Judicial business.

Judicial immunity. The absolute protection from civil liability arising out of the discharge of judicial functions which every judge enjoys. C. M. Clark Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Reed, D.C.Tex., 390 F.Supp. 1056. Under doctrine of "judicial immunity," a judge is not subject to liability for any act committed within the exercise of his judicial function; the immunity is absolute in that it is applicable even if the actions of the judicial official are taken in bad faith. C. M. Clark Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Reed, D.C.Tex., 390 F.Supp. 1056, 1060.

Judicial Inquiry. Such inquiry investigates, declares, and enforces liabilities as they stand on present or past facts and under laws supposed already to exist. Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. v. Wilson & Co. of Oklahoma, C.C.A.Ok., 54 F.2d 596, 598.

Judicial knowledge. Knowledge of that which is so notorious that everybody, including judges, knows it, and hence need not be proved. Ex parte Ferguson, 112 Tex.Cr.R. 152, 15 S.W.2d 650, 652. See Judicial notice.

Judicial legislation. See Judge-made law.

Judicial lien. One obtained by judgment, levy, sequestration, or other legal or equitable process or proceeding. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(27).

Judicial notice. The act by which a court, in conducting a trial, or framing its decision, will, of its own motion, and without the production of evidence, recognize the existence and truth of certain facts, having a bearing on the controversy at bar, which, from their nature, are not properly the subject of testimony, or which are universally regarded as established by common notoriety, e.g., the laws of the state, international law, historical events, the constitution and course of nature, main geographical features, etc. The cognizance of certain facts which judges and jurors may properly take and act upon without proof, because they already know them. Fed.Evid.Rule 201.

Judicial oath. See Oath.

Judicial office. Offices which relate to the administration of justice; and which should be exercised by persons of sufficient skill and experience in the duties which appertain to them. A general term including courts of record and courts not of record.

Judicial officer. A judge or magistrate. The term, in the popular sense, applies generally to any officer of a court; but in the strictly legal sense applies only to an officer who determines causes between parties or renders decision in a judicial capacity. One who exercises judicial function. Adams v. State, 214 Ind. 603, 17 N.E.2d 84. A person in whom is vested authority to decide causes or exercise powers appropriate to a court.

Judicial opinion. A term synonymous with what has been adjudged or decreed and final in its character. See Decision; Decree; Judgment; Opinion; Order.

Judicial order. One which involves exercise of judicial discretion and affects final result of litigation. Happy Coal Co. v. Brashear, 263 Ky. 257, 92 S.W.2d 23, 27. See also Decision; Decree; Judgment; Order.

Judicial power. The authority exercised by that department of government which is charged with declaration of what law is and its construction. The authority vested in courts and judges, as distinguished from the executive and legislative power. Courts have general powers to decide and pronounce a judgment.
and carry it into effect between two persons and parties who bring a case before it for decision; and also such specific powers as contempt powers, power to control admission and disbarment of attorneys, power to adopt rules of court, etc.

A power involving exercise of judgment and discretion in determination of questions of right in specific cases affecting interests of person or property, as distinguished from ministerial power involving no discretion. Inherent authority not only to decide, but to make binding orders or judgments. Fewel v. Fewel, 23 Cal.2d 431, 144 P.2d 592, 594. Power to decide and pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before court for decision. Power that adjudicates upon and protects the rights and interests of persons or property, and to that end declares, construes and applies the law.

Judicial proceeding. Any proceeding wherein judicial action is invoked and taken. Mannix v. Portland Telegram, 144 Or. 172, 23 P.2d 138. Any proceeding to obtain such remedy as the law allows. Any step taken in a court of justice in the prosecution or defense of an action. A general term for proceedings relating to, practiced in, or proceeding from, a court of justice; or the course prescribed to be taken in various cases for the determination of a controversy or for legal redress or relief. A proceeding in a legally constituted court. A proceeding wherein there are parties, who have opportunity to be heard, and wherein the tribunal proceeds either to a determination of facts upon evidence or of law upon proved or conceded facts. See also Trial.

Judicial question. One proper for the determination of a court of justice, as distinguished from moot questions or from such questions as belong to the decision of the legislative or executive departments of government and with which the courts will not interfere, called "political" or "legislative" questions.

Judicial remedy. Such as is administered by the courts of justice, or by judicial officers empowered for that purpose by the constitution and laws of the state or nation. See also Remedy.

Judicial reprehe. See Reprieve.

Judicial review. Form of appeal from an administrative body to the courts for review of either the findings of fact, or of law, or of both. See also Appeal.

Judicial sale. Sale conducted under a judgment, order, or supervision of a court as in a sale under a petition for partition of real estate or an execution. A "judicial sale" is one which must be based upon an order or a decree of a court directing the sale. Petition of Acclione, 425 Pa. 23, 227 A.2d 816, 821, 823. A sale in a bankruptcy proceeding is a "judicial sale". In re Dennis Mitchell Industries, Inc., D.C.Pa., 280 F.Supp. 433, 436. See also Execution sale; Sale; Sheriffs' sale; Tax sale.

Judicial self-restraint. Self-imposed discipline by judges in deciding cases without permitting themselves to indulge their own personal views or ideas which may be inconsistent with existing decisional or statutory law.

Judicial separation. A separation of man and wife by decree of court, less complete than an absolute divorce. A "limited divorce" or a "divorce a mensa et thoro."

Judicial system. Entire network of courts in a particular jurisdiction. The federal judicial system consists of the Supreme Court, Courts of Appeals, District Courts, and specialized courts such as the Court of Claims, Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, etc. See also Judiciary (n).

Judicia posteriora sunt in lege fortiora /jadis(h)ylwa postiriyoro sánt in lijyir fořshi(y)ôra/. The later decisions are the stronger in law.

Judiciary, adj. /jadish(y)wir/. Pertaining or relating to the courts of justice, to the judicial department of government, or to the administration of justice.

Judiciary, n. That branch of government invested with the judicial power; the system of courts in a country; the body of judges; the bench. That branch of government which is intended to interpret, construe and apply the law. Board of Com'rs of Wyandotte County v. General Securities Corporation, 157 Kan. 64, 138 P.2d 479, 487. See also Judicial system.

Judiciary Acts. The Judiciary Article (Art. III) of the U.S. Constitution created a Supreme Court and "such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain or establish". The First Congress established such inferior federal courts under the Judiciary Act of 1789. Subsequent major judiciary acts include the following: Act of 1875 granting federal question jurisdiction; Act of 1891 (Evarts Act) establishing circuit courts of appeals and fixing the outline of the contemporary scheme of federal appellate review; Act of 1911 enacting the Federal Judicial Code (which was recodified in 1948 and 1958); Act of 1925 (Judges' Bill) further narrowing the scope of discretionary review by certiorari of the Supreme Court.

Judicia sunt tanquam juris dicta, et pro veritate acnpluntur /jadis(h)ylwa sánt tänkwaum júras dikta, ét pròw vèhrstéadyi akspilýntar/. Judgments are, as it were, the sayings of the law, and are received as truth.

Judicilis posterioribus fides est adhibenda /jadis(h)yòs pastiriyorobas fàdydziz ést ädhibénda/. Faith or credit is to be given to the later judgments.

Judici officium suum excedenti non pararet /júwwadasi sshif(yl)wam s tér(y)rièrew éksòdèntay nòm nòpíryor/ or a judge exceeding his office (or jurisdiction) is not to be obeyed. Said of void judgments.

Judici satis pena est, quod Deum habet ultorem /júdwasay séydas piyá né kwó díyam háyob áltóram/. It is punishment enough for a judge that he has God as his avenger.

Judicis est in pronuntiando sequi regulam, exceptione non probata /júdwasas ét in prynin(h)lýánów sókway régiyalam, asképhshiyóñi yón nón prábédas/. The judge in his decision ought to follow the rule, when the exception is not proved.

Judicis est judicare secundum allegata et probata /júdwasas ét júdaskéry sékándam aligéydas et prábédas/. It is the duty of a judge to decide according to facts alleged and proved.

Judicis est jus dicere, non dare /júdwasas ét jás disary, non déryi/”dáysary”/. It is the province of a judge to declare the law, not to give it.

Judicis officium est opus diel in die suo perficere /júdwasas afshíyam ét ówpas dáyúyay in dáyíy s(y)úwow porfísiyay/. It is the duty of a judge to finish the work of each day within that day.

Judicis officium est ut res, ita tempora rerum, quaeerere /júdwasas afshíyam ét át rýyay, áyda térpá ríram, kwíryay/. It is the duty of a judge to inquire into the times of things, as well as into things themselves.

Judicium /jádis(h)(i)yam/. Lat. Judicial authority or jurisdiction; a court or tribunal; a judicial hearing or other proceeding; a verdict or judgment; a proceeding before a judex or judge.

Judicum a non suo judice datum nullius est momenti /jádis(h)(i)yam éy nón s(y)úwow júwdsay déyádam nálys ét máménay/. A judgment given by one who is not the proper judge is of no force.

Judicium Del /jádis(h)(i)yam diyay/. In old English and European law, the judgment of God; otherwise called “divinum judicium,” the “divine judgment.” A term particularly applied to the ordeals by fire or hot iron and water, and also to the trials by the cross, the Eucharist, and the crossed, and the duellum or trial by battle (q.v.), it being supposed that the interposition of Heaven was directly manifest, in these cases, in behalf of the innocent.

Judicium est quasi juris dictum /jádis(h)(i)yam ét kwéyasy júras díkay/. Judgment is, as it were, a declaration of law.

Judicium non debet esse illusorium; suum effectum habere debet /jádis(h)(i)yam nón débad ésy il-(y)uwzóriyam; s(y)úwam afékam hábiri débét/. A judgment ought not to be illusory; it ought to have its proper effect.

Judicium parum /jádis(h)(i)yam páríyam/. In old English law, judgment of the peers; judgment of one’s peers: trial by jury.

Judicium (semper) pro veritate accliptur /jádis(h)(i)yam (sémper) prów vèhrátédyiy skólpílar/. A judgment is always taken for truth [that is, as long as it stands in force it cannot be contradicted].

Judicum redditur in invitum /jádis(h)(i)yam réddar in anváýam/. Judgment is given against one, whether he will or not.

Jure. In French law, a judge.

Juge de paix /zyúuwz da péy/. An inferior judicial functionary, appointed to decide summarily controversies of minor importance, especially such as turn mainly on questions of fact. He has also the functions of a police magistrate.

Juge d'Instruction. See Instruction.

Jugerum /jpréram/. An acre. As much as a yoke (jugum) of oxen could plow in one day.

Jugulator /jprégaléydar/. In old records, a cutthroat or murderer.

Jugum /júwgam/. Lat. In the civil law, a yoke; a measure of land; as much land as a yoke of oxen could plow in a day.

Jugum terra /júwgam tárhy/. In old English law, a yoke of land; half a plow-land.

Juicio /huwíyiyów/. In Spanish law, a trial or suit.

Juicio de apeco /huwíyiyów déy apéyow/. The decree of a competent tribunal directing the determining and marking the boundaries of lands or estates.

Juicio de concursus aecredores /huwíyiyów déy konkúrsow déy akreéyevóreys/. The judgment granted for a debtor who has various creditors, or for such creditors, to the effect that their claims be satisfied according to their respective form and rank, when the debtor's estate is not sufficient to discharge them all in full.

Julian law /júwl(i)yam íó/. See Lex Julia.

Jump ball. To unbind, withdraw, or secrete one’s self, in violation of the obligation of a bail bond.

Junior. Younger. Lower in rank, tenure, preference, or position. This has been held to be no part of a man's name, but an addition by use, and a convenient distinction between a father and son of the same name.

As to junior Barrister; Counsel; Creditor; Judgment; Writ, see those titles.

Junior execution. One which was issued after the issuance of another execution, on a different judgment, against the same defendant.

Junior interest. A legal right which is subordinate to another’s right as applied to property; e.g. a second mortgage is subordinate to a first mortgage. See also Creditor (Junior creditor).

Junior lien. Lien which is subordinate to prior lien. See Lien.

Junior mortgage. A mortgage which is subordinate to another mortgage, called the priority or prior mortgage. See Mortgage.

Junk. Worn out and discarded material in general that may be turned to some use. City of Chicago v.
Juramentum /juráméntam/. Lat. In the civil law, an oath.

Juramentum calumniæ /juráméntam kalámmniyá/. In the civil and canon law, the oath of calumny. An oath imposed upon both parties to a suit, as a preliminary to its trial, to the effect that they are not influenced by malice or any sinister motives in prosecuting or defending the same, but by a belief in the justice of their cause. It was also required of the attorneys and procutors.

Juramentum corporalis /juráméntam körparéylyz/. A corporal oath. See Corporal oath.

Juramentum est indivisibile; et non est admittendum in parte verum et in parte falsum /juráméntam ēst indívazibilly ēt nón ēst ēdmatěndam ēn párdiy viräm ēd ēn párdiy fōlsām/. An oath is indivisible; it is not to be held partly true and partly false.

Juramentum in Item /juráméntum ēn láydam/. In the civil law, an assessment oath; an oath, taken by the plaintiff in an action, that the extent of the damages he has suffered, estimated in money, amounts to a certain sum, which oath, in certain cases, is accepted in lieu of other proof.

Juramentum judiciale /juráméntum juwdishiyélyi/. In the civil law, an oath which the judge, of his own accord, defers to either of the parties. It is of two kinds: First, that which the judge defers for the decision of the cause, and which is understood by the general name "juramentum judiciale," and is sometimes called "suppletory oath," juramentum suppletorium; second, that which the judge defers in order to fix and determine the amount of the condemnation which he ought to pronounce, and which is called "juramentum in Item."

Juramentum necessarium /juráméntam něssáseryam/. In Roman law, a compulsory oath. A disclosure under oath, which the preator compelled one of the parties to a suit to make, when the other, applying for such an appeal, agreed to abide by what his adversary should swear.

Juramentum voluntarium /juráméntum vōlantéryam/. In Roman law, a voluntary oath. A species of appeal to conscience, by which one of the parties to a suit, instead of proving his case, offered to abide by what his adversary should answer under oath.

Juramentum tangentia /juráméntam tāntjaniyä/. In old English law, rights of mixed dominion. The king’s right or power of jurisdiction was so termed.

Jura mixti dominii /jürü mkstāy damiñyā/. In old English law, rights of mixed dominion. The king’s right or power of jurisdiction was so termed.

Jura naturae sunt immutabilia /jürü nat(y)yuriy synt imyůwdbiliyā/. The laws of nature are unchangeable.

Jura novit curia /jürü nówvta kyuriyā/. The court knows the laws; the court recognizes rights.

Jura personarum /jürü pōrsnērm/. Rights of persons; the rights of persons. Rights which concern and are annexed to the persons of men.

Jura praelorum /jürü priydiyōrm/. In the civil law, the rights of estates.
Jura publica anteferenda privatis /júra pábłaka äntafarénda prævýdas/. Public rights are to be preferred to private.

Jura publica ex privato [privatis] promiscue decidi non debent /júra pábłaka ēks prævýdow præmiskuywiwy dásáyday nón débant/ "ēks prævýdas". Public rights ought not to be decided promiscuously with private.

Jura regalia /júra ręzéiy(i)ya/. In English law, royal rights or privileges.

Jura regia /júra riy(i)ya/. In English law, royal rights; the prerogatives of the crown.

Jura regis specialia non conceduntur per generalia verba /júra riyás speshezyéiy(i)ya nón kónsáántar pár jémäréiy(i)ya várba/. The special rights of the king are not granted by general words.

Jura rerum /júra ríram/. Rights of things; the rights of things; rights which a man may acquire over external objects or things, unconnected with his person.

Jura sanguinis nullo jure civilli dirimi possunt /júra sánkweyiny nuló júri siválay dirámay póssant/. The right of blood and kindred cannot be destroyed by any civil law.

Jura summii imperii /júra sámay amprériyay/. Rights of supreme dominion; rights of sovereignty.

Jurat /júrút/. Certificate of officer or person before whom writing was sworn to. In common use term is employed to designate certificate of competent administering officer that writing was sworn to by person who signed it. Stearn v. Board of Elections of Cuyahoga County, 14 Ohio St.2d 175, 237 N.E.2d 313, 317. The clause written at the foot of an affidavit, stating when, where, and before whom such affidavit was sworn. U. S. v. McDermott, 140 U.S. 151, 11 S.Ct. 746, 35 L.Ed. 391; U. S. v. Julian, 162 U.S. 324, 16 S.Ct. 801, 40 L.Ed. 984. See also Affidavit; Verification.

Jurata /járéýda/. In old English law, a jury of twelve men sworn. Especially, a jury of the common law, as distinguished from the assisa.

The jury clause in a nisi prius record, so called from the emphatic words of the old forms: "Jurata pontur in respectum," the jury is put in respite.

See also Jurat.

Juration /járéyiyan/. The act of swearing; the administration of an oath.

Jurato creditur in judicio /járéydow křédatar in jadísh(i)yow/. He who makes oath is to be believed in judgment.

Jurator /járéydar/. A juror; a compurgator (q.v.).

Juratores debent esse vicini, sufficientes, et minus suspecti /júratóriyiz débant ēsiy vásáynay, sofíy(h)yén-týyz, èm máyáy saspéktay/. Jurors ought to be neighbors of sufficient estate, and free from suspicion.

Juratores sunt judices facti /júratóriyiz sánt jówdasyiy féktyay/. Juries are the judges of fact.

Jurats /júràts/. In English law, officers in the nature of aldermen, sworn for the government of many corporations.

Jure /júry/. Lat. By right; in right; by the law.

Jure bellii /júry bélây/. By the right or law of war.

Jure civilis /júry siválay/. By the civil law.

Jure corone /júry kárówniy/. In right of the crown.

Jure divino /júry dawáñow/. By divine right.

Jure ecclesiæ /júry akliyzyíty(i)ya/. In right of the church.

Jure emphyteutico /júry émfatyúwðakow/. By the right or law of emphyteusis. See Emphyteusis.

Jure gentilum /júry jénsht(i)yan/. By the law of nations.

Jure nature æquum est neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuria fieri locupletiorem /júry nákhywám ēst némonan kám oltíriyás détréméntow ēd anjúriyá fáýray fóókaplyshiyórum/. By the law of nature it is not just that any one should be enriched by the detriment or injury of another.

Jure representationis /júry réprézentéshiyównas/. By right of representation; in the right of another person.

Jure uxoris /júry áksóras/. In right of a wife.

Juridical /járidíka/. Relating to administration of justice, or office of a judge.

Regular; done in conformity to the laws of the country and the practice which is there observed.

Juridical day. Day on which court is in session. Black v. National Bank of Kentucky, 226 Ky. 152, 10 S.W.2d 629, 630.

Juridicus /járidíka/. Lat. Relating to the courts or to the administration of justice; juridical; lawful.

Juri non est consumum quod alliquis accessorius in curia regis convincatur antequam alliquis de facto fuerit attinctus /júry nón ēst kónsám kwód álákwas áksásóriyas in kúryíyas riyás kónvíjékýdar ántiy-kwám álákwas diy féktyow fúóward stúýktas/. It is not consonant to justice that any accessory should be convicted in the king's court before any one has been attainted of the fact.

Juris /júrís/. Lat. Of right; of law.

Jurisconsult /júroskonsált/ "kansált/. A jurist; a person skilled in the science of law, particularly of international or public law.

Jurisconsultus /júroskonsáltas/. Lat. In Roman law, an expert in juridical science; a person thoroughly versed in the laws, who was habitually resorted to, for information and advice, both by private persons as his clients, and also by the magistrates, advocates, and others employed in administering justice. Abbreviated i–ctus.

Jurisdictio est potestas de publico introducta, cum necessitate juris dicendi /júrɔːsdikʃ(ə)n/ wot pęsèstə də pɔbliˈkwɔ introdɛktə, kəm nəsɛstɛdɨj jùrə dəsɛndəj/. Jurisdiction is a power introduced for the public good, on account of the necessity of dispensing justice.

Jurisdiction. The word is a term of large and comprehensive import, and embraces every kind of judicial action. Federal Land Bank of Louisville, Ky., v. Crombie, 258 Ky. 383, 80 S.W.2d 39, 40. It is the authority by which courts and judicial officers take cognizance of and decide cases. Board of Trustees of Firemen’s Relief and Pension Fund of City of Marietta v. Brooks, 179 Okl. 600, 67 P.2d 4, 6; State v. True, Me., 330 A.2d 787. The legal right by which judges exercise their authority. Max Ams, Inc. v. Barker, 293 Ky. 698, 170 S.W.2d 45, 48. It exists when court has cognizance of class of cases involved, proper parties are present, and point to be decided is within powers of court. United Cemeteries Co. v. Strother, 342 Mo. 1155, 119 S.W.2d 762, 765; Harder v. Johnson, 147 Kan. 440, 76 P.2d 763, 764. Power and authority of a court to hear and determine a judicial proceeding. In re De Camillas’ Estate, 66 Misc.2d 882, 322 N.Y.S.2d 531, 536. The right and power of a court to adjudicate concerning the subject matter in a given case. Biddinger v. Fletcher, 224 Ga. 501, 162 S.E.2d 414, 416.

Areas of authority; the geographic area in which a court has power or types of cases it has power to hear.

Scope and extent of jurisdiction of federal courts is governed by 28 U.S.C.A. § 1251 et seq.

For Ancillary; Appellate; Concurrent; Contentious; Continuing; Coordinate; Criminal; Equity; Exclusive; Foreign; General; International; Legis-lativa; Limited; Military; Pendant; Plenary; Primary; Probate; Special; Subject-matter; Summary; Territorial; and Voluntary jurisdiction, see those titles. See also Excess of jurisdiction; Jurisdiction in personam; Jurisdiction in rem; Jurisdiction of the subject matter; Jurisdiction quasi in rem; Lack of jurdiction. For original jurisdiction, see Original. For diversity jurisdiction, see Diversity of citizenship. For federal question jurisdiction, see Federal question. For jurisdiction over nonresidents or foreign corporations, see Long arm statutes; Minimal contacts.

Jurisdictional. Pertaining or relating to jurisdiction; conferring jurisdiction; showing or disclosing jurisdiction; defining or limiting jurisdiction; essential to jurisdiction.

Jurisdictional amount. Amount involved in the particular case, Shabotzky v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins.
Co., D.C.N.Y., 21 F.Supp. 166, 167; sum of all claims that are properly joined, Gray v. Blicht, C.C.A.Colo., 112 F.2d 690, 700; use of the object sought to be attained in the litigation, Mountain States Power Co. v. City of Forsyth, D.C.Mont., 41 F.Supp. 389, 390; Ronzio v. Denver & R. G. W. R. Co., C.C.A.Utah, 116 F.2d 604, 606. The jurisdiction of the trial court is commonly limited by the amount in controversy in the particular action; e.g. the requisite jurisdictional amounts for federal question and diversity of citizenship jurisdiction in the federal district courts are set forth in 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1331, 1332.

Jurisdictional dispute. The competing claims made to an employer by different unions that each of their members are entitled to perform certain specific work. There must be evidence of a threat in coercive action for the N.L.R.B. to conduct a hearing and make an assignment of the work.

Jurisdictional facts. Those matters of fact which must exist before the court can properly take jurisdiction of the particular case, as, that the defendant has been properly served with process, that the amount in controversy exceeds a certain sum, that the parties are citizens of different states, etc. Noble v. Union River Logging Railroad Co., 147 U.S. 165, 13 S.Ct. 271, 37 L.Ed. 123. See Jurisdictional statement; Juri-discussion clause.

Jurisdictional limits. The constitutional or statutory parameters within which judicial power may be exercised such as limits based on the monetary value of the action. See Jurisdictional amount.

Jurisdictional plea. Form of answer addressed to the issue of whether the court has the power over the defendant or over the subject matter of the litigation; e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(1), (2).

Jurisdictional statement. In some states, a statement required to set forth the amount claimed to be in controversy so as to permit a court of general jurisdiction to hear the case without remanding it to an inferior court. See also Jurisdiction clause.

Jurisdiction clause. A pleading which sets forth a claim for relief, whether an original claim, counterclaim, crossclaim, or third party claim, shall contain "a short and plain statement of the grounds upon which the court’s jurisdiction depends, unless the court already has jurisdiction and the claim needs no new grounds to support it." Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a).

In equity practice, that part of a bill which is intended to give jurisdiction of the suit to the court, by a general averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity, and tend to the injury of the complainant, and that he has no remedy, or not a complete remedy, without the assistance of a court of equity, is called the “jurisdiction clause.”

See also Jurisdictional statement.

Jurisdiction in personam. Power which a court has over the defendant’s person and which is required before a court can enter a personal or in personam judgment. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565. It may be acquired by an act of the defendant within a jurisdiction under a law by which the de-defendant impliedly consents to the personal jurisdiction of the court, e.g. operation of a motor vehicle on the highways of state confers jurisdiction of operator and owner on courts of state. Hess v. Pawloski, 274 U.S. 356, 47 S.Ct. 637, 71 L.Ed. 1065. A judgment in personam brings about a merger of the original cause of action into the judgment and thereafter the action is upon the judgment and not on the original cause of action. See also In personam.
 Jurisdiction in rem. Power of a court over a thing so that its judgment is valid as against the rights of every person in the thing, e.g. a judgment or decree of registration of title to land. See also In rem; Jurisdiction quasi in rem.

Jurisdiction of the subject matter. Power of a particular court to hear the type of case that is then before it. Davis v. Davis, 9 Ill.App.3d 922, 293 N.E.2d 399, 405; People ex rel. Scott v. Janson, 10 Ill.App.3d 787, 293 N.E.2d 140, 144; Alfaro v. Meagher, 27 Ill.App.3d 292, 326 N.E.2d 545, 548. Term refers to jurisdiction of court over class of cases to which particular case belongs, Honea v. Graham, Tex.Civ.App., 66 S.W.2d 802, 804; McFarlin v. McFarlin, 384 Ill. 428, 51 N.E.2d 520, 521; Ferree v. Ferree, 285 Ky. 825, 149 S.W.2d 719, 721; jurisdiction over the nature of the cause of action and relief sought, Mid-City Bank & Trust Co. v. Myers, 343 Pa. 465, 23 A.2d 420, 423; or the amount for which a court of limited jurisdiction is authorized to enter judgment.

A court is without authority to adjudicate a matter over which it has no jurisdiction even though the court possesses jurisdiction over the parties to the litigation, e.g. a court of limited jurisdiction has no power to try a murder indictment and its judgment therein would be void and of no effect because it lacks subject matter jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction over person. The legal power of the court to render a personal judgment against a party to an action or a proceeding. Imperial v. Hardy, La., 302 So.2d 5, 7. See Jurisdiction in personam.

Jurisdiction quasi in rem. The power of a court over the defendant’s interest in property, real or personal, within the geographical limits of the court. The court’s judgment or decree binds only the defendant’s interest and not the whole world as in the case of jurisdiction in rem. The original cause of action is not merged in the judgment as in the case of a judgment predicated on personal jurisdiction.

Jurs et de jure /jūras èt di jûri/. Of law and of right.

A presumption juris et de jure, or an irrebuttable presumption, is one which the law will not suffer to be rebutted by any counter-evidence, but establishes as conclusive; while a presumption juris tantum is one which holds good in the absence of evidence to the contrary, but may be rebutted.

Jurs et seilse conjunctio /jūras èt sīlzàni kanyǎg(κ)-sh(y)ow/. The union of seisin or possession and the right of possession, forming a complete title. 2 Bl. Comm. 199, 311.

Jurs ignorantia est cum jus nostrum ignoramus /jūras ignaronsh(y)ə ést kām jōs nòstram ignaréymas/. It is ignorance of the law when we do not know our own rights.

Jurisincceptor /jūwasànseptər/. Lat. A student of the civil law.

Jurisprudentia /jūraspréwdéns(h)yə/. Lat. In the civil and common law, jurisprudence, or legal science.

Jurisprudentia est divinarum atque humanarum rerum notitia, justi atque injusti scienitia /jūraspréwdéns(h)yə ést dīvanərm ātekwvi hyūwmanərm rırm nōtwiš(y)ə, jāstāj ātekwvi āinjāstāj šayənsh(y)ə/. Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human, the science of what is right and what is wrong.

Jurisprudentia legis communis angliæ est scientia socialis et copiosa /jūraspréwdéns(h)yə lêjñs kâmyùnỳs âŋglyiš ést šayənsh(y)ə sōwəsh(h)yəvəs ē kówpl-yowwas/. The jurisprudence of the common law of England is a science social and comprehensive.

Juris publici /jūras póblasay/. Of common right; of common or public use; such things as, at least in their own use, are common to all the king’s subjects; as common highways, common bridges, common riviers, and common ports.

Jurist. One who is versed or skilled in law; answering to the Latin “jurisperitus” (q.v.). A legal scholar. The term is commonly applied to those who have distinguished themselves by their writings on legal subjects or to judges.

Juristice /järístak/. Pertaining or belonging to, or characteristic of, jurisprudence, or a jurist, or the legal profession.
Jurisdiction. One designed to have a legal effect, and capable thereof. An act of a private individual directed to the origin, termination, or alteration of a right.

Juris utrum /jūrs yūwtrum/. In English law, an abolished writ which lay for the parson of a church whose predecessor had alienated the lands and tenements thereof.

Juror. Member of jury. In addition to regular jurors, term includes special and alternate jurors.

Alternate juror. Additional juror impaneled in case of sickness or disability of another juror; generally in trials of expectedly long duration. Fed.R.Civl P. 47(c).

Juror's book. A list of persons qualified to serve on juries. See also Jury-list.

Jury. A certain number of men and women selected according to law, and sworn (jurati) to inquire of certain matters of fact, and declare the truth upon evidence to be laid before them. This definition embraces the various subdivisions of juries as grand jury, petit jury, common jury, special jury, coroner's jury, sheriff's jury (q.v.).

A jury is a body of persons temporarily selected from the citizens of a particular district, and invested with power to present or indict a person for a public offense, or to try a question of fact. See also Trier of fact.

Advisory jury. A body of jurors impaneled to hear a case in which the parties have no right to a jury trial. The judge remains solely responsible for the findings and he may accept or reject the jury's verdict. Fed. R.Civl P. 39(c). See also Advisory Jury.

Challenge to jury. See Jury challenge.

Common jury. The ordinary kind of jury (i.e. petit jury) by which issues of fact are generally tried, as distinguished from a special jury (q.v.).

Deadlocked jury. See Hung jury, infra.

Fair and impartial jury. See Fair and impartial jury.

Foreign jury. A jury obtained from a county or jurisdiction other than that in which issue was joined.

Grand jury. A jury of inquiry who are summoned and returned by the sheriff to each session of the criminal courts, and whose duty is to receive complaints and accusations in criminal cases, hear the evidence adduced on the part of the state, and find bills of indictment in cases where they are satisfied a trial ought to be had. They are first sworn, and instructed by the court. This is called a "grand jury" because it comprises a greater number of jurors than the ordinary trial jury or "petit jury." At common law, a grand jury consisted of not less than twelve nor more than twenty-three men.

Body of citizens, the number of whom varies from state to state, whose duties consist in determining whether probable cause exists that a crime has been committed and whether an indictment (true bill) should be returned against one for such a crime. If the grand jury determines that probable cause does not exist, it returns a "no bill." It is an accusatory body and its function does not include a determination of guilt.

Federal Grand Jury. Every grand jury impaneled before any district court shall consist of not less than sixteen nor more than twenty-three persons.

If less than sixteen of the persons summoned attend, they shall be placed on the grand jury, and the court shall order the marshal to summon, either immediately or for a day fixed, from the body of the district, and not from the bystanders, a sufficient number of persons to complete the grand jury. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3321; Fed.R.Crim.P. 6.

See also Inquest; Special grand jury.

Hung jury. A jury which is unable to agree on a verdict after a suitable period of deliberation; a deadlocked jury. The result is a mistrial of the case.

Impanelling of jury. See Impanel.

Impartial jury. See Impartial jury.

Inquest jury. A jury of inquest is a body of persons summoned from the citizens of a particular district before the sheriff, coroner, or other ministerial officers, to inquire of particular facts. See Inquest.

Jury instructions. See Jury instructions.

Jury size. While at common law, and traditionally, a jury consisted of 12 members, there is no constitutional infirmity or deficiency in a jury of less than twelve; and it is not uncommon for state and Federal district court juries to consist of six persons, instead of twelve (e.g. Dist. of Mass.). Colgrove v. Battin, 413 U.S. 149, 93 S.Ct. 2448, 37 L.Ed.2d 522. Also, in Federal district courts, and many state courts, the parties may stipulate that the jury shall consist of any number less than twelve. Fed.R.Civl P. 48; Fed. R.Crim.P. 23.

Petit jury. The ordinary jury for the trial of a civil or criminal action; so called to distinguish it from the grand jury.

Polling of jury. See Polling the jury.

Sequestration of jury. In some cases of great notoriety, the trial judge will order the jury to be isolated from the public (e.g. confined to area of hotel while trial not in session) for the duration of the trial to prevent tampering and exposure to trial publicity. In these cases the jurors are always in the custody of the court.

Special jury. A jury ordered by the court, on the motion of either party, in cases of unusual importance or intricacy. Called, from the manner in which it is constituted, a "struck jury." See Striking a jury.

At common law, a jury composed of persons above the rank of ordinary freeholders; usually summoned to try questions of greater importance than those usually submitted to common juries.

Traverse jury. See Traverse.

Trial jury. The jury participating in the trial of a given case; or a jury summoned and impaneled for the trial of a case, and in this sense a petit jury as distinguished from a grand jury. A body of persons returned from the citizens of a particular district before a court or officer of competent jurisdiction, and sworn to try and determine, by verdict, a question of fact.

Jury-box. The place in court (strictly an inclosed place) where the jury sits during the trial of a cause.

Jury challenge. Challenge for cause. In most jurisdictions, each party to the litigation has right to a certain number of peremptory challenges to jurors at the time of impanelling. In addition, a party has the right to challenge a juror by furnishing a satisfactory reason why such juror should not be seated such as bias or knowledge of the case. Unlike the peremptory challenge for which no reason need be given, the party challenging a juror for cause must satisfy the trial judge that his reasons are compelling. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 24. See also Challenge.

Challenge to array. A challenge to the entire jury venire based on such grounds as systematic exclusion of women, blacks, young persons, etc. in the selection process.

Peremptory challenge. A challenge to a juror at the time of impanelling for which no reason need be advanced; in most jurisdictions each party is entitled to a certain number of such challenges in addition to challenges for cause. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 24.

Jury commissioner. An officer charged with the duty of selecting the names to be put into the jury wheel, or of drawing the panel of jurors for a particular term of court. Local official responsible for collecting lists of qualified prospective jurors for submission to court.

Jury instructions. A direction given by the judge to the jury concerning the law of the case; a statement made by the judge to the jury informing them of the law applicable to the case in general or some aspect of it; an exposition or the rules or principles of law applicable to the case or some branch or phase of it, which the jury are bound to accept and apply. Attorneys for both sides normally furnish judge with suggested instructions. Fed.R.Civil P. 51; Fed.R.Crim.P. 30. Many states have model or pattern jury instructions which are required to be used, or substantially followed, by the trial judge.

See also Allen charge; Argumentative instruction; Cautionary instruction; Charge (Charge to jury); Dynamite instruction; Golden Rule argument. For request for instructions, see Request.

Additional instructions. If during the course of deliberations the jury is unclear about a particular point of law or aspect of the evidence it may request the court for additional or supplementary instructions.

Mandatory instruction. A mandatory instruction unequivocally charges the jury that if jurors find from preponderance of evidence that certain set of facts exists, jurors must find for one party and against the other. City of Evansville v. Rinehart, 142 Ind.App. 164, 233 N.E.2d 495, 499; Vance v. Wells, 129 Ind. App. 659, 159 N.E.2d 586, 590. Mandatory instructions are those which attempt to set up a factual situation and direct jury to a certain result and they are to be distinguished from instructions which merely state propositions of law without incorporating a factual situation. LaNoux v. Hagar, Ind.App., 308 N.E.2d 873, 878.

Peremptory instruction. An instruction given by a court to a jury which the latter must obey implicitly; as an instruction to return a verdict for the defendant, or for the plaintiff, as the case may be. See also Mandatory instruction, above.

Jury-list. A paper containing the names of jurors impaneled to try a cause, or the names of all the jurors summoned to attend court.

Jury of matrons. See Matrons, jury of.

Jury panel. The group of prospective jurors who are summoned to appear on a stated day and from which a grand jury or petit jury is chosen. See Jury; Jury-list.

Jury polling. See Polling the jury.

Jury process. The process by which a jury is summoned in a cause, and by which their attendance is enforced. See also Impanel.

Jury questions. In general, term refers to questions of fact which are peculiarly within the province of the jury as contrasted with questions of law which must be decided by the judge. Term may also refer to special questions or interrogatories which the court may direct to the jury for a special verdict. Fed.R.Civil P. 49. See also Voir dire.

Jury summation. See Closing argument.

Jury trial. Trial of matter or cause before jury as opposed to trial before judge. Such right is guaranteed with respect to criminal cases by Art. III, Sec. 2, cl. 3 of U.S.Const., and with respect to "suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars" by the Seventh Amendment. Such right is also preserved by rule of court (e.g. Fed.R.Civil P. 38) and by the Fifth Amendment which provides inter alia for indictment by grand jury, and the Sixth Amendment which contains further specifications respecting jury trial in criminal cases. In addition, state constitutions provide for right to jury trial and the Supreme Court has held that the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees a right of jury trial in all state criminal cases which—were they to be tried in federal court—would come within the Sixth Amendment's guarantee. Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 88 S.Ct. 1444, 20 L.Ed.2d 491.

The right to "jury trial" of controverted issues implies a trial by an impartial and qualified jury. Alexander v. R. D. Crier & Sons Co., 181 Md. 415, 30 A.2d 757, 759.

See also Trial.

Jury wheel. Physical device or electronic system for the storage and random selection of the names or identifying numbers of prospective jurors. A machine containing the names of persons qualified to serve as grand and petit jurors, from which, in an order determined by the hazard of its revolutions, are drawn a sufficient number of such names to make up the panels for a given term of court.

Jury woman. Member of a jury of matrons.

Jus /jəs/. Lat. In Roman law, right; justice; law; the whole body of law; also a right. The term is used in two meanings:

1. "Jus" means "law," considered in the abstract; that is, as distinguished from any specific enactment, the science or department of learning, or quasi personified factor in human history or conduct or social development, which we call, in a general sense, "the law." Or it means the law taken as a system, an aggregate, a whole; "the sum total of a number of individual laws taken together." Or it may designate some one particular system or body of particular laws; as in the phrases "jus civile," "jus gentium," "jus praetorium."

2. In a second sense, "jus" signifies "a right;" that is, a power, privilege, faculty, or demand inherent in one person and incident upon another; or a capacity residing in one person of controlling, with the assent and assistance of the state, the actions of another. This is its meaning in the expressions "jus in rem," "jus accrescendi," "jus possessionis."

It is thus seen to possess the same ambiguity as the words "droit," "recht," and "right" (q.v.).

Within the meaning of the maxim that "ignorantia juris non excusat" (ignorance of the law is no excuse), the word "jus" is used to denote the general law or ordinary law of the land, and not a private right.

Some further meanings of the word are:

An action, or, rather, those proceedings in the Roman action which were conducted before the praetor.

Power or authority. Sui juris, in one's own power; independent. Alieni juris, under another's power.

The profession (ars) or practice of the law. Jus ponitur pro ipsa arte.

A court or judicial tribunal (locus in quo redditur jus).

Jus abstinenti /jəs ābstanēniday/. The right of renunciation; the right of an heir, under the Roman law, to renounce or decline the inheritance, as, for example, where his acceptance, in consequence of the necessity of paying the debts, would make it a burden to him.

Jus abutendi /jəs ābytēnday/. The right to abuse. By this phrase is understood the right to do exactly as one likes with property, or having full dominion over property.

Jus accrescendi /jəs ākrəsənday/. The right of survivorship.

In re Brogan’s Estate, 165 Misc. 111, 300 N.Y.S. 447, 455. The right of the survivor or survivors of two or more joint tenants to the tenancy or estate, upon the death of one or more of the joint tenants. In re Capria’s Estate, 89 Misc. 101, 151 N.Y.S. 385, 386.

Jus accrescendi inter mercatores, pro beneficio commer- cii, locum non habet /jəs ākrəsənday intər mərkə-tərˈɪz, prəʊ ˈbɛnfəs(ɪ)θ(ə)ˈjyʊər kəmərˈsi, ləʊkəm nɒn hɛˈbiət/. The right of survivorship has no place between merchants, for the benefit of commerce.

There is no survivorship in cases of partnership, as there is in joint-tenancy.

Jus accrescendi prefertur oneribus /jəs ākrəsənday prefərˈdər ɒnerəbəs/. The right of survivorship is preferred to incumbrances. Hence no dower or curtesy can be claimed out of a joint estate.

Jus accrescendi prefertur ultimo voluntati /jəs ākrəsənday prefərˈdər ˈʌltiməu vəntələtəi/. The right of survivorship is preferred to the last will. A devise of one’s share of a joint estate, by will, is no severance of the jointure; for no testament takes effect till after the death of the testator, and by such death the right of the survivor (which accrued at the original creation of the estate, and has therefore a priority to the other) is already vested. 2 Bl.Comm. 186.

Jus actus /jəs ˈæksəs/. In Roman law, a rural servitude giving to a person a passage for carriages, or for cattle.

Jus ad rem /jəs ad rəm/. A term of the civil law, meaning “a right to a thing;” that is, a right exercisable by one person over a particular article of property in virtue of a contract or obligation incurred by another person in respect to it, and which is enforceable only against or through such other person. It is thus distinguished from jus in re, which is a complete and absolute dominion over a thing available against all persons. Mire v. Sunray DX Oil Co., D.C.La., 285 F.Supp. 885, 889.

The disposition of writers is to use the term “jus ad rem” as descriptive of a right without possession, and “jus in re” as descriptive of a right accompanied by possession. Or, in a somewhat wider sense, the former denotes an inchoate or incomplete right to a thing; the latter, a complete and perfect right to a thing. The Carlos F. Roses, 177 U.S. 655, 20 S.Ct. 803, 44 L.Ed. 928.

In canon law, a right to a thing. An inchoate and imperfect right, such as is gained by nomination and institution; as distinguished from jus in re or complete and full right, such as is acquired by corporal possession. 2 Bl.Comm. 312.

Jus Aeliamum /jəs əliˈənum/. A body of laws drawn up by Sextus Aelius, and consisting of three parts, wherein were explained, respectively: (1) The laws of the Twelve Tables; (2) the interpretation of and decisions upon such laws; and (3) the forms of procedure. In date, it was subsequent to the jus Flavi- num (q.v.).

Jus sequum /jəs ˈsəkwəm/. A term used by the Romans to express the adaptation of the law to the circumstances of the individual case as opposed to jus stric- tum (q.v.).

Jus sesociatione /jəs ˈsəsəˌkeiʃən(ə)ˈ η/ . The right of primogeniture (q.v.).

Jus albinatus /jəs ˈælbaˌnətəs/. The droit d’aubaine (q.v.). See Albinatus jus.

Jus angarie /jəs ˈæŋɡəriˈəri/. See Angaria; Angary, right of.

Jus aqueductus /jəs ˈækwədəktəs/. In the civil law, the name of a servitude which gives to the owner of land the right to bring down water through or from the land of another.
Jus aquæ haustus / jás ákiviy hóstas/. In Roman law, a rural servitude giving to a person a right of watering cattle on another's field, or of drawing water from another's well.

Jus bænel / jás bænsay/. In old English law, the right of bench. The right or privilege of having an elevated and separate seat of judgment, anciently allowed only to the king's judges, who hence were said to administer high justice (summam administrant justitiam).

Jus bellæ / jás bělāy/. The law of war. The law of nations as applied to a state of war, defining in particular the rights and duties of the belligerent powers themselves, and of neutral nations. That which may be done without injustice with regard to an enemy.

Jus bellum dicendi / jás bèlám dášénday/. The right of proclaiming war.

Jus canonicum / jás kanónakam/. The canon law.

Jus civile / jás sívaly/. Civil law. The system of law peculiar to one state or people. Particularly, in Roman law, the civil law of the Roman people, as distinguished from the jús gentium. The term is also applied to the body of law called, emphatically, the "civil law." See also Civil law.

The jús civile and the jús gentium are distinguished in this way. All people ruled by statutes and customs use a law partly peculiar to themselves, partly common to all men. The law each people has settled for itself is peculiar to the state itself, and is called "jús civile," as being peculiar to that very state. The law, again, that natural reason has settled among all men, —the law that is guarded among all peoples quite alike,—is called the "jús gentium," and all nations use it as if law. The Roman people, therefore, use a law that is partly peculiar to itself, partly common to all men.

But this is not the only, or even the general, use of the words. What the Roman jurists had chiefly in view, when they spoke of "jús civile," was not local as opposed to cosmopolitan law, but the old law of the city itself, as opposed to the newer law introduced by the praetor (jús prætoriun, jús honorarium). Largely, no doubt, the jús gentium corresponds with the jús prætoriun; but the correspondence is not perfect.

Jus civile est quod sibi populus constituit / jás sívaly ĝest kwód sibay pópyas kanstít(y)wust/. The civil law is what a people establishes for itself.

Jus civitatis / jás sivatéddas/. The right of citizenship; the freedom of the city of Rome. It differs from jús quiritium, which comprehended all the privileges of a free native of Rome. The difference is much the same as between "denization" and "naturalization".

Jus cloaca / jás klówasiyi/"klowissy/. In the civil law, the right of sewerage or drainage. An easement consisting in the right of having a sewer, or of conducting surface water, through the house or over the ground of one's neighbor.

Jus commune / jás kamyúwny/. In the Civil law, common right; the common and natural rule of right, as opposed to jús singulare (q.v.).

In English law, the common law, answering to the Saxon "folcright."

Jus constitui oportet in his que ut plurimum accidunt non que ex inophatato / jás kastitchuway a pórdlat in his kwíli at pluramam s kémndtran nón kwíli ēks inopnéddow/. Laws ought to be made with a view to those cases which happen most frequently, and not to those which are of rare or accidental occurrence.

Jus corone / jás korówny/. In English law, the right of the crown, or to the crown; the right of succession to the throne.

Jus cudenda moneta / jás kádëndni mánjféddy/. In old English law, the right of coining money.

Jus curialitatis / jás kyúriyélitéddas/. In English law, the right of curtesy.

Jus dare / jás déry/. To give or to make the law; the function and prerogative of the legislative department.

Jus deliberali / jás dalibérálway/. In the civil law the right of deliberating. A term granted by the proper officer at the request of him who is called to the inheritance (the heir), within which he has the right to investigate its condition and to consider whether he will accept or reject it.

Jus descendit, et non terra / jás dášéndit, èt nón térra/. A right descends, not the land.

Jus devolutum / jás dával(y)wdddam/. The right of the church of presenting a minister to a vacant parish, in case the patron shall neglect to exercise his right within the time limited by law.

Jus dicere / jás dýarsíry/. To declare the law; to say what the law is. The province of a court or judge.

Jus dicere, et non jus dare / jás dýarsíry, èt nón jás déry/. To declare the law, not to make it.

Jus disponendi / jás disponénday/. The right of disposing. An expression used either generally to signify the right of alienation, as when we speak of depriving a married woman of the jús disponendi over her separate estate, or specially in the law relating to sales of goods, where it is often a question whether the vendor of goods has the intention of reserving to himself the jús disponendi; i.e., of preventing the ownership from passing to the purchaser, notwithstanding that he (the vendor) has parted with the possession of the goods.

Jus distraherendi / jás distrahénday/. The right of sale of goods pledged in case of non-payment. See Distress; Pledge.

Jus dividendi / jás dywádday/. The right of disposing of realty by will.

Jus duplicatum / jás d(y)wplákkéddam/. A double right; the right of possession united with the right of property; otherwise called "droit-droit." 2 Bl.Comm. 199.

Jus edicere or jus edicendi / jás edíssíry/jás lýdásénday/. The right to issue edicts. It belonged to all the higher magistrates, but special interest is attached to the prætorian edicts in connection with the history of Roman law.
Jus est ars boni et æquil /jás êst árz bóñay êd įýkwáy/. Law is the science of what is good and just.

Jus est norma recti; et quicquid est contra normam recti est injurial /jás êst nórmá réktay, êt kw(i)d(k)wid êst kontra nórmom réktay êst anjúr(i)yá/. Law is a rule of right; and whatever is contrary to the rule of right is an injury.

Jus et fraus nunquam cohabitant /jás êt frós náŋkwaam kówhábañdent/. Right and fraud never dwell together.

Jus ex injuria non oritur /jás êks anjúr(i)yá nón òrdòr/. A right does (or can) not rise out of a wrong.

Jus ex non scripto /jás êks nón skriptów/. Law constituted by custom or such usage as indicates the tacit consent of the community.

Jus falcandil /jás fólkáéndáy/. The right of mowing or cutting. The right of cutting wood.

Jus fecale /jás fes(h)iýëlyiy/. In Roman law, the law of arms, or of heralds. A rudimentary species of international law founded on the rites and religious ceremonies of the different peoples.

Jus falcularium /jás fad(y)uws(h)iýérám/. In the civil law, a right in trust; as distinguished from jus legitimum, a legal right. 2 Bl.Comm. 328.

Jus flumnum /jás fl(y)úwmanám/. In the civil law, the right to the use of rivers.

Jus fodendi /jás fó(d)yéndáy/. In the civil and old English law, a right of digging on another's land.

Jus futurum /jás fyućhúrám/. In the civil law, a future right; an inchoate, incipient, or expectant right, not yet fully vested. It may be either "jus delatum," when the subsequent acquisition or vesting of it depends merely on the will of the person in whom it is to vest, or "jus nondum delatum," when it depends on the future occurrence of other circumstances or conditions.

Jus gentium /jás jéns(h)xýam/. The law of nations. That law which natural reason has established among all men is equally observed among all nations, and is called the "law of nations," as being the law which all nations use. Although this phrase had a meaning in the Roman law which may be rendered by our expression "law of nations," it must not be understood as equivalent to what we now call "international law," its scope being much wider. It was originally a system of law, or more properly equity, gathered by the early Roman lawyers and magistrates from the common ingredients in the customs of the old Italian tribes,—those being the nations, gentes, whom they had opportunities of observing,—to be used in cases where the jus civile did not apply; that is, in cases between foreigners or between a Roman citizen and a foreigner. The principle upon which they proceeded was that any rule of law which was common to all the nations they knew of must be intrinsically consonant to right reason, and therefore fundamentally valid and just. From this it was an easy transition to the converse principle, viz., that any rule which instinctively commended itself to their sense of justice and reason must be a part of the jus gentium. And so the latter term came eventually to be about synonymous with "equity" (as the Romans understood it), or the system of prætorian law.

Jurists frequently employed the term "jus gentium privatum" to denote private international law, or that subject which is otherwise styled the "conflict of laws"; and "jus gentium publicum" for public international law, or the system of rules governing the intercourse of nations with each other as persons.

Jus gladil /jás gládiýyáy/. The right of the sword; the executory power of the law; the right, power, or prerogative of punishing for crime. 4 Bl.Comm. 177.

Jus habendi /jás habéndáy/. The right to have a thing. The right to put in actual possession of property.

Jus habendi et retinendi /jás habéndáy êt rédánéndáy/. A right to have and to retain the profits, tithes, and offerings, etc., of a rectory or parsonage.

Jus hereditatis /jás harédatéydas/. The right of inheritance.

Jus hauriendi /jás hohriéndáy/. In the civil and old English law, the right of drawing water.

Jus honorarium /jás (h)ónařéríyam/. The body of Roman law, which was made up of edicts of the supreme magistrates, particularly the praetors.

Jus honorum /jás (h)ónorám/. In Roman law, the right of holding offices. See Jus suffragil.

Jus imaginis /jás améjáñas/. In Roman law, the right to use or display pictures or statues of ancestors; somewhat analogous to the right, in English law, to bear a coat of arms.

Jus immunitatis /jás amyúmnatéydas/. In the civil law, the law of immunity or exemption from the burden of public office.

Jus incognitum /jás inkógnadóm/. An unknown law. This term is applied by the civilians to obsolete laws.

Jus individuum /jás índadvíyuwmám/. An individual or indivisible right; a right incapable of division.

Jus in personal /jás in persównám/. A right against a person; a right which gives its possessor a power to oblige another person to give or procure, to do or not to do, something.

Jus in re /jás in ré/. A right in a thing. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 847. A right existing in a person with respect to an article or subject of property, inherent in his relation to it, implying complete ownership with possession, and available against all the world.

See Jus ad rem.

Jus in re aliena /jás in ré élyliéymá/. An easement on servitude, or right in, or arising out of, the property of another.

Jus in re inherit ossibus usufructuaril /jás in ré inhírút ósbose yúwz(h)uwfrktéryiyáy/. A right in the thing cleaves to the person of the usufructuary.

Jus in re propri /jás in ré prówpríyá/. The right of enjoyment which is incident to full ownership or property, and is often used to denote the full ownership or property itself. It is distinguished from jūs in re alienā, which is a mere easement or right in or over the property of another.

Jūs italicum /jūs itaˈlikam/. A term of the Roman law descriptive of the aggregate of rights, privileges, and franchises possessed by the cities and inhabitants of Italy, outside of the city of Rome, and afterwards extended to some of the colonies and provinces of the empire, consisting principally in the right to have a free constitution, to be exempt from the land tax, and to have the title to the land regarded as Quiritanian property.

Jūs Iñnerlis /jūs iˈnnerlis/. In Roman law, a rural servitude giving to a person the right to pass over an adjoining field, on foot or horseback.

Jūs jurandī forma verbīs differt, re convenit; hunc enim sensum habere debet: ut deus invocetur /jūs jaraˈnday fòrmə vəˈrəbəs dɪfərt, rīˈ kənvək,nət; hɑːɡ ɨk ɨm ˈsɛnsm həbriˈdəb; ə dɪˈvəs ɪnˌvək,sɨdər/. The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense; that the deity is invoked.

Jūs jurandum /jūs jaraˈndam/. Lat. An oath.

Jūs jurandum inter alios factum nec nocere nec prosesse debet /jūs jaraˈndam ɪntər əˈliəʊs fəkˈtəm nɛk ˈnɔsərʲə nɛk prɔˈsɛsi dəbət/. An oath made between others ought neither to hurt nor profit.

Jūs Latī /jūs lɛˈʃiʃə]/. In Roman law, the right of Latium or of the Latins.

The principal privilege of the Latins seems to have been the use of their own laws, and their not being subject to the edicts of the prætor, and that they had occasional access to the freedom of Rome, and a participation in her sacred rites.

Jūs Latium /jūs lɛʃ(ɪ)əm/. In Roman law, a rule of law applicable to magistrates in Latium. It was either major Latium or minor Latium—the major Latium raising to the dignity of Roman citizen not only the magistrate himself, but also his wife and children; the minor Latium raising to that dignity only the magistrate himself.

Jūs legitimum /jūs ˈlaʃiːʃəm/. A legal right. In the civil law, a right which was enforceable in the ordinary course of law.

Jūs liberorum /jūs lɪˈbaɾoɾom/. In Roman law, the privilege conferred upon a woman who had three or four children.

Jūs maritī /jūs maˈɾeti/. The right of a husband; especially the right which a husband acquires to his wife’s movable estate by virtue of the marriage.

Jūs merum /jūs məɾəm/. In old English law, mere or bare right; the mere right of property in lands, without either possession or even the right of possession.

Jūs moribus constitutum /jūs mɔɾoˈbaʊ kənˈstɛtjɵˈvʊdəm/. See Jūs eχ no sɛkˈrivtum.

Jūs naturae /jūs ˈnaʃərəˈriːjli/. The law of nature. The law of nature, or law of nature; law, or legal principles, supposed to be discoverable by the light of nature or abstract reasoning, or to be taught by nature to all nations and men alike; or law supposed to govern men and peoples in a state of nature, i.e., in advance of organized governments or enacted laws. See Natural law.

This concept originated with the philosophical jurists of Rome, and was gradually extended until the phrase came to denote a supposed basis or substratum common to all systems of positive law, and hence to be found, in greater or less purity, in the laws of all nations. And, conversely, they held that if any rule or principle of law was observed in common by all peoples with whose systems they were acquainted, it must be a part of the jūs naturale, or derived from it. Thus the phrases “jūs naturale” and “jūs gentium” came to be used interchangeably.

Jūs naturale est quod apud homines eandem habet potentiam /jūs nəˈʃarəˈriːli əst əˈpud həˈmiːnes irəˈdɛm ˈhæbət pəˈtɛnʃəliː]/. Natural right is that which has the same force among all mankind.

Jūs navigandi /jūs nəˈvəɡəndiː/. The right of navigating or navigation; the right of commerce by ships or by sea.

Jūs necis /jūs ˈnɛʃiː/. In Roman law, the right of death, or of putting to death. A right which a father anciently had over his children. See Jūs vīte nec-i-seque.

Jūs non habenti tute non paretur /jūs nɔn həˈbeŋti t(ɪ)ˈwʌdɪ ˈnɔn ˈpærətər/. One who has no right cannot be safely obeyed.

Jūs non patitur ut idem bis solvatur /jūs nɔn ˈpektədər əd əˈdəm bɪs səˈlvətər/. Law does not suffer that the same thing be twice paid.

Jūs non sacram /jūs nɔn səˈkɾəm/. In Roman law, that portion of the jūs publicum which regulated the duties of magistrates.

Non-sacred law; that which dealt with the duties of civil magistrates, the preservation of public order, and the rights and duties of persons in their relation to the state. It was analogous to that which would now be called the police power.

Jūs non scriptum /jūs nɔn ˈskrɪptʊm/. The unwritten law.

Jūs offerendī /jūs ˈofərəndiː/. In Roman law, the right of subrogation, that is, the right of succeeding to the lien and priority of an elder creditor on tendering or paying into court the amount due to him.

Jūs oneris ferendī /jūs ˈoːnərəs ˈfoɾəndiː/. An urban servitude in the Roman law, the owner of which had the right of supporting and building upon the house wall of another.

Jūs pascendi /jūs ˈpæsəndiː/. In the civil and old English law, the right of pasturing cattle.

Jūs patronatus /jūs ˈpətrəˈnætəs/. In English ecclesiastical law, the right of patronage; the right of presenting a clerk to a benefice.

A commission from the bishop, where two presentations are offered upon the same avoidance, directed usually to his chancellor and others of competent learning, who are to summon a jury of six clergy men and six laymen to inquire into and examine who is the rightful patron. 3 Bl.Comm. 246.

Jus personarum /jás pársonáram/. Rights of persons. Those rights which, in the civil law, belong to persons as such, or in their different characters and relations; as parents and children, masters and servants, etc.

Jus penitendi /jás pénsténdiap/. In Roman law, the right of rescision or revocation of an executory contract on failure of the other party to fulfill his part of the agreement.

Jus portus /jás pórdas/. In maritime law, the right of port or harbor.

Jus possessioinis /jás pozášiyójów纳斯/. The right of possession.

Jus possidendi /jás pózdándiay/. The right of possessing, which is the legal consequence of ownership. It is to be distinguished from the jus possessioinis (q.v.), which is a right to possess which may exist without ownership.

Jus postlimini /jás pówstliminiyáy/. In the civil law, the right of postliminy; the right or claim of a person who had been restored to the possession of a thing, or to a former condition, to be considered as though he had never been deprived of it.

In International law, the right by which property taken by an enemy, and recaptured or rescued from him by the fellow-subjects or allies of the original owner, is restored to the latter upon certain terms.

Jus presens /jás priyénd(d)z/. In the civil law, a present or vested right; a right already completely acquired.

Jus pretorium /jás prátóriyáy/. In the civil law, the discretion of the praetor, as distinct from the leges, or standing laws. 3 Bl.Comm. 49. That kind of law which the praetors introduced for the purpose of aiding, suppling, or correcting the civil law, for the public benefit. Called, also, “jus honorarium” (q.v.).

Jus precarium /jás prákériyáy/. In the civil law, a right to a thing held for another, for which there was no remedy by legal action, but only by entreaty or request. 2 Bl.Comm. 328.

Jus presentationis /jás prézàntéshiyójównas/. The right of presentation.

Jus privatum /jás prvévdoym/. Private law; the law regulating the rights, conduct, and affairs of individuals, as distinguished from “public” law, which relates to the constitution and functions of government and the administration of criminal justice. The right of a person acquiring title to lands under navigable waters to fill in such lands, making upland out of foreshore, and thus extinguishing jus publicum, subject to right of sovereign to make public improvements on tide water for benefit of commerce. Arnold’s Inn, Inc. v. Morgan, 63 Misc.2d 279, 310 N.Y.S.2d 541, 547.

Also private ownership, or the right, title, or dominion of a private owner, as distinguished from “jus publicum,” which denotes public ownership, or the ownership of property by the government, either as a matter of territorial sovereignty or in trust for the benefit and advantage of the general public. In this sense, a state may have a double right in given property, e.g., lands covered by navigable waters within its boundaries, including both “jus publicum,” a sovereign or political title, and “jus privatum,” a proprietary ownership.

Jus projiciendi /jás prajis(h)jiyéndiay/. In the civil law, the name of a servitude which consists in the right to build a projection, such as a balcony or gallery, from one’s house in the open space belonging to one’s neighbor, but without resting on his house.

Jus proprietatis /jás prapráyátéydas/. The right of property, as distinguished from the jus possessioinis or right of possession.

Jus protegendii /jás prówdajéndiap/. In the civil law, the name of a servitude. It is a right by which a part of the roof or tiling of one house is made to extend over the adjoining house.

Jus protimesos /jás prówtamísìsìsìs/. The right of pre-emption of a landlord in case the tenant wishes to dispose of his rights as a perpetual lessee. Pactum protimesos was the right of pre-emption to the seller; i.e., in case the buyer should sell, he must sell to the former seller.

Jus publicum /jás pablakam/. Public law, or the law relating to the constitution and functions of government and its officers and the administration of criminal justice. Also public ownership, or the paramount or sovereign territorial right or title of the state or government. The right shared by all to navigate on waters covering foreshore at high tide and, at low tide, to have access across foreshore to waters for fishing, bathing or any other lawful purpose. Arnold’s Inn, Inc. v. Morgan, 63 Misc.2d 279, 310 N.Y.S.2d 541. See Jus privatum.

It implies a right in a sovereign or public capacity to be exercised for the interest or benefit of the state or the public, as distinguished from the exercise in a proprietary capacity of a right of the sovereign or a right possessed by an individual in common with the public.

Sovereign’s right of jurisdiction and dominion for governmental purposes over all lands and waters within its territorial limits, including tidal waters and their bottoms, is sometimes termed “jus publicum.”

Jus publicum et privatum quod ex naturalibus praecessit aut gentium aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Anglice rectum esse dictur /jás pablakam et pr prvévdoym ktwód ëks nátyráyélbas prásépta òt jéshéji(y)am òt sávilbas ëst kálektam, ët ktwód in júriý skríptój jás épáleydar, id in líyjì ængliy jéktaém ësíy disdór/. Public and private law is that which is collected from natural principles, either of nations or in states; and that which in the civil law is called “jus,” in the law of England is said to be “right.”

Jus publicum privatorum pactis mutari non potest /jás pablakam práyvtótaróm pëktas myuwtéy rònn pòwdst/. A public law or right cannot be altered by the agreements of private persons.
JUST COMPENSATION

Jus questitum /jás kwazáydam/. A right to ask or recover; for example, in an obligation there is a binding of the obligor, and a jus questitum in the obligee.

Jus quiritum /jás kwárayum/. The old law of Rome, that was applicable originally to patricians only, and, under the Twelve Tables, to the entire Roman people, was so called, in contradistinction to the jus praeium (q.v.), or equity.

Jus recuperandl /jás rakyum/úwparáyeady. The right of recovering [lands].

Jus representationis /jás réprazentéshiyóywnas/. The right of representing or standing in the place of another, or of being represented by another.

Jus rerum /jás ríram/. The law of things. The law regulating the rights and powers of persons on things; how property is acquired, enjoyed, and transferred.

Jus resipic ic aequitatem /jás réspasst ókwnatéydam/. Law regards equity.

Jus sacram /jás sákram/. In Roman law, that portion of the public law which was concerned with matters relating to public worship and including the regulation of sacrifices and the appointment of priests. There was a general division of the jus publicum into jus sacram and jus non sacram (q.v.).

Jus sanguinis /jás sängwánsas/. The right of blood. The principle that a person’s citizenship is determined by the citizenship of the parents. See Jus soli.

Jus scriptum /jás skriptam/. In English law, written law, or statute law, otherwise called “lex scripta,” as distinguished from the common law, “lex non scripta.” 1 Bl.Comm. 62.

In Roman law, all law that was actually committed to writing, whether it had originated by enactment or by custom, in contradistinction to such parts of the law of custom as were not committed to writing.

Jus singulare /jás singwaléry/. In the civil law, a peculiar or individual rule, differing from the jus commune, or common rule of right, and established for some special reason.

Jus soli /jás sówlay/. The law of the place of one’s birth as contrasted with jus sanguinis, the law of the place of one’s descent or parentage. The principle that a person’s citizenship is determined by place of birth rather than by the citizenship of one’s parents. It is of feudal origin.

Jus spatandi /jás spe’shiyénya/. A right of way over land by the public by use merely for the purposes of recreation and instruction.

Jus stapule /jás stéyppally/. In Old European law, the law of staple; the right of staple. A right or privilege of certain towns of stopping imported merchandise, and compelling it to be offered for sale in their own markets.

Jus stillliciti vél fluminis recipiendi /jás stilisildiyáy vél f(ý)úwnanas rasípyénya/. In Roman law, an urban servitude giving the owner a right to project his roof over the land of another or to open a house drain upon it.

Jus strictum /jás striktam/. Strict law; law interpreted without any modification, and in its utmost rigor.

Jus suffragii /jás sáfryjýyay/. In Roman law, the right of voting. This and the jus honorum (q.v.) were the public rights of the Roman citizen.

Jus superveniens auctori accrescit successori /jás styuwpáyyn(i)ýen(d)z októrýár akrésat sákýesórýay/. A right growing to a possessor accrues to the successor.

Justa causa /jássta kóza/. In the civil law, a just cause; a lawful ground; a legal transaction of some kind.

Just causa. A cause outside legal cause, which must be based on reasonable grounds, and there must be a fair and honest cause or reason, regulated by good faith. Dubois v. Gentry, 182 Tenn. 103, 184 S.W.2d 369, 371. Fair, adequate, reasonable cause. In re Municipal Garage in and for City of Utica, 141 Misc. 15, 252 N.Y.S. 18, 32. Legitimate cause; legal or lawful ground for action; such reasons as will suffice in law to justify the action taken. Boston Elevated Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 310 Mass. 528, 39 N.E.2d 87, 112, 124. See Cause of action.

Under provision that no license shall be revoked without “just cause,” the words imply that charges should be made and notice of hearing given and an opportunity to be heard afforded. Carroll v. California Horse Racing Board, 16 Cal.2d 164, 105 P.2d 110, 111.

Just cause of provocation. That which will constitute the homicide murder in the second degree, as distinguished from a lawful provocation, which will reduce it to manslaughter. State v. McCracken, 341 Mo. 697, 108 S.W.2d 372, 376.

Just compensation. Compensation which is fair to both the owner and the public when property is taken for public use through condemnation (eminent domain). Consideration is taken of such criteria as the cost of reproducing the property, its market value, and the resulting damage to the remaining property of the owner. The Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides that no private property shall be taken for public use, without “just compensation.” Within Fifth Amendment provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, “just compensation” means the full monetary equivalent of the property taken. U. S. v. Reynolds, Ky., 397 U.S. 14, 90 S.Ct. 803, 805, 25 L.Ed.2d 12.

As regards property taken for public use, the term is comprehensive and includes all elements, Jacobs v. U. S., Ala., 290 U.S. 13, 54 S.Ct. 26, 78 L.Ed. 142;

Just debts. As used in a will or a statute, this term means legal, valid, and incontestable obligations, not including such as are barred by the statute of limitations or voidable at the election of the party. Jones’ Ex’r v. Jones, 275 Ky. 753, 122 S.W.2d 779, 780. Jus tertii /jás terts’ii/. The right of a third party.

A tenant, bailee, etc., who pleads that the title is in some person other than his landlord, bailor, etc., is said to set up a jus tertii. Dempsey Oil & Gas Co. v. Citizens’ Nat. Bank, 110 Okl. 39, 235 P. 1104, 1107.

Jus testamentarum pertinet ordinarium /jás tést’tamentórám párdndsd ordnáréýow/. The right of testaments belongs to the ordinary.

Justice, v. To do justice, to see justice done; to summon one to do justice.

Justice, n. Title given to judges, particularly to judges of U.S. and state supreme courts, and as well to judges of appellate courts. The U.S. Supreme Court, and most state supreme courts are composed of a chief justice and several associate justices.

Proper administration of laws. In Jurisprudence, the constant and perpetual disposition of legal matters or disputes to render every man his due. In Feudal law, jurisdiction; judicial cognizance of causes or offenses. High justice was the jurisdiction or right of trying crimes of every kind, even the highest. This was a privilege claimed and exercised by the great lords or barons of the middle ages. Low justice was jurisdiction of petty offenses.

See also Miscarriage of justice; Obstructing justice.

Justice Department. One of the executive departments of the federal government, headed by the Attorney General. The chief purposes of the Department of Justice are to enforce the federal laws, to furnish legal counsel in federal cases, and to construe the laws under which other departments act. It conducts all suits in the Supreme Court in which the United States is concerned, supervises the federal penal institutions, and investigates and detects violations against federal laws. It represents the government in legal matters generally, rendering legal advice and opinions, upon request, to the President and to the heads of the executive departments. The Attorney General supervises and directs the activities of the U.S. attorneys and marshals in the various judicial districts. See Attorney General.

Justice in eyre /jás’tas in éer/. From the old French word "eire," i.e., a journey. Those justices who in ancient times were sent by commission into various counties, to hear more especially such causes as were termed “pleas of the crown,” were called “Justices in eyre.” They differed from justices in oyer and terminer, inasmuch as the latter were sent to one place, and for the purpose of trying only a limited number of special causes; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the various counties, with a more indefinite and general commission. In some respects they resembled our present justices of assize, although their authority and manner of proceeding differed much from them. In England, such justices made a circuit every seven years throughout the Kingdom to try causes.

Justicements /jás’tasments/. An old general term for all things appertaining to justice.
Justice of the peace. A judicial magistrate (of English origin) of inferior rank having (usually) jurisdiction limited to that prescribed by statute in civil matters (e.g., performance of marriages) and jurisdiction over minor criminal offenses, committing more serious crimes to higher courts. Trend in most states has been to abolish office and courts of justice of the peace, transferring their powers and functions to other courts; e.g., municipal or district courts. See Justice's courts.

Justice /ˈdʒæstʒəs/. The old form of justice.

Justice's clerk. An amanuensis of the justice. A justice of the peace is regarded as his own clerk, and, in making entries on his docket, he acts in a ministerial capacity. State ex rel. Morris Bldg. & Inv. Co. v. Brown, 228 Mo.App. 760, 72 S.W.2d 859, 862.

Justice’s courts. Inferior tribunals, not of record, with limited jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, held by justices of the peace. The trend has been to abolish such courts, transferring their powers and functions to other courts; e.g., municipal or district courts.

Justice seat. In old English law, the principal court of the forest, held before the chief justice in eyre, or chief itinerant judge or his deputy, to hear and determine all trespasses within the forest, and all claims of franchises, liberties, and privileges, and all pleas and causes whatsoever therein arising. 3 Bl.Comm. 72.

Justiceship. Rank or office of a justice.

Justices of assize /ˈdʒæstəzəv ˈæsəzi/. These justices, or, as they were sometimes called, “justices of nisi prius,” were judges of the superior English courts, who went on circuit into the various counties of England and Wales for the purpose of disposing of such causes as were ready for trial at the assizes. See Assise.

Justices of gaol delivery. In old English law, those justices who were sent with a commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to persons, who, for any offense, had been cast into gaol. Part of their authority was to punish those who let to maintain those prisoners who were not liable to be, and they seem formerly to have been sent into the country upon this exclusive occasion, but afterwards had the same authority given them as the justices of assize.

Justices of laborers. In old English law, justices appointed to redress the wrongdoings of laboring men, who would either be idle or have unreasonable wages.

Justices of nisi prius /ˈdʒæstəsəv ˈnəsi prəˈjas/. In old English law, this title was usually coupled with that of justices of assize; the judges of the superior courts acting on their circuits in both these capacities. See Assise.

Justices of oyer and terminer /ˈdʒæstəsəv ˈoʊər ənd ˈtærˈmənər/. In England, certain persons appointed by the king’s commission, among whom were usually two judges of the courts at Westminster, and who went twice in every year to every county of the kingdom (except London and Middlesex), and, at what was usually called the “assizes,” heard and determined all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors. See Oyer and terminer.

Justices of the bench. In England, the justices of the court of common bench or common pleas.

Justices of the forest. In old English law, officers who had jurisdiction over all offenses committed within the forest against vert or venison. The court wherein these justices sat and determined such causes was called the “justice seat of the forest.” They were also sometimes called the “justices in eyre of the forest.” See Forest courts.

Justices of the hundred. Hundredors; lords of the hundreds. In old English law, they who had the jurisdiction of hundreds and held the hundred courts. See Hundred Court.

Justices of the quorum. See Quorum.

Justices of trail-baston. See Trail-baston.

Justiciable /ˈdʒæstɪʃ(ə)bl/. Matter appropriate for court review. See Justiciable controversy.

Justiciable controversy. A controversy in which a claim of right is asserted against one who has an interest in contesting it. A question as may properly come before a tribunal for decision. Duart Mfg. Co. v. Philad. Co., D.C.Del., 30 F.Supp. 777, 779, 780. Courts will only consider a “justiciable” controversy, as distinguished from a hypothetical difference or dispute or one that is academic or moot. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 239, 57 S.Ct. 461, 463, 81 L.Ed. 617. Term refers to real and substantial controversy which is appropriate for judicial determination, as distinguished from dispute or difference of contingent, hypothetical or abstract character. Guilmarin & Doan, Inc. v. Georgetown Textile & Mfg. Co., 249 S.C. 561, 155 S.E.2d 618, 621. See Case.

Justiciar /ˈdʒæstɪʃ(ə)r/. In old English law, a judge or justice. One of several persons learned in the law, who sat in the sula regis, and formed a kind of court of appeal in cases of difficulty. Also spelled Justizier.

Justiciarii itinerantes /ˈdʒæstɪʃ(ə)rɪ ɪtəˈnərəntəz/. In old English law, justices in eyre, who formerly went from county to county to administer justice. They were so called to distinguish them from justices residing at Westminster, who were called "justicii residentii".

Justiciarii residentes /ˈdʒæstɪʃ(ə)rɪ ɪˈtɛriər ɪˈzɛdəntəz/. In old English law, justices or judges who usually resided in Westminster. They were so called to distinguish them from justices in eyre.

Justiciary /ˈdʒæstɪʃ(ə)rɪər/. An old name for a judge or justice. The word is formed on the analogy of the Latin "juricarius" and French "justiciier", and is a variant of Justiciar (q.v.).

Justiciatus /ˈdʒæstɪʃiəˌtəs/. Judicature; prerogative.

The proceeding by which bail establishes the ability to perform the undertaking of the bond or recognizance. See Justicier.

Justicier. Fr. See Justiciar.

Justices /ˈdʒæstɪʃ(ə)rɪz/. In old English law, a writ directed to the sheriff, empowering him, for the sake of dispatch, to try an action in his county court for a larger amount than he has the ordinary power to do.
JUSTIFIABLE

It is so called because it is a commission to the sheriff to do the party justice, the word itself meaning, “You may do justice to ___.” 3 Bl.Comm. 36.

Justifiable. Rightful; defensible; warranted or sanctioned by law; that which can be shown to be sustained by law, as justifiable homicide. See Homicide; Justifiable homicide.

Justifiable cause. Justifiable cause for prosecution is well-founded belief of person of ordinary prudence, prudence, and judgment in existence of facts essential to prosecution. See also Probable cause.

Justifiable homicide. Killing of another in self-defense when danger of death or serious bodily injury exists. An act which the law positively enjoins upon the perpetrator or positively permits him to perform, such as a capital crime execution or the prevention of a crime or escape by a proper officer. Law v. State, 21 Md.App. 13, 318 A.2d 859, 869. See Self defense.

Justification. Just, lawful excuse or reason for act or failing to act. A maintaining or showing a sufficient reason in court why the defendant did what he is called upon to answer, particularly in an action of libel and as a defense to criminal charges of assault or homicide (e.g. self defense).

Justification is a procedure with common-law origins by which a surety must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the court that it has sufficient ability to perform its obligations. Matthews v. IMC Mint Corp., C.A.Utah, 542 F.2d 544, 546.

Justiciable /jástifikaydar/. A kind of compurgators (q.v.), or those who by oath justified the innocence or oaths of others; as in the case of wager or law.

Justifying bail. Consists in the requirement of proving the sufficiency of bail or sureties in point of proving, etc. See Bail (Bail point scale).

Justis tigni immitteni /jás tignay inătánday/. In Roman law, an urban servitude which gave the right of inserting a beam into the wall of another.

Justinianist /jástin(i)yanast/. A civilian; one who studies the civil law.

Justinian’s Institutes /jástin(i)yan(d)z ınstat(y)ówts/. See Institutes.

Justitia debet esse libera, quia nihil iniquis venali justitia; plena, quia justitia non debet claudicare; et celeris, quia dilatio est quedam negotio /jástish(ly)ə débod éslj libera, kwáyə náy(h)al ąńkwiya wanélyay jástish(ly)ə; plínŋa, kwáyə jástish(ly)ə nón débod kichtakéryi, èt sélars, kwáyə delésh(ly)ów èst kwíyámd nagéysh(ly)ów/. Justice ought to be free, because nothing is more iniquitous than venal justice; full, because justice ought not to halt; and speedy, because delay is a kind of denial.

Justitia est constans et perpetua voluntas jus suum cumque tribuendi /jástish(ly)ə ést kónstaın(d)z èt par péshūwa válnást jás s(y)ów kwáyəjykwíyíy tríy(uwén)dày/. Justice is a steady and unceasing disposition to render to every man his due.

Justitia est duplex, viz., severe puniens et vere pravens /jástish(ly)ə ést dik(y)úlpíelek víz sváríyí pyúyún(i)yén(d)z èt víríyí pryúlvíy(i)yén(d)z/. Justice is double; punishing severely, and truly preventing.

Justitia est virtus excellens et altissimo complacens /jástish(ly)ə ést váríts éksláen(d)z èd éltíismów kampléyßan(d)z/. Justice is excellent virtue and pleasing to the most high.

Justitia firmatur solium /jástish(ly)ə fármyðar só-wliyam/. By justice the throne is established.

Justitia nemini neganda est /jástish(ly)ə némánay nángénda èst/. Justice is to be denied to none.

Justitia non est neganda non differenda /jástish(ly)ə nón nángénda, nón diférénda/. Justice is neither to be denied nor delayed.

Justitia non novit patrem nec matrem; solam veritatem spectat justitia /jástish(ly)ə nón nówvá paítrém nèk métrám; sóvlam véhrístéyam spékát jástish(ly)ə/. Justice knows not father nor mother; justice looks at truth alone.

Justitia piepoudrous. Speedy justice.

Justitium /jástish(ly)əm/. Lat. In the civil law, a suspension or intermission of the administration of justice in courts; vacation time.

As used in statute providing for acknowledgment of “justness” of claim to remove bar of limitations, refers to moral obligation. John W. Masury & Son v. Bisbee Lumber Co., 49 Ariz. 443, 68 P.2d 679, 693.

Jus triertritum /jás tráytriptádaym/. In Roman law, a name applied to the Roman law of wills, in the time of Justinian, on account of its three-fold derivation, viz., from the pretorian edict, from the civil law, and from the imperial constitutions.

Jus triplex est,—proprietatis, possessionis, et possibilita- tis /jás tripléks èstprápréystéyás pàzéshiyówmás èt pósáblitéyádmás/. Right is three-fold,—of property, of possession, and of possibility.
Jus trium liberorum /jas tráyam láybaróram/. In Roman law, a right or privilege allowed to the parent of three or more children. These privileges were an exemption from the trouble of guardianship, priority in bearing offices, and a treble proportion of corn.

Just title. By the term “just title,” in cases of prescription, is meant a title which the possessor may have received from any person whom he honestly believed to be the real owner, provided the title were such as to transfer the ownership of the property. Davis v. Gaines, 104 U.S. 386, 400, 26 L.Ed. 757; B. Fernandez & Bros. v. Aylton, 266 U.S. 144, 45 S.Ct. 52, 69 L.Ed. 209. One good against all the world. See Marketable title.

Justum non est aliquem antenatum mortuum facere bastardum, quod pro tota vita sua pro legitimo habetur /jasam nón èst sélkwam éntanéydam mórchuwam féysariy béstárdam, kwáy pów tőwda våyda s(y)úwa pów lajídámow hoblýdar/. It is not just to make a bastard after his death one elder born who all his life has been accounted legitimate.

Just value. In taxation, the fair, honest, and reasonable value of property, without exaggeration or depreciation; its actual market value. See also Fair market value.

Jus utendi /jas yuv ténday/. The right to use property without destroying its substance. It is employed in contradistinction to the jus abutendi.

Jus venandi et piscandi /jas vanédday èt piskédday/. The right of hunting and fishing.

Jus vendit quod usus approbat /jas védst kwód yúwzas áprabéyvat/. The law dispenses what use has approved.

Jus vitae neclisque /jas váydy nasískwy/. In Roman law, the right of life and death. Originally a father, or his pater-familias if he was himself in domestic subjection, could decide—not arbitrarily, but judicially—whether or not to rear his child; and while this right became subject to certain restrictions, yet when the child had grown up, the father, in the exercise of his domestic jurisdiction, might visit his son’s misconduct, both in private and public life, with such punishment as he thought fit, even banishment, slavery, or death. In the early Empire these rights became relaxed, and they disappeared in the Justinian law.

Juvenile. A young person who has not yet attained the age at which he or she should be treated as an adult for purposes of criminal law. In some states, this age is seventeen. Under the federal Juvenile Delinquency Act, a “juvenile” is a person who has not attained his eighteenth birthday. 18 U.S.C.A. § 5031. A term which may be, though not commonly, is applied to a person who has not reached his or her legal majority for purposes of contracting, marrying, etc. In law, the terms “juvenile” and “minor” are usually used in different contexts; the former used when referring to young criminal offenders, the latter to legal capacity or majority. See also Minor.

Juvenile courts. A court having special jurisdiction, of a paternal nature, over delinquent, dependent, and neglected children.

Juvenile delinquent. See Delinquent child.

Juvenile offenders. See Delinquent child.

Juxta formam statut. /júksta fórnam stát(y)úwdáy/. According to the form of the statute.

Juxta-position /júkstapázíshán/. A placing or being placed in nearness or contiguity; or side by side; as a juxtaposition of words. Brown v. State, 126 Tex. Cr.R. 449, 72 S.W.2d 269, 270.

Juxta ratam /júksta réydam/. At or after the rate.

Juxta tenorem sequentem /júksta tanórám sákʷéntam/. According to the tenor following. A phrase used in the old books when the very words themselves referred to were set forth.

Juzgado /huwsgádow/. In Spanish law, the judiciary; the body of judges; the judges who concur in a decree.
Kahawai /kāhaváiy/. Hawaiian. The flowing stream. It may include the bed or channel of the stream and may, also, include the portion of such channel covered only in times of high water or of freshets.

Kalage, or kalagum /kéyaj/keyéy(j)am/. A wharfage due.

Kalendar /kāləndər/. An account of time, exhibiting the days of the week and month, the seasons, etc. More commonly spelled "calendar."

Kalendarium /kəˈlændəriəm/. In the civil law, a calendar; a book of accounts, memorandum-book, or debt-book; a book in which accounts were kept of moneys loaned out on interest. So called because the Romans used to let out their money and receive the interest on the calendars of each month.

Kalends /kəˈlændz/. See Calends.

Kangaroo court. Term descriptive of a sham legal proceeding in which a person’s rights are totally disregarded and in which the result is a foregone conclusion because of the bias of the court or other tribunal.

Kast-geld. Contribution for a jettison; average.

Katatonia /kəˈtətən(i)ə/. See Insanity.

Kay. A quay, or key.

Kayage. See Cayagum.

K.B. Abbreviation for "King’s Bench".

K.C. Abbreviation for "King’s Counsel".

Keelage /kiˈliːj/. The right to demand money for the privilege of anchoring a vessel in a harbor; also the money so paid.

Keep, v. To continue. People v. Roseberry, 23 Cal. 2d 13, 71 P.2d 944; Briggs v. U. S., C.C.A.Mich., 45 F.2d 479, 480. To have or retain in one’s power or possession; not to lose or part with; to preserve or retain. To maintain, carry on, conduct, or manage; as, to "keep" a bawdy house, gaming table, nuisance, or the like. To maintain, tend, harbor, feed, and shelter; as, to "keep" a dangerous animal.

To maintain continuously and methodically for the purposes of a record; as, to "keep" books. Thus to "keep" records of court means, not only to preserve the manual possession of the records, books, and papers, but to correctly transcribe therein the proceedings of the court.

To maintain continuously and without stoppage or variation; as, when a vessel is said to "keep her course," that is, continue in motion in the same general direction in which she was previously sailing. The Britannia, 153 U.S. 130, 14 S.Ct. 795, 38 L.Ed. 660. To maintain, to cause to continue without essential change of condition. To take care of and to preserve from danger, harm, or loss.

Keeper. A custodian, manager, or superintendent; one who has the care, custody, or management of anything or place; one who has or holds possession of anything. See Bailment; Custodian; Depository.

Keeper of a bawdy house or house of ill fame. A person who has control, proprietorship, or management of the house in question. State v. Weston, 235 Iowa 148, 15 N.W.2d 922, 923.

Keeper of dog. A harborer of a dog. Elender v. White, La.App., 14 So.2d 280, 282. Any person, other than owner, harboring or having in his possession any dog. Hancock v. Finch, 126 Conn. 121, 9 A.2d 811. One who, either with or without owner’s permission, undertakes to manage, control, or care for it as dog owners in general are accustomed to do.

Keeper of the forest. In old English law, an officer (called also chief warden of the forest) who had the principal government of all things relating to the forest, and the control of all officers belonging to the same.

Keeper of the great seal. In English law, a high officer of state, through whose hands pass all charters, grants, and commissions of the king under the great seal.

Keeper of the king’s conscience. A name sometimes applied to the chancellor of England, as being formerly an ecclesiastic and presiding over the royal chapel.

Keeper of the privileged seal. In English law, an officer through whose hands pass all charters signed by the king before they come to the great seal. He is a privy councillor, and was anciently called “clerk of the privy seal,” but is now generally called the “lord privy seal.”

premises in his possession as owner or lessee, or under his management or control, by his associates or subordinates who are likewise guilty if they are present aiding and assisting in carrying on such gambling operations for him. Commonwealth v. Pinkenson, 138 Pa.Super. 485, 11 A.2d 176, 179. A proprietor of a place not kept for the purpose of gambling is guilty if he allows gambling to be carried on and participates in it or receives a benefit from it in some way. People v. Dubinsky, Sp.Sess., 31 N.Y.S.2d 234, 238. See Gambling.

Keeping a gambling table or bank. If one has possession or custody of a gaming table, and authority over its use, and supervises the gaming, he is guilty of such crime.

Keeping a lookout. Being watchful of movements of driver's own vehicle, as well as other vehicles and pedestrians. See Lookout.

Keeping books. Preserving an intelligent record of a merchant's or tradesman's affairs with such reasonable accuracy and care as may properly be expected from a man in that business. See Accounting.

Keeping the peace. Avoiding a breach of the peace; dissuading or preventing others from breaking the peace.

Keep in repair. When a lessee is bound to keep the premises in repair, he must have them in repair at all times during the term; and, if they are at any time out of repair, he is guilty of a breach of the covenant. See Habitability.

Kekiké /kiːkiː/ . Hawaiian. Popular meaning is child, but the meaning of that word in any particular instance depends on context in which it is used, and it can mean "descendant of any generation." In re Kanoa's Trust Estate, 47 Hawaii 160, 393 P.2d 753, 760; Kalakaua v. Parke, 8 Hawaii 620, 621.

Kelp-shore. The land between high and low water mark.

Kentucky Resolutions. A series of resolutions drawn up by Jefferson, and adopted by the legislature of Kentucky in 1799, protesting against the "alien and sedition laws," declaring their illegality, announcing the strict constructionist theory of the federal government, and declaring "nullification" to be "the rightful remedy."

Kentucky Rule. In the allocation of dividends by trustees as between income and principal, all dividends whether paid in cash or stock are regarded as income though in most jurisdictions accepting this rule a dividend paid in the stock of the issuing corporation is considered principal and brings about an adjustment in the basis of such stock in the portfolio.

Keogh Plan. A designation for retirement plans available to self-employed taxpayers (also referred to as H.R.10 plans). Such plans extend to the self-employed tax benefits similar to those available to employees under qualified pension and profit sharing plans. Yearly contributions to the plan (up to a certain amount) are tax deductible. See also Individual retirement account.

Kerhere. A customary cart-way; also a commutation for a customary carriage-duty.

Kernellatus /kərnelətəs/. Fortified or embattled.

Kernes /kɛrnəs/. In English law, idlers; vagabonds.

Key. A wharf for the loading and unloading of merchandise from vessels. More commonly spelled "quay."

An instrument for fastening and opening a lock. Any descriptive words in a land contract which lead unerringly to the land. Blumberg v. Nathan, 190 Ga. 64, 8 S.E.2d 374, 375. Reference to something more definite by which an indefinite description of property is made certain.

Keyage. A toll paid for loading and unloading merchandise at a key or wharf.

Key man insurance. Type of insurance coverage purchased by companies to protect them on the death or disability of a valued employee or by partnership to provide for funds with which to buy out the interest of such partner on his death or disability.

Keyus /kiːjuːs/. A guardian, warden, or keeper.

Kickback. Payment back of a portion of the purchase price to buyer or public official by seller to induce purchase or to influence improperly future purchases or leases. Such payments are not tax deductible as ordinary and necessary expenses. 1.R.C. § 162.

A federal statute makes kickbacks a criminal offense in connection with a contract for construction or repair of a public building or a building financed by loans from the government. 18 U.S.C.A. § 874.

Kidnapping. At common law, the forcible abduction or stealing and carrying away of a person from own country to another. 4 Bl.Comm. 219; Collier v. Vaccaro, C.C.A.Md., 51 F.2d 17, 19; State v. Berry, 200 Wash. 495, 93 P.2d 782, 787, 792. The unlawful seizure and removal of a person from own country or state against his will. In American law, the intent to send the victim out of the country does not constitute a necessary part of the offense; the unlawful taking and carrying away of a human being by force and against his will being the essential elements. State v. Barbour, 278 N.C. 449, 180 S.E.2d 115, 118. At common law kidnapping was a misdemeanor, but under modern statutes such crime is a felony.

A person is guilty of kidnapping if he unlawfully removes another from his place of residence or business, or a substantial distance from the vicinity where he is found, or if he unlawfully confines another for a substantial period in a place of isolation, with any of the following purposes: (a) to hold for ransom or reward, or as a shield or hostage; or (b) to facilitate commission of any felony or flight thereafter; or (c) to inflict bodily injury on or to terrorize the victim or another; or (d) to interfere with the performance of any governmental or political function. Model Penal Code, § 212.1.

With respect to federal kidnapping act, see Lindbergh Act. See also Abduction; Ransom.

Child-stealing. Child-stealing statutes commonly provide a penalty for any one who shall lead, take, entice or detain a child under a specified age with intent to keep or conceal it from its parent, guardian, or other person having lawful care or control thereof.

Kidnapping for ransom. One who detains another for the purpose of extorting money from him or from another person as the price of his release is guilty of the felony of kidnapping for ransom.

Simple kidnapping. Kidnapping which is not in some aggravated form, such as holding for ransom, is commonly referred to as "simple kidnapping."

Kilberg doctrine. In conflicts of law, a rule to the effect that the forum is not bound by the law of the place of the death as to the limitations on damages for wrongful death because such law is procedural and hence the law of the forum governs on this issue. Kilberg v. Northeast Airlines, Inc., 9 N.Y.2d 34, 211 N.Y.S.2d 133, 172 N.E.2d 526.

Kilketh. An ancient servile payment made by tenants in husbandry.

Kill, v. To deprive of life; to destroy the life of an animal or person. The word "homicide" expresses the killing of a human being. See also Homicide; Manslaughter; Murder.

Killed instantly. In collision, may mean that death was instantaneous but not precisely coincidental with the impact. Cash v. Addington, 46 N.M. 451, 131 P.2d 265, 266.

Killing by misadventure. Accidental killing of a person where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any criminal carelessness or reckless conduct. Excusable homicide occurring where one engaged in doing lawful act, without intention to do harm and, with proper precaution to avoid danger, unfortunately kills another.

Kind. Class, grade, or sort. City of St. Louis v. James Braudis Coal Co., Mo.App., 137 S.W.2d 668, 670. Genus; generic class; description. See In kind; Like-kind exchange; Sample.

Kindred. See Kin or kindred; Next of kin.

King. The sovereign, ruler, or chief executive magistrate of a state or nation whose constitution is of the kind called "monarchical" is thus named if a man; if it be a woman, she is called "queen."

The word expresses the idea of one who rules singly over a whole people or has the highest executive power; but the office may be either hereditary or elective, and the sovereignty of the king may or may not be absolute, according to the constitution of the country.

See Emperor.

King can do no wrong. This maxim means that the king is not responsible legally for aught he may please to do, or for any omission. It does not mean that everything done by the government is just and lawful, but that whatever is exceptional in the conduct of public affairs is not to be imputed to the king. See Sovereign Immunity; Sovereignty.

King-craft. The art of governing.

Kingdom. A country where an officer called a "king" exercises the powers of government, whether the same be absolute or limited. In some kingdoms, the executive officer may be a woman, who is called a "queen."

King-geld. A royal aid; an escuage (q.v.).

King's (Queen's) advocate. An English advocate who holds, in the courts in which the rules of the canon and civil law prevail, a similar position to that which the attorney general holds in the ordinary courts, i.e., he acts as counsel for the crown in ecclesiastical, admiralty, and probate cases, and advises the crown on questions of international law. In order of precedence, he ranks after the attorney general.

King's (Queen's) Bench. One of the superior courts of common law in England, being so called because the king (or queen) used formerly to sit there in person, the style of the court being "coram ipso rege."

It was called the "queen's bench" in the reign of a queen, and during the protectorate of Cromwell it was styled the "upper bench." It consisted of a chief justice and three puisne justices, who were by their office the sovereign conservators of the peace and supreme coroners of the land. It was a remnant of the aula regis, and was not originally fixed to any certain place, but might follow the king's person, though for some centuries past it usually sat at Westminster. It had a very extended jurisdiction both in criminal and civil causes; the former in what was called the "crown side" or "crown office," the latter in the "plea side," of the court. Its civil jurisdiction was gradually enlarged until it embraced all species of personal actions. By the Judicature Act of 1873 the jurisdiction of this court was assigned to the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice.

King's (Queen's) coroner and attorney. In England, an officer of the court of king's (or queen's) bench, usually called "the master of the crown office," whose duty it was to file informations at the suit of a private subject by direction of the court. 4 Bl.Comm. 308, 309. The office is now merged in that of Master of the Crown Office.

King's (Queen's) counsel. Barristers or serjeants who have been called within the bar and selected to be the king's (or queen's) counsel. They answer in some measure to the advocati fisci, or advocates of the revenue, among the Romans. They could not formerly be employed in any cause against the Crown (e.g. in defending a prisoner) without special license. Now, however, by a general dispensation granted in 1920, they can appear against the Crown without such license. Called "Queen's" counsel when a queen holds the crown.

King's (Queen's) evidence. When several persons are charged with a crime, and one of them gives evidence against his accomplices, on the promise of being granted a pardon, he is said to be admitted king's or deposits which have not yet cleared through the banks. "Kiting" consists of writing checks against bank account where funds are insufficient to cover them, hoping that before they are presented the necessary funds will be deposited. Sutro Bros. & Co. v. Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America, D.C.N.Y., 284 F.Sup. 273, 283.

Kleptomaniac /klɛptoməˈniːə/ - A species (or symptom) of mania, consisting of an irresistible propensity to steal.

Knave /ˈnɛv/ - A rascal; a false, tricky, or deceitful person. The word originally meant a boy, attendant, or servant, but long-continued usage has given it its present significance.

Knight. In English law, the next personal dignity after the nobility. Of knights there are several orders and degrees. The first in rank are knights of the Garter, instituted by Richard I and improved by Edward III in 1344; next follows a knight banneret; then come knights of the Bath, instituted by Henry IV, and revived by George I; and they were so called from a ceremony of bathing the night before their creation. The last order are knights bachelors, who, though the lowest, are yet the most ancient, order of knighthood; for we find that King Alfred conferred this order upon his son Ethelstan. Other degrees of knights include Knight of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, Knight of the Thistle, and Knight of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire. 1 Bl.Comm. 403.

Knighthood. The rank, order, character, or dignity of a knight.

Knight-marshals. In English law, an officer in the royal household who has jurisdiction and cognizance of offenses committed within the household and verge, and of all contracts made therein, a member of the household being one of the parties.

Knights bachelors. In English law, the most ancient, though lowest, order of knighthood. See Knight.

Knights bannerets. In English law, those created by the sovereign in person on the field of battle. They rank, generally, after knights of the Garter. See Knight.

Knights fees. The determinate quantity of land (held by an estate of inheritance), or of annual income therefrom, which was sufficient to maintain a knight.

Knights of the Garter. See Garter; Knight.

Knights of the post. A term for hireling witnesses.

Knights of the shire. In English law, members of parliament representing counties or shires, in contradistinction to citizens or burgesses, who represent boroughs or corporations.

Knight's service. Upon the Norman conquest, all the lands in England were divided into knight's fees, in number above sixty thousand. For every knight's fee, a knight was bound to attend the king in his wars forty days in a year, in which space of time a campaign was generally finished. If a man only held half a knight's fee, he was only bound to attend twenty days; and so in proportion. But this personal service, in process of time, grew into pecuniar commutations, or aids; until at last, with the military part of... the feudal system, it was abolished by the Tenures Abolition Act of 1660. 1 Bl.Comm. 410.

Knock and announce rule. A peace officer, whether he arrests by virtue of warrant or by virtue of his authority to arrest without warrant on probable cause, can break door of house to effect arrest only after first stating his authority and purpose for demanding admission. Miller v. U. S., 357 U.S. 301, 78 S.Ct. 1190, 2 L.Ed.2d 1332. The officer may break open any outer or inner door or window of a house, or any part of a house, or anything therein, to execute a search warrant, if, after notice of his authority and purpose, he is refused admittance or when necessary to liberate himself or a person aiding him in the execution of the warrant. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3109.

Knock down. To assign to a bidder at an auction by a knock or blow of the hammer. Property is said to be “knocked down” when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer, or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid, according to the terms of the sale. "Knocked down" and "struck off" are synonymous terms.

Knot. In seamen's language, a “knot” is a division of the log-line serving to measure the rate of the vessel's motion. The number of knots which run off from the reel in half a minute shows the number of miles the vessel sails in an hour. Hence when a ship goes 8 nautical miles an hour she is said to go "8 knots."

Know. To have knowledge; to possess information, instruction, or wisdom. To perceive or apprehend; to understand. International-Great-Northern R. Co. v. Pence, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 206, 210. The word "familiar" is equivalent. See Knowingly; Knowledge; Notice.

Know all men. A form of public address, of great antiquity, and with which many written instruments, such as bonds, letters of attorney, etc., still commence.

Knowingly. With knowledge; consciously; intelligently; willfully; intentionally.

A person acts knowingly with respect to a material element of an offense when: (i) if the element involves the nature of his conduct or the attendant circumstances, he is aware that his conduct is of that nature or that such circumstances exist; and (ii) if the element involves a result of his conduct, he is aware that it is practically certain that his conduct will cause such a result. Model Penal Code, § 2.202.

The use of the word in an indictment is equivalent to an averment that the defendant knew what he was about to do, and, with such knowledge, proceeded to do the act charged.

See also Intent; Knowledge.

Knowingly and willfully. This phrase, in reference to violation of a statute, means consciously and intentionally.

When knowledge of the existence of a particular fact is an element of an offense, such knowledge is established if a person is aware of a high probability of its existence, unless he actually believes that it does not exist. Model Penal Code, § 2.202.

Knowledge consists in the perception of the truth of affirmative or negative propositions, while "belief" admits of all degrees, from the slightest suspicion to the fullest assurance. The difference between the two is ordinarily merely in the degree, to be judged by the court, when addressed to the court; by the jury, when addressed to the jury.

See also Constructive knowledge; Imputed knowledge; Knowingly; Notice.

Agency relationship. Unless the parties have otherwise agreed, a principal or agent, with respect to the other, should know what a person of ordinary experience and intelligence would know, and in addition, what he would know if, having the knowledge and intelligence which he has or which he purports to have, he were to use due care in the performance of his duties to the other. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 10.

Carnal knowledge. See Carnal knowledge.

Knowledge of another's peril. One has "knowledge of peril of another," within doctrine of discovered peril, whenever it reasonably appears from the known facts and circumstances that the latter is pursuing a course which will probably terminate in serious bodily injury to him, and that he probably will pursue it to the end.

Personal knowledge. Knowledge of the truth in regard to a particular fact or allegation, which is original, and does not depend on information or hearsay.
Personal knowledge of an allegation in an answer is personal knowledge of its truth or falsity; and if the allegation is a negative one, this necessarily includes a knowledge of the truth or falsity of the allegation denied.

Reason to know. The words "reason to know" are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that the actor has information from which a person of reasonable intelligence or of the superior intelligence of the actor would infer that the fact in question exists, or that such person would govern his conduct upon the assumption that such fact exists. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 12.

Should know. The words "should know" are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that a person of reasonable prudence and intelligence or of the superior intelligence of the actor would ascertain the fact in question in the performance of his duty to another, or would govern his conduct upon the assumption that such fact exists. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 12.

Known. Familiar; perceived; recognized; understood; especially, when used absolutely, familiar to all; generally understood or perceived. Term may, according to context, refer to both actual and constructive knowledge.

Known heirs. In a statute relating to the sale of property of unknown heirs, it has been held to mean those persons who are known, and whose right to inherit, or the extent of whose right, to inherit, is dependent on the non-existence of other persons nearer or as near as the ancestor in the line of descent.

Kuleana /kū'leyána/. The Hawaiian term "kuleana" means a small area of land, such as were awarded in fee by the Hawaiian monarch, about the year 1850, to all Hawaiians who made application therefor.

Kyth /kiθ/. Sax. Kin or kindred.
L. This letter, as a Roman numeral, stands for the number "fifty." It is also used as an abbreviation for "law," "liber," (a book) "lord," and some other words of which it is the initial.

La. Fr. The. The definite article in the feminine gender. Occurs in some legal terms and phrases.

Label. Anything appended to a larger writing, as a codicil.

A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writ, in order to hold the appending seal.

An affixation to or marking on a manufactured article, giving information as to its nature or quality, or the contents of a material, package or container, or the name of the maker, etc. Higgins v. Keuffel, 140 U.S. 428, 11 S.Ct. 731, 35 L.Ed. 470. The informational content of such labels is often governed by federal and state laws; e.g. Fair Packaging and Labeling Act. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1457.

In English law, a copy of a writ in the exchequer.

Labina /labáyna/. In old records, water land.

Term "labor" as used in the Clayton Act is not limited to the work of manual laborers or of mechanics, but comprises intellectual labor as well. U. S. v. National Ass’n of Real Estate Boards, D.C.D.C., 84 F.Supp. 802, 803.

A Spanish land measure, in use in Mexico and formerly in Texas, equivalent to 17½ acres.

See also Agricultural labor; Farm labor or laborer; Laborer.

Labor a Jury. To tamper with a jury; to endeavor to influence them in their verdict, or their verdict generally. Jury tampering is a crime. See e.g. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1503, 1504.

Laborarís /leybáreyíyas/. An ancient writ against persons who refused to serve and do labor, and who had no means of living; or against such as, having served in the winter, refused to serve in the summer.

Labor contract. Contract between employer and employees (i.e. union) which governs working conditions, wages, fringe benefits, and grievances. See Collective bargaining agreement; Master agreement; More favorable terms clause.

Labor dispute. Term generally includes any controversy concerning terms, tenure, hours, wages, fringe benefits, or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment. National Labor Relations Act, § 2(9). However, not every activity of labor organization and not even every controversy in which it may become involved is "labor dispute" within National Labor Relations Act. N. L. R. B. v. International Longshoremens’ Ass’n, Md., 332 F.2d 992, 995, 996.

Laborer. The word ordinarily denotes one who subsists by physical labor. American Surety Co. of New York v. Stuart, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 886, 888. One who, as a means of livelihood, performs work and labor for another. See Farm labor or laborer; Labor; Work.

Laborers’ lien. Species of non-possessory lien which gives preference to laborer who works on job for payment of his wages ahead of general creditors. Such liens are generally governed by state statutes. See Mechanic’s lien.

Labor-management relations. Term used to describe broad spectrum of activities which concern relationship of employees to employers both union and nonunion. See Fair Labor Standards Act; Labor-Management Relations Act; National Labor Relations Act; National Labor Relations Board.

Labor-Management Relations Act. Federal statute (Taft-Hartley Act) which regulates certain union activities, permits suits against unions for proscribed acts, prohibits certain strikes and boycotts and provides machinery for settling strikes which involve national emergencies. 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq.

Labor organization. Means a labor organization engaged in an industry affecting commerce and includes any organization of any kind, any agency, or employee representation committee, group, association, or plan so engaged in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, or dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours, or other terms or conditions of employment, and any conference, general committee, joint or system board, or joint council so engaged which is subordinate to a national or international labor organization, other than a State or local central body. National Labor Relations Act, § 2(5).

A combination of workers usually, but not necessarily, of the same trade or of several allied trades, for securing by united action, the most favorable conditions as regards wages, hours of labor, etc., for its members.

See also Labor union.

Labor picketing. The act of patrolling in motion at or near employer or customer entrances; usually carrying placards with a terse legend communicating the gist of the union’s claims. Certain forms are prohibhited. Landrum-Griffin Act, § 8(b)(7). See also Picketing.

Labor Relations Board. See National Labor Relations Board.

Labor union. A combination or association of workers organized for purpose of securing favorable wages, improved labor conditions, better hours of labor, etc., and righting grievances against employers. Such unjons normally represent trades, crafts, and other skilled workers (e.g. plumbers, truck drivers. See also Labor organization; Union.

Lacey Act. An act of Congress, May 25, 1900, under which the states may enforce game laws against animals, birds, etc., imported from other states or countries. See 16 U.S.C.A. § 661 et seq. See also Game laws.

La chambre des estelles. The star-chamber.

Laches /lȧché/z/léčhaz/léshaz/.” Doctrine of laches,” is based upon maxim that equity aids the vigilant and not those who slumber on their rights. It is defined as neglect to assert right or claim which, taken together with lapse of time and other circumstances causing prejudice to adverse party, operates as bar in court of equity. Wooded Shores Property Owners Ass’n, Inc. v. Mathews, 37 Ill.2d 334, 345 N.E.2d 186, 189. The neglect for an unreasonable and unexplained length of time under circumstances permit-ing diligence, to do what in law, should have been done. Lake Development Enterprises, Inc. v. Kojetinsky, Mo.App., 410 S.W.2d 361, 367.

Neglect or omission to assert right as, taken in conjunction with lapse of time and other circumstances, causes prejudice to adverse party, People ex
rel. Mulvey v. City of Chicago, 292 Ill.App. 589, 12
N.E.2d 13, 16; neglect or omission to do what one should do as warrants presumption that one has abandoned right or claim, Eldridge v. Idaho State Penitentiary, 54 Idaho 213, 30 P.2d 781, 784; negligence by which another has been led into changing his condition with respect to property or right, Heyburn Bldg. Co. v. Highland Motor Transfer Co., 245 Ky. 514, 53 S.W.2d 944, 946; negligence or omission seasonably to assert a right, Davidson v. Grady, C.C.
Fla., 105 F.2d 405, 408; omission of something which a party might do and might reasonably be expected to do towards vindication or enforcement of his rights, McCauley v. Northern Texas Traction Co., Tex.Civ.App., 21 S.W.2d 309, 313; omission to do what law requires to protect one’s rights under circumstances misleading or prejudicing adverse party; unconscionable, undue, unexcused, unexplained or unreasonable delay in assertion of right, Loveland Ass’n, 108 Colo. 297, 116 P.2d 195, 199; Calkin v.
Hudson, 156 Kan. 308, 153 P.2d 177, 184, 185; City of Paducah v. Gillispie, 273 Ky. 101, 115 S.W.2d 574, 575; unreasonable or unexplained delay in asserting right which works disadvantage to another, Kennedy
v. Denny, 237 Ky. 649, 36 S.W.2d 41, 42.

Conduct of party which has placed other party in a situation where his rights will be imperiled and his defenses embarrassed is a basis of laches. State v.
Abernathy, 159 Tenn. 175, 17 S.W.2d 17, 19. Knowldge, unreasonable delay, and change of position are Corporation, 25 Del.Ch. 371, 19 A.2d 831, 837. Laches requires an element of estoppel or neglect which has operated to prejudice of defendant. Scarbrough
v. Pickens, 26 Tenn.App. 213, 170 S.W.2d 585, 588;
Mattison-Greenlee Service Corporation v. Culhane,

Laches, estoppel by /əstopal bay lāchɛz/. A failure to do something which should be done or to claim or enforce a right at a proper time. Hutchinson v.
Kenney, C.C.A.N.C., 27 F.2d 254, 256. A neglect to do something which one should do, or to seek to enforce a right at a proper time. A species of “equita-able estoppel” or “estoppel by matter in pais.” See Equitable estoppel; In pais, estoppel.

An element of the doctrine is that the defendant’s alleged change of position for the worse must have been induced by or resulted from the conduct, misrepresentation, or silence of the plaintiff. Croyle v.
Croyle, 184 Md. 126, 40 A.2d 374, 379. Delay in enforcement of rights until condition of other party has become so changed that he cannot be restored to his former state. Wisdom’s Adm’t v. Sims, 284 Ky.
258, 144 S.W.2d 232, 235, 236. Essence of “laches” is estoppel. Burke v. Gunther, 128 N.J. Eq. 565, 17 A.2d 481, 487. To create “estoppel by laches” party sought to be stopped must with knowledge of transaction have done something to mislead other party to his prejudice. Wisdom’s Adm’t v. Sims, 284 Ky. 258, 144 S.W.2d 232, 235, 236. See also Laches.

Lack of jurisdiction. The phrase may mean lack of power of a court to act in a particular manner or to give certain kinds of relief. In re Rowe’s Estate, 66 Cal.App.2d 594, 152 P.2d 765, 770. It may consist in court’s total want of power to act at all, or lack of power to act in particular case because conditions essential to exercise of jurisdiction have not been complied with, or may consist of lack of jurisdiction over subject matter or over person.

La conscience est la plus changeante des règles /la konsiˈlezn e la plɛt(u) sɔnʃɔnt /de rɛˈʒel/. Conscience is the most changeable of rules.

Lacta /ˈluːktə/. L. Lat. In old English law, defect in the weight of money; lack of weight. This word and the verb “lactare” are used in an assise or statute of the sixth year of King John.
LADA

Lada /lēyda/. In old English law, a court of justice; a lade or lath.

In Saxon law, a purgation, or mode of trial by which one purged himself of an accusation; as by oath or ordeal. A watercourse; a trench or canal for draining marshy grounds. In old English, a lade or lode.

Lade, or lode. The mouth of a river.

Laden in bulk. A term of maritime law, applied to a vessel which is freighted with a cargo which is neither in casks, boxes, bales, nor cases, but lies loose in the hold, being defended from wet or moisture by a number of mats and a quantity of dunnage. Cargo of corn, salt, etc., are usually so shipped.

Lading, bill of. See Bill of lading.

Lame duck session. Legislative session conducted after election of new members but before they are installed and hence one in which some participants are voting for the last time as elected officials because of failure to become reelected or voluntary retirement.

Lammas lands /lámâs lánd/. Lands over which there is a right of pasturage by persons other than the owner from about Lammas, or reaping time, until sowing time.

Land. In the most general sense, comprehends any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever; including fields, meadows, pastures, woods, moors, waters, marshes, and rock. Reynard v. City of Caldwell, 55 Idaho 342, 42 P.2d 292, 296; Holmes v. U.S., C.C.A.Okl., 53 F.2d 960, 963. In its more limited sense, "land" denotes the quantity and character of the interest or estate which a person may own in land. Holmes v. U.S., C.C.A.Okl., 53 F.2d 960, 963. "Land" may include any estate or interest in lands, either legal or equitable, as well as easements and incorporeal hereditaments. Reynard v. City of Caldwell, 55 Idaho 342, 42 P.2d 292, 297; Jones v. Magruder, D.C.Md., 42 F.Supp. 193, 198; Lynch v. Cunningham, 131 Cal. App. 164, 21 P.2d 154; Petition of Burnquist, 220 Minn. 48, 19 N.W.2d 394, 401; Cuff v. Koslosky, 165 Okl. 135, 25 P.2d 290. The land is one thing, and the estate in land is another thing, for an estate in land is a time in land or land for a time.

Technically land signifies everything which may be holden; and the term is defined as comprehending all things of a permanent and substantial nature, and even of an unsubstantial, provided they be permanent. Reynard v. City of Caldwell, 55 Idaho 342, 42 P.2d 292, 296. Ordinarily, the term is used as descriptive of the subject of ownership and not the ownership. Southern Pac. Co. v. Riverside County, 35 Cal.App.2d 380, 95 P.2d 688, 689.

Land is the material of the earth, whatever may be the ingredients of which it is composed, whether soil, rock, or other substance, and includes free or occupied space for an indefinite distance upwards as well as downwards, subject to limitations upon the use of airspace imposed, and rights in the use of airspace granted, by law. Calif.Civil Code, § 659. See Air rights.

The term "land" may be used interchangeably with "property"; it may include anything that may be classed as real estate or real property. Reynard v. City of Caldwell, 55 Idaho 342, 42 P.2d 292, 297.

Land bank. A federally created bank under the Federal Farm Loan Act and organized to make loans on farm security at low interest rates. May also describe program in which land is retired from agricultural production for use in conservation or in tree cultivation and as such is sometimes called a Soil Bank.

Landboc /lândbûk/. In Saxon law, a charter or deed by which lands or tenements were given or held.

Land boundaries. Limits of land holdings described by linear measurements of the borders, or by points of the compass, or by stationary markers. See Boundaries; Forty; Landmark; Land measure; Legal description; Metes and bounds; Plat map; Section.
LAND CERTIFICATE

Land certificate. An obligation of government entitling owner to secure designated quantity of land by following the requirements of law. State v. Balli, Tex. Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 522, 538. It contains a description of the land as it appears on the register and the name and address of the proprietor, and is prima facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein set forth. See also Land warrant.

Land cheap. In old English law, an ancient customary fine, paid either in money or cattle, at every alienation of land lying within some manor, or within the liberty of some borough.

Land contract. Contract for the purchase and sale of land upon execution of which title is transferred. Term commonly refers to an installment contract for the sale of land whereby purchaser (vendee) receives the deed from the owner (vendor) upon payment of final installment. The vendor retains legal title to the property as security for payment of contract price. May also be called "contract for deed", or "installment land contract".

Land cop. The sale of land which was evidenced in early English law by the transfer of a rod or festuca (q.v.) as a symbol of possession which was handed by the seller to the reeve and by the reeve to the purchaser. The conveyance was made in court, it is supposed, for securing better evidence of it, and barring the claims of expectant heirs.

Land court. In Massachusetts such court has exclusive original jurisdiction of all applications for registration of title to land within Commonwealth, and power to hear and determine all questions arising upon such applications. It has exclusive original jurisdiction over writs of entry and various petitions for clearing title to real estate; of petitions for determining validity and extent of municipal zoning ordinances, by-laws and regulations; original concurrent general equity jurisdiction in matters relating to land except in cases of specific performance of contracts relating to same; exclusive original jurisdiction of proceedings for foreclosure of and redemption from tax titles; and it has original jurisdiction, concurrent with Supreme Judicial, superior and probate courts, of declaratory judgment proceedings.

Land district. A division of a state or territory, created by federal authority, in which is located a United States land office, with a "register of the land office" and a "receiver of public money," for the disposition of the public lands within the district.

Landed. Consisting in real estate or land; having an estate in land.

Landed estate or property. A colloquial or popular phrase to denote real property. Landed estate ordinarily means an interest in and pertaining to lands. Real estate in general, or sometimes, by local usage, suburban or rural land, as distinguished from real estate situated in a city.

Landed estates court. In English law, tribunals established by statute for the purpose of disposing more promptly and easily than could be done through the ordinary judicial machinery, of incumbered real estate. These courts were first established in Ireland by the act of 11 & 12 Vict., c. 48, which being defective was followed by 12 & 13 Vict., c. 77. The purpose of these was to enable the owner, or a lessee for any less than 63 years unexpired, of land subject to incumbrance, to apply to commissioners who constituted a court of record to direct a sale. This court was called the Incumbered Estates Court. A new tribunal called the Landed Estates Court was created by 21 & 22 Vict., c. 72, which abolished the former court and established a permanent tribunal.

Landed securities. Mortgages or other encumbrances affecting land.

Landfreics /lændfrɛɪks/. A landlord; a lord of the soil.

Landegandman. In old English law, a kind of customary tenant or inferior tenant of a manor.

Land gable. A tax or rent issuing out of land.

Land grant. A donation of public lands to a subordinate government, a corporation, or an individual; as, from the United States to a state, or to a railroad company to aid in the construction of its road. See also Land patent under Patent.

Landhialford /lændhɪlfoʊrd/. In old English law, a proprietor of land; lord of the soil.

Landing. A place on a river or other navigable water for loading and unloading of goods, or for the reception and delivery of passengers or pleasure boats. The terminus of a road on a river or other navigable water for these purposes. Act or process of coming back to land after voyage or flight. See also Port.

Landirecta /lændəˈrɛktə/. In Saxon law, services and duties laid upon all that held land, including the three obligations called "trinoda necessitas," (q.v.) quasi land rights.

Land, law of. See Law of the land.

Landlocked. An expression applied to a piece of land belonging to one person and surrounded by land belonging to other persons, so that it cannot be approached except over their land. Access to such land will normally be via an easement from surrounding landowner.

Landlord. He of whom lands or tenements are held. He who, being the owner of an estate in land, or a rental property, has leased it to another person, called the "tenant." Also called "lessor."

Landlord and tenant relationship. A phrase used to denote the familiar legal relation existing between lessor and lessee of real estate. The relation is contractual. Renshaw v. Sullivan, Tex.Civ.App., 14 S.W.2d 919, 921; Story v. Lyon Realty Corp., 308 Mass. 66, 30 N.E.2d 845, 847; Smith v. Royal Ins. Co., C.C.A.Cal., 111 F.2d 667, 670, 671. A lease (or agreement therefor) of lands for a term of years, from year to year, for life, or at will creates the relation. The relation exists where one person occupies premises of another in subordination to other's title or rights and with his permission or consent. Marden v. Radford, 229 Mo.App. 789, 84 S.W.2d 947, 954; Coggins v. Gregorio, C.C.A.N.M., 97 F.2d 948, 950, 951. There must be reversion in landlord, an estate in tenant, transfer of possession and control of premises, and, generally, a contract, express or implied. Marden v. Radford, 229 Mo.App. 789, 84 S.W.2d 947, 954, 955; Coggins v. Gregorio, C.C.A.N.M., 97 F.2d 948, 950, 951. See also Lease.

Landlord's warrant. A distress warrant; a warrant from a landlord to levy upon the tenant's goods and chattels, and sell the same at public sale, to compel payment of the rent or the observance of some other stipulation in the lease.

Landmark. See Bureau of Land Management.

Land measure.
1 mile—80 chains, 320 rods, 1,760 yards or 5,280 feet. 16 1/2 feet—1 rod, perch or pole. 1 chain—66 feet, 100 links or 4 rods. 1 link—7.92 inches. 25 links—1 rod. 4 rods—1 chain. 144 square inches—1 square foot. 9 square feet—1 square yard. 30 1/4 square yards—1 square rod. 160 square rods—1 acre. 10,000 square links—1 square chain. 10 square chains—1 acre. 1 acre—208,708 feet by 208,708 feet. 1 acre—43,560 square feet. 1 acre—4,840 square yards. 1 acre—160 square rods. 640 acres—1 square mile or section. 36 square miles or sections—1 township. See also Land boundaries; Survey.

Land offices. Government offices, administered by Bureau of Land Management, established principally in the Western States, for the transaction of local business relating to the survey, location, settlement, pre-emption, and sale of the public lands. A former primary function of these offices was to administer land grants.

Land patent. An instrument conveying a grant of public land; also, the land so conveyed. See also Patent.

Land-poor. The term generally means that a man has a great deal of unproductive land, and perhaps is obliged to borrow money to pay taxes; but a man "land-poor" may be largely responsible.

Land-reeve. In old English law, a person whose business it was to overlook certain parts of a farm or estate; to attend not only to the woods and hedge-timber, but also to the state of the fences, gates, buildings, private roads, driftways, and water-courses; and likewise to the stocking of commons, and encroachments of every kind, as well as to prevent or detect waste and spoil in general, whether by the tenants or others; and to report the same to the manager or land steward.

Land revenues. This term denotes income derived from crown lands in Great Britain. These lands have been so largely granted away to subjects that they are now contracted within very narrow limits.

Landrum-Griffin Act. Federal statute enacted in 1959, known as the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, designed to curb corruption in union leadership and undemocratic conduct of internal union affairs as well as to outlaw certain types of secondary boycotts and "hot cargo" provisions in collective bargaining agreements.

Lands. This term, the plural of "land," is said, at common law, to be a word of less extensive signification than either "tenements" or "hereditaments." But in some of the states it has been provided by statute that it shall include both those terms. See also Land.

Land sale contract. See Land contract.

Lands, public. See Public lands.

Lands, tenements, and hereditaments. The technical and most comprehensive description of real property, as "goods and chattels" is of personality. The term refers to property in land. Denver Joint Stock Land Bank of Denver v. Dixon, 57 Wyo. 523, 122 P.2d 842, 846. Under ancient law, the words comprehended only freehold estate and did not apply to easements or other incorporeal hereditaments. Hester v. Sawyer, 41 N.M. 497, 71 P.2d 646, 649.

Land tenant. The person actually in possession of land.

Land Titles and Transfer Act. An English statute (38 & 39 Vict., c. 87) providing for the establishment of a registry for titles to real property, and making sundry provisions for the transfer of lands and the recording of the evidences thereof. It presents some analogies to the recording laws of the American states; e.g. Registry of Deeds office in many states.

Land trust. A land trust (as used in Illinois) is a trust in which corpus consists of real estate and in which deed to trustee appears to confer upon him full powers to deal with real estate and complete legal and equitable title to trust property. So far as public records are concerned, trustee's powers are complete. Such powers, however, are in fact restricted by a trust agreement mentioned in the deed in trust. Such trust agreements typically vest in beneficiary full powers of management and control. However, bene-
LAND TRUST

Ficary cannot deal with property as if no trust existed. Such trusts generally continue for a definite term.

Land use planning. Generic term used to describe activities such as zoning, control of real estate developments and use, environmental impact studies and the like. Many states have land use planning laws which are implemented by local zoning and land use laws and ordinances. See also Master plan; Planned unit development (PUD); Zoning.

Land walter. In English law, an officer of the custom-house, whose duty is, upon landing any merchandise, to examine, taste, weigh, or measure it, and to take an account thereof.

Land warrant. A warrant issued at the local land offices of the United States to purchasers of public lands, on the surrender of which at the general land office at Washington, they receive a conveyance from the general government. See Land certificate.

The evidence which the state, on good consideration, gives that the person therein named is entitled to the quantity of land therein specified, the bounds and description of which the owner of the warrant may fix by entry and survey, in the section of country set apart for its location and satisfaction.

Langean. A lord of a manor.

Langeanni. The lords of manors.

Language. Any means of conveying or communicating ideas; specifically, human speech, or the expression of ideas by written characters or by means of sign language. The letter, or grammatical import, of a document or instrument, as distinguished from its spirit; as “the language of the statute.” As to offensive language, see Offensive language.

Languidus /lâŋwâdəs/. (Lat., sick.) In common law practice, the name of a return made by the sheriff when a defendant, whom he had taken by virtue of process, was so dangerously sick that to remove him would endanger his life or health.

Lanns manus. (Old Fr.) A lord of the manor.

Laplication /lêpôdêyshan/. The act of stoning a person to death.

Lappage /lêpaj/. A term synonymous with “interference,” “conflict,” “interlock,” “lap” and “overlay” as regards adverse possession. It applies to a situation existing when a deed under which one party claims and grant under which another claims cover in large part the same land. Turk v. Wilson’s Heirs, 265 Ky. 78, 96 S.W.2d 4, 8.

Lapse, v. To glide; to pass slowly, silently, or by degrees. To slip; to deviate from the proper path. To fall or fail. Life & Casualty Ins. Co. of Tennessee v. Wheeler, 265 Ky. 269, 96 S.W.2d 753, 755. See also Expiration; Termination.

Lapse, n. The termination or failure of a right or privilege through neglect to exercise it within some limit of time, or through failure of some contingency.

Failure to vest a bequest or devise by reason of death of devisee of legatee prior to death of testator. Farmers and Merchants State Bank v. Feltis, 150 Ind. App. 284, 276 N.E.2d 204, 206. The death of a legatee before the testator causes the legacy to lapse and to fall into the residue unless there is a statute which provides for its disposition as, for example, if the legatee is a child or relation of the testator, the legacy passes to the issue of the legatee.

The expiration of a right either by the death of the holder or upon the expiration of a period of time. Thus, a power of appointment lapses upon the death of the holder if such holder has not exercised the power during life or at death (i.e., through a will).

Termination of insurance policy because of failure to pay the premium.

In the law of wills, the failure of a testamentary gift. Wilmington Trust Co. v. Wilmington Trust Co., 25 Del.Ch. 204, 15 A.2d 830, 834; Gredig v. Sterling, C.C.A.Tex., 47 F.2d 832, 834.

Lapsed devise. See Devise.

Lapsed legacy. See Legacy.

Lapsed policy. Insurance policy on which there has been default in payment of premiums. Policy remaining in force according to statutory provisions after such default (normally a 30 or 31 day grace period on non-payment of premiums is provided).

Lapse patent. A patent for land issued in substitution for an earlier patent to the same land, which was issued to another party, but has lapsed in consequence of his neglect to avail himself of it.

Lapse statutes. Those state statutory enactments which prevent the lapse or passing into the residue or by intestacy of legacies and devises when the legatee or devisee predeceases the testator, and which commonly provide that, if the legatee or devisee is a child or other relation of the testator, the legacy or devise passes to the issue of such legatee or devisee.

Larcenous /lârânsâs/-. Having the character of larceny; as a “larcenous taking.” Contemplating or intending larceny; as a “larcenous purpose.”

Larcenous intent. A larcenous intent exists where a man knowingly takes and carries away the goods of another without any claim or pretense of right, with intent wholly to deprive the owner of them or convert them to his own use.

Larceny /lârânsâni/-. Felonious stealing, taking and carrying, leading, riding, or driving away another’s personal property, with intent to convert it or to deprive owner thereof. The unlawful taking and carrying away of property of another with intent to appropriate it to use inconsistent with latter’s rights. U.S. v. Johnson, 140 U.S. App.D.C. 54, 433 F.2d 1160, 1163. The essential elements of a “larceny” are an actual or constructive taking away of the goods or property of another without the consent and against the will of the owner and with a felonious intent. People v. Goodchild, 68 Mich.App. 226, 242 N.W.2d 465, 468.

Obtaining possession of property by fraud, trick or device with preconceived design or intent to appropriate, convert or steal is “larceny.” John v. United

Common-law distinctions between obtaining money under false pretenses, embezzlement, and larceny no longer exist in many states; all such crimes being embraced within general definition of "larceny."

See also Shoplifting; Stolen.

Compound larceny. Larceny or theft accomplished by taking the thing stolen either from one's person or from his house; otherwise called "mixed" larceny, and distinguished from "simple" or "plain" larceny, in which the theft is not aggravated by such an intrusion either upon the person or the dwelling. Sometimes referred to as larceny from the person.

Constructive larceny. One where the felonious intent to appropriate the goods to his own use, at the time of the asportation, is made out by construction from the defendant's conduct, although, originally, the taking was not apparently felonious.

False pretenses and larceny distinguished. See False pretenses.

Grand larceny. Taking and carrying away the personal property of another to a value in excess of $100.00 (or whatever the cut-off amount may be in a given jurisdiction) with the intent to feloniously deprive the owner or possessor of it permanently. Distinguished from petit larceny (q.v.) only by the value of the property stolen.

In England, simple larceny, was originally divided into two sorts,—grand larceny, where the value of the goods stolen was above twelve pence, and petit larceny, where their value was equal to or below that sum. 4 Bl.Comm. 229. The distinction was abolished in England by St. 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 29, and is not generally recognized in the United States, although in a few states there is a statutory offense of grand larceny, one essential element of which is the value of the goods stolen, which value varies.

Larceny by bailee. The crime of larceny committed where any person, being a bailee of any property, shall fraudulently take or convert the same to his own use, or to the use of any other person except the owner thereof, although he shall not break bulk or otherwise determine the bailee.

Larceny by extortion. A person is guilty of theft if he purposely obtains property of another by threatening to: (1) inflict bodily injury on anyone or commit any other criminal offense; or (2) accuse anyone of a criminal offense; or (3) expose any secret tending to subject any person to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or to impair his credit or business repute; or (4) take or withhold action as an official, or cause an official to take or withhold action; or (5) bring about or continue a strike, boycott or other collective unofficial action, if the property is not demanded or received for the benefit of the group in whose interest the actor purports to act; or (6) testify or provide information or withhold testimony or information with respect to another's legal claim or defense; or (7) inflict any other harm which would not benefit the actor. Model Penal Code, § 223.4.

Larceny by fraud or deception. A person is guilty of theft if he purposely obtains property of another by deception. A person deceives if he purposely: (1) creates or reinforces a false impression, including false impressions as to law, value, intention or other state of mind; but deception as to a person's intention from the act alone that he did not subsequently perform the promise; or (2) prevents another from acquiring information which would affect his judgment of a transaction; or (3) fails to correct a false impression which the deceiver previously created or reinforced, or which the deceiver knows to be influencing another to whom he stands in a fiduciary or confidential relationship; or (4) fails to disclose a known lien, adverse claim or other legal impediment to the enjoyment of property which he transfers or encumbers in consideration for the property obtained, whether such impediment is or is not valid, or is or is not a matter of official record. Model Penal Code, § 223.3.

Larceny by trick. See Larceny by fraud or deception, supra.

Larceny from the person. Act of taking property from the person by merely lifting it from the person or pocket. State v. Stanton, Mo., 68 S.W.2d 811, 812. Larceny committed where the property stolen is on the person or in the immediate charge or custody of the person from whom the theft is made, but without such circumstances of force or violence as would constitute robbery, including pocket-picking and such like crimes.

Larceny of auto. See Auto theft.

Larceny of property lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake. A person who comes into control of property of another that he knows to have been lost, mislaid, or delivered under a mistake as to the nature or amount of the property or the identity of the recipient is guilty of theft if, with purpose to deprive the owner thereof, he fails to take reasonable measures to restore the property to a person entitled to have it. Model Penal Code, § 223.5.

Mixed larceny. Otherwise called "compound" or "complicated larceny:" that which is attended with circumstances of aggravation or violence to the person, or taking from a house.

Petit larceny. Larceny of things or goods whose value is below a statutorily set amount (e.g. $100). The value at common law was twelve pence. Compare Grand larceny, supra.

Simple larceny. Felonious or wrongful taking and carrying away of personal goods of another with intent to steal, unattended by acts of violence. Larceny which is not complicated or aggravated with acts of violence. Larceny from the person, or with force and violence, is called "compound" larceny.

Larger parcel. A term used in eminent domain proceedings, signifying that the parcel taken is not a complete parcel but part of a "larger parcel"; the owner, therefore, is entitled to damages from the severance as well as the value of the parcel taken. Unity of ownership, use, and contiguity must be present, although federal courts and some states do not require contiguity where there is a strong unity of use.

Larons /lérən(d)z/. In old English law, thieves.
Lascivious /ləsəˈvɪʃəs/. Tending to excite lust; lewd; indecent; obscene; sexual impurity; tending to deprave the morals in respect to sexual relations; licentious. See Swearingen v. U. S., 161 U.S. 446, 16 S.Ct. 562, 40 L.Ed. 765; People on Complaint of Sumner v. Dial Press, 182 Misc. 416, 48 N.Y.S.2d 480, 481; Dunlop v. U. S., 165 U.S. 456, 17 S.Ct. 375, 41 L.Ed. 799. Conduct which is wanton, lewd, and lustful, and tending to produce voluptuous or lewd emotions. See Lewd; Obscene.

Lascivious cohabitation. The offense committed by two persons (not married to each other) who live together in one habitation as man and wife and practice sexual intercourse. Such offense, where it still exists, is seldom enforced.

Last, n. In old English law, signifies a burden; also a measure of weight used for certain commodities of the bulkier sort.

Last, adj. Latest; ultimate; final; most recent.

Last antecedent rule. A canon of statutory construction that relative or qualifying words or phrases are to be applied to the words or phrases immediately preceding, and as not extending to or including other words, phrases, or clauses more remote, unless such extension or inclusion is clearly required by the intent and meaning of the context, or disclosed by an examination of the entire act.

Last clear chance doctrine. Under the doctrine of last clear chance, as applied in automobile law, a plaintiff may recover from a defendant motorist for injuries or damages suffered, notwithstanding his own contributory negligence, where, as stated in terms of the essential elements of the doctrine, plaintiff was in a place of peril of which he was unaware or from which he was unable to extricate himself, the motorist discovered or had the opportunity to discover plaintiff’s peril, and the motorist had the opportunity to avoid the accident through the exercise of reasonable care. The last clear chance doctrine is not recognized in every jurisdiction and is subject to limitations in others. There are many variant forms and applications of this doctrine in the jurisdictions which apply it.

Doctrine of “last clear chance” imposes upon person duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to another who has negligently put himself in position of peril, and who he can reasonably apprehend is unconscious of or inattentive to peril or unable to avoid imminent harm. Vernon v. Crist, 28 N.C.App. 631, 222 S.E.2d 445, 447. Necessary elements of doctrine of “last clear chance” are: (1) plaintiff was contributorily negligent by placing herself in a position of immediate peril, (2) plaintiff was unable to remove herself from such peril by the exercise of reasonable care, (3) defendant discovered or should have discovered plaintiff’s dangerous situation in time so that by exercising reasonable care defendant could have prevented the accident, (4) defendant failed to exercise any reasonable care, and (5) defendant had the last clear chance to prevent the accident. Shanahan v. Patterson, Colo.App., 539 P.2d 1289, 1290.

Last heir. In English law, he to whom lands come by escheat for want of lawful heirs; that is, in some cases, the lord of whom the lands were held; in others, the sovereign.

Last in, first-out (LIFO). Under the last in, first out method of inventory accounting items of inventory used are priced out at the latest purchase prices of the goods. Inventory value is thus computed by assuming that goods on hand are those remotely purchased and are valued at the successively most remote purchase prices.

A method of identifying and valuing inventories which assumes that last goods purchased are the first ones sold and therefore the goods left in inventory at the end of the year are assumed to be those first purchased. L. S. Ayres & Co. v. U. S., C.A.Ind., 285 F.2d 113, 114. Compare FIFO.

Last resort. A court from which there is no further appeal is called the “court of last resort.”

Last sickness. See Last illness.

Last will. Term used alone or with “and testament” to designate the instrument which ultimately fixes the disposition of real and personal property at death.

Lata culpa /ləˈtə kəlˈpa/. Lat. In the law of bailment, gross fault or neglect; extreme negligence or carelessness (nimia negligentia).

Lata culpa dolo equiparatur /ləˈtə kəlˈpa dəlo lykwpərəˈtjʊər/. Gross negligence is equivalent to fraud.

Latching. An under-ground survey.

Late. Defunct; existing recently, but now dead. Formerly; recently; lately.

Latens /ləˈtɛns//. Lat. Latent; hidden; not apparent. See Ambiguitas.

Latent. Hidden; concealed; dormant; that which does not appear upon the face of a thing; as, a latent ambiguity or defect.

Latent ambiguity. A defect which does not appear on the face of language used or an instrument being considered. It arises when language is clear and intelligible and suggests but a single meaning, but some extrinsic fact or some extraneous evidence creates a necessity for interpretation or a choice between two or more possible meanings. Conkle v. Conkle, 31 Ohio App.2d 44, 285 N.E.2d 883, 887.

That species of uncertainty or ambiguity in an instrument which is not apparent from a reading of it but which is revealed when the terms of the instrument are applied or made operative; e.g. in a bill of lading goods are to be delivered at “Essex Railroad Wharf”, and there are two such wharfs with the same name. Parol evidence is admissible to prove the intention of the party drawing the instrument.

Latent deed. A deed kept for twenty years or more in a strongbox or other secret place.

Latent defect. A hidden or concealed defect. One which could not be discovered by reasonable and customary inspection; one not apparent on face of goods, product, document, etc.
Defect of which owner has no knowledge, or which, in exercise of reasonable care, he should have had no knowledge. Bichl v. Poinier, 71 Wash.2d 492, 429 P.2d 228, 231. A latent defect in the title of a vendor of land is one not discoverable by inspection made with ordinary care, even though a matter of public record.

Latent equity. See Equity.

Lateral railroad. A lateral road is one which proceeds from some point on the main trunk between its terminal. It is but another name for a branch road, both being a part of the main road. An offshoot from main line of railroad. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Anderson, 167 Or. 687, 120 P.2d 578, 588.

Lateral support. The right of lateral and subjacent support is the right to have land supported by the adjoining land or the soil beneath. The right of a landowner to the natural support of his land by adjoining land. The adjoining owner has the duty not to change his land (such as lowering it) so as to cause this support to be weakened or removed.

Laterare /lèdarréry/. To lie sideways, in opposition to lying endways; used in descriptions of lands.

Latifundium /lèdfándiyam/. Lat. In the civil law, great or large possessions; a great or large field; a common. A great estate made up of smaller ones (fundis), which began to be common in the latter times of the empire.

Latifundus /lèdfándas/. A possessor of a large estate made up of smaller ones.

Latin. The language of the ancient Romans. There are three sorts of law Latin: (1) Good Latin, allowed by the grammarians and lawyers; (2) false or incongruous Latin, which in times past would abate original writs, though it would not make void any judicial writ, declaration, or plea, etc.; (3) words of art, known only to the sages of the law, and not to grammarians, called "Lawyers' Latin."

Latinarius /lèdánériya/. An interpreter of Latin.

Latinini juniani /látáynn jùwniýãynn/. Lat. In Roman law, a class of freedmen (libertini) intermediate between the two other classes of freedmen called, respectively, "Cives Romanii" and "Dediticii."

Lattit /lèddat/. In old English practice, a writ which issued in personal actions, on the return of non est inventus to a bill of Middlesox; so called from the emphatic word in its recital, in which it was "testified that the defendant lurks [lattit] and wanders about" in the county. 3 Bl.Comm. 286. Abolished by St. 2, Wm. IV, c. 39.

Lattitatio /lèddátysh(ly)ow/. Lat. In the civil law and old English practice, a lying hid; lurking, or concealment of the person.

Lator /lèdár/. Lat. In the civil law, a bearer; a messenger. Also a maker or giver of laws.

Latro /lètrôw/. Lat. In the civil law and old English law, a robber; a thief.

Latrocination /lètrósnéyshan/. The act of robbing; a depredation.

Latrocinium /lètrósníyam/. The prerogative of adjudging and executing thieves; also larceny; theft; a thing stolen.

Latrociny /lètrósnány/. Larceny.

Laudare /lòðéry/. Lat. In Civil law, to name; to cite or quote; to show one's title or authority.

In Feudal law, to determine or pass upon judicially. Laudamentum, the finding or award of a jury. 2 Bl.Comm. 285.

Laudatio /lòðésh(ly)ow/. Lat. In Roman law, testimony delivered in court concerning an accused person's good behavior and integrity of life. It resembled the practice which prevails in our trials of calling persons to speak to a prisoner's character. The least number of the laudatores among the Romans was ten.

Laudator /lòðéydar/. Lat. An arbitrator; a witness to character.

Laudemium /lòðémlíyám/. Lat. In the civil law, a sum paid by a new emphyteuta (q.v.) who acquires the emphyteusis, not as heir, but as a singular successor, whether by gift, devise, exchange, or sale. It was a sum equal to the fiftieth part of the purchase money, paid to the dominus or proprietor for his acceptance of the new emphyteuta. Called, in old English law, "acknowledgment money."

Laudum /lòdám/. Lat. An arbitration or award.

Laughe. Frank-pledge.

Launch. The act of launching a vessel; the movement of a vessel from the land into the water, especially the sliding on ways from the stocks on which it is built. An open boat of large size used in any service; a lighter.

Laureate /lòhríyat/. In old English law, an officer of the household of the sovereign, whose business formerly consisted only in composing an ode annually, on the sovereign's birthday, and on the new year; sometimes also, though rarely, on occasion of any remarkable victory.

Laurels /lòhrílz/. Pieces of gold, coined in 1619, with the king's head laureated; hence the name. See Jacobus.

Laus Deo /lòðs diyow/. Lat. Praise be to God. An old heading to bills of exchange.

Law. That which is laid down, ordained, or established. A rule or method according to which phenomena or actions co-exist or follow each other. Law, in its generic sense, is a body of rules of action or conduct prescribed by controlling authority, and having binding legal force. United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co. v. Guenther, 281 U.S. 34, 50 S.Ct. 165, 74 L.Ed. 683. That which must be obeyed and followed by citizens subject to sanctions or legal consequences is a law. Law is a solemn expression of the will of the supreme power of the State. Calif. Civil Code, § 22.1.

In old English jurisprudence, "law" is used to signify an oath; or the privilege of being sworn; as in the phrases "to wage one's law," "to lose one's law."
The term is also used in opposition to “fact.” Thus questions of law are to be decided by the court, while it is the province of the jury to resolve questions of fact.

With reference to its origin, "law" is derived either from judicial precedents, from legislation, or from custom.

As to the different kinds of law, or law regarded in its different aspects, see Absolute law; Adjectival law; Administrative law; Arms, law of; Bankruptcy Act; Canon (Canon law); Case law; Citations, law of; Civil law; Commercial law; Common law; Conclusio of law; Conflits of laws; Constitutional law; Criminal law; Custom and usage; Ecclesiastical law; Edict; Enabling statute; Equity; Evidence, law of; Flag, law of; Foreign laws; Forest law; General law; International law; Local law; Maritime law; Maritime law; Marque, law of; Martial law; Mercantile law; Military law; Moral law; Municipal law; Natural law; Oleron, laws of; Ordinance; Organic law; Parliamentary law; Penal laws; Positive law; Private law; Probate; Procedural law; Prospective law; Public law; Remedial laws and statutes; Retrospective law; Revenue law or measure; Road (Law of the road); Roman law; Special law; Staple (Law of the staple); Statute; Substantive law; Unwritten law; War; Written law.

For "facts" and "law" as distinguishable, see Fact. For practice of law, see Practice.

Law arbitrary. Opposed to immutable, a law not founded in the nature of things, but imposed by the mere will of the legislature.

Law court of appeals. An appellate tribunal, formerly existing in the state of South Carolina, for hearing appeals from the courts of law.

Law day. See Day.

Law enforcement officer. Those whose duty it is to preserve the peace. Frazier v. Elmore, 180 Tenn. 232, 173 S.W.2d 563, 565. See also Police officer; sheriff.

Lawful dependents. Term generally associated with allowances or benefits from public (e.g. Social Security benefits) or private funds to those who qualify as dependents and whose dependency is within the terms of the law which govern the distribution. See also Dependent; Legal dependent.

Lawful discharge. Such a discharge in insolvency as exonerates the debtor from his debts; e.g. discharge pursuant to bankruptcy proceeding.

Lawful entry. An entry on real estate, by one out of possession, under claim or color of right and without force or fraud. An entry of premises pursuant to a search warrant. See Ejection; Eviction; Process (Summary process).

Lawful goods. Property which may be legally held, sold, or exported; non-contraband property.

Lawful heirs. See Heirs.

Lawful issue. As used in will the words primarily and generally mean descendants. In re Marsh's Will, 143 Misc. 609, 257 N.Y.S. 514, 521; including descendants more remote than children. In re Woodcock's Will, Sur., 55 N.Y.S.2d 656, 658. At common law, the term includes only those who were children of legally recognized subsisting marriage. In re Sheffer's Will, 139 Misc. 519, 249 N.Y.S. 102, 105. Lawful descendants; lineal descendants by blood; heirs. In re Sheffer's Will, 139 Misc. 519, 249 N.Y.S. 102, 104. See Descendant; Heirs; Issue.

Lawful man. A free man, unattainted, and capable of bearing oath; a legalis homo.

Lawful money. Money which is a legal tender in payment of debts. See Legal tender.

Lawful representatives. Where real property is involved as subject-matter, term "lawful representatives" includes or means legal heirs. Where personal property is involved the term, when not qualified by context, is limited to executors and administrators.

Law latin. The corrupt form of the Latin language employed in the old English lawbooks and legal proceedings.

Lawless. Not subject to law; not controlled by law; not authorized by law; not observing the rules and forms of law.

Law list. A publication compiling the names and addresses of those engaged in the practice of law and information of interest to the legal profession often including the courts, court calendars, lawyers engaged in specialized fields (as admiralty or patent law), public officers, stenographers, handwriting experts, private investigators, or abstracts of law; a legal directory. The "Law Directory", as published by Martindale-Hubbell, is the most comprehensive national listing of attorneys. There are also available listings or directories for the individual states and also for many of the larger cities.

Law of a general nature. One which relates to a subject that may exist throughout the state; one whose subject-matter is common to all the people. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Miami County, 151 Kan. 533, 99 P.2d 828, 829.

Law of arms. See Arms, law of.

Law of capture. Under "law of capture," landowner does not own migratory substances underlying his land, but has exclusive right to drill for, produce, or otherwise gain possession of such substances, subject only to restrictions and regulations pursuant to police power. Frost v. Ponca City, Okl., 541 P.2d 1321, 1323.

Law of citations. See Citations, law of.

Law of evidence. See Evidence, law of.

Law of marque. See Marque, law of.

Law of nations. See International law.

Law of nature. See Natural law.

Law of the case. Term "law of the case," as generally used, designates the principle that if an appellate court has passed on a legal question and remanded the cause to the court below for further proceedings, the legal question thus determined by the appellate court will not be differently determined on a subsequent appeal in the same case where the facts remain the same. Allen v. Michigan Bell Tel. Co., 61 Mich. App. 62, 232 N.W.2d 302, 303. Doctrine of "law of the case" provides that when appellate court has rendered a decision and states in its opinion a rule of law necessary to decision, that rule is to be followed in all subsequent proceedings in the same action. People v. Scott, 16 Cal.3d 242, 128 Cal.Rptr. 39, 44, 546 P.2d 327. Doctrine is that principle under which determination of questions of law will generally be held to govern case throughout all its subsequent stages where such determination has already been made on a prior appeal to a court of last resort. Transport Ins. Co. v. Employers Cas. Co., Tex.Civ. App., 470 S.W.2d 757, 762. The doctrine expresses practice of courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided. White v. Higgins, C.C.A.Mass., 116 F.2d 312, 317, 318; Fleming v. Campbell, 148 Kan. 516, 83 P.2d 708, 709. It expresses the rule that final judgment of highest court is final determination of parties' rights.

Doctrine of "law of the case" is one of policy only and will be disregarded when compelling circumstances call for a redetermination of the determination of point of law on prior appeal, and this is particularly true where intervening or contemporaneous change in law has occurred by here ruling former decisions or establishment of new precedent by controlling authority. Ryan v. Mike-Ron Corp., Cal. App., 63 Cal.Rptr. 601, 605. Doctrine is merely a rule of procedure and does not go to the power of the court, and will not be adhered to where its application will result in an unjust decision. People v. Medina, Cal., 99 Cal.Rptr. 630, 635, 492 P.2d 686.

Instructions. It has been held that instructions are the "law of the case" where appealing defendant accepted instructions as correct. Atina Life Ins. Co. v. McAdoo, C.C.A.Ark., 115 F.2d 369, 370; where such were approved on former appeal and given at second trial, Whitehead v. Stith, 279 Ky. 556, 131 S.W.2d 455, 460; where instructions were not challenged in any manner or in any particular, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Stone, C.C.A.Mass., 80 F.2d 614, 616; Codd v. New York Underwriters Ins. Co., 19 Wash.2d 671, 144 P.2d 234, 237; where no objections or exceptions taken, Miller v. Mohr, 198 Wash. 619, 89 P.2d 807, 814; Chancellor v. Hines Motor Supply Co., 104 Mont. 603, 69 P.2d 764, 769.

Law of the flag. See Flag, law of.

Law of the land. Due process of law (q.v.). By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. Dupuy v. Tedora, 204 La. 560, 15 So.2d 886, 891. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of general rules which govern society. See Due process of law.

Law of the road. See Road (Law of the road).

Law questions. Issues or questions in a case which do not require findings of fact but are addressed to the judge for application of the law. In those instances wherein the law depends on the facts, the factual questions are first decided and then the law is applied to the facts as found by the judge or jury.

Law reporters or reports. Published volumes containing the decisions and opinions of state and federal courts; e.g. National Reporter System. Commonly such decisions are first published in advance sheets and thereafter in bound reports or reporter volumes. Law reports or reporters may be either official (published by the state or federal government) or unofficial (published by private publisher).

Law review. A publication of most law schools containing lead articles on topical subjects by law professors, judges or attorneys, and case summaries by law review member-students. Normally only honor or top law students are members of the law review staff.

Laws. Rules promulgated by government as a means to an ordered society. Strictly speaking, session laws or statutes and not decisions of court; though in common usage refers to both legislative and court made law, as well as to administrative rules, regulations and ordinances. See also Law.

person holding a spiritual appropriation.

Laying foundation. In law of evidence, the practice or requirement of introducing evidence of things necessary to make further evidence relevant, material or competent; e.g. the hypothetical question propounded before an expert is permitted to render his opinion.

Laying the venue. Stating in the complaint or declaration the district or county in which the plaintiff proposes that the trial of the action shall take place.

Lay investiture. In Ecclesiastical law, the ceremony of putting a bishop in possession of the temporalities of his diocese.

Lay judge. A judge who is not learned in the law, i.e., not a lawyer; employed in some of the states as assessors or assistants to the presiding judges in the nisi prius courts or courts of first instance. Many justices of the peace are, or were, not lawyers.

Layman. One of the people, and not one of the clergy; one who is not of a particular profession (i.e. non-lawyer).

Layoff. A termination of employment at the will of employer. Such may be temporary (e.g. caused by L.C. An abbreviation which may stand either for "Lord Chancellor," "Lower Canada," or "Leading Cases."

LEAA. Law Enforcement Assistance Act.

Lead counsel. The counsel on either side of a litigated action who is charged with the principal management and direction of the party's case, as distinguished from his juniors or subordinates, is said to "lead in the cause," and is termed the "leading counsel" on that side. May also refer to chief or primary attorney in class action or multi-district litigation.

Leading a use. In common law, where a deed was executed before the levy of a fine of land, for the purpose of specifying to whose use the fine should inure, it was said to "lead" the use. If executed after the fine, it was said to "declare" the use. 2 Bl.Comm.
LEADING CASE

Leading case. Among the various cases that are argued and determined in the courts, some, from their important character, have demanded more than usual attention from the judges, and from this circumstance are frequently looked upon as having settled or determined the law upon all points involved in such cases, and as guides for subsequent decisions, and from the importance they thus acquire are familiarly termed "leading cases."

Leading object rule. If the leading object or main purpose of a person's promise to answer for the debt of another is the promisor's own benefit, such promise need not be in writing as required by the statute of frauds; sometimes known as the "main purpose" doctrine.

Leading question. One which instructs witness how to answer or puts into his mouth words to be echoed back, People v. Hamilton, Gen.Sess., 30 N.Y.2d 155, 158; one which suggests to witness answer desired. Little v. State, 79 Okl.Cr. 285, 154 P.2d 772, 777; State v. Scott, 20 Wash.2d 696, 149 P.2d 152, 153, 154; Landers v. State, 118 Tex.Cr.R. 508, 39 S.W.2d 43, 44.

Leading questions should not be used on the direct examination of a witness except as may be necessary to develop his testimony. Ordinarily leading questions should be permitted on cross-examination. When a party calls a hostile witness, an adverse party, or a witness identified with an adverse party, interrogation may be by leading questions. Fed. Evid.R. 611(c).

Contract for exclusive possession of lands or tenements for determinate period. Contract for possession and profits of lands and tenements either for life, or for certain period of time, or during the pleasure of the parties. Intermountain Realty Co. v. Allen, 60 Idaho 228, 90 P.2d 704, 706. Conveyance, grant or devise of realty for designated period with reversion to grantor. Conveyance of interest in real or personal property for specified period or at will. Conveyance or grant of estate in real property for limited term with conditions attached. State ex rel. St. Louis County v. Evans, 346 Mo. 209, 139 S.W.2d 967, 969; Holcombe v. Lorino, 124 Tex. 446, 79 S.W.2d 307, 310. Conveyance, usually in consideration of rent or other recompense, for life, years, or at will, Smith v. Royal Ins. Co., C.C.A.Cal., 111 F.2d 667, 671; Clark v. Harry, 182 Va. 410, 29 S.E.2d 231, 233; but always for a less time than lessor has in the premises. Leonard v. Autocar Sales & Service Co., 325 Ill.App. 375, 60 N.E.2d 457, 462.

When used with reference to tangible personal property, word "lease" means a contract by which one owning such property grants to another the right to possess, use and enjoy it for specified period of time in exchange for periodic payment of a stipulated price, referred to as rent. Undercoffer v. Whiteway Neon Ad, Inc., 114 Ga.App. 644, 152 S.E.2d 616, 618.

The Federal Consumer Leasing Act provides for certain disclosure requirements in consumer leases. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1667 et seq. In addition, certain states require that consumer (e.g. residential leases) be written in "plain language." See McKinney's (N.Y.) Consol.Laws, Gen Obl., § 5–702.

The person who conveys is termed the "lessor," and the person to whom conveyed, the "lessee;", and when the lessor conveys lands or tenements to a lessee, he is said to lease, demise, or let them. The word when used as verb, means to transfer for term specified therein from lessor to lessee property therein demised, also to let, to farm out, to rent.

See also Assignable lease; Building lease; Community lease; Demise; Graduated lease; Ground lease; Mining lease; Net lease; Percentage lease; Sale and leaseback; Sandwich lease; Under lease. For "Expiration of lease," see Extension.

Concurrent lease. One granted for a term which is to commence before the expiration or other determination of a previous lease of the same premises made to another person; or, in other words, an assignment of a part of the reversion, entitling the lessee to all the rents accruing on the previous lease after the date of his lease and to appropriate remedies against the holding tenant.

Gross lease. Lease in which lessee pays a flat sum for rent out of which the lessor is required to pay all expenses such as taxes, water, utilities, insurance, etc.

Lease and release. A species of conveyance much used in England, said to have been invented by Ser-Jeant Moore, soon after the enactment of the Statute of Uses. It is thus contrived: A lease, or rather bargain and sale upon some pecuniary consideration for one year, is made by the tenant of the freehold to the lessee or bargainee. This, without any enrolment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bargainee, and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for one year, and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. Being thus in possession, he is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion, which must be made to the tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a release is granted to him. The lease and release, when used as a conveyance of the fee, have the joint operation of a single conveyance. 2 Bl.Comm. 339. By the Law of Property Act of 1925 all lands and all interests therein now lie in grant only.

Long term lease. See Ground rent.

Master lease. A lease controlling subsequent leases.

Mineral lease. Lease in which the lessee acquires the right to work a mine of oil or gas, etc. The rent is commonly based on the amount or value of the mineral withdrawn.

Mining lease. See Mining.

Month to month lease. Tenancy where no lease is involved, rent being paid monthly. Statutes often require one month's notice to landlord of intent to terminate such tenancy.

Net lease. Lease which requires the tenant to pay, in addition to rent, the expenses of the leased property, e.g. taxes, insurance, maintenance, etc.

Net-net-net lease. Lease in which the lessee pays all the expenses including mortgage interest and amortization leaving the lessor with an amount free of all claims.

Parol lease. A lease of real estate not evidenced by writing, but resting in an oral agreement.

Percentage lease. A percentage lease is one in which the amount of rent is based upon a percentage of the gross or net profits of the lessee's business, or of his gross sales, with a stipulated minimum rent. Such leases are mainly used where location of the property is an important part of its value (e.g. in shopping center).

Perpetual lease. A lease of lands which may last without limitation as to time; a grant of lands in fee with the reservation of a rent in free; a fee-farm.

Sublease, or underlease. One executed by the lessee of an estate to a third person, conveying the same estate for a shorter term than that for which the lessee holds it.

Leaseback. Transaction whereby transferor sells property and later leases it back. In a sale-leaseback situation, for example, R would sell property to S and subsequently lease such property from S. Thus, R becomes the lessee and S the lessor.

Leasehold. An estate in realty held under a lease. The four principal types of leasehold estates are the estate for years, periodic tenancy, tenancy at will, and tenancy at sufferance. The asset representing the right of the lessee to use leased property.

Leasehold improvements. Improvements made by lessee. The term is used in condemnation proceedings to determine the portion of the award to which the lessee is entitled.

Leasehold interest. The interest which the lessee has in the value of the lease itself in condemnation award determination. The difference between the total remaining rent under the lease, and the rent lessee would currently pay for similar space for the same time period. See also Leasehold value; No bonus clause.

Leasehold mortgage. See Mortgage.

Leasehold mortgage bond. See Bond.

Leasehold value. The value of a leasehold interest. Usually applied to a long term lease when market rental for similar space is higher than rent paid under the lease. Some states allow the lessee to claim the leasehold value against the landlord in eminent domain proceedings, unless specifically prohibited by the lease itself. Other states, by statute, do not allow for such a claim. See also No bonus clause.

Lease with option to purchase. A lease under which the lessee has the right to purchase the property. The price and terms of the purchase must be set forth for the option to be valid. The option may run for the length of the lease period.

Leaute /lakw疡t/. L. Fr. Legality; sufficiency in law.

Leave, v. To give. To allow or cause to remain; to let remain, unmoved or undone; to refrain from or neglect taking, doing, or changing; to let stay or continue; to let be without interference; to suffer to remain subject to another's action, control, or the like; to suffer to be undisturbed in action. To give or dispose of by will; to bequeath or devise. To put, place, deposit, deliver, or the like.

Leave, n. Permission or authorization to do something.

Willful departure with intent to remain away, and not temporary absence with intention of returning. See also Desertion.

Leave and license. A defense to an action in trespass setting up the consent of the plaintiff to the trespass complained of.

Leave no issue. Not survived by a child or children or their descendants. A spouse of a deceased child is not “issue” (q.v.). In re Vigil’s Estate, 38 N.M. 383, 34 P.2d 667, 668.

Leave of absence. Temporary absence from employment or duty with intention to return during which time remuneration and seniority may or may not be suspended. State ex rel. McLaughley v. Grayston, 349 Mo. 700, 163 S.W.2d 335, 341. See also Furlough; Sick leave.

Leave of court. Permission obtained from a court to take some action which, without such permission, would not be allowable; as, to receive an extension of time to answer complaint. Fed.R.Civ P. 6.

Leccator /laёktər/. A debauched person.
LECHERWITE

Lecherwite, lairwite, or legerwite /lêcharwäyt/ /lêrwarwäyt/. At common law, a fine for adultery or fornication, anciently paid to the lords of certain manors.

Le contrat fait la loi /la kontrə fé y la lwa/. The contract makes the law.

Ledger /lêjar/. A book of accounts in which a merchant records transactions; there being two parallel columns in each account, one for the entries to the debit of the person charged, the other for his credits. Into this book are posted the items from the books of original entry or journals. A “ledger” is the principal book of accounts of a business establishment in which all the transactions of each day are entered under appropriate heads so as to show at a glance the debits and credits of each account. Foothill Ditch Co. v. Wallace Ranch Water Co., 25 Cal.App.2d 555, 78 P.2d 215, 220.

Ledo /lîdôw/. The rising water or increase of the sea.

Lee. In English law, the name of a court of criminal jurisdiction, formerly of much importance, but latterly fallen into disuse. See Court-Leet.

Left. To let remain or have remaining at death; to transmit, bequeath or give by will. Grimes v. Crouch, 175 Va. 126, 7 S.E.2d 118, 117. See also Bequest; Devise; Leave; Legacy.

Legabills /lægəbləs/. In old English law, that which may be bequeathed.

Legacy. A disposition of personality by will. A bequest.

In a technical sense and strictly construed, “legacy” is a gift or bequest by will of personal property, whereas a “devise” is a testamentary disposition of real estate, but such distinction will not be permitted to defeat the intent of a testator, and such terms may be construed interchangeably or applied indifferently to either personality or real estate if the context of the will shows that such was the intention of the testator. Festrarazi v. First Nat. Bank of Mobile, 288 Ala. 645, 264 So.2d 496, 505.

See also Ademption; Bequest; Cumulative legacies; Devise; Legatee; Vested legacy.

Absolute legacy. One given without condition and intended to vest immediately.

Accumulative legacy. A second, double, or addition-al legacy; a legacy given in addition to another given by the same instrument, or by another instrument.

Additional legacy. One given to the same legatee in addition to (and not in lieu of) another legacy given before by the same will or in a codicil thereto.

Alternate legacy. One by which the testator gives one of two or more things without designating which.

Conditional legacy. One which is liable to take effect or to be defeated according to the occurrence or non-occurrence of some uncertain event.

Contingent legacy. A legacy given to a person at a future uncertain time, that may or may not arrive; as “at his age of twenty-one,” or “if” or “when he attains twenty-one.” A legacy made dependent upon some uncertain event. A legacy which has not vested.

Cumulative legacies. These are legacies so called to distinguish them from legacies which are merely repeated. In the construction of testamentary instruments, the question often arises whether, where a testator has twice bequeathed a legacy to the same person, the legatee is entitled to both, or only to one of them; in other words, whether the second legacy must be considered as a mere repetition of the first, or as cumulative, i.e., additional. In determining this question, the intention of the testator, if it appears on the face of the instrument, prevails.

Demonstrative legacy. A bequest of a certain sum of money, with a direction that it shall be paid out of a particular fund. It differs from a specific legacy in this respect: that, if the fund out of which it is payable fails for any cause, it is nevertheless entitled to come on the estate as a general legacy. And it differs from a general legacy in this: that it does not abate in that class, but in the class of specific legacies. Kenaday v. Sinnott, 179 U.S. 606, 21 S.Ct. 233, 45 L.Ed. 339. A bequest of a certain sum of money, stock, or other property, payable out of a particular fund of property or security, but it can neither amount to a gift of the corpus nor serve the purpose of releasing the estate from liability in event particular fund or property should fail. In re Jeffcott’s Estate, Fla.App., 186 So.2d 80, 83. A legacy of quantity is ordinarily a general legacy; but there are legacies of quantity in the nature of specific legacies, as of so much money, with reference to a particular fund for payment. This kind of legacy is called by the civilians a “demonstrative legacy,” and it is so far general and differs so much in effect from one properly specific that, if the fund be called in or fail, the legatee will not be deprived of his legacy, but be permitted to receive it out of the general assets; yet the legacy is so far specific that it will not be liable to abate, with general legacies upon a deficiency of assets.

General legacy. A pecuniary legacy, payable out of the general assets of a testator. One so given as not to amount to a bequest of a particular thing or particular money of the testator, distinguished from others of the same kind; one of quantity merely, not specific.

Indefinite legacy. One which passes property by a general or collective term, without enumeration of number or quantity; as, a bequest of “all” the testator’s “goods,” or his “bank stock.”

Lapsed legacy. Where the legatee dies before the testator, or before the legacy is payable, the bequest is said to lapse. Such legacy then falls into residue unless there is an anti-lapse statute in which case the legacy passes to the issue of the legatee. See Lapse statutes.

Modal legacy. A bequest accompanied by directions as to the mode or manner in which it shall be applied for the legatee’s benefit, e.g., a legacy to A. to buy him a house.
Pecuniary legacy. A bequest of a sum of money, or of an annuity. It may or may not specify the fund from which it is to be drawn. It is none the less a pecuniary legacy if it comprises the specific pieces of money in a designated receptacle, as a purse or chest.

Residuary legacy. A bequest of all the testator's personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of by his will. A bequest of "all the rest, residue, and remainder" of the personal property after payment of debts and satisfaction of the particular legacies. Legacy containing assets after other legacies and estate debts and costs of administration have been paid. Alston v. U. S., C.A.Ga., 349 F.2d 87, 89.

Special legacy. A "specific legacy" (q.v.) is sometimes so called.

Specific legacy. One which operates on property particularly designated. A legacy or gift by will of a particular specified thing, as of a horse, a piece of furniture, a term of years, and the like. In a strict sense, a legacy of a particular chattel, which is specified and distinguished from all other chattels of the testator of the same kind; as of a horse of a certain color. A legacy of a quantity of chattels described collectively; as a gift of all the testator's pictures. A legacy is specific, when it is limited to a particular thing, subject, or chose in action, so identified as to render the bequest inapplicable to any other; as the bequest of a horse, a picture, or jewel, or a debt due from a person named, and, in special cases, even of a sum of money.

Trust legacy. A bequest of personal property to trustees to be held upon trust; as, to pay the annual income to a beneficiary for life.

Universal legacy. In the civil law, a testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or several persons the whole of the property which he leaves at his decease.

Void legacy. Term formerly used to describe legacy given to one who died before execution of will. Now, such legacy is considered a lapsed legacy and is treated as such. See Legacy (Lapsed legacy).

Legacy duty. A duty formerly imposed in England upon personal property (other than leaseholds) devolving under any will or intestacy.

Legacy or succession tax. An excise on privilege of taking property by will or inheritance or by succession on death of owner. In re Rosing's Estate, 337 Mo., 544, 85 S.W.2d 495, 496; State Tax Commission v. Backman, 88 Utah 424, 55 P.2d 171, 174. See also Inheritance tax.

Legal. 1. Conforming to the law; according to law; required or permitted by law; not forbidden or discountenanced by law; good and effectual in law. Freeman v. Fowler Packing Co., 135 Kan. 378, 11 P.2d 278, 277. See Lawful; Valid.

2. Proper or sufficient to be recognized by the law; cognizable in the courts; competent or adequate to fulfill the requirements of the law.

3. Cognizable in courts of law, as distinguished from courts of equity; construed or governed by the rules and principles of law, in contrast distinction to rules of equity. With the merger in most states of law and equity courts, this distinction generally no longer exists. Rule of Civil Proc. 2.

4. Posited by the courts as the inference or imputation of the law, as a matter of construction, rather than established by actual proof; e.g., legal malice.

5. Created by law.

As to legal Consideration; Damages; Day; Debt; Defense; Demand; Disability; Discretion; Estate; Incapacity; Irregularity; Memory; Mortgage; Process; Relevancy; Remedy; Reversion, and Tender, see those titles.

Legal acumen /lɪˈlɛɡəl əˈkwərn/ The doctrine of legal acumen is that if a defect in, or invalidity of, a claim to land is such as to require legal acumen to discover it, whether it appears upon the face of the record or proceedings, or is to be proved alibi, then the powers or jurisdiction of a court of equity may be invoked to remove the cloud created by such defect or invalidity.

Legal age. The age at which the person acquires full capacity to make his own contracts and deeds and transact business generally (age of majority) or to enter into some particular contract or relation, as the "legal age of consent" to marriage. The age at which a person may enter into binding contracts or commit other legal acts. In most states a minor reaches legal age or majority (i.e., becomes of age) at age 18; though for certain acts (e.g., drinking) it may be higher, and for others (e.g., driving) it may be lower. See also Capacity; Majority.

Legal aid. Country-wide system administered locally by which legal services are rendered to those in financial need and who cannot afford private counsel. See Counsel, right to; Legal Services Corporation; Public defender.

Legal assets. That portion of the assets of a deceased party which by law is directly liable, in the hands of his executor or administrator, to the payment of debts and legacies. Such assets can be reached in the hands of an executor or administrator, by a suit at law against him.

Legal brief. Document containing brief statement of facts of case, issues and arguments; used most commonly on appeal, but also used at trial level (trial brief) when requested by trial judge. Content of appellate briefs is usually governed by court rules; e.g., Fed.R.App.P. 28–32. See also Brief.

Legal capacity to sue. Right to come into court. MacAffer v. Boston & M.R.R., 242 App.Div. 140, 273 N.Y.S. 679; American Home Benefit Ass'n v. United American Benefit Ass'n, 63 Idaho 754, 125 P.2d 1010, 1016. It is not necessary in pleadings to aver the capacity of a party to sue or be sued, except to the extent required to show the jurisdiction of the court. A party desiring to raise the issue of lack of capacity shall do so by specific negative averment. Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(a). See also Capacity; Standing to sue doctrine.

Legal capital. Par or stated value of issued capital stock. The amount of contributed capital that, according to state law, must remain permanently in the firm as protection for creditors. Property sufficient to balance capital stock liability. Crocker v. Waltham Watch Co., 315 Mass. 397, 53 N.E.2d 230, 238.
Legal cause. Proximate cause (q.v.). Substantial factor in bringing about harm. Krauss v. Greenberg, C.C.A.Pa., 137 F.2d 569, 572; Giles v. Moundridge Milling Co., 351 Mo. 568, 173 S.W.2d 745, 750. In conflicts, denotes fact that the manner in which the actor’s tortious conduct has resulted in another’s injury is such that the law holds the actor responsible unless there is some defense to liability. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 160, Comment a.

The words “legal cause” are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the fact that the causal sequence by which the actor’s tortious conduct has resulted in an invasion of some legally protected interest of another is such that the law holds the actor responsible for such harm unless there is some defense to liability. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 9.

See also Cause.

Legal conclusion. A statement of legal duty without stating fact from which duty arises. Burton-Lingo Co. v. Morton, Tex.Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 727, 733. A particular statement which would be considered a statement of fact in everyday conversation might, nevertheless, be considered a “legal conclusion” when used in connection with a legal proceeding if the truth of the fact stated is one of the ultimate issues to be determined in such proceeding. Cortner v. National Cash Register Co., 25 Ohio Misc. 156, 262 N.E.2d 586, 588.

Legal cruelty. Such as will warrant the granting of a divorce to the injured party, as distinguished from such kinds or degrees of cruelty as do not. Such conduct on the part of a spouse as will endanger the life, person, or health (bodily or mental) of his or her spouse, or create a reasonable apprehension of bodily or mental hurt; such acts as render cohabitation unsafe, or are likely to be attended with injury to the person or to the health of the spouse. See also Cruelty; Mental cruelty.

Legal custody. Restraint of or responsibility for a person according to law, such as a guardian’s authority over the person or property, or both, of his ward. See also Commitment; Custody; Guardian; Ward.

Legal death. See Brain death; Civil death.

Legal dependent. Dependent according to law. The term imports right to invoke aid of law to require support. See Dependent; Lawful dependents; Support; Ward.

Legal description. A description of real property by government survey, metes and bounds, or lot numbers of a recorded plat including a description of any portion thereof subject to an easement or reservation, if any. Such must be complete enough that a particular parcel of land can be located and identified. See Land boundaries; Metes and bounds.

Legal detriment. Legal detriment to promisee means that promisee changed his legal position, or assumed duties or liabilities not theretofore imposed on him on reliance of actions of promisor. State ex rel. Kansas City v. State Highway Commission, 349 Mo. 865, 163 S.W.2d 948, 953. Term refers to giving up something which immediately prior thereto the promisee was privileged to retain, or doing or refraining from doing something which he was then privileged not to do, or not to refrain from doing. See also Consideration; Detriment.

Legal discretion. See Discretion.

Legal distributees. As used in will, term is construed to mean persons who would be entitled to take under the law.

Legal duty. An obligation arising from contract of the parties or the operation of the law; e.g. legal duty of husband to support wife and children. Ferrell v. Hass, 136 Ga.App. 274, 220 S.E.2d 771, 773. That which the law requires to be done or forbidden to a determinate person or the public at large, correlative to a vested and coextensive right in such person or the public, and the breach of which constitutes negligence. See also Legal obligation; Support.

Legal entity. Legal existence. An entity, other than a natural person, who has sufficient existence in legal contemplation that it can function legally, be sued or sue and make decisions through agents as in the case of corporations.

Legal estoppel. Estoppel by deed or record, as distinguished from estoppel by matter in pais. It excludes evidence of the truth and the equity of the particular case to support a strict rule of law on grounds of public policy. See also Estoppel.

Legal ethics. Usages and customs among members of the legal profession, involving their moral and professional duties toward one another, toward clients, and toward the courts. That branch of moral science which treats of the duties which a member of the legal profession owes to the public, to the court, to his professional brethren, and to his client. Most states have adopted the Code of Professional Responsibility of the American Bar Association. See also Canon.

Legal evidence. A broad general term meaning all admissible evidence, including both oral and documentary, but with a further implication that it must be of such a character as tends reasonably and substantially to prove the point, not to raise a mere suspicion or conjecture. See also Evidence; Relevant evidence.

Legal excuse. Doctrine by which one seeks to avoid the consequences of his own conduct by showing justification for acts which would otherwise be considered negligent or criminal; e.g. killing of another in self defense. Gibbs v. Wilmeth, 261 Iowa 1015, 157 N.W.2d 93, 96. See also Excusable; Justification; Legal impossibility.

Legal fiction. Assumption of fact made by court as basis for deciding a legal question. A situation contrived by the law to permit a court to dispose of a matter, though it need not be created improperly; e.g. fiction of lost grant as basis for title by adverse possession.

Legal fraud. Contracts or acts as, though not originating in actual evil design to perpetrate fraud, yet by their tendency to mislead others or to violate confidence, are prohibited by law. Ruedy v. Toledo Factories Co., 61 Ohio App. 21, 22 N.E.2d 293, 297, 15 O.O.
56. Breach of duty which has tendency to deceive others and operates to their injury, even though there be no vicious intent. Charleroi Lumber Co. v. School Dist. of Borough of Bentleyville, 334 Pa. 424, 6 A.2d 88, 91. Misrepresentation of a material fact made wilfully to deceive, or recklessly without knowledge, and acted on by the opposite party to his damages constitutes "legal fraud." Coffey v. Wingerer, 156 Ind.App. 233, 296 N.E.2d 154, 160.

The legal or practical effect of a day being a "legal holiday" varies from state to state. A "holiday" may in some states be a day on which service of process is invalid, on which all or only some businesses are closed, on which state offices may or may not be closed. The statutes should be consulted in individual cases, as well as local custom, to determine if a "holiday" affects some particular contemplated action. See also Holiday.

Legal impossibility. Defense of "legal impossibility" may be established only where a defendant's actions, if fully performed would not constitute a crime, while "factual impossibility" can serve as a defense only where circumstances unknown to the actor prevent his commission of an offense. U. S. v. Johnston, C.A.Ark., 543 F.2d 55, 58. As defense to criminal charge, occurs when actions which defendant performs, or sets in motion, even if fully carried out as he desires, would not constitute crime. U. S. v. Conway, C.A.Tex., 507 F.2d 1047, 1050. See also Impossibility.

Legal insanity. See Insanity.

Legal interest. That rate of interest prescribed by law as the highest which may be lawfully contracted for or exacted. Term may also be used to distinguish interest in property or in claim cognizable at law in contrast to equitable interest. See also Legal owner; Usury.

Legal investments. Those investments sometimes called "legal lists" in which banks and other financial institutions may invest. State statutes often provide that trust funds be invested only in high grade, "legal list," securities. See also Legal list; Prudent Man Rule.

Legalis homo /lagéýlas hównwov/. Lat. A lawful man; a person who stands rectus in curia; a person not outlawed, excommunicated, or infamous. It occurs in the phrase, "probi et legales homines" (good and lawful men, competent jurors), and "legality" designates the condition of such a man.

Legal issue. When used in will and unexplained by context, means descendants. In proper context, may refer to legal question which is at the foundation of a case and which requires decision by court. See Issue; Legal heirs.

Legality, or legalness. Lawfulness.

Legalization. The act of legalizing or making legal or lawful.

Legalize. To make legal or lawful. Wight v. New Jersey Racing Commission, 128 N.J.L. 517, 26 A.2d 709, 712. To confirm or validate what was before void or unlawful. To add the sanction and authority of law to that which before was without or against law. See also Legitimate, v.

Legalized nuisance. A structure, erection, or other thing which would constitute a nuisance at common law, but which cannot be objected to by private persons because constructed or maintained under direct and sufficient legislative authority. Such, for example, are hospitals or recreational areas maintained by cities.

Legal jeopardy. A person is in "legal jeopardy" when he is put upon trial before a court of competent jurisdiction upon an indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been "charged with his delinquency," and a jury is thus charged when they have been impaneled and sworn. State v. Whitman, 93 Utah 557, 74 P.2d 696, 697. See also Jeopardy.

Legal liability. A liability which courts recognize and enforce as between parties litigant. See also Legally liable; Liability; Strict liability.

Legal life estate. Interest in real or personal property for the life of the holder and enforceable at law in contrast to equitable life estate.

Legal list. A list of investments selected by various states in which certain institutions and fiduciaries, such as insurance companies and banks, may invest. Legal lists are often restricted to high quality securities meeting certain specifications. See also Legal investments; Prudent Man Rule.

Legally. Lawfully; according to law.

Legally adopted. Adopted in accordance with laws of state.
LEGALLY COMMITTED

Legally committed. Refers to accused who has been committed by magistrate who has jurisdiction to hold examination and who has actually heard evidence and determined probable cause exists for holding defendant. People v. Dal Porto, 17 Cal.App.2d 755, 63 P.2d 1199, 1200. See also Commitment.

Legally competent. Words "legally competent" in statute prescribing qualifications of executor mean fit or qualified to act according to judicial standards essential to proper course of justice. In re Haefele's Estate, 145 Neb. 809, 18 N.W.2d 228, 231. See also Capacity.

Legally constituted court. One known to and recognized by law. See Constitutional court.

Legally sufficient evidence. Competent, pertinent evidence coming from a legal source. Evidence is "legally sufficient to sustain finding", if supported by substantial evidence, and record as whole does not clearly, convincingly, or even, possibly, indisputably require contrary conclusion. Tracey v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.6, 53 F.2d 575, 579. See Evidence; Relevant evidence.

Legally using automobile. See Legally operating automobile, supra.

Legal malice. Such consists of either an express intent to kill or inflict great bodily harm, or of a wickedness of disposition, hardness of heart, cruelty, recklessness of consequences and a mind regardless of social duty which indicates an unjustified disregard for the likelihood of death or great bodily harm and an extreme indifference to the value of human life. Cmwlth. v. Coleman, 485 Pa. 508, 318 A.2d 716, 717.

Legal malpractice. See Malpractice.

Legal name. Under common law consists of one Christian name and one surname, and the insertion, omission, or mistake in middle name or initial is immaterial. The "legal name" of an individual consists of a given or baptismal name, usually assumed at birth, and a surname deriving from the common name of the parents. Application of Green, 54 Misc.2d 606, 283 N.Y.S.2d 242, 245.

Legal negligence. Negligence per se; the omission of such care as ordinarily prudent persons exercise and deem adequate to the circumstances of the case. In cases where the common experience of mankind and the common judgment of prudent persons have recognized that to do or omit certain acts is productive of danger, the doing or omission of them is "legal negligence." Failure to perform duty law imposes on one person for benefit of another. See also Strict liability.

Legal newspaper. Newspapers published nationally and in major cities containing summaries of important court decisions, recently enacted or pending legislation or regulatory changes, and, locally, notices of bankruptcy, probate, foreclosure, divorce, etc. proceedings, and also news of general interest to the legal profession.

Legal notice. Such notice as is adequate in point of law; notice as the law requires to be given for the specific purpose or in the particular case. Such legal notice is typically required to be published a specified number of times in a legal and/or general circulation newspaper; may also be required to be posted in designated area in court house. See also Notice.

Legal obligation. A legal obligation against state is an obligation which would form basis of judgment against state in court of competent jurisdiction should Legislature permit state to be sued. Fort Worth Cavalry Club, Inc. v. Sheppard, 125 Tex. 339, 83 S.W.2d 660, 663. In its broadest sense, any duty imposed by law; e.g. duty of parent to support children. See also Legal duty; Support.

Legal owner. The term has come to be used in technical contrast to the equitable owner, and not as opposed to an illegal owner. The legal owner has title to the property, although the title may actually carry no rights to the property other than a lien.

Legal personal representative. Generally, when applied by testator to personality, signifies "executors and administrators" and when applied to reality those whom law casts real estate immediately upon death of ancestor. Hogate v. Hogate, 132 N.J.L. 480, 28 A.2d 769, 771. As respects delivery of deposit on behalf of deceased seaman, means the public administrator, or executor or administrator appointed in state where seaman resided. See Legal representative.
Legal possessor. One who, but for the reservation of a strict legal title in conditional vendor, or the giving of a strict legal title in a conditional vendor, or the giving of a strict legal title to a chattel mortgagee, would have the status of a full and unqualified owner. One who has the legal right to possession of property as contrasted with the owner of such property who has legal title. See Legal owner.

Legal prejudice. Legal prejudice which will defeat plaintiff's motion to dismiss is such as deprives defendant of substantive rights of property, or concerns his defense, which will not be available or may be endangered in a second suit. General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Baker, 161 Misc. 238, 291 N.Y.S. 1015.

Legal presumption. For "presumption of law," see Presumption.

Legal privity. "Legal privity", within rule that defense of usury is personal to debtor and those in legal privity with him, means those upon whom title or interest is cast by law. An agent and his principal are in legal privity to each other. See also Privity.

Legal proceedings. Term includes all proceedings authorized or sanctioned by law, and brought or instituted in a court or legal tribunal, for the acquiring of a right or the enforcement of a remedy.

Legal rate of Interest. See Legal interest; Usury.

Legal representative. The term in its broadest sense, means one who stands in place of, and represents the interests of, another. A person who oversees the legal affairs of another. Examples include the executor or administrator of an estate and a court appointed guardian of a minor or incompetent person.

Term "legal representative," which is almost always held to be synonymous with term "personal representative," means, in accident cases, member of family entitled to benefits under wrongful death statute. Unsatified Claim and Judgment Fund v. Hamilton, 256 Md. 56, 259 A.2d 303, 306.

Legal rescission. Rescission by act of parties. Aron v. Mid-Continent Co., 141 Neb. 606, 4 N.W.2d 894, 886. See also Rescind; Reclusion of contract; Void; Voidable.

Legal reserve. Liquid assets which life insurance companies are required by statute to set aside and maintain to assure payment of claims and benefits. Lubin v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., 326 Ill.App. 358, 61 N.E.2d 733, 754; Old Surety Life Ins. Co. of Alva, Okl., v. Morrow, 195 Okl. 442, 158 P.2d 715, 717. In banking, that amount of percentage of bank deposits which must by law be maintained in cash or equally liquid assets to meet the demands of depositors.

Legal residence. The place of domicile or permanent abode, as distinguished from temporary residence. Permanent fixed place of abode which person intends to be his residence and to which he intends to return despite temporary residences elsewhere or despite temporary absences. U. S. v. Calhoun, C.A.Fla., 566 F.2d 969, 973. Place recognized by law as residence of person. See also Domicile; Residence.

Legal right. Natural rights, rights existing as result of contract, and rights created or recognized by law. Fine v. Pratt, Tex.Civ.App., 150 S.W.2d 308, 311.

Legal separation. A court order arranging the terms (custody, support, etc.) under which a married couple will live separately. See also Separation of spouses.

Legal Services Corporation. The Legal Services Corporation was established by the Legal Services Corporation Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C.A. § 2996) to provide financial support for legal assistance in noncriminal proceedings to persons financially unable to afford legal services. The Corporation provides financial assistance to qualified programs furnishing legal assistance to eligible clients and makes grants to and contracts with individuals, firms, corporations, organizations, and State and local governments for the purpose of providing legal assistance to these clients. The Corporation establishes maximum income levels for clients based on family size, urban and rural differences, and cost-of-living variations. Using these maximum income levels and other financial factors, the Corporation establishes guidelines to be used by the organizations it funds to determine the eligibility of clients. The Corporation also conducts research, training, and technical assistance activities and serves as a clearinghouse for information relating to the delivery of legal assistance.

Legal subdivisions. Divisions of land which result from application of ordinary methods used in making of a government survey.

Legal tender. All coins and currencies of the United States (including Federal Reserve notes and circulating notes of Federal Reserve banks and national banking associations), regardless of when coined or issued, are legal tender for all debts, public and private, public charges, taxes, duties, and dues. 31 U.S.C.A. § 392.

Legal title. One cognizable or enforceable in a court of law, or one which is complete and perfect so far as regards the apparent right of ownership and possession, but which carries no beneficial interest in the property, another person being equitably entitled thereto; in either case, the antithesis of "equitable title." It may also mean appearance of title as distinguished from complete title, Southern Carbon Co. v. State, 171 Misc. 566, 13 N.Y.S.2d 7, 9; full and absolute title or apparent right of ownership with beneficial or equitable title in another; not necessarily record title. Barnes v. Boyd, D.C.W.Va., 8 F. Supp. 584, 587. A tax title, which is prima facie valid, is a "legal title". Murray v. Holland, 108 Ind.App. 236, 27 N.E.2d 126, 128.

Legal usufruct /lęgyal yuwyrañk/. Usufructs established by operation of law are legal usufructs, Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Abdalla, 203 La. 599, 14 So.2d 815; e.g., the usufruct collated for surviving spouse in necessitous circumstances.

Legal willfulness. Intentional disregard of known duty necessary to safety of person or property of another and entire absence of care for life, person or property of others. Bartolucci v. Falletti, 314 Ill.App. 351, 41 N.E.2d 777, 780.

Legantine constitutions /lęgytan konstañ(y)uwenash(d)/. The name of a code of ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods, held under legates from Pope Gregory IX, and Clement IV, in the reign of Henry III, about the years 1220 and 1268.

Legare /lęgyar/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, to bequeath; to leave or give by will; to give in anticipation of death.

Legatarius /lęgyarjeas/. Lat. In the civil law, one to whom a thing is bequeathed; a legatee or legatory. In old European law, a legate, messenger, or envoy.

Legatory /lęgyar/. One to whom anything is bequeathed; a legatee. This word is sometimes, though seldom, used to designate a legate or nuncio.

Legatee /lęgyat/. The person to whom a legacy in a will is given. The term may be used to denominate those who take under will without any distinction between realty and personality, Brooker v. Brooker, Tex.Civ.App., 76 S.W.2d 180, 183; though commonly it refers to one who takes personal property under a will. See Legacy.

Residuary legatee. The person to whom a testator bequeaths the residue of his personal estate, after the payment of such other legacies as are specifically mentioned in the will.

Legates /lęgats/. Nuncios, deputees, or extraordinary ambassadors sent by the pope to be his representatives and to exercise his jurisdiction in countries where the Roman Catholic Church is established by law.

Legation. An embassy; a diplomatic minister and his suite. The persons commissioned by one government to exercise diplomatic functions at the court of another, including the minister, secretaries, attachés, interpreters, etc., are collectively styled the "legation" of their government. The word also denotes the official residence of a foreign minister.

Legator /lęgyar/. One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Legatory /lęgyar/. In old English law, the third part of a freeman's personal estate, which by the custom of London, in case he had a wife and children, the freeman might always have disposed of by will.

Legatos violare contra jus gentium est /lęgyadów vájelery kontra jas jénsh(y)am est/. It is contrary to the law of nations to injure ambassadors.

Legatum /lęgyadóm/. Lat. In old English law, a legacy given to the church, or an accustomed mortuary. In the civil law, a legacy; a gift left by a deceased person to be executed by the heir.

Legatum morte testatoris tantum confirmatur, sicut donatio inter vivos traditio ne sola /lęgyadóm mórdís téstdórís tøntam konfarméyad síkást dáñsh(y)ow inter vájvow tráðshyówñí sówla/. A legacy is confirmed by the death of a testator, in the same manner as a gift from a living person is by delivery alone.

Legatum optionis /lęgyadóm ópshióymmas/. In Roman law, a legacy to A. B. of any article or articles that A. B. liked to choose or select out of the testator's estate. If A. B. died after the testator, but before making the choice or selection, his representative (executor) could not, prior to Justinian, make the selection for him, but the legacy failed altogether. Justinian, however, made the legacy good, and enabled the representative to choose.

Legatus regis vice fungitur a quo destinatur et honorandus est sicut ille cujus vicem gerit /lęgyadás ryjas váysy fënjar éy kwów děstánñeyard éd önnánñed ést sikkad ilí kyyúwjas váysm jérar/. An ambassador fills the place of the king by whom he is sent, and is to be honored as he is whose place he fills.

Legem /lęyjam/. Lat. Accusative of lex, law. Occurring in various legal phrases, as follows:

Legem amittere /lęyjam amidyar/. To lose one's law; that is, to lose one's privilege of being admitted to take an oath.

Legem facere /lęyjam fęysarj/. In old English law, to make law or oath.

Legem ferre /lęyjam féhrarj/. In Roman law, to propose a law to the people for their adoption.

Legem habere /lęyjam habirj/. To be capable of giving evidence upon oath. Witnesses who had been convicted of crime were incapable of giving evidence, until 6 & 7 Vict., c. 85.

Legem jubere /lęyjam jibríj/. In Roman law, to give consent and authority to a proposed law; to make or pass it.

Legem pone /lęyjam pówñíj/. To propound or lay down the law. By an extremely obscure derivation or analogy, this term was formerly used as a slang equivalent for payment in cash or in ready money.
Legem sciscere /lìyjìjì sìsìrìy/. To give consent and authority to a proposed law; applied to the consent of the people.

Legem terrae amittentes, perpetuam infamiae notam inde merito incurrant /lìyjìjì tèthriy ämìntëtìttyìppì ppmèçùwwò infëymiìyìyy nòwwòm ìndìyy mëhrìddòw íghònhìnt/. Those who lose the law of the land, then justly incur the ineffaceable brand of infamy.

Legem vadilare /lìyjìjì vèdïyèryì/. In old English law, to wage law; to offer or to give pledge to make defense, by oath, with compurgators.

Legenita. A fine for criminal conversation with a woman. See Legrulta.

Leges /lìyjìjìy/. Lat. Laws. At Rome, the leges (the decrees of the people in a strict sense) were laws which were proposed by a magistrate presiding in the senate, and adopted by the Roman people in the comitia centuriata.

Leges Angliae /lìyjìjìy ëngëliyi/. The laws of England, as distinguished from the civil law and other foreign systems.

Leges Angliae sunt tripartita.—Jus commune, consuetudines, ac decreta comitiorum /lìyjìjìy ëngëliyi yìnt triëppàrdëdíyìj, jás kamìyùwnìyì, kònswwatyìùwànìyìjì, ëk dàkriyèdìkàmìshìylòrom/. The laws of England are threefold,—common law, customs, and decrees of parliament.

Leges barbarorum /lìyjìjìy bâbâròrom/. A class name for the codes of mediaeval European law.

Leges Edwardi confessoris /lìyjìjìy ëwëdàrdày kònffàssòÌ/. A name used for a legal treatise written from 1130 to 1135, which presents the law in force toward the end of Henry I. Its authority is said to be undervalued.

Leges et consuetudini regni /lìyjìjìy ët kònswwat(yìùwdanày règnày/). The accepted name for the common law from an early time; since the latter half of the 12th century at least.

Leges fègendi et refigendi consuetudo est periculosissima /lìyjìjìy fàjèndày ët rëfàjèndày kònswwat(yìùwdòw èst pàrlì(yì)lòwwèsìsamà/. The practice of fixing and remaking the laws is a most dangerous one.

Leges Henrici /lìyjìjìy hènràysìay/. A book written between 1114 and 1118 containing Anglo-Saxon and Norman law. It is said to be an invaluable source of knowledge of the period preceding the full development of the Norman law.

Leges humanae nascuntur, vivunt, et moriuntur /lìyjìjìy hyàmmënnìyìyì nàskànòntà, vàyvànt, èt mòrrìyàntà/. Human laws are born, live, and die.

Leges Julliae /lìyjìjìy jùwìliyì/. Laws enacted during the reign of Augustus or of Julius Caesar which, with the lex abutia, effectually abolished the legis actiones.

Leges nature perfectissimae sunt et immutabiles; humanae vero jurs conditionem in infinitum decurrunt, et nihil est in eo quod perpetuo stare possit. Leges humanae nascuntur, vivunt, moriuntur /lìyjìjìy nàstûryì pàrhèttìsìmyì sànt ët èmìyùwëtyàbyìyìjì; hyàuumënnìyìyì vèwòjùrsà kàndìsh(yì)wò sèmpàr ìn ìnñàfàyàïdòm dàkhàrròt, èt nàtì(hì)al èst ìn ìyòw kwòd pàrpet(yì)yùwò sòrrìyì pòssèt. Lìyjìjìy hyàuumënnìyìyì nàskànàntà, vàyvànt, mòrrìyàntà/. The laws of nature are most perfect and immutable; but the condition of human law is an unending succession, and there is nothing in it which can continue perpetually. Human laws are born, live, and die.

Leges non scriptae /lìyjìjìy nòn sçrtìpyì/. In English law, unwritten or customary laws, including those ancient acts of parliament which were made before time of memory.

Leges non verbis, sed rebus, sunt impositae /lìyjìjìy nòn vàrbòs sèd rìyìbòs sànt ìmpòzàdyì/. Laws are imposed, not on words, but things.

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant /lìyjìjìy pòstìèrìyòìyìjìy pàtròìyìjìy kànñòrrìyìyìyìs àbbògànt/. Later laws abrogate prior laws that are contrary to them.

Leges sacratae /lìyjìjìy sàkràdyì/. All solemn compacts between the plebeians and patricians were so called.

Leges scriptae /lìyjìjìy sçrtìpyì/. In English law, written laws; statute laws, or acts of parliament which are originally reduced into writing before they are enacted, or receive any binding power.

Leges sub graviori lege /lìyjìjìy sàb gràvìtyòray lìyjìjìy/. Laws under a weightier law.

Leges suum ligent latorem /lìyjìjìy s(yì)wàrn lìjìnt látòrom/. Laws should bind their own maker.

Leges tabellariae /lìyjìjìy tàbbèlìèryìyì/. Roman laws regulating the mode of voting by ballot (tabella).

Leges vigilantibus, non dormientibus, subveniunt /lìyjìjìy vijàlàntàbës nòn dòrrìyèntàbës sàbèvìñ(yì)lànt/ì. The laws aid the vigilant, not the negligent.

Legibus solutus /lìyjìbàs sàl(yì)wùdàs/. Lat. Released from the laws; not bound by the laws. An expression applied in the Roman civil law to the emperor.

Legibus sumptibus desinentibus, lege naturae, utendum est /lìyjìbàs sàmòpìtas dàsènnèntàbës lìyjìy nàt(yì)yùrìyì yùwètàndàm èst/. When laws imposed by the state fail, we must act by the law of nature.

Legiósus /lìyjìjìyòwssàs/. In old records, litigious, and so subjected to a course of law.

Legis constructio non facit injuriam /lìyjìs kànstrèèk(yì)òw nòn fëyssàd ànjëryìyì/. The construction of law does no injury.

Legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet /lìyjìs àntàpàrtrèèsh(yì)òw lìyjìs vìm óbtànt/. The interpretation of law obtains the force of law.

Legislation. The act of giving or enacting laws; the power to make laws; the act of legislating; preparation and enactment of laws; the making of laws via legislation, in contrast to court-made laws. Formulation of rule for the future. Eastern Oil Refining Co. v. Court of Burgesses of Wallingford, 130 Conn. 606, 36 A.2d 586, 589; Oklahoma City, Okl. v. Dolose, C.C.A. Okl., 48 F.2d 734, 738. See also Act (Legislative act); Bill; Class legislation; Statute.

Legislative. Making or giving laws; pertaining to the function of law-making or to the process of enactment of laws. Actions which relate to subjects of permanent or general character are "legislative". Keigley v. Bench, 97 Utah 69, 89 P.2d 460, 484, 485. Making or having the power to make a law or laws.

Legislative act. Enactment of laws. Law (i.e. statute) passed by legislature in contrast to court-made law. One which prescribes what the law shall be in future cases arising under it. Nider v. Homan, 32 Cal. App.2d 21, 89 P.2d 136, 139. See Statute.

Legislative apportionment. Amend. XIV, § 2, of U.S. Const. provides that representatives to congress "shall be apportioned among the several states according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each state." Equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution requires the allocation of representatives on a population basis and a justiciable issue is presented when a claim is made that states are denying right of representation to its citizens. Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L.Ed.2d 663. See also Apportionment; Reapportionment.

Legislative council. A legislative agency used in some states which is composed of legislators and other selected officials who study legislative problems and plan legislative strategy between regular legislative sessions.

Legislative counsel. A person or agency specially charged with assisting legislators in fulfilling their legislative tasks. Legislative counsel handles problems of research, drafting bills, legislative hearings, and other technical legislative details.

Legislative courts. Courts created by legislature in contrast to those created by constitution (e.g. Art. III of U.S. Const.). Examples are Court of Claims and Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Compare Constitutional court.

Legislative department. That department of government (i.e. Congress, consisting of Senate and House of Representatives; Art. I of U.S. Const.) whose appropriate function is the making or enactment of laws, as distinguished from the judicial department (Article III), which interprets and applies the laws, and the executive department (Article II), which carries them into execution and effect. See also Legislation.

Legislative districting. The apportionment or division of a legislative body into territorial districts. See Apportionment; Legislative apportionment; Reapportionment.

Legislative divorce. A divorce decreed by an act of the legislature as to one particular couple and not by judicial decree. While legislative divorces once existed in New England states, and parliamantary divorces once were granted in England, such have long been superseded by judicial divorces.

Legislative history. The background and events, including committee reports, hearings, and floor debates, leading up to enactment of a law. Such history is important to courts when they are required to determine the legislative intent of a particular statute. Legislative histories of major statutes are published in U.S.Code, Congressional and Administrative News.

Legislative immunity. The Constitution grants two immunities to Congressmen, first, that except for treason, felony, and a breach of the peace, they are "privileged from Arrest during their Attendance" at sessions of their body, and, second, that "for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place." (Art. I, § 6, cl. 1). The first immunity is of little practical value, for its exceptions withdraw all criminal offenses and arrests therefrom the privilege, and it does not apply to the service of any process in a civil or criminal matter. The second immunity is liberally construed and includes not only opinion, speeches, debates, or other oral matter, but also voting, making a written report or presenting a resolution, and in general to whatever a congressman feels necessary to transact the legislative functions and business. Even a claim of a bad motive does not destroy the immunity, for it is the public good which is thereby served. E.g., United States v. Ballin, 144 U.S. 1, 12 S.Ct. 507, 36 L.Ed. 321; United States v. Smith, 286 U.S. 6, 52 S.Ct. 475, 76 L.Ed. 954.

Legislative intent. Such is looked to when court attempts to construe or interpret a statute which is ambiguous or inconsistent. See also Legislative history.

Legislative investigations. Legislatures are empowered to make investigations as an incident of their legislative authority; included are powers of subpoena, cross examination, etc. Quinn v. United States, 349 U.S. 155, 161, 75 S.Ct. 668, 99 L.Ed. 964.

Legislative jurisdiction. The sphere of authority of a legislative body to enact laws and to conduct all business incidental to its law-making function. Art. I of U.S. Constitution.

Legislative officer. A member of the legislative body or department of a state or municipal corporation. One of those whose duties relate mainly to the enactment of laws, such as members of congress and of the several state legislatures. These officers are confined in their duties by the constitution generally to make laws, though sometimes, in cases of impeachment, one of the houses of the legislature exercises judicial functions somewhat similar to those of a grand jury, by presenting to the other articles of impeachment, and the other house acts as a court in trying such impeachment.

Legislative power. The lawmaking powers of a legislative body, whose functions include the power to make, alter, amend and repeal laws. In essence, the legislature has the power to make laws and such power is reposed exclusively in such body though it may delegate rule making and regulatory powers to departments in the executive branch. It may not, however, delegate its law making powers nor is the judicial branch permitted to obtrude into its legislati Legislaturerum est viva vox, rebus et non verbis legem imponere /lējislātorum est váyva véks, rýbas et nóñ vírbs líyam impōw naríy/. The voice of legislators is a living voice, to impose laws on things, and not on words.

Legislature. The department, assembly, or body of persons that makes statutory laws for a state or nation. At the federal level, and in most states, the legislature is bicameral in structure, usually consisting of two branches; i.e. upper house (Senate) and lower house (House of Representatives or Assembly). Legislative bodies at the local levels are variously called city councils, boards of aldermen, etc. See Chamber; Congress; Legislative department; Legislative districting.

Legis minister non tenetur in executione offici sui, fugere aut retrocedere /liyis minisťar nóñ täniydar in ēkšskúwshiyóniy síf(h)iyyay s(y)úyway fuwuwaríy ọt rétrasiydaríy/. The minister of the law is bound, in the execution of his office, not to fly nor to retreat.

Legisperorius /liyisparáydas/. Lat. A person skilled or learned in the law; a lawyer or advocate.

Legitimacy. Lawful birth; the condition of being born in wedlock; the opposite of illegitimacy or bastardy.

Legitimate, v. To make lawful; to confer legitimacy; e.g., to place a child born before marriage on the legal footing of those born in lawful wedlock.

Legitimate, adj. That which is lawful, legal, recognized by law, or according to law; as, legitimate children, legitimate authority, lawful power, legitimate sport or amusement. People v. Commons, 64 Cal.App.2d Supp. 925, 148 P.2d 724, 731. Real, valid, or genuine. United States v. Schenck, C.C.A.N.Y., 126 F.2d 702, 705, 707. See Presumption of legitimacy.

Legitimation. The making legitimate or lawful that which was not originally so; especially the statutory procedure of legalizing (legitimating) the status of an illegitimate child. Such is usually necessary to assure inheritance rights to child.

Legitimation per subsequens matrimonium /lajjíméyeshan pír səbsəkwën(d)z mútramówn(i)yam/. The legitimation of a bastard by the subsequent marriage of his parents.

Legitime /lajjídmí/. Lat. In the civil law, that portion of a parent’s estate of which he cannot disinherit his children without a legal cause. That interest in a succession of which forced heirs may not be deprived. It may also apply to father or mother.

Legitime imperanti parere necesse est /lajjídmíy impárántay pórrirí nássíy est/. One lawfully commanding must be obeyed.

Legitimi heredes /lajjídmíy hárdiyíy/. Lat. In Roman law, legitimate heirs; the agnate relations of the estate-leaver; so called because the inheritance was given to them by a law of the Twelve Tables.

Legitimus /lajjídmás/. Lawful; legitimate. Legitimus heres et filius est quem nuptias demonstrat, a lawful son and heir is he whom the marriage points out to be lawful.

Legit vel non? /liyis vél nóñ/. In old English practice, this was the formal question propounded to the ordinary when a prisoner claimed the benefit of clergy,—does he read or not? If the ordinary found that the prisoner was entitled to clergy, his formal answer was, “Legit ut clericus,” he reads like a clerk.

Legruita. In old records, a fine for criminal conversation with a woman. See Legenita.

Le guilon da la mer /liygin dá lā mé/. The title of a French work on marine insurance, by an unknown author, dating back, probably, to the sixteenth century, and said to have been prepared for the merchants of Rouen. It is noteworthy as being the earliest treatise on that subject now extant.

Leguleius /légyálíyos/. A person skilled in law (in legibus versatus); one versed in the forms of law.

Lehurecht. The German feudal law.

Leidgrave /léyògrün/. An officer under the Saxon government, who had jurisdiction over a lath.

Leipa /liypa/. In old English law, a fugitive or runaway.

Le ley de dieu et ley de terre sont tout un; et l’un et l’autre préférer et favor le commun et publique bien del terre. The law of God and the law of the land are all one; and both preserve and favor the common and public good of the land.

Le ley est le plus haut enheritance que le roy ad, car par le ley il mesme et tous ses sujets sont rules; et, si le ley ne fut, nul roy ne nul inheritance serra. The law is the highest inheritance that the king possesses, for by the law both he and all his subjects are ruled; and, if there were no law, there would be neither king nor inheritance.

Lend. To give or put out for hire or compensation. To part with a thing of value to another for a time fixed or indefinite, yet to have some time in ending, to be used or enjoyed by that other; the thing itself or the equivalent of it to be given back at the time fixed, or when lawfully asked for, with or without compensation for the use as may be agreed upon. Term “lend” when used in a will means to “give” or “devise.” To provide money to another for a period of time, usually with interest charge to be incurred by borrower.
LENDER

Lender. He from whom a thing or money is borrowed. The bailor of an article loaned. A bank or other lending institution.

Lending or loaning money or credit. Transactions creating customary relation of borrower and lender, in which money is borrowed for fixed time on borrower’s promise to repay amount borrowed at stated time in future with interest at fixed rate. Bannock County v. Citizens’ Bank & Trust Co., 53 Idaho 159, 22 P.2d 674.

Lent. In Ecclesiastical law, the quadragesimal fast; a time of abstinence; the time from Ash Wednesday to Easter.

Leod. People; a people; a nation.

Leodes /liwówdiiz/. In old European law, a vassal, or leige man; service; a were or weregild.

Leonina societas /liyanánya szsáaytáas/. Lat. An attempted partnership, in which one party was to bear all the losses, and have no share in the profits. This was a void partnership in Roman law; and, apparently, it would also be void as a partnership in English law, as being inherently inconsistent with the notion of partnership.

Leprosus amovendo /lepróswow éymuvéndow/. An ancient writ that lay to remove a leper or lazar, who thrust himself into the company of his neighbors in any parish, either in the church or at other public meetings, to their annoyance.

Le rol, or roy /la réy/la r(w)éy/. The old law-French words for “the king”.

Le rol veut en delibérer. The king will deliberate on it. This is the formula which the king of the French used when he intended to veto an act of the legislative assembly.

Le roy (or la reine) le veut. The king (or the queen) wills it. The form of the royal assent to public bills in parliament.

Le roy (or la reine) remercie ses loyal sujets, accepte leur benevolence, et ainsi le veut. The king (or the queen) thanks his (or her) loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and therefore wills it to be so. The form of the royal assent to a bill of supply.

Le roy (or la reine) s’aviser. The king (or queen) will advise upon it. The form of words used to express the refusal of the royal assent to public bills in parliament. 1 Bl.Comm. 184. This is supposed to correspond to the judicial phrase “curia advisari vult” (q.v.).

Le salut du peuple est la supreme loi. The safety of the people is the highest law.

Leschewes. Trees fallen by chance or windfalls.

Les majesty /liyz májásti/. The old English and Scotch translation of “lesa majestas,” or high treason.

Les actions naissent de la loi, et non la loi des actions /ley fiksyówn nés da la lwá, ey nówn la lwá dey fiksyówń/. Fictions arise from the law, and not law from fictions.

Lesing or leasing. Gleanings.

In the civil law, the injury suffered by one who does not receive a full equivalent for what he gives in a commutative contract. Inequality in contracts.

Les lois ne se chargent de punir que les actions extérieures /ley lwá ná sá sházh da pyúnar ka leyzáksyównx ekstéyýr/. Laws do not undertake to punish other than outward actions.

Lessee. One who rents property from another. In the case of real estate, the lessee is also known as the tenant. He to whom a lease is made. He who holds an estate by virtue of a lease. One who has been given possession of land which is exclusive even of the landlord, except as the lease permits his entry, and except right to enter to demand rent or to make repairs. Seabloom v. Krier, 219 Minn. 362, 18 N.W.2d 88, 91. See also Tenant.

Lessee’s interest. In appraising the value of a potential sublease or assignment (sale) of the lease, the value is the market value of the property, less the interest of the lessor. The lessor’s interest would be largely determined by the ratio of the return on the lease to the market value without the lease.

Lesser included offense. One composed of some, but not all, of the elements of the greater crime, and which does not have any element not included in the greater offense. State v. Steward, La., 292 So.2d 677, 679. One which includes some of the elements of the crime charged in the information without the addition of any element irrelevant to the original charge. State v. Johnsen, 197 Neb. 216, 247 N.W.2d 638, 640. When it is impossible to commit a particular crime without concomitantly committing, by the same conduct, another offense of lesser grade or degree, the latter is, with respect to the former, a “lesser included offense.” In any case in which it is legally possible to attempt to commit a crime, such attempt constitutes a lesser included offense with respect thereto.

Lessor. He who grants a lease. One who rents property to another. In the case of real estate, the lessor is also known as the landlord. One who has leased land for a definite or indefinite period, by a written or parol lease, irrespective of whether a statute of fraud requires the lease to be in writing. City of Tyler v. Ingram, 139 Tex. 600, 164 S.W.2d 516, 520. See also Landlord.

Lessor of the plaintiff. In the common law action of ejectment, this was the party who really and in effect prosecuted the action and was interested in its result. The reason of his having been so called arose from the circumstance of the action having been carried on in the name of a nominal plaintiff (John Doe), to whom the real plaintiff had granted a fictitious lease, and thus had become his lessor.

Lessor's Interest. The present value of the future income under the lease, plus the present value of the property after the lease expires (reversion).

Let, v. Contracts. To award to one of several persons, who have submitted proposals (bids) therefor, the contract for erecting public works or doing some part of the work connected therewith, or rendering some other service to government for a stipulated compensation. Letting the contract is the choosing one from among the number of bidders, and the formal making of the contract with him. The letting, or putting out, is a different thing from the invitation to make proposals; the letting is subsequent to the invitation. It is the act of awarding the contract to the proposer, after the proposals have been received and considered.

Conveyancing. To demise or lease a certain property. See Lease.

Judicial orders and decrees. The word "let" (in the imperative) imports a positive direction or command. Thus the phrase "let the writ issue as prayed" is equivalent to "it is hereby ordered that the writ issue," etc.

Practice. To deliver. "To let to bail" is to deliver to bail on arrest.

Let, n. In old conveyancing, hindrance; obstruction; interruption.

Lethal weapon. A deadly weapon (q.v.).

Letter. One of the arbitrary marks or characters constituting the alphabet, and used in written language as the representatives of sounds or articulations of the human organs of speech.

A dispatch or epistle: a written or printed message; a communication in writing from one person to another at a distance. In the imperial law of Rome, "letter" or "epistle" was the name of the answer returned by the emperor to a question of law submitted to him by the magistrates.

A commission, patent, or written instrument containing or attesting the grant of some power, authority, or right.

The word appears in this generic sense in many compound phrases known to commercial law and jurisprudence; e.g., letter of attorney, letter missive, letter of credit, letters patent. The plural is frequently used.

Metaphorically, the verbal expression; the strict literal meaning. The letter of a statute, as distinguished from its spirit, means the strict and exact force of the language employed, as distinguished from the general purpose and policy of the law.

As to letters of Administration; Advice; Attorney; Credit; Recommendation; see those titles. As to Letters patent; see Patent.

Letter-book. A book in which a merchant or trader keeps copies of letters sent by him to his correspondents.

Letter contract. In federal contract law, a written contractual instrument with sufficient provisions to permit contractor to begin performance. Boeing Co. v. Omdahl, N.D., 169 N.W.2d 696, 702.

Letter missive. In old English law, a letter from the king or queen to a dean and chapter, containing the name of the person whom he would have them elect as bishop. A request addressed to a peer, peeress, or lord of parliament against whom a bill has been filed desiring the defendant to appear and answer to the bill. In civil-law practice, the phrase "letters missive," or "letters dimissory," is sometimes used to denote the papers sent up on an appeal by the judge or court below to the superior tribunal, otherwise called the "apostles" (q.v.).

Letter of administration. See Letters of administration.

Letter of advice. Drawer’s communication to the drawee that a described draft has been drawn. U.C.C. § 3–701(1).

Letter of attornment. A letter from a grantor to a tenant, stating that the property has been sold, and directing rent to be paid to the grantee (new owner).

Letter of comment. Letters of comment are sent out by the S.E.C. in most cases as a means of informing registrants of securities offerings of the respects in which a registration statement is deemed not to meet the disclosure and other requirements of the Securities Exchange Act and the forms and regulations thereunder. A letter of comment may not be sent out, however, where the circumstances are such that an investigatory or stop order proceeding is deemed more appropriate.

Letter of credence. In international law, the document which accredits an ambassador, minister, or envoy to the courts or government to which he is sent; i.e., certifies to his appointment and qualification, and bespeaks credit for his official actions and representations.

Letter of credit. A written instrument, addressed by one person to another, requesting the latter to give credit to the person in whose favor it is drawn. A letter of credit is in the nature of a negotiable instrument, and is a letter whereby a person requests another to advance money or give credit to a third person, and promises to repay person making advancement. A letter authorizing one person to pay money or extend credit to another on the credit of the writer. Mead Corp. v. Farmers and Citizens Bank, 14 Ohio Misc. 163, 232 N.E.2d 431, 432, 43 O.O.2d 404.

An engagement by a bank or other person made at the request of a customer that the issuer will honor drafts or other demands for payment upon compliance with the conditions specified in the credit. A credit may be either revocable or irrevocable. The engagement may be either an agreement to honor or a statement that the bank or other person is authorized to honor. U.C.C. § 5–103.

Commercial letter. Type of letter of credit used by buyer of merchandise who sends it to bank in district in which he is to buy and seller then presents his bill of sale, etc. to obtain payment.

Confirmed letter. Type of letter of credit in which local bank gives its guarantee that seller's draft will be honored if the bank which issued letter fails to honor it.

Export letter. Type of letter of credit forwarded to seller or exporter advising him that a credit has been established in his favor by a foreign bank and further consenting to honor the seller's or exporter's draft for the goods.

General and special. A general letter of credit is one addressed to any and all persons, without naming any one in particular, while a special letter of credit is addressed to a particular individual, firm, or corporation by name.

Import letter. Type of letter of credit issued by a foreign bank to a local seller permitting him to draw draft on the foreign bank against shipment of the merchandise.

Irrevocable letter. Type of letter of credit in which issuing bank guarantees that it will not withdraw the credit or cancel the letter before the expiration date.

Open credit. See Open letter of credit.

Revocable letter. Letter of credit in which the issuing bank reserves the right to cancel and withdraw from the transaction upon appropriate notice.

Revolving credit. See Revolving credit.

Traveler's letter. Type of letter of credit used by one traveling abroad in which the issuing bank authorizes payment of funds to holder in the local currency by a local bank. The holder signs a check on the issuing bank and the local bank forwards it to the issuing bank for its credit.

Letter of exchange. A bill of exchange (q.v.).

Letter of license. In English law, a written instrument in the nature of an agreement, signed by all the creditors of a failing or embarrassed debtor in trade, granting him an extension of time for the payment of the debts, allowing him in the meantime to carry on the business in the hope of recuperation, and protecting him from arrest, suit, or other interference pending the agreement. A similar arrangement with creditors is provided for in United States under the federal Bankruptcy Act. See Arrangement with creditors.

Letter of marque and reprisal. An authorization formerly granted in time of war by a government to the owner of a private vessel to capture enemy vessels and goods on the high seas. Art. I, Sec. 8 of U.S. Const. The signatory powers to the Declaration of Paris in 1856 agreed to stop issuing such authorizations.

Letter of recall. A document addressed by the executive of one nation to that of another, informing the latter that a minister sent by the former has been recalled. May also refer to letter sent by manufacturer of product to purchasers requesting that they bring product, automobile, etc. into dealer to repair or replace item.

Letter of recredential. /lêdər aW riikrâdënsâhâl/. A document embodying the formal action of a government upon a letter of recall of a foreign minister. It, in effect, accredits him back to his own government. It is addressed to the latter government, and is delivered to the minister by the diplomatic secretary of the state from which he is recalled.

Letter patent. See Letters patent.

Letter ruling. A written statement which is issued to a taxpayer by Office of Assistant Commissioner of I.R.S. in which interpretations of tax laws are made and applied to a specific set of facts. Tax Analysts and Advocates v. Internal Revenue Service, D.C.D.C., 362 F.Supp. 1298, 1301. Issued in response to request for ruling by a private party of tax implications of a particular transaction.

Letters ad colligendum bona defuncti /lêdərz âd kôlëjëndám boûmä däfûntëi/. In default of the representatives and creditors to administer to the estate of an intestate, the officer entitled to grant letters of administration may grant to such person as he approves, letters to collect the goods of the deceased, which neither make him executor nor administrator; his only business being to collect the goods and keep them in his safe custody. 2 Bl.Comm. 505.

Letters close. In English law, close letters are grants of the king, and, being of private concern, they are thus distinguished from letters patent.

Letters of absolution. Absolventary letters, used in former times, when an abbot released any of his brethren ab omnia subjectione et obedientia, etc., and made them capable of entering into some other order of religion.

Letters of administration. Formal document issued by probate court appointing one an administrator of an estate.

Letters of administration C.T.A. Document issued by probate court appointing one administrator cum testamento annexo (with the will annexed) by reason of the failure of the named executor to qualify.

Letters of administration D.B.N. Document issued by probate court appointing one administrator de bonis non (concerning goods—not already administered) because of failure of named executor to complete the probate of the estate.

Letters of administration D.B.N. C.T.A. Document issued by probate court to one who is thereby authorized to administer estate in place of named executor in accordance with will of testator. See Letters of Administration C.T.A.; Letters of Administration D.B.N.

Letters of safe conduct. No subject of a nation at war with England can, by the law of nations, come into the realm, nor can travel himself upon the high seas, or send his goods and merchandise from one place to another, without danger of being seized, unless he has letters of safe conduct. By divers old statutes these must be granted under the great seal, and enrolled in chancery, or else are of no effect; the sovereign being the best judge of such emergencies as may deserve exemption from the general law of arms. But passports or licenses from the ambassadors abroad are now more usually obtained, and are allowed to be of equal validity.

Letters of slains, or slanes. In England, letters subscribed by the relatives of a person who had been slain, declaring that they had received an assyment, and concurring in an application to the crown for a pardon to the offender. These or other evidences of their concurrence were necessary to found the application.

Letters patent /lėdrz pėytant/"pėt"/. An instrument issued by a government to the patentee, granting or confirming a right to the exclusive possession and enjoyment of land, or of a new invention or discovery. See also Land patent; Patent.

Letters rogatory /lėdrz rōgat(r)iy/. A request by one court of another court in an independent jurisdiction, that a witness be examined upon interrogatories sent with the request. The medium whereby one country, speaking through one of its courts, requests another country, acting through its own courts and by methods of court procedure peculiar thereto and entirely within the latter’s control, to assist the administration of justice in the former country. The Signe, D.C.L.A., 37 F.Supp. 818, 820.

A formal communication in writing, sent by a court in which an action is pending to a court or judge of a foreign country, requesting that the testimony of a witness resident within the jurisdiction of the latter court may be there formally taken under its direction and transmitted to the first court for use in the pending action. Fed.R.Civil P. 28.

This process was also in use, at an early period, between the several states of the Union. The request rests entirely upon the comity of courts towards each other.

Letters testamentary. The formal instrument of authority and appointment given to an executor by the proper court, empowering him to enter upon the discharge of his office as executor. It corresponds to letters of administration granted to an administrator.

Letter stock. Stock not registered under the Securities Act of 1933, where the buyer gives the seller a letter stating the buyer intends to hold for investment purposes and does not contemplate reoffering the stock to others. Securities and Exchange Commission v. Continental Tobacco Co. of S.C., C.A.Fla., 483 F.2d 137, 150.

Letting. Leasing or awarding. City and County of San Francisco v. United States, C.C.A.Cal., 106 F.2d 569, 576. See also Lease; Let.

Letting out. The act of leasing property or awarding a contract. See Let.

Lettre /lētra/ Fr. In French law, a letter. It is used, like our English “letter,” for a formal instrument giving authority.

Lettres de cachet /lētra da kâshēy/ Letters issued and signed by the kings of France, and countersigned by a secretary of state, authorizing the imprisonment of a person. Under them, persons were imprisoned for life or for a long period on the most frivolous pretexts, for the gratification of private pique or revenge, and without any reason being assigned for such punishment. They were also granted by the king for the purpose of shielding his favorites or their friends from the consequences of their crimes; and thus were as pernicious in their operation as the protection afforded by the church to criminals in a former age. Abolished during the Revolution of 1789.

Leuca /l(y)uwka/ In old French law. A league, consisting of fifteen hundred paces.

In old English law, a league or mile of a thousand paces. A privileged space around a monastery of a league or mile in circuit.

Levanda navis causa /lavändiy néyvas kóza/ Lat. For the sake of lightening the ship; denotes a purpose of throwing overboard goods, which renders them subjects of general average.

Levant et couchant /lėvant è kwáchant/ L. Fr. Rising up and lying down. A term applied to trespassing cattle which have remained long enough upon land to have lain down to rest and ri. n up to feed; generally the space of a night and a day, or, at least, one night.

Levari facias /lavéray féys(h)(i)yas/ Lat. A writ of execution directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the lands and chattels of the judgment debtor the sum recovered by the judgment. Also a writ to the bishop of the diocese, commanding him to enter into the benefice of a judgment debtor, and take and sequester the same into his possession, and hold the same until he shall have levied the amount of the judgment out of the rents, tithes, and profits thereof.

Levari facias damna de disseselitoribus /lavéray féys(h)(i)yas dëmna diy dšlyzatörözbas/ A writ formerly directed to the sheriff for the levying of damages, which a disseror had been condemned to pay to the diseseire.

Levari facias quando vlocomes returnavit quod non habuit emptores /lavéray féys(h)(i)yas kwóndow váyšiykómínyəz raðrénயvat kwòd nô nébyuwaš âm(p)törıyzy/. An old writ commanding the sheriff to sell the goods of a debtor which he had already taken, and had returned that he could not sell them; and as much more of the debtor’s goods as would satisfy the whole debt.

Levari facias residuum debiti /lavéray féys(h)(i)yas rasdiyuvam dëbadya/ An old writ directed to the sheriff for levying the remnant of a partly-satisfied debt upon the lands and tenements or chattels of the debtor.
In reference to taxation, the word may mean the legislative function and declaration of the subject and rate or amount of taxation, People v. Mahoney, 13 Cal.2d 729, 91 P.2d 1029; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Amos, 94 Fla. 558, 115 So. 315, 320; City of Richmond v. Eubank, 179 Va. 70, 18 S.E.2d 397, 403; or the rate of taxation rather than the physical act of applying the rate to the property, Lowden v. Texas County Excise Board, 187 Okl. 365, 103 P.2d 98, 100; or the formal order, by proper authority declaring property subject to taxation at fixed rate at its assessed valuation, State v. Davis, 335 Mo. 159, 73 S.W.2d 406, 407; or the ministerial function of assessing, listing and extending taxes, City of plankinton v. Kieffer, 70 S.D. 329, 17 N.W.2d 494, 495, 496; or the extension of the tax, Syracuse Trust Co. v. Board of Sup'r's of Oneida County, 13 N.Y.S.2d 390, 394; People ex rel. Oswego Falls Corporation v. Foster, 251 App.Div. 65, 295 N.Y.S. 891, 895. Day v. Inland Steel Co., 185 Minn. 53, 239 N.W. 776, 777; or the doing of whatever is necessary in order to authorize the collector to collect the tax, Syracuse Trust Co. v. Board of Sup'r's of Oneida County, 13 N.Y.S.2d 390, 394.

"Levy," when used in connection with authority to tax, denotes exercise of legislative function, whether state or local, determining that a tax shall be imposed and fixing amount, purpose and subject of the exaction. Carkeeken v. Williams, 76 Wash.2d 617, 458 P.2d 280, 286. The qualified electors "levy" a tax when they vote to impose it.

See also Assess; Assessment.

Equitable levy. The lien in equity created by the filing of a creditor's bill to subject real property of the debtor, and of a lis pendens, is sometimes so called. The right to an equitable lien is sometimes called an "equitable levy."

Levy court. A court formerly existing in the District of Columbia. It was a body charged with the administration of the ministerial and financial duties of Washington county. It was charged with the duty of laying out and repairing roads, building bridges, providing poor-houses, laying and collecting the taxes necessary to enable it to discharge these and other duties, and to pay the other expenses of the county. It had capacity to make contracts in reference to any of these matters, and to raise money to meet such contracts. It had perpetual succession, and its functions were those which, in the several states, are performed by "county commissioners," "overseers of the poor," "county supervisors," and similar bodies with other designations. Levy Court v. Coroner, 69 U.S. 501 (2 Wall.) 507, 17 L.Ed. 851.

Levying war. In criminal law, the assembling of a body of men for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable object; and all who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are leagued in the general conspiracy, are considered as engaged in levying war, within the meaning of the constitution. Art. III, § 3, U.S. Constitution. See also Insurrection.

The words include forcible opposition, as the result of a combination of individuals, to the execution of any public law of the United States; and to constitute treason within the Federal Constitution, there must be a combination of individuals united for the common purpose of forcibly preventing the execution of Lewd /l(ə)yd/. Obscene, lustful, indecent, lascivious, lecherous. The term imports a lascivious intent. It signifies that form of immorality which has relation to moral impurity, United States v. Barlow, D.C.Utah, 56 F.Supp. 795–797; or that which is carried on in a wanton manner. Rebuhn v. Cahill, D.C.N.Y., 31 F.Supp. 47, 49. See also Indecent (Indecent exposure); Lascivious; Lewdness; Obscene; Obscenity.

Lewd and lascivious cohabitation. Within criminal statutes, the living together of a man and woman not married to each other as husband and wife. Also called "illicit cohabitation". Where existing, such statutes are seldom enforced. See also Lewdness.

Lewd house. See Bawdy-house.

Any act which the actor knows is likely to be observed by others who would be affronted or alarmed and hence it is a criminal offense. Model Penal Code, § 251.1. Lewdness is specifically made an offense under some state statutes, and is included under more general clauses in others.

See also Indecent (Indecent exposure); Lascivious; Obscene; Obscenity.

Lex /lēks/. Lat. In medieval jurisprudence, a body or collection of various laws peculiar to a given nation or people; not a code in the modern sense, but an aggregation or collection of laws not codified or systematized. Also, a similar collection of laws relating to a general subject, and not peculiar to any one people.

In modern American and English jurisprudence, a system or body of laws, written or unwritten, or so much thereof as may be applicable to a particular case or question, considered as being local or peculiar to a given state, country, or jurisdiction, or as being different from the laws or rules relating to the same subject-matter which prevail in some other place.

In old English law, a body or collection of laws, and particularly the Roman or civil law. Also a form or mode of trial or process of law, as the ordeal or battle, or the oath of a party with compurgators, as in the phrases legem facere, legem vadiare, etc. Also used in the sense of legal rights or civil rights or the protection of the law, as in the phrase legem amittere.

In Roman law, a law; the law.

This term was often used as the synonym of jus, in the sense of a rule of civil conduct authoritatively prescribed for the government of the actions of the members of an organized jural society.

Lex is used in a purely juridical sense, law, and not also right; while jus has an ethical as well as a juridical meaning, not only law, but right. Lex is usually concrete, while jus is abstract. In English we have no term which combines the legal and ethical meanings, as do jus and its French equivalent, droit.

In a more limited and particular sense, it was a resolution adopted by the whole Roman "populus" (patricians and plebeians) in the comitia, on the motion of a magistrate of senatorial rank, as a consul, a praetor, or a dictator. Such a statute frequently took the name of the proposer; as the lex Falcidia, lex Cornelia, etc.

A rule of law which magistrates and people had agreed upon by means of a solemn declaration of consensus.

In a somewhat wider and more generic sense, a law (whatever its origin) or the aggregate of laws, relating to a particular subject-matter, thus corresponding to the meaning of the word "law" in some modern phrases, such as the "law of evidence," "law of wills," etc.

Other specific meanings of the word in Roman jurisprudence were as follows: Positive law, as opposed to natural. That system of law which descend from the Twelve Tables, and formed the basis of all the Roman law. The terms of a private covenant; the condition of an obligation. A form of words prescribed to be used upon particular occasions.

Lex actus /lēks ākta/. In conflicts, the law of the transaction; this governs in choice of law situation.

Lex Eduita /lēks ākytūsh(ly)t/. A statute which introduced and authorized new and more simple methods of instituting actions at law.

Lex equitata gaudet /lēks īkwytdēdī gōdāt/. Law delights in equity.

Lex equitata gaudet; appetit perfectum; est norma recti /lēks īkwytdēdī gōdāt, āpētīt perfektum, ēst nōrma rēktay/. The law delights in equity; it covets perfection; it is a rule of right.

Lex aliquando sequitur equitatem /lēks əlaikwāndō sīkywād īkwytdēdam/. Sometimes follows equity.

Lex amissa /lēks āmīsə/. One who is an infamous, perjured, or outlawed person.

Lex Anastasiana /lēks ənastāzkzyhīzēnə/. The law admitting as agnati the children of emancipated brothers and sisters. A law which provided that a third person who purchased a claim or debt for less than its true or nominal value should not be permitted to recover from the debtor more than the price paid with lawful interest.

Lex Anglia /lēks āŋgliyə/. The law of England. The common law; or, the curtesy of England.

Lex Anglia est lex misericordiae /lēks āŋgliyə ēst lēks mīzərkōrdiyyə/. The law of England is a law of mercy.
Lex Anglie non patitur absurdum /léks ãgliyiy non pëdadzor absôrdam/. The law of England does not suffer an absurdity.

Lex Anglie nunquam matris sed semper patris conditionem imitari partum judicat /léks ãgliyiyi nãngwam méytrás sëd sëmpar pàtrás kandishyownam imätary pärdam jùwdat/. The law of England rules that the offspring shall always follow the condition of the father, never that of the mother.

Lex Anglie nunquam sine parlamento mutari potest /léks ãgliyiyi nãngwam sàniyi pärl(y)ümëntow myuwëtëray pòwdat/. The law of England cannot be changed but by parliament.

Lex apostata /léks ãpòstëyda/. A thing contrary to law.

Lex apparenz /léks spàrænz/. In old English and Norman law, apparent or manifest law. A term used to denote the trial by battel or duel, and the trial by ordeal. “lex” having the sense of process of law. Called “apparent” because the plaintiff was obliged to make his right clear by the testimony of witnesses, before he could obtain an order from the court to summon the defendant.

Lex Apuleja, or Apuleia /léks ãpùliya/. A law giving to one of several joint sureties or guarantors, who had paid more than his proportion of the debt secured, a right of action for reimbursement against his co-sureties as if a partnership existed between them.

Lex Aquilici /léks ëkùliyi/. The Aquilian law; a celebrated law passed on the proposition of the tribune C. Aquilici Gallus, A.U.C. 672, superseding the earlier portions of the Twelve Tables, and regulating the compensation to be made for that kind of damage called “injurious,” in the cases of killing or wounding the slave or beast of another.

Lex Attilia /léks ëttìliya/. The Attilian law. A law of Rome proposed by the tribune L. Attilius Regulus, A.U.C. 443, which conferred upon the magistrate the right of appointing guardians. It applied only to the city of Rome.

Lex Attinæa /léks ãtîniya/. The Atinan law. A law declaring that the property in things stolen should not be acquired by prescription (usuacapion).

Lex baluvariorum, (baloriorum, or bolorum) /léks ëbërvërëyóram/*bëv(ory)óram/. The law of the Bavarians, a barbarous nation of Europe, first collected (together with the law of the Franks and Alemani) by Theodoric I, and finally completed and promulgated by Dagobert.

Lex barbara /léks bårbara/. The barbarian law. The laws of those nations that were not subject to the Roman empire were so called.

Lex beneficiae rei consimili remedium prestatat /léks bènëfís(h)i)yëyas rìyay kansimélay ræ míy(i)yam priystat/. A beneficial law affords a remedy for a similar case.

Lex brehonla /léks bërhôwn(i)yà/. The Brehon or Irish law, overthrown by King John.

Lex bretoise /léks bëtôyî/-. The law of the ancient Britons, or Marches of Wales.

Lex Judicialis /léks jadís(h)iýéylas/. An ordeal.

Lex Julia /léks júwl(i)ya/. Several statutes bore this name, being distinguished by the addition of words descriptive of their subject matter.

The "lex Julia de aduileriis" related to marriage, dower, and kindred subjects. The lex Julia de ambitu was a law to repress illegal methods of seeking office. The lex Julia de annona was designed to repress combinations for heightening the price of provisions. The "lex Julia de cessione bonorum" related to bankruptcies. The lex Julia de majestate inflicted the punishment of death on all who attempted anything against the emperor or state. The lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus forbade senators and their children to intermarry with freedmen and infames, and freedmen to intermarry infares. The lex Julia de residuis was a law punishing those who gave an incomplete account of public money committed to their charge. The lex Julia de peculatu punished those who had stolen public money or property or anything sacred or religious. Magistrates and those who had aided them in stealing public money during their administration were punished capitaly; other persons were deported. As to lex Julia et Papia Poppaeae, see Lex Papia Poppaeae.

Lex Julia majestatis /léks júwl(i)ya májástéydas/. The Julian law of majesty. A law promulgated by Julius Cæsar, and again published with additions by Augustus, comprehending all the laws before enacted to punish transgressors against the state.

Lex Junia Norbana /léks júwn(i)ya nórbénya/. The law concerning legal freedom on all such freedmen as were tuitione praetoris. See Latini juniani.

Lex Junia velleva conferred the same right on posthumous children born in the lifetime of the testator, but after the execution of the will, as were enjoyed by those born after the death of the testator.

Lex Junia Velleva /léks júwn(i)ya velvéy/. A law providing that descendants who became sui heredes of the testator otherwise than by birth, as by the death of their father, must be disinherited or instituted heirs in the same way as posthumous children.

Lex Kantic /léks kánsñiyay/. The body of customs prevailing in Kent during the time of Edward I. A written statement of these customs was sanctioned by the king’s justices in eyre. They were mainly concerned with the maintenance of a form of land tenure known as gavelkind (q.v.).

Lex loci /léks lówsay/. The law of the place. This may be of several descriptions but, in general, lex loci is only used for lex loci contractus (q.v.).

The "lex loci" furnishes the standard of conduct, Russ v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 220 N.C. 715, 18 S.E.2d 130, 131; it governs as to all matters going to the basis of the right of action itself, State of Maryland, for Use of Joyner, v. Coard, 175 Va. 571, 9 S.E.2d 454, 458. The substantive rights of parties to action are governed by "lex loci" or law of place where rights were acquired or liabilities incurred. Sullivan v. McFetridge, Sup., 53 N.Y.S.2d 511, 516; Gray v. Blight, C.C.A. Colo., 112 F.2d 686, 689.

Lex loci actus /léks lówsay aktas/. The law of the place where the act was done.

Lex loci celebrationis /léks lówsay sèlabréshshiyowmas/. The law of the place where a contract is made.

Lex loci contractus /léks lówsay kantrikéktas/. Used sometimes to denote the law of the place where the contract was made, and at other times to denote the law by which the contract is to be governed (i.e. place of its performance), which may or may not be the same as that of the place where it was made. The earlier cases do not regard this distinction. Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U.S. 124, 1 S.Ct. 102, 27 L.Ed. 104; Hayward v. LeBaron, 4 Fla. 404; Scudder v. Bank, 91 U.S. 406, 23 L.Ed. 245.

Lex loci delictus /léks lówsay dlékstas/. The law of the place where the crime or wrong took place. The "lex loci delicti", or "place of the wrong", is the state where the last event necessary to make an actor liable for an alleged tort takes place. Sestito v. Knop, C.A.Wis., 297 F.2d 33, 34. More fully expressed by the words lex loci delicti commissi (law of the place where a tort is committed), usually written more briefly as lex loci delicti, or, sometimes, simply lex delicti.

Lex loci domicilli /léks lówsay dòmåsliyay/. The law of the place of domicile.
Lex loci rei sitae /léks löwsay rićay sáydiy/. The law of the place where a thing or subject-matter is situated. The title to realty or question of real estate law can be affected only by the law of the place where the reality is situated. Golden v. Alexander, 141 Tex. 134, 171 S.W.2d 328, 335; United States v. Becktold Co., C.C.A.Mo., 129 F.2d 473, 477.

Lex loci solutionis /léks löwsay sa(y)wuhshiyównas/. The law of the place of solution; the law of the place where payment or performance of a contract is to be made.

Lex longobardorum /léks lângbourdôrôm/. The law of the Lombards. The name of an ancient code of laws among that people, framed, probably, between the fifth and eighth centuries. It continued in force after the incorporation of Lombardy into the empire of Charlemagne, and traces of its laws and institutions are said to be still discoverable in some parts of Italy.

Lex manifesta /léks mënsafêsta/. Manifest or open law; the trial by duel or ordeal.

Lex mercatoria /léks márktôriya/. The law-merchant; commercial law. That system of laws which is adopted by all commercial nations, and constitutes a part of the law of the land. It is part of the common law.

Lex non precipit inutilia, quia inutilis labor stultus /léks nôn prêçépd inyuwi(y)ya, kwâsya inyuwiwals léybar stôlûts. The law commands not useless things, because useless labor is foolish.

Lex non requirit verificari quod apparat curle /léks nôn rôkwîst vêhrâfikárêy kwôd apôsîrî kûriyîyô/. The law does not require that to be verified [or proved] which is apparent to the court.

Lex non scripta /léks nôn skrípta/. The unwritten or common law, which includes general and particular customs, and particular local laws.

Lex ordinandi /léks órdânànday/. The same as lex fori (q.v.).

Lex Papia Poppea /léks pépyîya popîya/. The Papian Poppean law. A law proposed by the consuls Papius and Poppeus at the desire of Augustus A.U.C. 782, enlarging the Lex Præitoria (q.v.). The law which exempted from tutelage women who had three children. It is usually considered with the Lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus as one law.

Lex patronia /léks pëtriyi/. National law.

Lex Petronia /léks patrôniya/. The law forbidding masters to expose their slaves to contests with wild beasts.

Lex Praetoria /léks platóriya/. A law designed for the protection of minors against frauds and allowing them in certain cases to apply for the appointment of a guardian.

Lex plus laudatur quando ratione probatur /léks plës lôdëydr kwôdôw réyshiyôwnîy prôbëydr/. The law is the more praised when it is approved by reason.

Lex Poetella /léks p(ôw)átîyiya/. The law abolishing the right of a creditor to sell or kill his debtor.
Lex Pompeia de parricidilis /léks pòmpiyá diý pärsásy diýas/. The law which inflicted a punishment on one who had caused the death of a parent or child. The offender was by this law to be sewn up in a sack with a dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and thrown into the sea or a river, so that even in his lifetime he might begin to be deprived of the use of the elements; that the air might be denied him whilst he lived and the earth when he died.

Lex posterior derogat priori /léks pòstríriyá déráwgt prtíýoray/. A later statute takes away the effect of a prior one. But the later statute must either expressly repeal, or be manifestly repugnant to, the earlier one.

Lex prætoria /léks pratráyia/. The Praetorian law. A law by which every freedman who made a will was commanded to leave a moiety to his patron. The term has been applied to the rules that govern in a court of equity.

Lex prospicit, non respicit /léks pró(w)spsát, nón rêspsát/. The law looks forward, not backward.

Lex Publilia /léks públíliyá/. The law providing that the plebiscita should bind the whole people. The lex Publilia de sponsu allowed sponsors, unless reimbursed within six months, to recover from their principal by a special actio what they had paid.

Lex punit mendacium /léks puýwnt mandéys(h)-i(y)ám/. The law punishes falsehood.

Lex regia /léks ríyíyá/. The royal or imperial law. A law enacted (or supposed or claimed to have been enacted) by the Roman people, constituting the emperor a source of law, conferring the legislative power upon him, and according the force and obligation of law to the expression of his mere will or pleasure.

Lex rei sita /léks ríyay sáydiy/. The law of the place of situation of the thing. It is said to be an inexact mode of expression; lex situs, or lex loci rei sitae are better.

Gillum, 183 Okl. 519, 83 P.2d 193, 196; legal responsibility, Clark v. Lowden, D.C.Minn., 43 F.Supp. 261, 263; penalty for failure to pay tax when due, State v. Fischl, 94 Mont. 92, 20 P.2d 1057, 1059; present, current, future, fixed or contingent debts, Erickson v. Grande Ronde Lumber Co., 162 Or. 556, 92 P.2d 170, 174; punishment, Holliman v. Cole, 168 Okl. 473, 34 P.2d 597, 599; responsibility for torts, Italians v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, 45 Cal.App.2d 464, 114 P.2d 370, 372; tax, State ex rel. DuFrene v. Leslie, 100 Mont. 449, 50 P.2d 959, 963; Thompson v. Smith, 189 Okl. 217, 114 P.2d 922, 924; that which one is under obligation to pay, or for which one is liable, Reconstruction Finance Corporation v. Gossett, Tex., 111 S.W.2d 1066; the state of being bound or obliged in law or justice to do, pay, or make good something; the state of one who is bound in law and justice to do something which may be enforced by action, Fidelity Coal Co. v. Diamond, 310 Ill.App. 387, 34 N.E.2d 123; Clark v. Lowden, D.C.Minn., 48 F.Supp. 261, 263; unliquidated claim.

All the claims against a corporation. Liabilities include accounts and wages and salaries payable, dividends declared payable, accrued taxes payable, fixed or long-term liabilities such as mortgage bonds, debentures and bank loans.

See also Current liabilities; Employer’s liability acts; Legal liability; Liable; Limitation of Liability Act; Malpractice; Parental liability; Personal liability; Product liability; Several liability; Strict liability; Vicarious liability.

Accrued liability. Obligation which has been incurred but not yet paid; e.g. taxes, rent.

Children. See Parental liability.

Contingent liability. A liability not yet fixed but dependent on events to occur in the future (e.g. a pending law suit).

Fixed liability. One fixed as to time, amount, etc.; e.g. mortgage.

Joint and several liability. Responsible together and individually. The person who has been harmed can sue and recover from both wrongdoers or from either one of the wrongdoers (if he goes after both of them, he does not, however, receive double compensation). See Joint tort-feasors.

Joint liability. Liability for which more than one person is responsible. See also Contribution; Joint tort-feasors.

Liability bond. See Bond.

Primary liability. A liability for which a person is directly responsible as contrasted with one which is contingent or secondary.

Secondary liability. A liability in the nature of a contingent claim such as the liability of a guarantor as contrasted with that of a strict surety or co-maker. A guarantor’s liability does not arise until the principal debtor has failed to pay the creditor.

Liability created by statute. One depending for its existence on the enactment of a statute, and not on the contract of the parties. One which would not exist but for the statute. Cannon v. Miller, 22 Wash.2d 227, 155 P.2d 500, 507, 508.

Liability for damages. Liability for an amount to be ascertained by trial of the facts in particular cases.

Liability in solido. Liability in solido, whether emanating from tort or contract, means that either of the debtors may be required to discharge obligation in full at creditor's election. Cunningham v. Hardware Mut. Cas. Co., La.App., 228 So.2d 700, 705.

Liability insurance. Contract by which one party promises on consideration to compensate or reimburse other if he shall suffer loss from specified cause or to guaranty or indemnify or secure him against loss from that cause. Fidelity General Ins. Co. v. Nelson Steel & Wire Co., 132 Ill.App.2d 635, 270 N.E.2d 616, 620. That type of insurance protection which indemnifies one from liability to third persons as contrasted with insurance coverage for losses sustained by the insured. See also Insurance.

Liable. Bound or obliged in law or equity; responsible; chargeable; answerable; compellable to make satisfaction, compensation, or restitution. Homan v. Employers Reinsurance Corporation, 345 Mo. 650, 136 S.W.2d 289, 298. Obligated; accountable for or chargeable with. Condition of being bound to respond because a wrong has occurred. Condition out of which a legal liability might arise. Pacific Fire Ins. Co. v. Murdoch Cotton Co., 193 Ark. 327, 99 S.W.2d 233, 235. Justly or legally responsible or answerable.

Exposed or subject to a given contingency, risk, or casualty, which is more or less probable. Pacific Fire Ins. Co. v. Murdoch Cotton Co., 193 Ark. 327, 99 S.W.2d 233, 235. Exposed, as to damage, penalty, expense, burden, or anything unpleasant or dangerous. See also Liability.

Future possible or probable happening which may not actually occur, and relates to an occurrence within the range of possibility. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Smith, 209 Ala. 301, 96 So. 239, 240; Pacific Fire Ins. Co. v. Murdoch Cotton Co., 193 Ark. 327, 99 S.W.2d 233, 235. In all probability. Neely v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., Mo.App., 14 S.W.2d 972, 978. See also Contingency; Contingent.

Libel /līˈbāl/. A method of defamation expressed by print, writing, pictures, or signs. In its most general sense, any publication that is injurious to the reputation of another. A false and unprivileged publication in writing of defamatory material. Bright v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist., 51 Cal.App.3d 852, 124 Cal.Rptr. 598, 604. A maliciously written or printed publication which tends to blacken a person's reputation or to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or to injure him in his business or profession. Corabi v. Curtis Pub. Co., 441 Pa. 432, 273 A.2d 899, 904.

Accusation in writing or printing against the character of a person which affects his reputation, in that it tends to hold him up to ridicule, contempt, shame, disgrace, or obloquy, to degrade him in the estimation of the community, to induce an evil opinion of him in the minds of rightthinking persons, to make him an object of reproach, to diminish his respectability or abridge his comforts, to change his position in society for the worse, to dishonor or discredit him in the estimation of the public, or his friends and acquaintances, or to deprive him of friendly intercourse in society, or cause him to be shunned or avoided, or where it is charged that one has violated any duty as a public officer. Almost any language which upon its face has a natural tendency to injure a man's reputation, either generally or with respect to his occupation. Washer v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, 21 Cal.2d 822, 136 P.2d 297, 300.

There can be no presumption of malice or bad faith consistent with freedom of the press under First Amend., U.S.Const. if plaintiff is a public figure. Malice must be proved on a showing that defendant published material either knowing it to be false or recklessly without regard as to whether it is true or false. N. Y. Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686.

See also Actionable per quod; Actionable per se; Criminal (Criminal libel); Innuendo; Libelous per quod; Libelous per se; Malice; Obscene libel; Privilege; Publication; Seditious libel; Single publication rule. Constitutional privilege. Prior to New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686 (1964), media comment on the conduct of public officials or public figures was free from liability for libel only in certain limited circumstances, usually difficult to prove at trial. If a statement of fact was involved, it had to be substantially true; if a comment or opinion was involved, it had to be based on true facts which fully and fairly justified the comment or opinion. The United States Supreme Court, however, in a series of decisions beginning with New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, imposed constitutional limitations on State libel laws, based upon the First Amendment guarantees of freedom of speech and press. In New York Times, the Supreme Court eroded the prior common law libel standard of strict liability, holding that misstatements of fact or unjustified comments or opinions published by the media about the conduct of public officials were constitutionally privileged, unless the false or unjustified material was published with "actual malice," i.e., with actual knowledge of falsity or with reckless disregard of probable falsity. By requiring a public official plaintiff to prove actual malice on the part of defendant, the burden of proving that the material was false was shifted to plaintiff, contrary to the common law rule which presumed falsity. Group libel. The holding up of a group to ridicule, scorn or contempt to a respectable and considerable part of the community. The plaintiff must prove that he is a member of the group. Pleadings. Formerly, the initiatory pleading in an admiralty action, corresponding to the declaration, bill or complaint. Since 1966 the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and Supp. Admiralty Rules have governed admiralty actions and as such, admiralty actions are now commenced by complaint.
Libelant /líabalát/. Formerly, the complainant or party who files a libel in an ecclesiastical or admiralty case, corresponding to the plaintiff in actions at law. See Libel (Pleadings).

Libellee /líabalí/. Formerly, a party against whom a libel has been filed in an ecclesiastical court or in admiralty, corresponding to the defendant in actions at law. See Libel (Pleadings).

Libellus /labélas/. Lat. In the civil law, a little book. Feudal law. An instrument of alienation or conveyance, as of a fief, or a part of it.

Libellus supplex. A petition, especially to the emperor, all petitions to whom must be in writing. Libellum rescribere, to mark on such petition the answer to it. Libellum agere, to assist or counsel the emperor in regard to such petitions. Libellus accusatorius, an information and accusation of a crime. Libellus divortii, a writing of divorce. Libellus rerum, an inventory. Libellus oratio consultoria, a message by which emperors laid matters before the senate. Libellus appellatorius, an appeal.

Libellus conventions /labélas kanvénsísiównas/. In the civil law, the statement of a plaintiff’s claim in a petition presented to the magistrate, who directed an officer to deliver it to the defendant.

Libellus famosus /labélas famównas/. In the civil law, a defamationatory; a publication injuriously affecting character; a libel.

Libel of review. New proceeding instituted to attack final decree after expiration of term and right to appeal. The Astorian, C.C.A.Cal., 57 F.2d 85, 87.

Libelous /láyb(a)las/. Defamatory; of the nature of a libel, constituting or involving libel. See also Libel.

Libelous per quod /láyb(a)las pár kwó/. Expressions “libelous per quod” are such as require that their injurious character or effect be established by allegation and proof. They are those expressions which are not actionable upon their face, but which become so by reason of the peculiar situation or occasion upon which the words are written. Publications which are susceptible of two reasonable interpretations, one of which is defamationary and the other is not, or publications which are not obviously defamationary, but which become so when considered in connection with innuendo, colloquium, and explanatory circumstances. See Actionable per quod.

Libelous per se /láyb(a)las pár síy/. A publication is libelous per se when the words are of such a character that an action may be brought upon them without the necessity of showing any special damage, the imputation being such that the law will presume that any one so slandered must have suffered damage. Robinson v. Nationwide Ins. Co., 273 N.C. 391, 159 S.E.2d 896, 898. To render words “libelous per se,” the words must be of such character that a presumption of law will arise therefrom that the plaintiff has been degraded in the estimation of his friends or of the public or has suffered some other loss either in his property, character, reputation, or business or in his domestic or social relations. When a publication is “libelous per se”, that is, defamationary on its face, it is actionable per se; i.e. one need not prove that he received any injury as a result of the publication in order to recover damages, and in such a case general damages for loss of personal or business reputation are recoverable and no avemements or proof of special damages are necessary. Rosenbloom v. Metromedia, Inc., D.C.Pa., 289 F.Supp. 737, 743. See Actionable per se.

Liber, adj. /láybar/. Lat. Free; open and accessible, as applied to courts, places, etc.; of the state or condition of a free man, as applied to persons. Exempt from the service or jurisdiction of another.

Liber, n. /láybar/. Lat. A book, of whatever material composed; a main division or unit of a literary or professional work.

Lilibra /lib(b)ra/. Lat. (Feminine of liber, adj.) Free; at liberty; exempt; not subject to toll or charge.

Lilibra batella /lib(b)ra batél/. In old records, a free boat; the right of having a boat to fish in a certain water; a species of free fishery.

Lilibra chasa habenda /lib(b)ra chésh(h)(i)ya habénda/. In old English law, a judicial writ granted to a person for a free chase belonging to his manor after proof made by inquiry of a jury that the same of right belongs to him.

Lilibra eleemosyna /lib(b)ra ilamóseana/. In old English law, free alms, frankalmoigne.

Lilibra faldra /lib(b)ra fólda/. In old English law, frank fold; free fold; free foldage.

Liberal /lib(b)ral/. Free in giving; generous; not restrained or narrow-minded; not literal or strict.

Liberal construction or interpretation /lib(b)ral konstróksín/ "antárpratéyshn/". See Construction.

Lilibra lex /lib(b)ra léks/. In old English law, free law; frank law; the law of the land. The law enjoyed by free and lawful men, as distinguished from such men as have lost the benefit and protection of the law in consequence of crime. Hence this term denoted the status of a man who stood guiltless before the law, and was free, in the sense of being entitled to its full protection and benefit. Amittere liberam legem (to lose one’s free law) was to fall from that status by crime or infamy.

Liberam legem amittere /libiram líyam amidáry/. To lose one’s free law (called the villainous judgment), to become discredited or disabled as juror and witness, to forfeit goods and chattels and lands for life, to have those lands wasted, houses razed, trees rooted up, and one’s body committed to prison. It was anciently pronounced against conspirators but is now disused, the punishment substituted being fine and imprisonment.

Lilibra piscaria /lib(b)ra poșkériya/. In old English law, a free fishery.

Liberare /libóréry/. Lat. In old English law, to deliver, transfer, or hand over. Applied to writs, panels of jurors, etc.

In the civil law, to free or set free; to liberate; to give one his liberty.
Liber assisarum /lāybar ąsāzyēram/. The Book of Assizes or pleas of the crown. A collection of cases that arose on assizes and other trials in the country. It was the fourth volume of the reports of the reign of Edward III.

Liberata pecunia non liberat offerentem /librēyda pokośyn(i)y) nōn libobod ęfārēntam/. Money being restored does not set free the party offering.

Liberate /librēydiy/. In old English practice, an original writ issuing out of chancery to the treasurer, chamberlains, and barons of the eschequer, for the payment of any annual pension, or other sum.

A writ issued to a sheriff, for the delivery of any lands or goods taken upon forfeits of recognizance. A writ issued to a gaoler for the delivery of a prisoner that had put in bail for his appearance. A writ which issues on lands, tenements, and chattels, being returned under an extent on a statute staple, commanding the sheriff to deliver them to the plaintiff, by the extent and appraisement mentioned in the writ of extent and in the sheriff’s return thereto.

To set free, as from bondage, slavery, oppression, or enemy control.

Liberatio /librēysh(i)y)ow/. In old English law, livery; money paid for the delivery or use of a thing.

Liberation /librēyshan/. In civil law, the extinguishment of a contract, by which he who was bound becomes free or liberated. Synonymous with payment.

Liber authenticorum /lāybar ąṣeŋtokōram/. The authentic collection of the novels of Justinian, so called to distinguish them from the Epitome Juliani.

Lëbera warrena /līb(a)ra wōhrana/. In old English law, free warren (q.v.).

Liber bancus /lāybar bēŋkas/. In old English law, free bench.

Liber et legallis homo /lāybar ēt lągęęłsy hömvow/. In old English law, a free and lawful man. A term applied to a juror, or to one worthy of being a jurymen, from the earliest period.

Liber feudorum /lāybar fyʉwðōram/. See Feudorum liber.

Liber homo /lāybar hömvow/. See Homo liber.

Liber /libray/. In Saxon law, freemen; the possessors of allodial lands.

In the civil law, children. The term included "grandchildren."

Liber judicallis of Alfred /lāybar jadis(h)ięę łyas av aiřed/. Alfred’s dome-book. See Dombec; Dome-book.

Liber niger /lāybar nāỳjar/. Black book or register in the exchequer. Chartularies of abbeys, cathedrals, etc. A name given to several ancient records.

Liber niger domus regis /lāybar nāỳjar dówmas rięjas/. The black book of the king’s household.

Liberas /libbataes/. Lat. Liberty; freedom; a privilege; a franchise.

Liberatas ecclesiastica /libbataes skliỳzięriyęstaka/. Church liberty, or ecclesiastical immunity.

Liberas est naturalis facultas ejus quod culegue facere libet, nisi quod de jure aut vi prohibetur /libbataes ėst ęṇcęraỳęla fakętāla fysas kwōd ę(y)uww). Liberty is that natural faculty which permits every one to do [or the natural power of doing] anything he pleases except that which is restrained by law or force.

Liberas inestimabilis res est /libbataes inęstęmyyębalas riỳz ėst/. Liberty is an inestimable thing; a thing above price.

Liberas non recipit estimationem /libbataes nōn ręsqapęt ěstamętyyųwōnam/. Freedom does not admit of valuation.

Liberas omnibus rebus favorabilior est /libbataes źmnbas riỳbas féyyvaraỳyęlęy ėst/. Liberty is more favored than all things [anything].

Liberattas regales ad coronam spectant ex concessione regum à corona exerent /libbęydiyęz ręgyęyllęz ěd karōnım spekęntęylyęs kęskęshięōnymi riỳgim ěy karōném ęgęyięrant/. Royal franchises relating to the crown have emanated from the crown by grant of kings.

Liberattibus allocandis /libbęydiyębas asŁąkęęndas/. A writ lying for a citizen or burgess, impleaded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed.

Liberattibus exigendis in itinere /libbęydiyębas eęzęjęndas asęńinęri/. An ancient writ whereby the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit an attorney for the defense of another’s liberty.

Libertil /labārdy/. Libertal /libbętāny). Lat. In Roman law, freedmen. The condition of those who, having been slaves, had been made free. There seems to have been some difference in the use of these two words; the former denoting the manumitted slaves considered in their relations with their former master, who was now called their “patron;” the latter term applying to them in their status in the general social economy of Rome subsequent to manumission.

Liberticide /labārdasayd/ liberal*. A destroyer of liberty.

Liberties /libbędiy/. Privileged districts exempt from the sheriff’s jurisdiction; as, “gazl liberties.” See Gaol.

In colonial times, laws, or legal rights resting upon them. The early colonial ordinances in Massachusetts were termed laws and liberties, and the code of 1641 the “Body of Liberties.” Formerly, political subdivisions of Philadelphia; as, Northern Liberties.
Libertium ingratum leges civilis in pristinam servitutem redigunt; sed leges Anglie semel manumissum semper liberum judicant /libertānem ingrédam līyijis y sūvlįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįįί. The civil laws reduce an ungrateful freedman to his original slavery; but the laws of England regard a man once manumitted as ever after free.

Liberty. Freedom: exemption from extraneous control. Freedom from all restraints except such as are justly imposed by law. Freedom from restraint, under conditions essential to the equal enjoyment of the same right by others; freedom regulated by law. The absence of arbitrary restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulations and prohibitions imposed in the interests of the community. Arnold v. Board of Barber Examiners, 45 N.M. 57, 109 P.2d 779, 785.

The power of the will to follow the dictates of its unrestricted choice, and to direct the external acts of the individual without restraint, coercion, or control from other persons. See Booth v. Illinois, 184 U.S. 425, 22 S.Ct. 425, 46 L.Ed. 623; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 24 L.Ed. 77.

Liberty, on its positive side, denotes the fullness of individual existence; on its negative side it denotes the necessary restraint on all, which is needed to promote the greatest possible amount of liberty for each.

The word "liberty" as used in the state and federal constitutions means, in a negative sense, freedom from restraint, but in a positive sense, it involves the idea of freedom secured by the imposition of restraint, and it is in this positive sense that the state, in the exercise of its police powers, promotes the freedom of all by the imposition upon particular persons of restraints which are deemed necessary for the general welfare. Fitzsimmons v. New York State Athletic Commission, Sup., 146 N.Y.S. 117, 121.

Term "liberty" as used in Constitution means more than freedom from arrest or restraint and includes freedom of action, freedom to own, control, and use property, freedom to pursue any lawful trade, business or calling, and freedom to make all proper contracts in relation thereto. State v. Nuss, 79 S.D. 522, 114 N.W.2d 633, 635.

The "personal liberty" guaranteed by Thirteenth Amend., U.S.Const., consists in the power of locomotion without imprisonment or restraint unless by course of law, except those restraints imposed to prevent commission of threatened crime or in punishment of crime committed, those in punishment of contempt of courts or legislative bodies or to render their jurisdiction effectual, and those necessary to enforce the duty citizens owe in defense of the state to protect community against acts of those who by reason of mental infirmity are incapable of self-control.

The "liberty" safeguarded by Fourteenth Amendment is liberty in a social organization which requires the protection of law against the evils which menace the health, safety, morals, and welfare of the people. West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379, 57 S.Ct. 578, 581, 582, 81 L.Ed. 703.

Also, a franchise or personal privilege, being some part of the sovereign power, vested in an individual, either by grant or prescription.
The term is used in the expression, rights, liberties, and franchises, as a word of the same general class and meaning with those words and privileges. This use of the term is said to have been strictly conformable to its sense as used in Magna Charta and in English declarations of rights, statutes, grants, etc.

In a derivative sense, the place, district, or boundaries within which a special franchise is enjoyed, an immunity claimed, or a jurisdiction exercised. In this sense, the term is commonly used in the plural; as the "liberties of the city."

Civil liberty. The liberty of a member of society, being a man's natural liberty, so far restrained by human laws (and no further) as is necessary and expedient for the general advantage of the public. 1 Bl.Comm. 125. The power of doing whatever the laws permit. 1 Bl.Comm. 6. The greatest amount of absolute liberty which can, in the nature of things, be equally possessed by every citizen in a state. Guaranteed protection against interference with the interests and rights held dear and important by large classes of civilized men, or by all the members of a state, together with an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws, as the best apparatus to secure that protection. See Civil rights.

Liberty of a port. In marine insurance, a license or permission incorporated in a marine policy allowing the vessel to touch and trade at a designated port other than the principal port of destination.

Liberty of conscience. Liberty for each individual to decide for himself what is to himself religious. Gobitis v. Minersville School Dist., D.C.Pa., 21 F.Supp. 581, 584. See also, Religious liberty, as defined below.

Liberty of contract. The ability at will, to make or abstain from making, a binding obligation enforced by the sanctions at the law. The right to contract about one's affairs, including the right to make contracts of employment, and to obtain the best terms one can as the result of private bargaining. Adkins v. Children's Hospital of District of Columbia, 261 U.S. 525, 43 S.Ct. 394, 396, 67 L.Ed. 785. It includes the corresponding right to accept a contract proposed. There is, however, no absolute freedom of contract. The government may regulate or forbid any contract reasonably calculated to affect injuriously public interest. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 219 U.S. 186, 31 S.Ct. 164, 55 L.Ed. 167; Carleton Screw Products Co. v. Fleming, C.C.A.Minn., 126 F.2d 537, 541. It means freedom from arbitrary or unreasonable restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulation to safeguard public interest; or the right to make contracts with competent persons on a plane of relative parity or freedom of choice and within the limits allowed or not forbidden by law. McGrew v. Industrial Commission, 96 Utah 203, 85 P.2d 608, 612. See Art. I, § 10, U.S. Constitution.

Liberty of speech. Freedom accorded by the Constitution (First Amendment of U.S.Const.) or laws to express opinions and facts by word of mouth, unconstrained by any censorship or restrictions of government. As used in Constitution, "freedom of speech" means freedom of speech as it was understood by the common law when the Constitution was adopted. State v. Boloff, 138 Or. 568, 7 P.2d 775, 781. See however Clear and present danger doctrine. See also Symbolic speech.

Liberty of the globe. In marine insurance, a license or permission incorporated in a marine policy authorizing the vessel to go to any part of the world, instead of being confined to a particular port of destination.

Liberty of the press. The right to print and publish the truth, from good motives and for justifiable ends, as guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution. Kline v. Robert M. McBride & Co., 170 Misc. 974, 11 N.Y.S.2d 674, 679. The right to print without any previous license, subject to the consequences of the law. The right to publish whatever one may please, Knapp v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 111 Colo. 492, 144 P.2d 981, 985; Howard Sports Daily v. Weller, 179 Md. 355, 18 A.2d 210, 215; and to be protected against any responsibility for so doing except so far as such publications, from their blasphemy, obscenity, or scandalous character, may be a public offense, or as by their falsehood and malice they may injuriously affect the standing, reputation, or pecuniary interests of individuals. Immunity from previous restraints or [from] censorship. Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233, 56 S.Ct. 444, 449, 80 L.Ed. 660; Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357. See Censor; Censorship; Prior restraint.

Liberty to hold pleas. The liberty of having a court of one's own. Thus certain lords had the privilege of holding pleas within their own manors.

Natural liberty. The power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, unless by the law of nature. The right which nature gives to all mankind of disposing of their persons and property after the manner they judge most consistent with their happiness, on condition of their acting within the limits of the law of nature, and so as not to interfere with an equal exercise of the same rights by other men. 1 Bl.Comm. 125.

Personal liberty. The right or power of locomotion; of changing situation, or moving one's person to whatsoever place one's own inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law. Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3, 3 S.Ct. 42, 27 L.Ed. 835.

Political liberty. Liberty of the citizen to participate in the operations of government, and particularly in the making and administration of the laws.

Religious liberty. Freedom, as guaranteed by First Amendment of U.S. Constitution, from dictation, constraint, or control in matters affecting the conscience, religious beliefs, and the practice of religion. Freedom to entertain and express any or no system of religious opinions, and to engage in or refrain from any form of religious observance or public or private religious worship, not inconsistent with the peace and good order of society and the general welfare. See also Religion; Religious freedom.

Libera corbus nullam reciplit estimationem /librām körps nām respōd ēstāmēshṣiḥyōwnam/. The body of a freeman does not admit of valuation.

Libera est cīquē apud se explora expeditib sibī consilium /librām ēst k(yu)w(ų)yākwyw ēpōd siy ęskplārērī yēn skspěyiḍyat sībay konsi(ły)am/. Every one is free to ascertain for himself whether a recommendation is advantageous to his interest.
A permit, granted by an appropriate governmental body, generally for a consideration, to a person, firm, or corporation to pursue some occupation or to carry on some business subject to regulation under the police power. A license is not a contract between the state and the licensee, but is a mere personal permit. Rosenblatt v. California State Board of Pharmacy, 69 Cal.App.2d 69, 158 P.2d 199, 203. Neither is it property or a property right. American States Water Service Co. of California v. Johnson, 31 Cal.App.2d 606, 88 P.2d 770, 774; Asbury Hospital v. Cass County, 72 N.D. 359, 7 N.W.2d 438, 452.

License with respect to real property is a privilege to go on premises for a certain purpose, but does not operate to confer on, or vest in, licensee any title, interest, or estate in such property. Timmons v. Cropper, 40 Del.Ch. 29, 172 A.2d 757, 759.

Executed license. That which exists when the licensed act has been done.

Executory license. That which exists where the licensed act has not been performed.

Express license. One which is granted in direct terms.

Implied license. One which is presumed to have been given from the acts of the party authorized to give it.

License bond. See Bond.

Patents. A written authority granted by the owner of a patent to another person empowering the latter to make or use the patented article for a limited period or in a limited territory. A permission to make, use or sell articles embodying invention. De Forest Radio Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Radio Corporation of America, D.C.Del., 9 F.2d 150, 151. A transfer which does not affect the monopoly, except by estopping licensor from exercising his prohibitory powers in derogation of privileges conferred upon licensee. L. L. Brown Paper Co. v. Hydroloid, Inc., D.C.N.Y., 3 F.Supp. 857, 867, 888; De Forest Radio Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Radio Corporation of America, D.C.Del., 9 F.2d 150, 151. An assignment by the patentee to another of rights less in degree than the patent itself. Any right to make, use, or sell the patented invention, which is less than an undivided part interest in the patent itself. Any transfer of patent rights short of assignment. Language used by owner of patent, or any conduct on his part exhibited to another, from which that other may properly infer that owner consents to his use of patent, on which the other acts, constitutes a license. General Motors Corporation v. Dailey, C.C.A.Mich., 93 F.2d 938, 941; Finley v. Asphalt Paving Co. of St. Louis, C.C.A.Mo., 69 F.2d 498, 504. Transfer of exclusive right to do merely two of the three rights under patent to make, use, and vend invention. Overman Cushion Tire Co. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 59 F.2d 998, 1000.

Pleading. The defense of justification to an action of trespass that the defendant was authorized by the owner of the land to commit the trespass complained... of. License is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded by defendant. Fed.R.Civ. P. 8(c).

Real property. A license is ordinarily considered to be a mere personal or revocable privilege to perform an act or series of acts on the land of another. Hennebont Co. v. Kroger Co., 221 Pa.Super. 65, 289 A.2d 229, 231. A privilege to go on premises for a certain purpose, but does not operate to confer on, or vest in, licensee any title, interest, or estate in such property. Timmons v. Crophopper, 40 Del.Ch. 29, 172 A.2d 757, 759. Such privilege is unassignable.

A license is distinguished from an "easement," which implies an interest in the land, and a "lease," or right to take the profits of land. It may be, however, and often, is, coupled with a grant of some interest in the land itself, or right to take the profits. National Memorial Park v. C. I. R., C.C.A.4, 145 F.2d 1008, 1015.

Simple license. One revocable at the will of the grantor; i.e., one not coupled with a grant.

Streets and highways. A permit to use street is a mere revocable privilege at pleasure. City of Boston v. A. W. Perry, Inc., 304 Mass. 18, 22 N.E.2d 627, 630; Lanham v. Forney, 196 Wash. 62, 81 P.2d 777, 779. The privilege of using the streets and highways by the operation thereon of motor carriers for hire can be acquired only by permission or license from the state or its political subdivisions.

Trade, business or calling. Authority or permission to do or carry on some trade or business which would otherwise be unlawful. Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) v. State Board of Equalization, 110 Mont. 5, 99 P.2d 229, 234. Permission conferred by proper authority to pursue certain trade, profession, or calling. Lloyds of Texas v. Bobbitt, Tex.Civ.App., 40 S.W.2d 897, 901. A license confers upon licensee neither contractual nor vested rights. Rosenblatt v. California State Board of Pharmacy, 69 Cal.App.2d 69, 158 P.2d 199, 203; Ashbury Hospital v. Cass County, 72 N.D. 358, 7 N.W.2d 438, 452. Nor does it create a property right.

Trade-mark. Permission to use a trade-mark in an area where the purported owner's goods have not become known and identified by his use of mark is a naked "license". E. F. Prichard Co. v. Consumers Brewing Co., C.C.A.Ky., 136 F.2d 512, 521.

License cases. The name given to the group of cases including Peirce v. New Hampshire, 46 U.S. (5 How.) 504, 12 L.Ed. 256, decided by the United States Supreme Court in 1847, to the effect that state laws requiring a license or the payment of a tax for the privilege of selling intoxicating liquors were not in conflict with the constitutional provision giving to Congress the power to regulate interstate commerce, even as applied to liquors imported from another state and remaining in the original and unbroken packages. This decision was overruled in Leisy v. Hardin, 155 U.S. 100, 10 S.Ct. 681, 34 L.Ed. 128, which in turn was counteracted by the act of Congress of August 8, 1890, commonly called the "Wilson law."

Licensee. A person who has a privilege to enter upon land arising from the permission or consent, express or implied, of the possessor of land but who goes on the land for his own purpose rather than for any purpose or interest of the possessor. Reddington v. Beefeaters Tables, Inc., 72 Wis.2d 119, 240 N.W.2d 363, 366. One who is privileged to enter or remain upon land by virtue of possessor's consent, whether given by invitation or permission. Backman v. Vickers Petroleum Co., 187 Kan. 448, 357 P.2d 748, 751.

One who comes on to the premises for his own purpose but with the occupier's consent. Formerly, the duty owed to a licensee was that of refraining from willful, wanton and reckless conduct. This rule has been changed and now, in most jurisdictions, the occupier of land owes the licensee the duty of reasonable or due care. Mounsey v. Ellard, 363 Mass. 693, 297 N.E.2d 43.

See also Exclusive licensee; Invitee.

Licensee by invitation. A person who goes upon the lands of another with express or implied invitation to transact business with the owner or occupant or do some act to his advantage or to the mutual advantage of both the licensee and the owner or occupant. Samuel E. Pentecost Const. Co. v. O'Donnell, 112 Ind.App. 47, 39 N.E.2d 812. An invitee.

Licensee by permission. One who, for his own convenience, curiosity, or entertainment, goes upon the premises of another by the owner's or occupant's permission or sufferance. Samuel E. Pentecost Const. Co. v. O'Donnell, 112 Ind.App. 47, 39 N.E.2d 812, 817.

License fee or tax. Charge imposed by sovereign for a privilege. Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board v. Publisher Commercial Alcohol Co., 347 Pa. 555, 32 A.2d 914, 917. Charge or fee imposed primarily for the discouragement of dangerous employments, the protection of the safety of the public, or the regulation of relative rights, privileges, or duties as between individuals. Conard v. State, Del.Super., 2 Terry 107, 16 A.2d 121, 125. Price paid to governmental or municipal authority for a license to engage in and pursue a particular calling or occupation. Tax on privilege of exercising corporate franchise. City Investments v. Johnson, 6 Cal.2d 150, 56 P.2d 939, 940. The term "license tax" includes both charge imposed under police power for privilege of obtaining license to conduct particular business, and tax imposed upon business for sole purpose of raising revenue; "license tax" being defined as sum exacted fr privilege of carrying on particular occupation. Where a fee is exacted and something is required or permitted in addition to the payment of the sum, either to be done by the licensee, or by some regulation or restriction imposed on him, then the fee is a "license fee". Conard v. State, Del.Super., 2 Terry 107, 16 A.2d 121, 125. A license fee is charge made primarily for regulation, with the fee to cover cost and expenses of supervision or regulation. State v. Jackman, 60 Wis.2d 700, 211 N.W.2d 460, 467.

License in amortization. A license authorizing a conveyance of property which, without it, would be invalid under the statutes of mortmain.

License tax. See License fee or tax.
Licensing. The sale of a license permitting the use of patents, trademarks, or other technology to another firm. See also Cross-licensing.

Licensing power. The authority in a governmental body to grant a license to pursue a particular activity; e.g. license to sell liquor.

Licensor /lāyson(t) sar/. The person who gives or grants a license.

Licentia /lasēnsh(y)a/. Lat. License; leave; permission.

Licentia concordandi /lasēnsh(y)a konkardēnday/. In old practice and conveyancing, license or leave to agree; one of the proceedings on levying a fine of lands. 2 Bl.Comm. 350.

Licentia loquendi /lasēnsh(y)a lakwēnday/. In old practice, leave to speak (i.e., with the plaintiff); an imparlance; or rather leave to imparl. 3 Bl.Comm. 299.

Licentia surgendi /lasēnsh(y)a sarjēnday/. In old English practice, license to arise; permission given by the court to a tenant in a real action, who had cast an essoin de malo lecti, to arise out of his bed. Also, the writ thereupon. If the demandant can show that the tenant was seen abroad before leave of court, and before being viewed by the knights appointed by the court for that purpose, such tenant shall be taken to be deceitfully essoined, and to have made default.

Licentiate /lasēnshat/laysēnshiyēyt/. One who has license to practice any art or faculty.

Licentiousness /lasēnshasnas/. The indulgence of the arbitrary will of the individual, without regard to ethics or law, or respect for the rights of others. Also, lewdness or lasciviousness.

Licere /lasēri/. Lat. To be lawful; to be allowed or permitted by law.

Licere, liceri /lasēri/lasērāy/. Lat. In Roman law, to offer a price for a thing; to bid for it.

Lect /lāyset/lisat/. Lat. From the verb "licere" (q.v.). It is allowed; it is permissible; it is lawful; not forbidden by law.

Lect dispositio de interesse futuro sit inutilis, tamen potest fieri declaratio praececdens que siturator effectum, interveniente novo actu /lāyset dispazish(y)ow diy intarēsī fyuwt(y)ūrow sid inyūwds, tēyman pōwdast fāyaryar dēkkarēsh(y)ow pryssiyēnd(z)d kwiy sōriyēyād afēkam, intrarēnīyēntī nōwvow ēkty(y)ywię/. Although the grant of a future interest be inequitable, yet a declaration precedent may be made, which may take effect provided a new act intervene.

Licta bene miscentur, formula nisi juris obstet /lisēlā bīyinš masēntar, fōrmynā nāysay jūras ēbstet/. Lawful acts [done by several authorities] are well mingled [i.e., become united or consolidated into one good act], unless some form of law forbid. (E.g., Two having a right to convey, each a moiety, may unite and convey the whole.)

Licitarē /lisētīrī/. Lat. In Roman law, to offer a price at a sale; to bid; to bid often; to make several bids, one above another.

Licitation /lisētēyshan/-. In the civil law, an offering for sale to the highest bidder, or to him who will give most for a thing. An act by which co-heirs or other co-proprietors of a thing in common and undivided between them put it to bid between them, to be adjudged and to belong to the highest and last bidder, upon condition that he pay to each of his co-proprietors a part in the price equal to the undivided part which each of the said co-proprietors had in the estate licited, before the adjudication.

Licitator /lisētēydar/. In Roman law, a bidder at a sale.

Licking of thumbs /līkig av ēmz/. An ancient formality by which bargains were completed.

Lidford law /līfard ī/. A sort of lynch law, whereby a person was first punished and then tried.

Lie, n. An untruth deliberately told; the uttering or acting of that which is false for the purpose of deceiving; intentional misstatement. See Perjury.

Lie, v. To subsist; to exist; to be sustainable; to be proper or available. Thus the phrase "an action will not lie" means that an action cannot be sustained, or that there is no ground upon which to found the action.

Lie detector. A machine which records by a needle on a graph varying emotional disturbances when answering questions truly or falsely, as indicated by fluctuations in blood pressure, respiration or perspiration. State v. Cole, 354 Mo. 181, 188 S.W.2d 43, 51. A pathometer; also called "polygraph." In general, the results of lie detector tests are not admissible as evidence; though such have been held admissible on stipulation of the parties by certain courts. Herman v. Eagle Star Ins. Co., 283 F.Supp. 33, affd. 396 F.2d 427. See Polygraph.

Lilege. In feudal law, bound by a feudal tenure; bound in allegiance to the lord paramount, who owned no superior. The term was applied to the lord, or liege lord, to whom allegiance was due, since he was bound to protection and a just government, and also to the feudatory, liegeman, or subject bound to allegiance, for he was bound to tribute and due subjection. So lieges are the king's subjects.

In old records, full; absolute; perfect; pure. Lige widowedness was pure widowhood. Ligius was also used; e.g. ligia potestas, full and free power of disposal.

Lilege homage /līyzh (h)ōmē/līyj*. Homage which, when performed by one sovereign prince to another, included fealty and services, as opposed to simple homage, which was a mere acknowledgment of tenure.

Liegel lord /līyzh lōrd/līyj*. A sovereign; a superior lord.

Liegeman /līyjman/. He that oweth allegiance.

Lieger, or leger /lējar/līyjar/. A resident ambassador.

Liegges, or liege people /līyzhaz/līyzh/piypal/līyj*. Subjects.

Ligula /liyyla/. In old English law, a copy, exemplification, or transcript of a court roll or deed.

Like benefits. Similar in salient features.

Like-kind exchange. An exchange of property held for productive use in trade or business or for investment (except inventory and stocks and bonds) for property of the same type. Unless different property is received (i.e., "boot") the exchange will be nontaxable. I.R.C. § 1031(a).

Limemarcha /limanárka/. In Roman law, an officer who had charge of a harbor or port.

Limine. See Motion in limine.

Limit. v. To abridge, confine, restrain, and restrict. To mark out; to define; to fix the extent of. Thus, to limit an estate means to mark out or to define the period of its duration, and the words employed in deeds for this purpose are thence termed "words of limitation," and the act itself is termed "limiting the estate."
Limitation. Restriction or circumscription; settling an estate or property. A certain time allowed by a statute for bringing litigation (see Statute of limitation, infra). The provisions of state constitution are not a “grant” but a “limitation” of legislative power. Ellerbe v. David, 193 S.C. 332, 8 S.E.2d 518, 520; Mulholland v. Ayers, 109 Mont. 558, 99 P.2d 234, 239. See also Proviso.

Corporations. Under statute providing that all corporations expiring by their own “limitation” shall for certain purposes be continued as bodies corporate for a term of three years, the word “limitation” is an act of limiting, a restriction of power, a qualification. Porter v. Tempa Min. & Mill. Co., 59 Nev. 332, 93 P.2d 741, 743.

Estates. The restriction or circumscription of an estate, in the conveyance by which it is granted, in respect to the interest of the grantee or its duration. The specific curtailment or confinement of an estate, by the terms of the grant, so that it cannot endure beyond a certain period or a designated contingency. A “limitation” on a grant determines an estate upon the happening of the event itself without the necessity of doing any act to regain the estate, such as re-entry. Gulf Production Co. v. Continental Oil Co., Tex., 132 S.W.2d 553, 563. A limitation, whether made by the express words of the party or existing in intendment of law, circumscribes the continuance of time for which the property is to be enjoyed, and by a positive and certain terms, or by reference to some event which possibly may happen, marks the period at which the time of enjoyment shall end.

Collateral limitation. One which gives an interest in an estate for a specified period, but makes the right of enjoyment to depend on some collateral event, as an estate to A. till B. shall go to Rome.

Conditional limitation. A condition followed by a limitation over to a third person in case the condition be not fulfilled or there be a breach of it. A conditional limitation is where an estate is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fall. Between conditional limitations and estates depending on conditions subsequent there is this difference: that in the former the estate determines as soon as the contingency happens; but in the latter it endures until the grantor or his heirs take advantage of the breach.

Contingent limitation. When a remainder in fee is limited upon any estate which would by the common law be adjudged a fee tail, such a remainder is valid as a contingent limitation upon a fee, and vests in possession on the death of the first taker without issue living at the time of his death.

Limitation in law. A limitation in law, or an estate limited, is an estate to be held only during the continuance of the condition under which it was granted, upon the determination of which the estate vests immediately in him in expectancy.

Limitation over. This term includes any estate in the same property created or contemplated by the conveyance, to be enjoyed after the first estate granted expires or is exhausted. Lane v. Citizens & Southern Nat. Bank, 195 Ga. 528, 25 S.E.2d 800, 802, 803. Thus, in a gift to a. for life, with remainder to the heirs of his body, the remainder is a “limitation over” to such heirs.

Special limitation. A qualification serving to mark out the bounds of an estate, so as to determine it ipso facto in a given event, without action, entry, or claim, before it would, or might, otherwise expire by force of, or according to, the general limitation.

Title by limitation. A prescriptive title; one which is indefeasible because of the expiration of the time prescribed by the statute of limitations for the bringing of actions to test or defeat it.

Words of limitation. In a conveyance or will, words which have the effect of marking the duration of an estate are termed “words of limitation.” Thus, in a grant to A. and his heirs, the words “and his heirs” are words of limitation, because they show that A. is to take an estate in fee-simple and do not give his heirs anything. Summit v. Yount, 109 Ind. 506, 9 N.E. 582.

Limitation of actions. See Statute of limitations, below.

Limitation of assize. In old practice, a certain time prescribed by statute, within which a man was required to allege himself or his ancestor to have been seized of lands sued for by a writ of assize.

Statute of limitations. A statute prescribing limitations to the right of action on certain described causes of action or criminal prosecutions; that is, declaring that no suit shall be maintained on such causes of action, nor any criminal charge be made, unless brought within a specified period of time after the right accrued. Statutes of limitation are statutes of repose, and are such legislative enactments as prescribe the periods within which actions may be brought upon certain claims or within which certain rights may be enforced. In criminal cases, however, a statute of limitation is an act of grace, a surrendering by sovereign of its right to prosecute. Also sometimes referred to as “statutes of repose”.

Limitation of Liability Act. Federal statute which permits shipowner to restrict his liability to cargo, passengers, employees to some other ship, or harbor workers, to whatever value the ship has after an event such as a sinking or collision. 46 U.S.C.A. §§ 181–189.

Limitation of prosecutions. See Limitation (Statute of limitations).

Limitations, statute of. See Limitation (Statute of limitations).
Limited. Restricted; bounded; prescribed. Confined within positive bounds; restricted in duration, extent, or scope.

As to limited Company; Divorce; Fee; and Partnership, see those titles.

Ltd. A designation following a corporate business name and indicating its corporate and limited liability status. It is found most commonly after British and Canadian corporate names, though it is sometimes used in the United States.

Limited administration. An administration of a temporary character, granted for a particular period, or for a special or particular purpose.

Limited admissibility. In law of evidence, testimony or things may be admitted into evidence for a restricted purpose, and the trial judge should so instruct the jury at the time of its admission; e.g., prior contradictory statements are admissible to impeach but not admissible for the truth of the statements. However, if the evidence has multiple purposes, one being in violation of a constitutional protection for a criminal defendant, such evidence should not be admitted. Britton v. United States, 391 U.S. 123, 88 S.Ct. 1620, 20 L.Ed.2d 476.

Similarly, evidence may frequently be competent as against one party, but not as against another, in which event the practice is to admit the evidence, with an instruction, if requested, that the jury are to consider it only as to the party against whom it is competent. Fed.Evid.R. 105.

Limited appeal. An appeal from only adverse portions of a decree; such is limited to the particular portions of the decree appealed from. Fox v. River Heights, 22 Tenn.App. 166, 118 S.W.2d 1104, 1114. See also Interlocutory appeal; Interlocutory Appeals Act.

Limited court. Where special authority, in derogation of common law, is conferred by statute on a court of general jurisdiction, it becomes an "inferior or limited court". For example, a probate court is a court of limited jurisdiction. Partlow v. Partlow, 246 Ala. 259, 20 So.2d 517, 518. See Limited or special jurisdiction.

Limited divorce. A divorce decree or judgment may be restricted to a dissolution of the marriage with no provision for support. In another sense, term refers to a divorce a mensa et thoro (from bed and board) with no right to remarry.

Limited executor. An executor whose appointment is qualified by limitations as to the time or place wherein, or the subject-matter whereon, the office is to be exercised; as distinguished from one whose appointment is absolute, i.e., certain and immediate, without any restriction in regard to the testator's effects or limitation in point of time.

Limited guaranty. A limited guaranty is ordinarily one restricted in its application to a single transaction.Cooling v. Springer, 3 Terry 228, 30 A.2d 466, 469.

Limited or special jurisdiction. Jurisdiction which is confined to particular causes, or which can be exercised only under the limitations and circumstances prescribed by the statute. A court's power over an action is governed generally by statute and some courts have limited authority or power and the limitation is in terms of the nature of the case (e.g., probate courts), or the amount in controversy, or the type of crime with which the defendant is charged or the age of the accused (e.g., juvenile courts). See also Limited court.

Limited owner. A tenant for life, or by the curtesy, or other person not having absolute ownership.

Limited partner. A partner whose liability to third party creditors of the partnership is limited to the amount invested by such partner in the partnership. See Limited partnership.

Limited partnership. An unincorporated association, or firm, in which one or more of the partners are, on compliance with the provisions of various state statutes regulating such partnerships, relieved from liability beyond the amount of the capital contributed by them. A partnership formed by two or more persons under the provisions of the Uniform Limited Partnership Act, having as members one or more general partners and one or more limited partners. The limited partners, as such, are not bound by the obligations of the partnership. Uniform Limited Partnership Act § 1. Most all states have adopted the Uniform Limited Partnership Act.

Limited partnership is type of partnership comprised of one or more general partners who manage business and who are personally liable for partnership debts, and one or more limited partners who contribute capital and share in profits but who take no part in running business and incur no liability with respect to partnership obligations beyond contribution. Evans v. Galardi, 16 Cal.3d 300, 128 Cal.Rptr. 25, 30, 546 P.2d 313.

See also General partner; Limited partner.

Limited payment plan. A policy upon a "limited payment plan" is a paid-up policy, and insurance upon which no further premium is to be paid. Bankers Life & Loan Ass'n v. Chase, Tex.Civ.App., 114 S.W.2d 374, 376.

Limited power of appointment. Power of appointment is limited when it is exercisable only in favor of persons or a class of persons designated in the instrument creating the power. Johnstone v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 76 F.2d 55, 57.

Limited publication. Communication to a select number on condition, express or implied, that it is not intended to be thereafter common property. A limited publication is one which is restricted both as to persons and as to purpose and is a publication which communicates a knowledge of its contents under conditions expressly or impliedly precluding its dedication to the public. Masterson v. McCroskie, Colo. App., 556 P.2d 1231, 1233.

Limit order. A restriction on the sale or purchase of a security placed by a customer with a broker, limiting the price at which the customer is willing to buy or sell.
Lincoln’s Inn /ligkazn in/. An inn of court. See Inns of Court.

Lindbergh Act. Federal law which punishes kidnap-ing for ransom or reward when the victim is transported from one state to another or to a foreign country. The failure to release the victim within 24 hours creates a rebuttable presumption that such person has been transported in interstate or foreign

Line. A demarcation, border, or limit. The boundary or line of division between two estates. Person’s trade, occupation or business. Carrier’s route.

Building line. See Building line.

Collateral line. See Descent.

Descent. See Descent.

Direct line. See Descent.

Line by line budget. A detailed itemization of all expenditures by budget line. Block v. Sprague, Sup., 24 N.Y.S.2d 245, 247.

Line of an intersection. A straight line substantially at right angles to bounds of highway at a point where, to the reasonable perception of a driver, the highway starts to widen as the result of the outcur-ing of its bounds to form the junction. Beck v.
Sosnowitz, 125 Conn. 553, 7 A.2d 389, 391.

Line of credit. A margin or fixed limit of credit granted by one to another, to the full extent of which the latter may avail himself in his dealings with the former, but which he must not exceed; usually intended to cover a series of transactions, in which case, when the customer’s line of credit is nearly or quite exhausted, he is expected to reduce his indebtedess by payments before drawing upon it further.
Pittinger v. Southwestern Paper Co. of Fort Worth, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 922, 925. The maximum borrowing power (i.e. credit limit) of a person from a financial institution. Agreement with bank or number of banks for short-term borrowings on demand.

Line of credit signifies a limit of credit extended by bank to its customer, to the full extent of which the customer may avail itself in its dealing with the bank, but which the customer may not exceed. It most frequently covers a series of transactions, in which case, when the customer’s line of credit is nearly exhausted or not replenished, the customer is expected to reduce its indebtedness by payments to the bank before making additional use thereof. Modoc Meat & Cattle Co. v. First State Bank of Oregon, 271 Or. 276, 532 P.2d 21, 25.

Line of duty. In military law and usage, an act is said to be done, or an injury sustained, “in the line of duty,” when done or suffered in the performance or discharge of a duty incumbent upon the individual in his character as a member of the military or naval forces. An injury suffered or disease contracted by a sailor is considered to have been in “line of duty” unless actually caused by something for which sailor is responsible which intervenes between his performance of duty and the injury or disease. Meyer v.

Line of ordinary high tide. Ordinary high tide may, for practical purposes, within a restricted area, be conceived as a level plane; the “line of ordinary high tide” is the intersection of said plane with the surface of the land. Swarzwald v. Cooley, 39 Cal.App.2d 306, 103 P.2d 580, 584.

Maternal line. See Maternal line.

Patrial line. See Paternal line.

Public utilities. See Public utility.

Linea /linikə/. Lat. A line; line of descent. See Descent.

Lineage /lin(ɡ)ay/. Race; progeny; family, ascending or descending. Line of descent from an ancestor, hence, family, race, stock. See also Descent.

Lineal /linikəl/. That which comes in a line; especially a direct line, as from father to son. Collateral relationship is not called “lineal,” though the expression “collateral line,” is not unusual. Proceeding in direct or unbroken line, hereditary, unbroken in course; distinguished from collateral, as lineal descent, lineal succession, having an ancestral basis or right. See also Descent.

Lineal consanguinity /linikəl konˈsængwɪnədi/. That kind of consanguinity which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other; as between a particular person and his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upward, in the direct ascending line; or between the same person and his son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line.

Lineal descendant. A person in the direct line of descent such as a child or grandchild as contrasted with a collateral descendant such as a niece.

Lineal descent. See Descent.

Lineal heir /linikəl hɪr/. One who inherits in a line either ascending or descending from a common source as distinguished from a collateral heir. Ferra-
The words “lineal heirs” like “heirs of the body” mean all lineal descendants to the remotest posterity and are words of “inheritance” and not of “purchase”, unless the instrument clearly shows that they were used in a restricted sense to denote “children”.
Simms v. Clayton, 183 S.C. 98, 7 S.E.2d 724, 727. See also Heirs.

Lineal warranty. A warranty by an ancestor from whom the title did or might have come to the heir.

Linea obliqua /linikə abliˈkwə/. In the civil law, the oblique line. More commonly termed “linea transversalis.”

Linea recta /linikə rɛktə/. The direct line; the vertical line. In computing degrees of kindred and the succession to estates, this term denotes the direct line of ancestors and descendants. Where a person springs from another immediately, or mediat-itly through a third person, they are said to be in the direct line (linea recta), and are called “ancestors” and “descendants.”
Linea recta est index sui et obliquus; lex est linea recti línly rékta èst índexs a(y)iway èd ábláy/kway; léks èst línly rékta. A right line is a test of itself, and of an oblique; law is a line of right.

Linea recta semper prefertur transversal. línly rékta sémpar prafërd thráنسvársélyay. The right line is always preferred to the collateral.

Linea transversal. línly thráṃsvársélys. A collateral, transverse, or oblique line. Where two persons are descended from a third, they are called "collaterals," and are said to be related in the collateral line (linea transversa or obliqua).

Line of credit. See Line (Line of credit).

Lines and corners. In deeds and surveys, boundary-lines and their angles with each other.

Lineup. A police identification procedure by which the suspect in a crime is exhibited before the victim or witness to determine if he committed the offense. To be accepted as valid, the lineup must meet certain standards and be free of undue suggestiveness. U.S. v. Wade, 388 U.S. 218, 87 S.Ct. 1926, 18 L.Ed.2d 1149. If the standards are met, the person who has identified the defendant may so testify at trial. "Lineup" involves and requires lining up of a number of individuals from which one of those lined up may or may not be identified as committer of a crime and there cannot be a one-man lineup. Dozie v. State, 49 Wis.2d 209, 181 N.W.2d 369, 371.

Post-indictment lineups are considered to be a "critical stage" of criminal proceedings at which the accused has the constitutional right to be represented by counsel. United States v. Wade, 388 U.S. 218, 87 S.Ct. 1926, 18 L.Ed.2d 1149; Gilbert v. California, 388 U.S. 263, 87 S.Ct. 1951, 18 L.Ed. 1178.

Link. A unit in a connected series; anything which serves to connect or bind together the things which precede and follow it. Thus, we speak of a "link in the chain of title." Something which binds together, or connects, separate things; a part of a connected series; a tie, a bond. City of Independence v. Board of Com'rs of Montgomery County, 140 Kan. 661, 38 P.2d 105, 106.

As a unit of land measurement, see Land measure.

Link-in-chain. The 5th Amendment (U.S.Const.) privilege against self-incrimination protects a witness not only from the requirement of answering questions which might call for directly incriminating answers but also from answers which might tie or link the defendant to criminal activity in the chain of evidence. Estes v. Potter, C.A.Tex., 183 F.2d 865. Immunity also protects one from such result. State v. Buchanan, Fla.App., 207 So.2d 711, 717.

Liquere /lákviřir/. Lat. In the civil law, to be clear, evident, or satisfactory. When a judeax was in doubt how to decide a case, he represented to the pretor, under oath, sibi non liquere (that it was not clear to him), and was thereupon discharged.

Liquet /lákvet/. It is clear or apparent; it appears. Satis liquet, it sufficiently appears.

Liquid. Said of a business with a substantial amount (the amount is unspecified) of working capital, especially quick assets. See also Liquidity.

Liquid assets. Cash, or assets immediately convertible to cash.

Liquidate. To pay and settle. Farmers State Bank & Trust Co. v. Brady, 137 Tex. 39, 152 S.W.2d 729, 732; Fleckner v. Bank of U.S., 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 338, 382, 5 L.Ed. 631. To adjust, State ex rel. Banister v. Cantley, 330 Mo. 943, 52 S.W.2d 397, 399; Belden v. Modern Finance Co., Ohio App., 61 N.E.2d 801, 804, 44 O.L.A. 163. To ascertain the amount, or the several amounts, of the liabilities of insolvent and apportion the assets toward discharge of the indebtedness, Farmers State Bank & Trust Co. v. Brady, 137 Tex. 39, 152 S.W.2d 729, 732; to ascertain the balance due and to whom payable, State ex rel. Banister v. Cantley, 330 Mo. 943, 52 S.W.2d 397, 399; to assemble and mobilize the assets, settle with the creditors and the debtors and apportion the remaining assets, if any, among the stockholders or owners, United States v. Metcalfe, C.C.A.Cal., 131 F.2d 677, 681; to clear up, State ex rel. Banister v. Cantley, 330 Mo. 943, 52 S.W.2d 397, 399; Fleckner v. Bank of U.S., La., 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 338, 362, 5 L.Ed. 631; to determine by agreement or litigation precise amount of indebtedness, Continental Ins. Co. v. Harris, 190 Ark. 1110, 82 S.W.2d 841, 843; to discharge, Continental Ins. Co. v. Harris, 190 Ark. 1110, 82 S.W.2d 841, 843; to extinguish an indebtedness, Gibson v. American Ry. Express Co., 195 Iowa 1126, 193 N.W. 274, 278; Belden v. Modern Finance Co., Ohio App., 61 N.E.2d 801, 804, 44 O.L.A. 163; to gather in the assets, convert them into cash and distribute them according to the legal rights of the parties interested; to lessen, Fleckner v. Bank of U.S., La., 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 338, 362, 5 L.Ed. 631; to make amount of indebtedness clear and certain, Continental Ins. Co. v. Harris, 190 Ark. 1110, 82 S.W.2d 841, 843; to reduce to precision in amount and to satisfy, State ex rel. Banister v. Cantley, 330 Mo. 943, 52 S.W.2d 397, 399; to sell, Esser v. Chimel, 27 Del.Ch. 69, 30 A.2d 683, 687; to "wind up" affairs of a business. See also Bankruptcy proceedings; Liquidation; Settle; Settlement.

Liquidated account. An account whereof the amount is certain and fixed, either by the act and agreement of the parties or by operation of law; a sum which cannot be changed. Ohio Code. It is so much or nothing; but the term does not necessarily refer to a writing. Gasper v. Mayer, 171 Okl. 457, 43 P.2d 467, 471; Williamson v. City of Eastland, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 774, 775.
Liquidated claim. Claim, amount of which has been agreed on by parties to action or is fixed by operation of law. Tapp v. Tapp's Trustee, 299 Ky. 345, 185 S.W.2d 534, 535; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. American Bldg. Maintenance Co. of Los Angeles, 7 Cal.App.2d 683, 46 P.2d 984, 988. A claim which can be determined with exactness from parties' agreement or by arithmetical process or application of definite rules of law. Hoo Chin Yin v. Amino Products Co., 141 Ohio St. 21, 46 N.E.2d 610, 614; Petersen v. Graham, 7 Wash.2d 464, 110 P.2d 149, 154. Claim for debt or damages is "liquidated" in character if amount thereof is fixed, has been agreed upon, or is capable of ascertainment by mathematical computation or operation of law. Robinson v. Loyola Foundation, Inc., Fla.App., 236 So.2d 154, 157.

Liquidated damages. See Damages.

Liquidated debt. A debt is liquidated when it is certain what is due and how much is due. That which has been made certain as to amount due by agreement of parties or by operation of law. Gasper v. Mayer, 171 Okl. 457, 43 P.2d 467, 471.

Liquidated demand. A demand the amount of which has been ascertained or settled by agreement of the parties, or otherwise. Williamson v. City of Eastland, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 774, 775. Amount claimed is a "liquidated demand" if it is susceptible of being made certain in amount by mathematical calculations from factors which are or ought to be in possession or knowledge of party to be charged. Rifkin v. Safe Novitz, 131 Conn. 411, 40 A.2d 188, 189.

Liquidating partner. The partner who upon the dissolution or insolvency of the firm, is appointed to settle its accounts, collect assets, adjust claims, and pay debts.

Liquidating trust. A trust, the object of which is liquidation as soon as possible. Helvering v. Washburn, C.C.A.Minn., 99 F.2d 478.

Liquidation. The act or process of settling or making clear, fixed, and determinate that which before was uncertain or unascertained. Payment, satisfaction, or collection; realization on assets and discharge of liabilities. To clear away (to lessen) a debt. Craddock-Terry Co. v. Powell, 180 Va. 242, 22 S.E.2d 30, 34. To pay or settle. In re Klink's Estate, 310 Ill.App. 609, 35 N.E.2d 684, 687. To take over for collection. Belden v. Modern Finance Co., Ohio App., 61 N.E.2d 801, 804, 44 O.L.A. 163. Winding up or settling with creditors and debtors. Wilson v. Superior Court in and for Santa Clara County, 2 Cal.2d 632, 43 P.2d 286, 288. Winding up of corporation so that assets are distributed to those entitled to receive them. Process of reducing assets to cash, discharging liabilities and dividing surplus or loss.

The settling of financial affairs of a business or individual, usually by liquidating (turning to cash) all assets for distribution to creditors, heirs, etc. It is to be distinguished from dissolution which is the end of the legal existence of a corporation. Liquidation may precede or follow dissolution, depending upon statutes.

See also Bankruptcy proceedings; Distressed sale; Distribution in liquidation; Liquidate; Liquidated; Receivership.

One month liquidation. A special election available to certain shareholders of a corporation which determines how the distributions received in liquidation by the electing shareholders will be treated for Federal income tax purposes. In order to qualify for the election, the corporation must be completely liquidated within the time span of any one calendar month.

Partial liquidation. A partial liquidation occurs when some of the corporation's assets are distributed to its shareholders (usually on a pro rata basis) and the corporation continues doing business in a contracted form. Distributions of cash or property beyond the amount of earned surplus of a corporation is a partial liquidation.

Tax implications. In a complete or partial liquidation of a corporation, amounts received by the shareholders in exchange for their stock are usually treated as a sale or exchange of the stock resulting in capital gain or loss treatment. Special rules apply to one month liquidations, twelve month liquidations, and the liquidation of a subsidiary.

Twelve-month liquidation. A provision of the Internal Revenue Code that requires a corporation selling property within the 12-month period from the adoption of a plan of liquidation to its complete liquidation to recognize no gain or loss on such sales. Generally, inventory is not included within the definition unless a bulk sale occurs. See I.R.C. § 337.

Liquidation dividend. Act or operation in winding up affairs of firm or corporation, a settling with its debtors and creditors, and an appropriation and distribution to its stockholders ratably of the amount of profit and loss. Hellman v. Helvering, 63 App.D.C. 18, 68 F.2d 763, 765.

Liquidation price. A price paid for property sold to liquidate a debt. Usually less than market value since there is pressure to sell or a forced sale, either of which does not usually bring the highest price.

Liquidator. A person appointed to carry out the winding up of a company. In England and Canada, a receiver who liquidates a corporation on dissolution.

Liquid debt /ˈlɪkwɪd dɪvɪd/ /ˈlɪkwɪd ˈdɛt/. A debt immediately and unconditionally due.

Liquidity. The status or condition of a person or business in terms of his or its ability to convert assets into cash. In relationship to markets, the capacity of the market in a particular security to withstand an amount of buying and selling at reasonable prices.

Liquor. Alcoholic beverage made by distillation; to be contrasted with wines which are made by fermentation. See also Alcoholic liquors; Intoxicating liquor.

Lis /ˈlɪs/. Lat. A controversy or dispute; a suit or action at law.
Lis alibi pendens /lís áli bay péndend(d)z/. A suit pending elsewhere. The fact that proceedings are pending between a plaintiff and defendant in one court in respect to a given matter is a ground for preventing the plaintiff from taking proceedings in another court against the same defendant for the same object arising out of the same cause of action.

Lis mota /lís mówd̪a/. A controversy moved or begun. By this term is meant a dispute which has arisen upon a point or question which afterwards forms the issue upon which legal proceedings are instituted. After such controversy has arisen (post litem motam), it is held, declarations as to pedigree, made by members of the family since deceased, are not admissible.

Lis pendens /lís péndend(d)z/. A pending suit. Jurisdiction, power, or control which courts acquire over property in suit pending action and until final judgment.

Notice of lis pendens. A notice filed on public records for the purpose of warning all persons that the title to certain property is in litigation, and that they are in danger of being bound by an adverse judgment. The notice is for the purpose of preserving rights pending litigation. Mitchell v. Federal Land Bank of St. Louis, 206 Ark. 253, 174 S.W.2d 671, 674. Purpose of "lis pendens" is to notify prospective purchasers and encumbrancers that any interest acquired by them in property in litigation is subject to a decision of court and also to be recorded, by the holder of a notice of pending litigation the effect thereof on the owner of property is constraining. Breyf King Intern., Inc. v. Veigle, C.A.Fla., 464 F.2d 1102, 1104.

List. A docket or calendar of causes ready for trial or argument, or of motions ready for hearing. Entering in an official list or schedule; as, to list property for taxation, to put into a list or catalogue, to register, to list a property with a real estate broker. Official registry of voters. See also Docket; Listing.

Listed. Included in a list; put on a list; e.g. on a list of taxable persons or property. See Listing.

Listed security. A security that has met the requirements of a stock exchange for listing. Such requirements include submitting financial reports, consenting to certain supervision, and so on. See also Listing (Securities); Offering.

Listers. This word is used in some of the states to designate the persons appointed to make lists of taxable.

Listing. Real estate. An agreement between an owner of real property and a real estate agent, whereby the agent agrees to secure a buyer or tenant for specific property at a certain price and terms in return for a fee or commission. The various types of real estate listings are as follows:

An open or general listing is the right to sell that may be given to more than one agent at a time. An exclusive agency listing is the right of one agent to be the only one other than the owner who may sell the property during a period of time. An exclusive authorization to sell listing is a written contract that gives one agent the sole right to sell the property during a time period. This means that even if the owner finds the buyer, the agent will get a commission. Multiple listing occurs when an agent with an exclusive listing shares information about the property sale with many members of a real estate association and shares the sale commission with an agent who finds the buyer. A net listing is an arrangement in which the seller sets a minimum price he or she will take for the property and the agent’s commission is the amount the property sells for over that minimum selling price.

See also Brokerage listing; Multiple listing; Open listing.

Securities. In securities, the contract between a firm and a stock exchange covering the trading of that firm’s securities on the stock exchange. See also Listed security; Offering.

Taxation. "Listing property for taxation" is the making of a schedule or inventory of such property, whereby owner makes statement of property in response to assessor’s inquiries. Templing v. Bennett, 156 Kan. 68, 131 P.2d 904, 907. The word listing ordinarily implies an official listing of the persons and property to be taxed, and a valuation of the property of each person as a basis of apportionment.

List of creditors. Documentation in the form of a list with names and addresses and amounts owed to creditors, required as a schedule in bankruptcy proceedings.

List price. The published or advertised price of goods which may change after negotiation and be reduced by a discount or rebate for prompt payment or volume purchase.

Litem denounced /lédəd nən də nə nə/. Lat. In the civil law, to cast the burden of a suit upon another; particularly used with reference to a purchaser of property who, being sued in respect to it by a third person, gives notice to his vendor and demands his aid in its defense.

Litem suam facere /lédəd suhm fəkər/. Lat. To make a suit his own. Where a judeks, from partiality or enmity, evidently favored either of the parties, he was said litem suam facere.

Lite pendente /lédədi pé n də n t/. Lat. Pending the suit.

Litera /lédərə/. Lat. A letter. The letter of a law, as distinguished from its spirit. See Letter.

Literacy test. Test required in certain states as a precondition to right to vote. Such tests are unconstitutional if invidiously discriminatory. Lassiter v. Northampton Election Bd., 380 U.S. 45, 79 S.Ct. 985, 3 L.Ed.2d 1072. The Voting Rights Act of 1965 suspended such tests in states where less than half the adult population were registered or had voted in the previous election.

Litere /lédəri/. Letters. A term applied in old English law to various instruments in writing, public and private.
Literary dimissorie /lidariy dimasöriyi/. Dimissory letters (q.v.).

Literae mortuæ /lidariy mórrchwiyí/. Dead letters; fulfilling words of a statute.

Literæ patentes /lidariy pañéntiyi/. Letters patent; literally, open letters.

Literæ patentes regis non erunt vacua /lidariy pañéntiyi riyíyas nón érant vákwyiwyí/. The king's letters patent shall not be void.

Literæ procuratorie /lidariy prókýarátoriyi/. In old English law, letters procuratory; letters of procuration; letters of attorney.

Literæ recognitio[n]s /lidariy rékganlšíyíyíyí/. In maritime law, a bill of lading.

Literæ scriptæ manent /lidariy skrípti yíámánt/. Written words last.

Literæ sigillate /lidariy síjalëydíyí/. In old English law, sealed letters. The return of a sheriff was so called.

Literal /lidaral/. According to language; following expression in words. A literal construction of a document adheres closely to its words, without making differences for extrinsic circumstances; a literal performance of a condition is one which complies exactly with its terms.

Literal construction. The interpretation of a document according to its words alone without any consideration of the intent of the parties who drafted or signed it beyond the fact that they used such language.

Literal contract. In Roman law, a species of written contract, in which the formal act by which an obligation was superinduced on the convention was an entry of the sum due, where it should be specifically ascertained, on the debit side of a ledger. A contract, the whole of the evidence of which is reduced to writing, and binds the party who subscribed it, although he has received no consideration.

Literal proof. In the civil law, written evidence.

Literary /lidarérehiyí/. Pertaining to literature; connected with authors and the study or use of books and writings.

Literary composition. An original result of mental production, developed in a series of written or printed words, arranged for an intelligent purpose, in an orderly succession of expressive combinations. See also Literary work.

Literary property. May be described as the right which entitles an author and his assigns to all the use and profit of his composition, to which no independent right is, through any act or omission on his or their part, vested in another person. Literary property is the exclusive right of owner to possess, use and dispose of intellectual productions, the term denotes the corporal property in which an intellectual production is embodied; and it may consist of letters, lectures, sermons or addresses. Carpenter Foundation v. Oakes, 26 Cal.App.3d 784, 103 Cal.Rptr. 368, 375. See also Copyright; Literary work.

Literary work. Under Copyright Act, "literary works" are works, other than audiovisual works, expressed in words, numbers, or other verbal or numerical symbols or indicia, regardless of the nature of the material objects, such as books, periodicals, manuscripts, phonorecords, film, tapes, disks, or cards in which they are embodied. 17 U.S.C.A. § 101.

Literate. A person is literate if he can read and write a language. Knowledgable and educated.

Literatura /lidarast(y)úra/. "Ad literaturam ponere" means to put children to school. This liberty was anciently denied to those parents who were servile tenants, without the lord's consent. The prohibition against the education of sons arose from the fear that the son, being bred to letters, might enter into holy orders, and so stop or divert the services which he might otherwise do as heir to his father.

Literis obligatio /lidarés oblagéysh(y)ow/. In Roman law, the contract of nomen, which was constituted by writing (scriptura). It was of two kinds, viz.: (1) A re in personam, when a transaction was transferred from the daybook (adversariorum) into the ledger (codex) in the form of a debt under the name or heading of the purchaser or debtor (nomen); and (2) a persona in personam, where a debt already standing under one nomen or heading was transferred in the usual course of novatio from that nomen to another and substituted nomen. By reason of this transferring, these obligations were called "nomina transcripta." No money was, in fact, paid to constitute the contract. If ever money was paid, then the nomen was arcarium (i.e., a real contract, re contractus), and not a nomen proprium.

Litigant. A party to a lawsuit; one engaged in litigation; usually spoken of active parties, not of nominal ones.

Litigare /lidaréyí/. Lat. To litigate; to carry on a suit (litum agere), either as plaintiff or defendant; to claim or dispute by action; to test or try the validity of a claim by action.

Litigate /lidageyt/. To dispute or contend in form of law; to settle a dispute or seek relief in a court of law; to carry on a suit. To bring into or engage in litigation; the act of carrying on a suit in a law court; a judicial contest; hence, any controversy that must be decided upon evidence. To make the subject of a lawsuit; to contest in law; to prosecute or defend by pleadings, evidence, and debate in a court. Valley Exp., Inc. v. U.S., D.C.Wis., 264 F.Supp. 1006, 1009. See also Adjudge; Adjudication.

Litigation /lidégéyshən/. A lawsuit. Legal action, including all proceedings therein. Contest in a court of law for the purpose of enforcing a right or seeking a remedy. A judicial contest, a judicial controversy, a suit at law.

Litigious /lidijías/. That which is the subject of a lawsuit or action; that which is contested in a court of law. In another sense, "litigious" signifies fond of litigation; prone to engage in suits.

Litigious right /lidijías ráyt/. In the civil law, a right which cannot be exercised without undergoing a lawsuit. Civil Code La. art. 3556, par. 18.
LITIGIOUS RIGHT

A right, to be considered "litigious" under Louisiana law, must be in litigation at time of the sale thereof, and ceases to be litigious if at time of the sale judgment has become final. Saucier v. Crichton, C.C. A.La., 147 F.2d 430, 435.

Litis estimatio /lɨydrəs ɛstəməˈʃə(ɪ)yəw/ Lat. The measure of damages.

Litis contestatio /lɨydrəs kənˈtɛstəˈʃə(ɪ)yəw/ Lat. Civil and Canon Law. Contestation of suit; the process of contesting a suit by the opposing statements of the respective parties; the process of coming to an issue; the attainment of an issue; the issue itself. Ecclesiastical Courts. The general answer made by the defendant, in which he denied the matter charged against him in the libel.

Litis denunciation /lɨydrəs ˈdɛnəsəˈɪnəʃə(ɪ)yəw/ Lat. In old civil law, the process by which a purchaser of property, who is sued for its possession or recovery by a third person, falls back upon his vendor's covenant of warranty, by giving the latter notice of the action and demanding his aid in defending it.

Litis dominium /lɨydrəs dəˈmɪnɪəm/ Lat. In old civil law, ownership, control, or direction of a suit. A fiction of law by which the employment of an attorney or proctor (procurator) in a suit was authorized or justified, he being supposed to become, by the appointment of his principal (dominus) or client, the dominus litis.

Litis nomen omnem actionem significant, sive in rem, sive in personam sit /lɨydrəs nəˈwəm ənˈnəm əkˈʃənəm sɪˈnɪɡəˌʃənt, sɪvɪ ɪn rɛm, sɪvɪ ɪn ˈpɜrəsənəm sɪt/. A lawsuit signifies every action, whether it be in rem or in personam.

Litispending /lɨydrəspəˈdənt(ɪ)s/ An obsolete term for the time during which a lawsuit is going on.

Litre /ˈlɪdrə/. Fr. A measure of capacity in the metric system, being a cubic decimetre, equal to 61.022 cubic inches, or 2.113 American pints, or 1.76 English pints.

Littering. Littering is dumping, throwing, placing, depositing or leaving, or causing to be dumped, thrown, deposited or left any refuse of any kind or any object or substance which tends to pollute, mar or deface into, upon or about: (a) Any public street, highway, alley, road, right-of-way, park or other public place, or any lake, stream, watercourse, or other body of water, except by direction of some public officer or employee authorized by law to direct or permit such acts; or (b) Any private property without the consent of the owner or occupant of such property.

Litoral land. Land bordering ocean, sea, or lake.

Litoral rights. Rights concerning properties abutting an ocean, sea or lake rather than a river or stream (riparian). Litoral rights are usually concerned with the use and enjoyment of the shore. See Water rights (Water rights).

Litura /ləˈtɜːrə/. Lat. In the civil law, an obliteration or blot in a will or other instrument.

Litus /lɨydrəs/. In civil law, the bank of a stream or shore of the sea; the coast.

In old European law, a kind of servant; one who surrendered himself into another's power.

Litus est quousque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit /lɨydrəs ɛst kwaʊsˈkɛ kəməs fʌˈklʊts ə ˈmɛriː pərˈvɛnɪt/. The shore is where the highest wave from the sea has reached.

Litus maris /lɨydrəs ˈmɛrəs/. The sea-shore.

Live, adj. Having or possessing life. See also Alive; Life.

Live, v. To live in a place, is to reside there, to abide there, to occupy as one's home. Leroux v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 140 Cal.App. 569, 35 P.2d 624, 626. See also Domestic; Living; Residence.

Live and cohabit together as husband and wife. As applied to common-law marriages, means a living together, claiming to be married, in the relationship of husband and wife. Drummond v. Benson, Tex.Civ. App., 133 S.W.2d 154, 159.

Livelihood. Means of support or subsistence.

Livelode. Maintenance; support.

Livery /ˈlɪvrɪ/. In old English law, delivery of possession of their lands to the king's tenants in capite or tenants by knight's service. A writ which could be sued out by a ward in chivalry, on reaching his majority, to obtain delivery of the possession of his lands out of the hands of the guardian.

Act of delivering legal possession of property. See Livery of seisin.

A particular dress or garb appropriate or peculiar to certain persons, as the members of a guild, or, more particularly, the servants of a nobleman or gentleman.

The privilege of a particular guild or company of persons, the members thereof being called "liverymen."

A contract of hiring out of work-beasts, particularly horses, to the use of the hiree. It is commonly used in the compound, "livery-stable." Feeding, stabling, and care of horses for pay. Rental of vehicles, boats, etc. Word "livery" as used in automobile policy excluding coverage for automobile while being used as a livery conveyance means the hiring out of horses and carriages or a concern offering vehicles of various kinds for rent. Gagnard v. Thibodeaux, La.App., 336 So.2d 1069, 1070.

Livery conveyance. A vehicle used indiscriminately in conveying the public, without limitation to certain persons or particular occasions or without being governed by special terms. Elliott v. Behner, 150 Kan. 876, 96 P.2d 852, 857.

Livery in chivalry. In feudal law, the delivery of the lands of a ward in chivalry out of the guardian's hands, upon the heir's attaining the requisite age,—twenty-one for males, sixteen for females. 2 Bl. Comm. 68.

Livery office. An office appointed for the delivery of lands.
Livery of seisin. The appropriate ceremony, at common law, for transferring the corporeal possession of lands or tenements by a grantor to his grantee. It was livery in deed where the parties went together upon the land, and there a twig, clod, key, or other symbol was delivered in the name of the whole. Livery in law was where the same ceremony was performed, not upon the land itself, but in sight of it. 2 Bl.Comm. 315, 316.

Lives in being. As used in rule against perpetuities, means any lives in being at any future time interest is created, regardless of personal interest therein.

Livestock insurance. See Insurance.

Live storage. As applied to storage of automobiles in garages, "dead storage" is where cars not in use are deposited or put away, sometimes for the season, and "live storage" is the storage of cars in active daily use. Hogan v. O'Brien, 123 Misc. 865, 206 N.Y.S. 831, 832, affirmed 212 App.Div. 193, 208 N.Y.S. 477. The extent of responsibility of a garage keeper for cars put in his garage sometimes depends on whether they are in "dead storage" or "live storage."

Living. Existing, surviving, or continuing in operation. Also means to abide, to dwell, to reside and literally signifies the pecuniary resources by means of which one exists. Leroux v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 140 Cal.App. 569, 35 P.2d 624, 626. See also Alive; Domicile; Life; Residence.

Living apart. To live in a separate abode. McDaniel v. McDaniel, 292 Ky. 56, 165 S.W.2d 966, 967. See also Living separate and apart.

Living at time of another's death. Remaining in life after such other person's death. Sabit v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 184 Md. 24, 40 A.2d 231, 238.

Living in open and notorious adultery. To constitute, parties must dwell together openly and notoriously as if conjugal relation existed between them. People v. Potter, 319 Ill.App. 409, 49 N.E.2d 307, 309. The parties must reside together in face of society as if conjugal relations existed between them, and fact of their separate living and that they are not husband and wife must be known in community in which they reside. Mathis v. State, 60 Okl.Cr. 58, 61 P.2d 261, 267.

Living issue. Living children.

Living separate and apart. Exists where the spouses have come to a parting of the ways and have no present intention of resuming marital relations and taking up life together under the same roof, not where they are residing temporarily in different places for economic or social reasons. Woodall v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.9, 105 F.2d 474, 477. This is a no-fault ground for divorce in many states when the spouses have lived apart for the statutorily prescribed period.

Living together. As respects court's right to allow suit money to wife in divorce action, means dwelling together in same house, eating at same table, the two parties holding themselves out to world and conducting themselves toward each other as husband and wife. Lipp v. Lipp, Mo.App., 117 S.W.2d 364-366.

Living trust. Trust which is operative during life of settlor; an active or inter vivos trust.

Living with husband. Means to dwell, to reside, to make one's abiding place or home with him, and may also mean to cohabit. Living together as husband and wife in ordinary acceptation of words in common understanding; maintaining a home and living together in same household or actually cohabiting under conditions which would be regarded as constituting a family relation. McPadden v. Morris, 128 Conn. 654, 13 A.2d 679, 680.

L.J. An abbreviation for "Law Judge;" also for "Law Journal."

L.L. The reduplicated form of the abbreviation "L." for "law," used as a plural. It is generally used in citing old collections of statute law; as "L.L. Hen. I."

L.L. (Also L.Lat.) and L.F. (also L.Fr.) are used as abbreviations of the terms "Law Latin" and "Law French."

L.L.B., LL.M., and LL.D. Abbreviations used to denote, respectively, the three academic degrees in law,—bachelor, master, and doctor of laws; the latter commonly being an honorary degree. See also J.D.

Lloyd's bonds. The name of a class of evidences of debt, used in England; being acknowledgments, by a borrowing company made under its seal, of a debt incurred and actually due by the company to a contractor or other person for work done, goods supplied, or otherwise, as the case may be, with a covenant for payment of the principal and interest at a future time.

Lloyd's insurance. Under this type of insurance, insurers are such as individuals and not as a corporate insurance company and the liability for loss is several and not joint. Jones v. Hollywood Style Shop, Tex. Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 167. The "Lloyd's Plan," contemplates individual liability of the several underwriters. Harris v. Prince, 132 Tex. 231, 121 S.W.2d 983, 986. See also Lloyd's of London; Lloyds underwriters; London Lloyds.

Lloyd's of London. An association in the city of London, originally for the transaction of marine insurance, the members of which underwrite one another's policies. An insurance mart in London at which individual underwriters gather to quote rates and write insurance on the widest variety of risks. See also London Lloyds.

Lloyds underwriters. Any aggregation of individuals, who under a common name engage in the business of insurance for profit through an attorney-in-fact having authority to obligate the underwriters severally, within such limits as may be lawfully specified in the power of attorney, on contracts of insurance made or issued by such attorney-in-fact, in the name of such aggregation of individuals, to and with any person or persons insured. N.Y.Consol. Laws, Insurance § 425.

Loading. The act of putting a load on or in; as to load a car or a vessel.

The difference between gross and net premiums on insurance policies. Commissioner of Insurance v. Massachusetts Accident Co., 314 Mass. 558, 50 N.E.2d 801, 809; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Rouillard, 92 N.H. 16, 24 A.2d 264, 266; Magers v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 348 Mo. 96, 152 S.W.2d 148, 150. In insurance, that portion of the premium used for meeting selling and administrative expenses beyond that portion required to meet the liability reserve. In an open-end investment company, that portion of the price of the share added to cover selling expenses.

Load line. The depth to which a ship will sink in salt water when loaded. A design, painted on each side of a vessel, intended as a guide to determine safe loading depth under various conditions. The Indien, C.C.A.Cal., 71 F.2d 752, 759.

Loaders. The pay to loaders; that is, persons who sail before ships, in barks or small vessels, with instruments for towing the ship and directing her course, in order that she may escape the dangers in her way.

Loan. To spend time in idleness, to lounge or loiter about or along. City of Olathe v. Lauck, 156 Kan. 637, 135 P.2d 548, 551. See also Malinger.

Loan. A lending. Delivery by one party to and receipt by another party of sum of money upon agreement, express or implied, to repay it with or without interest. Isaacson v. House, 216 Ga. 698, 119 S.E.2d 113, 116. Anything furnished for temporary use to a person at his request, on condition that it shall be returned, or its equivalent in kind, with or without compensation for its use. Liberty Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Travelers Indem. Co., 58 Misc.2d 443, 295 N.Y.S.2d 983, 986.

Bailment without reward, consisting of the delivery of an article by the owner to another person, to be used by the latter gratuitously, and returned either in specie or in kind. A borrowing of money or other personal property by a person who promises to return it.

“Loan” includes: (1) the creation of debt by the lender’s payment of or agreement to pay money to the debtor or to a third party for the account of the debtor; (2) the creation of debt by a credit to an account with the lender upon which the debtor is entitled to draw immediately; (3) the creation of debt pursuant to a lender credit card or similar arrangement; and (4) the forbearance of debt arising from a loan. Uniform Consumer Credit Code, § 3–106.

See also Morning loan; Participation loan. For term loan, see Term.

Amortized loan. One which calls for periodic payments which are applied first to interest and then to principal as provided by the terms of the note.

Call loan. One which is payable on demand or call by the lender.

Collateral loan. One which is secured by property or securities.

Commercial loan. Generally a short term loan for 30 to 90 days given by financial institutions.

Commodity loan. One which is secured by a commodity such as cotton or wool in the form of a warehouse receipt or other negotiable instrument.

Consumer loan. One which is made or extended to a natural person for family, household, personal or agricultural purposes and generally governed by truth-in-lending statutes and regulations.

Day loan. One made to a broker on a day to day basis to finance his daily transactions.

Demand loan. One on which the lender may make demand or call at any time for repayment. See also Call loan.

Installment loan. One which is repaid according to its terms over a period of time in installments.

Non-recourse loan. Loans made to farmers by a government organization in exchange for a particular commodity; e.g. wheat or corn. They are called nonrecourse because the government can never demand payment for the loan.

Personal loan. One which is generally for a short period of time for personal as contrasted with commercial purposes. It may be secured or unsecured. See also Consumer loan.

Secured loan. One which is secured by property or securities. See also Collateral loan.

Short-term loan. One which runs for a period of less than a year and which is commonly evidenced by a note or other negotiable instrument.

Time loan. One which is made for a fixed period of time and which generally may not be repaid before the expiration of such time (without penalty) as distinguished from a call or demand loan.

Loan association. See Building and loan association.

Loan certificates. Certificates issued by a clearing-house to the associated banks to a specified per cent. of the value of the collateral deposited by the borrowing banks with the loan committee of the clearing-house. Documents issued by a borrower to evidence participation in a loan for an extended term; formerly used by municipalities. These have been replaced, in the main, by coupon bonds. See also Certificate of Indebtedness.

Loan commitment. Commitment to borrower by lending institution that it will loan a specific amount at a certain rate on a particular piece of real estate. Such commitment is limited to a specified time period (e.g. four months), which is commonly based on the estimated time that it will take the borrower to construct or purchase the home contemplated by the loan.

Loaned employee or servant. Whether an employee should be regarded as a “loaned employee” in the service of a special employer, or whether he should be regarded as remaining in the service of his general employer, depends upon in whose work the employee was engaged at the time of injury. Owen v. St. Louis Spring Co., 175 Tenn. 543, 138 S.W.2d 498–500.
Loaned servant is an employee who is loaned or hired out to another master for some specific service or particular transaction and who is under exclusive control of that employer who may then be held vicariously liable for acts of employee under ordinary principles of respondeat superior. Kiefer Concrete, Inc. v. Hoffinan, Colo., 562 P.2d 745, 746.

Loaned servant doctrine. Under the "loaned servant doctrine", when one lends his servant to another for a particular employment, servant, for anything done in that employment, must be dealt with as servant of one to whom he is lent. Blair v. Durham, C.C.A. Tenn., 134 F.2d 729, 732. Loaned-servant doctrine provides that if employer loans employee to another for performance of some special service, then that employee, with respect to that special service, may become employee of party to whom his services have been loaned. Denne v. Meldrum Mfg. and Engineering Co., Inc., Minn., 252 N.W.2d 255, 258. In order for employee to be a "loaned servant", it is not essential that general employer relinquish full control over his employee, or that special employee be completely subservient to borrower. U. S. v. N. A. Degerstrom, Inc., C.A.Wash., 408 F.2d 1130, 1138.

Loan for consumption. An agreement by which one person delivers to another a certain quantity of things which are consumed by the borrower, with the obligation to return as much of the same kind and quality. See also Loan for use.

Loan for exchange. A loan for exchange is a contract by which one person delivers personal property to another, and the latter agrees to return to the lender a similar thing at a future time, without reward for its use. Cal.Civil Code § 1902.

Loan for use. The loan for use is an agreement by which a person delivers a thing to another, to use it according to its natural destination, or according to the agreement, under the obligation of the part of the borrower, to return it after he shall be done using it. Civ.Code La. art. 2803. A loan for use is a contract by which one gives to another the temporary possession and use of personal property, and the latter agrees to return the same thing to him at a future time, without reward for its use. Slack v. Bryam, 299 Ky. 132, 184 S.W.2d 873, 876. Cal.Civil Code, § 1884. A loan for use is the gratuitous grant of an article to another for use, to be returned in specie, and may be either for a certain time or indefinitely, and at the will of the grantor.

Loan for use (called "commodatum" in the civil law) differs from a loan for consumption (called "mutuum" in the civil law), in this: that the commodatum must be specifically returned; the mutuum is to be returned in kind. In the case of a commodatum, the property in the thing remains in the lender; in a mutuum, the property passes to the borrower.

Loan ratio. The ratio, expressed as a percentage, of the amount of a loan to the value or selling price of real property. Usually, the higher the percentage, the greater the interest charged. Maximum percentages for banks, savings and loan, or government insured loans, is set by statute.

Loan shocking. Practice of lending money at excessive and usurious interest rates, with the threat or employment of extortionate means to enforce repayment of the loan. Such activities are termed "extortionate credit transactions" under Federal Criminal Code. 18 U.S.C.A. § 891 et seq.

Loan societies. In English law, a kind of club formed for the purpose of advancing money on loan to the industrial classes.

Loan value. The maximum amount which can be safely lent on property or life insurance consistent with the lender's rights to protection in the event of the borrower's default.

Lobbying. All attempts including personal solicitation to induce legislators to vote in a certain way or to introduce legislation. It includes scrutiny of all pending bills which affect one's interest or the interests of one's clients, with a view towards influencing the passage or defeat of such legislation. Thiles v. County Board of Sarpy County, 189 Neb. 1, 200 N.W.2d 13, 18. Federal, and most state statutes, require that lobbyists be registered. See Lobbying acts.

Lobbying acts. Federal and state statutes governing conduct of lobbyists; e.g. Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act requires that lobbyists register with House and Senate and file quarterly reports of amount and source of payments received for lobbying activities. See 12 U.S.C.A. § 261 et seq.

Lobbyist. One who makes it a business to procure the passage or defeat of bills pending before a legislative body. See also Lobbying.

L'Illusion sans cause, ou sur une fausse cause, ou sur cause illéite, ne peut avoir aucun effet /lówblí-gáyón són ków knob, úw sár (j)úñm fóovs ków, úw sár ków ilísýt na pyútw avwár owýkwáfn sáf/. An obligation without consideration, or upon a false consideration (which fails), or upon unlawful consideration, cannot have any effect.

Local. Relating to place, expressive of place; belonging or confined to a particular place. Distinguished from "general," "personal," and "transitory."

As to local Allegiance; Customs; Government; Tax and Venue, see those titles.

Local act. See Local law.

Local actions. Term embraces all actions in which the subject or thing sought to be recovered is in its nature local. Action which must be brought in jurisdiction of act or subject matter, as opposed to transitory action. Actions are "local" when the transactions on which they are based could not occur except in some particular place. One wherein all principal facts on which it is founded are of a local nature; as possession purchased and is to be recovered, or damages for an actual trespass, or for waste affecting land, because in such case the cause of action relates to some particular locality, which usually also constitutes the venue of the action. A "transitory action" may be brought in any court of general jurisdiction in any district wherein defendant can be found and served with process, whereas in a "local action" the plaintiff must bring suit in the court designated, if not statutorily required to do otherwise. Moreland v. Rucker Pharmaceutical Co., D.C.La., 59 F.R.D. 537, 540. Compare Transitory action.
Local affairs. The "local affairs" over which regulation, management and control are delegated to cities are affairs within the jurisdiction of the city by the law of its being. Robia Holding Corporation v. Walker, 136 Misc. 358, 239 N.Y.S. 659, 662.

Local agent. An agent at a given place or within a definite district. Sharp & Dohme v. Waybourne, Tex. Civ. App., 74 S.W.2d 413. An agent may be a general agent as to his powers, although he represents the company only in a particular locality or within a limited territory, and in the latter aspect is called a "local agent". Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Jenkins, 290 Ky. 802, 162 S.W.2d 791, 795. An agent placed in charge of corporation's local business for purpose of winding it up. National Hardware & Stove Co. v. Walters, Tex.Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 146, 147. One appointed to act as the representative of a corporation and transact its business generally (or business of a particular character) at a given place or within a defined district. One who represents corporation in promotion of business for which it was incorporated, in county in which suit is filed. National Hardware & Stove Co. v. Walters, Tex.Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 146. One who stands in shoes of corporation in relation to particular matters committed to his care and represents corporation in its business in either a general or limited capacity. McDonald Service Co. v. Peoples Nat. Bank of Rock Hill, S.C., 218 N.C. 533, 11 S.E.2d 556, 558, 559. A "local agent" to receive and collect money means an agent residing either permanently or temporarily within the state for purpose of his agency. McDonald Service Co. v. Peoples Nat. Bank of Rock Hill, S.C., 218 N.C. 533, 11 S.E.2d 556, 558. By statute or court rule in most states, service of process on a foreign corporation may be made on a local agent of such corporation. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 4; New York C.P.L.R. §§ 308, 318.

Local and special legislation. Term applies to special or particular places or special and particular person, and is distinguished from general statute in operation and relation to classes of persons or subjects. Madison County Board of Education v. Smith, 250 Ky. 495, 63 S.W.2d 620.

Local assessment. A charge in the nature of tax, levied to pay the whole or part of the cost of local improvements (e.g. sewers, sidewalks) and assessed upon the various parcels of property specially benefited thereby. See also Local Improvement assessment.

Local chattel. A thing is local that is fixed to the freehold.

Local concern. An activity is of "local concern" if it is exercised by the municipality in its proprietary capacity. Luhrs v. City of Phoenix, 52 Ariz. 438, 83 P.2d 283, 285.

Local courts. Courts whose jurisdiction is limited to a particular territory or district. The expression often signifies the courts of the state, in opposition to the United States courts, or to municipal or county courts in contrast to courts with state-wide jurisdiction.

Local government. City, county, or other governing body at a level smaller than a state. Local government has the greatest control over real property, zoning, and other local matters.

Local improvement. A public improvement made in a particular locality, by which the real property adjoining or near such locality is specially benefited. Floyd v. Parker Water & Sewer Sub-District, 203 S.C. 278, 17 S.E.2d 223, 227.

Local improvement assessment. A charge placed upon lands within a given district to pay the benefits which the respective parcels of land derive from the improvement. Wells v. Union Oil Co. of California, 25 Cal.App.2d 165, 76 P.2d 696, 697. An assessment for construction of improvement; e.g. sewers. University Nat. Co. v. Grays Harbor County, 12 Wash.2d 549, 122 P.2d 501, 502.

Word "localities" in act prohibiting carrier from giving undue preference to any locality or subjecting it to undue prejudice denotes origin or destination of traffic and shipping, producing, and consuming areas affected by carrier's rates and practices. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. U. S., Tex., 289 U.S. 627, 53 S.Ct. 768, 77 L.Ed. 1410.

Local law. A local law is one which operates over a particular locality instead of over the whole territory of the state. Ulrich v. Beatty, 139 Ind.App. 174, 216 N.E.2d 737, 746. One which relates to particular persons or things or to particular persons or things of a class or which operates on or over a portion of a class instead of all of the class. In re Annexation of Reno Quartermaster Depot Military Reservation to Independent School Dist. No. 34, Canadian County, Okl., 180 Okl. 274, 69 P.2d 659, 662. One whose operation is confined within territorial limits, other than those of the whole state or any property constituted class or locality therein. State v. Kallas, 97 Utah 492, 94 P.2d 414, 420; Ravatar v. Steurele, 257 Ky. 108, 77 S.W.2d 360, 364.

The law of a particular jurisdiction as contrasted with the law of a foreign state. Term is used in conflicts to describe the power of the forum to determine questions of procedure while acknowledging the law of the situs to govern substantive questions. As used in the Restatement of this subject, the "local law" of a state is the body of standards, principles and rules, exclusive of its rules of conflict of laws, which the courts of that state apply in the decision of controversies brought before them. Restatement, Second, Conflicts, § 4(1).
Local option. An option of self-determination available to a municipality or other governmental unit to determine a particular course of action without specific approval from state officials. Local option is often used in local elections to determine whether the selling and consumption of alcoholic beverages will be permitted in local areas. Such is also used in many states to permit home rule elections for determining the structures of local governmental units. See also Home rule.

Local rules. Those promulgated in view of local physical conditions in the state, the character of the people, their peculiar customs, usages, and beliefs. Term may also refer to court rules adopted by individual U.S. district courts which supplement Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Fed.R.Civ. P. 83.

Local statute. See Local law.

Local usage. A practice or method of dealing regularly observed in a particular place and such that it may be considered by the court under certain circumstances in interpreting a document. See U.C.C. § 1-205(2), (3). See also Custom and usage.

Locare /lakéryi/. To let for hire; to deliver or bail a thing for a certain reward or compensation.

Locarum /lakéryiyam/. In old European law, the price of letting; money paid for the hire of a thing; rent.

Locatalre /lówkatér/. In French law, a lessee, tenant, or renter.

Locatarius /lówkatériyus/. Lat. A depository.

Locate. To find. To discover by survey. Guardian Trust Co. of Houston, Tex. v. Jefferson Lake Oil Co., C.C.A.La., 85 F.2d 465, 467. Also means to ascertain place in which something belongs. To ascertain and fix the position of something, the place of which was before uncertain or not manifest, as to locate the calls in a deed. To decide upon the place or direction to be occupied by something not yet in being, as to locate a road. To define location or limits, Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Chiara, C.C.A.N.J., 95 F.2d 663, 688; or designate site or place, Union Pac. R. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 53 Cal.App.2d 825, 128 P.2d 408, 410. To settle or become situated or established.

Located. Having a physical presence or existence in a place.

Locatio /lówkéysh(ly)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, letting for hire.

Locatio-conductio /lówkéysh(ly)ow-kandóxsh(ly)ow/. In the civil law a compound word used to denote the contract of bailement for hire, expressing the action of both parties, viz., a letting by the one and a hiring by the other.

Locatio custodie /lówkéysh(ly)ow kástówdiyiy/. A letting to keep; a bailement or deposit of goods for hire. According to the classification of bailments at civil law, a "locatio custodie" is the hiring of care and services to be bestowed on the thing delivered.

Location. Site or place where something is or may be located. Act of locating. See also Situs.

Mining law. The act of appropriating a mining claim (parcel of land containing precious metal in its soil or rock) according to certain established rules. It usually consists in placing on the ground, in a conspicuous position, a notice setting forth the name of the locator, the fact that it is thus taken or located, with the requisite description of the extent and boundaries of the parcel. St. Louis Smelting, etc., Co. v. Kemp, 104 U.S. 649, 26 L.Ed. 875; Producers' Oil Co. v. Hänzsch, 132 La. 691, 61 So. 754, 759; Cole v. Ralph, 252 U.S. 286, 40 S.Ct. 321, 326, 64 L.Ed. 567. In a secondary sense, the mining claim covered by a single act of appropriation or location. The act or series of acts whereby the boundaries of the claim are marked, etc., but it confers no right in the absence of discovery, both being essential to a valid claim. United States v. Mobley, D.C.Cal., 45 F.Supp. 407, 410. See also Mining claim; Mining location.

Real property. The designation of the boundaries of a particular piece of land, either upon record or on the land itself. The finding, surveying and marking out the bounds of a particular tract of land or mining claims. See Locative calls.

Locatio operis /lówkéysh(ly)ow ôw(p)uars/. In the civil law, the contract of hiring work, i.e., labor and services. It is a contract by which one of the parties gives a certain work to be performed by the other, who binds himself to do it for the price agreed between them, who he gives the work to be done promises to pay to the other for doing it.

Locatio operis faciendae /lówkéysh(ly)ow ôw(p)uars fêsihiyendáy/. A letting out of work to be done; a bailement of a thing for the purpose of having some work and labor or care and pains bestowed on it for a pecuniary recompense.

Locatio operis mercium vehendarum /lówkéysh(ly)ow ôw(p)uars màrs(h)íyam viy(h)ándéram/. A letting of work to be done in the carrying of goods; a contract of bailment by which goods are delivered to a person to carry for hire.

Locatio rei /lówkéysh(ly)ow riýay/. A letting of a thing to hire. The bailment or letting of a thing to be used by the bailee for a compensation to be paid by him.

Locative calls. In a deed, patent, or other instrument containing a description of land, locative calls are specific calls, descriptions, or marks of location, referring to landmarks, physical objects, or other points by which the land can be exactly located and identified.

In harmonizing conflicting calls in a deed or survey of public lands, courts will ascertain which calls are locative and which are merely directory, and conform the lines to the locative calls; "directory calls" being those which merely direct the neighborhood where the different calls may be found, whereas "locative calls" are those which serve to fix boundaries.

Locator /lówkéydar/lakéydar/. One who locates land, or sets the boundaries of a mining claim, or intends or is entitled to locate. See Finder; Location.

Locatum /lakéydam/. A hiring. See Bailment.
Locked in. A predicament of one who has profits on securities which he owns but which he is unwilling to sell because of the liability for capital gains.

Lockup. A place of detention in a police station, court or other facility used for persons awaiting trial.

Loco parentis /lówkwə pərˈɛnətəs/. See In loco parentis.

Locum tenens /lówkwəm təˈnəns/. Lat. Holding the place, a deputy, substitute, lieutenant, or representative.

Locuples /lókˈplips/. Lat. In the civil law, able to respond in an action; good for the amount which the plaintiff might recover.

Locus /lówkwəs/. A place; the place where a thing is done.

Locus contractus /lówkwəs kəntrəˈktsəs/. The place of a contract; the place where a contract is made. The place where the last act is performed which makes an agreement a binding contract. Grain Dealers Mut. Ins. Co. v. Van Buskirk, 241 Md. 58, 215 A.2d 467, 471.

Locus criminis /lówkwəs kriˈmənəs/. The locality of a crime; the place where a crime was committed.

Locus delicti /lówkwəs dəlˈɪktə/. The place of the offense; the place where an offense was committed. State where last event necessary to make actor liable occurs. Hunter v. Derby Foods, C.C.A.N.Y., 110 F.2d 970, 972.

Locus in quo /lówkwəs in kwəʊ/. The place in which. The place in which the cause of action arose, or where anything is alleged, in pleadings, to have been done. The phrase is most frequently used in actions of trespass quare clausum fregit.

Locus partitus /lówkwəs pərtəˈtjʌdzəs/. In old English law, a place divided. A division made between two towns or counties to make out in which the land or place in question lies.

Locus penitentiae /lówkwəs pənətəˈnʃəˌiə/. A place for repentance; an opportunity for changing one’s mind; an opportunity to undo what one has done; a chance to withdraw from a contemplated bargain or contract before it results in a definite contractual liability; a right to withdraw from an incompletely transaction. Morris v. Johnson, 219 Ga. 91, 132 S.E.2d 45, 51. Also, used of a chance afforded to a person, by the circumstances, of relinquishing the intention which he has formed to commit a crime, before the perpetration thereof.

Locus pro solutione reditus aut pecuniae secundum conditionem dimissionis aut obligationis est stricte observandum /lówkwəs prəʊ səˈvənəs ət səˈvənəs dɪmɪˈʃənɪs ət ət əˈɡəlbəˈʃənɪz ɪst ˈsɪstrɪkt ˈəʊbərˈvənəndəs/. The place for the payment of rent or money, according to the condition of a lease or bond, is to be strictly observed.

Locus publicus /lówkwəs pəˈbləkəs/. In the civil law, a public place.

Locus regit actum /lówkwəs riˈjəd əˈktoʊm/. In private international law, the rule that, when a legal transaction complies with the formalities required by the law of the country where it is done, it is also valid in the country where it is to be given effect, although by the law of that country other formalities are required.

Locus rei sitae /lówkwəs riˈe ˈsədɪə/. The place where a thing is situated. In proceedings in rem, or the real actions of the civil law, the proper forum is the locus rei sitae.

Locus sigill /lówkwəs səˈdʒɪl/. In place of the seal; the place occupied by the seal of written instruments. Usually abbreviated to “L.S.” on documents in place of a seal.

Locus standi /lówkwəs stənˈdeɪ/. A place of standing; standing in court. A right of appearance in a court of justice, or before a legislative body, on a given question.

Lodemanage /lówdməˈnæʤ/. The hire of a pilot for conducting a vessel from one place to another.

Lodger has been defined as a tenant of part of another’s house, one who for time being has his home at his lodging place, one who has leave to inhabit another man’s house, one who inhabits portion of a house of which another has general possession and custody, one who lives at board or in a hired room or who has a bed in another’s house, one who lives in a hired room or rooms in house of another, one who occupies hired apartments in another’s house. The term is also defined as a person who lives and sleeps in a place, a person whose occupancy is a part of a house and subordinate to and in some degree under the control of a landlord or his representative. The term is used to indicate a personal relationship of some one lodging somewhere with somebody. Marden v. Radford, 229 Mo.App. 789, 84 S.W.2d 947, 955, 957, 959.

Lodging house. A house where lodgings are let; houses containing furnished apartments which are let out by the week or by the month, without meals, or with limited meals. Marden v. Radford, 229 Mo.App. 789, 84 S.W.2d 947, 955.

Lodging place. A place of rest for a night or a residence for a time; a temporary habitation.
London Lloyds. Voluntary association of merchants, shippers, underwriters, and brokers, which writes no policies, but, when broker for one wishing insurance posts particulars of risk, underwriting members wishing to so subscribe name and share of total that each wishes to take, and policy is issued when total is reached containing names of underwriters bound thereby and name of attorney in fact who handles insurance affairs of the group. See Lloyd’s of London.

Long. In various compound legal terms (see infra) this word carries a meaning not essentially different from its significance in the vernacular.

Long account. An account involving numerous separate items or charges, on one side or both, or the statement of various complex transactions, such as a court of equity will refer to a master, referee or commissioner.

For “Examination of a long account,” see Examination.

Long and short haul clause. Without special permission of the L.C.C., a carrier may not charge more for a shorter haul than a longer haul over the same route. 49 U.S.C.A. § 4(1).

Longa patientia trahitur ad consensum /lōnga pēshiyēns(y)a trāhēdrā ēd kānēnsn/. Long suffrance is construed as consent.

Longa possessio est pacis jus /lōnga pēshēis(y)ow ēst pēysas jās/. Long possession is the law of peace.

Longa possessio jus parit /lōnga pēshēis(y)ow jās pērāt/. Long possession begets right.

Longa possessio parit jus possidendi, et tollit actionem vero domino /lōnga pēshēis(y)ow pērāt jās pēsidīnēdāy, ēt tōlād ȃkshiyōwnum virow dōmanow/. Long possession produces the right of possession, and takes away from the true owner his action.

Long arm statutes. Various state legislative acts which provide for personal jurisdiction, via substituted service of process, over persons or corporations which are nonresidents of the state and which voluntarily go into the state, directly or by agent, or communicate with persons in the state, for limited purposes, in actions which concern claims relating to the performance or execution of those purposes, e.g. transacting business in the state, contracting to supply services or goods in the state, or selling goods outside the state when the seller knows that the goods will be used or consumed in the state. In New York, as to cause of action arising from any of following acts, court may exercise personal jurisdiction over any nondomiciliary, or his executor or administrator, who in person or through agent: (1) Transacts any business within state; (2) commits tortious act other than defamation within state; (3) commits tortious act, other than defamation, outside state causing injury to person or property within state, if such nondomiciliary regularly does or solicits business, or engages in any other persistent course of conduct, or derives substantial revenue from goods used or consumed or services rendered within state; or (4) owns, uses, or possesses real property within state. N.Y.Consol. Laws, CPLR § 302. See also Mass.G.L.A. c. 223A. See also Minimal contacts.
LONGEVITY PAY

Long parliament. The name usually given to the parliament which met in November, 1640, under Charles I., and was dissolved by Cromwell on the 10th of April, 1653. The name "Long Parliament" is, however, also given to the parliament which met in 1661, after the restoration of the monarchy, and was dissolved on the 30th of December, 1678. This latter parliament is sometimes called, by way of distinction, the "long parliament of Charles II."

Long position. The status of one who owns securities which he holds in expectation of a rise in the market or for income as contrasted with one who goes in and out of the market on a short point spread.

In the language of the stock exchange, a broker or speculator is said to be "long" on stock, or as to a particular security, when he has in his possession or control an abundant supply of it, or a supply exceeding the amount which he has contracted to deliver, or, more particularly, when he has bought a supply of such stock or other security for future delivery, speculating on a considerable future advance in the market price. A trader is said to be "long" on the market when he takes the full price risk; i.e. gains if the market price goes up, and loses if it goes down. Valley Waste Mills v. Page, C.C.A.Ga., 115 F.2d 466, 467.

Long robe. A metaphorical expression designating the practice of profession of the law; as, in the phrase "gentlemen of the long robe."

Longshoreman. A maritime laborer, such as a stevedore or loader, who works about wharves of a port. Duke v. Helena-Glendale Ferry Co., 203 Ark. 865, 159 S.W.2d 74, 77. Person who loads and unloads ships.

Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. The Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act (33 U.S.C.A. § 901 et seq.) is designed to provide the benefit of workmen's compensation to employees, other than seamen, of private employers any of whose employees work in maritime employment upon the navigable waters of the United States (including any adjoining pier, wharf, dry dock, terminal, building way, marine railway, or other adjoining area customarily used by an employer in loading, unloading, repairing, or building a vessel). The principal employments subject to the Longshoremen's Act are stevedoring and ship service operations. The Act is administered by the Office of Workmen's Compensation Programs.

For federal compensation act covering seamen, see Jones Act.

Long term capital gain. See Capital (Capital gains).

Long term capital loss. See Capital (Capital loss).

Long term financing. A mortgage or deed of trust for a term of ten years or more, as distinguished from construction, interim, or other short term loans.

Long ton. A measure of weight equivalent to 20 hundred-weight of 112 pounds each, or 2,240 pounds, as distinguished from the "short" ton of 2,000 pounds.

Longum tempus et longus usus qui excedit memoria hominum sufficit pro jure /longam tēmptōs ēt longas ūiōs ēs quāō dōmnus hōmnōrum sēstēs prōw jūriē/. Long time and long use, exceeding the memory of men, suffices for right.

Look and listen. The requirement that a man shall "look and listen" before crossing street railroad track means only that he shall observe and estimate with reasonable accuracy his distance from the car and the speed of its oncoming, and then make calculation and comparison of the time it will take the car to come and the time it will take to cross the track. Kansas City Public Service Co. v. Knight, C.C.A.Kan., 116 F.2d 233, 234.

Lookout. The exercise of ordinary diligence requires that the driver of a motor vehicle be on the lookout for other travelers so that he may avoid placing himself or them in peril. As variously expressed, the rule requires that a motorist maintain a reasonable and proper lookout, which implies being watchful of the movements of the driver's own vehicle as well as of the movements of other traffic; a careful lookout; an efficient lookout; a vigilant watch ahead. A lookout must be made from the most effective place reasonably possible. The failure of a motorist to exercise ordinary care with respect to lookout, proximately resulting in injury or damage, may constitute negligence. Pickett v. Travelers Indem. Co., C.A. Wis., 283 F.2d 835. That watchfulness which prudent and responsible person must maintain for his own safety and safety of others taking into consideration circumstances with which he is immediately concerned or confronted. Cobb v. Atkins, 239 Ark. 388 S.W.2d 8, 11.

Generally, a "lookout" is a person, other than pilot, who has duty of observing sounds, lights, echoes and obstructions to navigation and he is generally stationed on the bow of the vessel. Clary Towing Co., Inc. v. Port Arthur Towing Co., D.C.Tex., 367 F.Supp. 6, 12.

See also Proper lookout.

Loquela /lokwěyla/. Lat. A colloquy; talk. In old English law, this term denoted the oral alterations of the parties to a suit, which led to the issue, now called the "pleadings." It also designated an "imparlance" (q.v.), both names evidently referring to the talking together of the parties. Loquela sine die, a postponement to an indefinite time.

Loquendum ut vulgus; sentiendum ut docti /lakwěndam āt vēgas, sēnsiŋvēndam āt dōktay/. We must speak as the common people; we must think as the learned. This maxim expresses the rule that, when words are used in a technical sense, they must be understood technically; otherwise, when they may be supposed to be used in their ordinary acceptance.

Lord. A feudal superior or proprietor; one of whom a fee or estate is held.

A title of honor or nobility belonging properly to the degree of baron, but applied also to the whole peerage, as in the expression "the House of Lords." 1 Bl.Comm. 396-400.
A title of office, as lord mayor, lord commissioner, etc.

Law lords. See Law.

Lord and vassal. In the feudal system, the grantor, who retained the dominion or ultimate property, was called the “lord,” and the grantee, who had only the use or possession, was called the “vassal” or “feudatory.”

Lord chief baron. The chief judge of the English court of exchequer, prior to the judicature acts.

Lord chief justice. See Justice.

Lord high chancellor. See Chancellor.

Lord high steward. In England, when a person was impeached, or when a peer was tried on indictment for treason or felony before the house of lords, one of the lords was appointed lord high steward, and acted as speaker pro tempore. The privilege of peerage in criminal proceedings was abolished in 1948.

Lord high treasurer. An officer formerly existing in England, who had the charge of the royal revenues and customs duties, and of leasing the crown lands. His functions are now vested in the lords commissioners of the treasury.

Lord in gross. In feudal law, he who is lord, not by reason of any manor, but as the king in respect of his crown, etc. “Very lord” is he who is immediate lord to his tenant; and “very tenant,” he who holds immediately of that lord. So that, where there is lord paramount, lord mesne, and tenant, the lord paramount is not very lord to the tenant.

Lord keeper. Originally another name for the lord chancellor. After Henry II’s reign they were sometimes divided, but now there cannot be a lord chancellor and lord keeper at the same time, for by St. 5 Eliz. c. 18, they are declared to be the same office.

Lord lieutenant. In English law, the viceroy of the crown in Ireland. The principal military officer of a county, originally appointed for the purpose of mustering the inhabitants for the defense of the country.

Lord mayor. The chief officer of the corporation of the city of London was formerly so called. The origin of the appellation of “lord,” which the mayor of London enjoyed was attributed to the fourth charter of Edward III, which conferred on that officer the honor of having maces, the same as royalty, carried before him by the sergeants.

Lord mayor’s court. In English law, this was a court of record, of law and equity, and was the chief court of justice within the corporation of London. Such was abolished by the Courts Act of 1971.

Lord of a manor. The grantee or owner of a manor.

Lord paramount. A term applied to the King of England as the chief feudal proprietor, the theory of the feudal system being that all lands in the realm were held mediately or immediately from him.

Lord’s day. A name sometimes given to Sunday.

Lords justices of appeal. In English law, the title of the ordinary judges of the court of appeal, by Jud.Act 1877, § 4. Prior to the judicature acts, there were two “lords justices of appeal in chancery,” to whom an appeal lay from a vice-chancellor, by 14 & 15 Vict., c. 83.

Lords of appeal. Those members of the house of lords of whom at least three must be present for the hearing and determination of appeals. They are the lord chancellor, the lords of appeal in ordinary, and such peers of parliament as hold, or have held, high judicial offices, such as ex-chancellors and judges of the superior courts in Great Britain and Ireland.

Lords of appeal in ordinary. These are appointed to aid the house of lords in the hearing of appeals. They rank as barons for life, but sit and vote in the house of lords during the tenure of their office only.

Lords of parliament. Those who have seats in the house of lords.

Lords ordinaries. Lords appointed in 1312, in the reign of Edward II, for the control of the sovereign and the court party, and for the general reform and better government of the country.

Lords spiritual. The archbishops and bishops who have seats in the house of lords.

Lords temporal. Those lay peers who have seats in the house of lords.

Lord Campbell Act. An act which fixes the maximum amount recoverable for wrongful death. Most states have such statutes. See Wrongful death statutes.

In England, also refers to the Libel Act of 1843 which permits the defendant in a libel action to assert the defense of truth and that the publication was made for the benefit of the public.

Lord Mansfield’s Rule. Such Rule renders inadmissible testimony by either spouse on the question of whether the husband had access to the wife at time of conception. This Rule has been abandoned by several states as having outlived its original policy foundations. Serafin v. Serafin, 401 Mich. 629, 258 N.W.2d 461.

Lordship. In English law, dominion, manor, seigniory, domain; also a title of honor used to a nobleman not being a duke. It is also the customary titulary appellation of the judges, and some other persons in authority and office.

Lose. To bring to destruction; to ruin; to destroy; to suffer the loss of; to be deprived of; to part with, especially in an accidental or unforeseen manner; as to lose an eye. Logan v. Johnson, 218 N.C. 200, 10 S.E.2d 653, 655. See also Mislav.

Loss. Loss is a generic and relative term. It signifies the act of losing or the thing lost; it is not a word of limited, hard and fast meaning and has been held synonymous with, or equivalent to, “damage”, “damages”, “deprivation”, “detriment”, “injury”, and “privation”. Mason v. City of Albertville, 276 Ala. 68, 158 So.2d 924, 927.

120, 12 P.2d 354, 355; damage, Wilbur v. U.S. ex rel. C.L. Wold Co., 58 App.D.C. 347, 30 F.2d 871, 872; a decrease in value of resources or increase in liabilities; depletion or depreciation or destruction of value; deprivation; destruction, Wells v. Thomas W. Garland, Inc., Mo.App., 39 S.W.2d 409, 411; detriment, Fidelity Union Casualty Co. v. Wilkins, Tex.Civ.App., 94 S.W.2d 763, 765; United States v. City Nat. Bank of Duluth, D.C.Minn., 31 F.Supp. 530, 534, 535; failure to keep that which one has or thinks he has; injury, United Service Automobile Ass'n v. Miles, 139 Tex. 138, 161 S.W.2d 1048; United States v. City Nat. Bank of Duluth, D.C.Minn., 31 F.Supp. 530, 534, 535; privation, United States v. City Nat. Bank of Duluth, D.C.Minn., 31 F.Supp. 530, 534, 535; shrinkage in value of estate or property; state or fact of being lost or destroyed, Logan v. Johnson, 218 N.C. 200, 10 S.E.2d 653, 655; that which is gone and cannot be recovered or that which is withheld or that of which a party is dispossessed, Walker v. Thomas, 64 App.D.C. 148, 75 F.2d 667, 669; Sorey Co., 60 S.D. 100, 243 N.W. 664, 666; intentional parting with something of value, Providence Journal Co. v. Broderick, C.C.A.11., 104 F.2d 614, 616.

As to loss of consortium, see Consortium; salvage loss, see Salvage; proof of loss, see Proof.

Disability benefits. State workers' compensation laws, social security, and disability insurance contracts provide disability benefits for partial or permanent loss of use of limbs, eyes, etc.

Insurance. Ascertained liability of insurer, Michel v. American Fire & Casualty Co., C.C.A.Fla., 82 F.2d 583, 586; decrease in value of resources or increase in liabilities; depletion or depreciation or destruction of value; injury, damage, etc., to property or persons injured; Miles v. United Services Automobile Ass'n, Tex.Civ.App., 149 S.W.2d 233, 235, 236; injury or damage sustained by insured in consequence of happening of one or more of the accidents or misfortunes against which insurer has undertaken to indemnify the insured; pecuniary injury resulting from the occurrence of the contingency insured against, Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation v. Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., C.C.A.Mo., 100 F.2d 441, 446. Word "loss" implies that property is no longer in existence. Littrell v. Allemania Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., 222 App.Div. 302, 226 N.Y.S. 243, 244.

"Loss of eye" means loss of use for any practical purpose, Order of United Commercial Travelers of America v. Knorr, C.C.A.Kan., 112 F.2d 679, 682. Loss of member or loss of an entire member means destruction of usefulness of member or entire member for purposes to which in its normal condition it is susceptible of application, in absence of more specific definition. Loss of use of hand means substantial and material impairment of use in practical performance of its function. Loss of use of member is equivalent to loss of member, Continental Casualty Co. v. Linn, 226 Ky. 328, 10 S.W.2d 1079, 1082, Noel v. Continental Casualty Co., 138 Kan. 136, 23 P.2d 610. Loss of vision to extent that one cannot perceive and distinguish objects is "loss of sight".

To constitute "loss or damage by fire" existence of actual fire, which becomes uncontrollable or breaks out from where it was intended to be and becomes a hostile element, is sufficient. Princess Garment Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. of San Francisco, Cal., C.C.A.Ohio, 115 F.2d 380, 382.

Loss leader. Item sold by a merchant at very low price and sometimes below cost in order to attract people to store with the hope that they will buy additional items on which a profit will be made.

Loss of consortium. See Consortium.

Loss of earning capacity. Damage to one's ability to earn wages in the future and recoverable as element of damage in tort actions. It is not the same as loss of earnings though loss of actual earnings is competent evidence of loss of earning capacity. A person unemployed at the time of the accident has an earning capacity though he has no earnings.

Loss payable clause. A clause in a fire insurance policy, listing the priority of claims in the event of destruction of the property insured. Generally, a mortgagee, or beneficiary under a deed of trust, is the party appearing in the clause, being paid to the amount owing under the mortgage or deed of trust before the owner is paid. A provision in property insurance contracts that authorizes payments to persons other than the insured to the extent that they have an insurable interest in the property.

Loss payee. Person named in insurance policy to be paid in event of loss or damage to property insured.

Loss ratio. In insurance, the proportion between premiums collected and loss payments made.

Loss reserve. That portion of insurance company's assets set aside for payment of losses which will probably arise or which have arisen but have not been paid.

Lost. An article is "lost" when the owner has lost the possession or custody of it, involuntarily and by any means, but more particularly by accident or his own negligence or forgetfulness, and when he is ignorant of its whereabouts or cannot recover it by an ordinarily diligent search. See also Lost property.

As applied to ships and vessels, the term means "lost at sea," and a vessel lost is one that has totally gone from the owners against their will, so that they know nothing of it, whether it still exists or not, or one which they know is no longer within their use and control, either in consequence of capture by enemies or pirates, or an unknown founding, or sinking by a known storm, or collision, or destruction by shipwreck.

Lost corner. See Corner.
Lost or not lost. A phrase sometimes inserted in policies of marine insurance. It signifies that the contract is meant to relate back to the beginning of a voyage now in progress, or to some other antecedent time, and to be valid and effectual even if, at the moment of executing the policy, the vessel should have already perished by some of the perils insured against, provided that neither party has knowledge of that fact or any advantage over the other in the way of superior means of information. Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U.S. 528, 25 L.Ed. 219; Insurance Co. v. Folsom, 85 U.S. (18 Wall.) 237, 21 L.Ed. 827.

Lost papers. Papers which have been so mislaid that they cannot be found after diligent search.

Lost property. Property which the owner has involuntarily parted with and does not know where to find or recover it, not including property which he has intentionally concealed or deposited in a secret place for safe-keeping. Distinguishable from mislaid property which has been deliberately placed somewhere and forgotten. The majority of the states have adopted the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act.

Lost will. A will which was once executed but cannot be found at death of testator. The contents can be proved by parol in many jurisdictions, though in some states there is a rebuttable presumption that a will once in existence has been revoked if it cannot be found at testator's death.

Real estate. A share; one of several parcels into which property is divided. Any portion, piece, division or parcel of land. Fractional part or subdivision of block, according to plat or survey, Mawson-Peterson Lumber Co. v. Sprinkle, 59 Wyo. 334, 140 P.2d 586, 591; portion of platted territory measured and set apart for individual and private use and occupation, Hunter v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Los Angeles and San Diego Corporation Sole, 128 Cal.App. 90, 16 P.2d 1048, 1049.

A lot is commonly one of several other contiguous parcels of land making up a block. Real property is typically described by reference to lot and block numbers on recorded maps and plats.

Local zoning laws commonly require minimum lot sizes for residential and commercial building.

See also Nonconforming lot; Parcel.

Sales. In sales, a parcel or single article which is the subject matter of a separate sale or delivery whether or not it is sufficient to perform the contract. U.C.C. § 2–105(5).

Securities. In securities and commodities market, a specified number of shares or specific quantity of a commodity designated for trading. See Odd lot; Odd lot doctrine.

Lot and scot. In English law, certain duties which formerly had to be paid by those who claimed to exercise the elective franchise within certain cities and boroughs, before they were entitled to vote.

Lotterist, or leyerwit. In old English law, a liberty or privilege to take amends for lying with a bondwoman without license.

Lottery /ˈlɔtəri/. A chance for a prize for a price. Essential elements of a lottery are consideration, prize and chance and any scheme or device by which a person for a consideration is permitted to receive a prize or nothing as may be determined predominantly by chance. State v. Wassick, W.Va., 191 S.E.2d 283, 288.

An unlawful gambling scheme in which (a) the players pay or agree to pay something of value for chances, represented and differentiated by numbers or by combinations of numbers or by some other media, one or more of which chances are to be designated the winning ones; and (b) the winning chances are to be determined by a drawing or by some other method based upon the element of chance; and (c) the holders of the willing chances are to receive something of value. New Jersey Criminal Code, § 2C:37–1.

Also defined as device whereby anything of value is for a consideration allotted by lot or chance. State ex Inf. McKittrick v. Globe-Democrat Pub. Co., 341 Mo. 862, 110 S.W.2d 705, 713, 714, 717, 718. Game by which a person paying money becomes entitled to money or other thing of value on certain contingencies, determinable by lot cast in a particular way by the manager of the game; game of hazard in which small sums of money are ventured for chance of obtaining a larger value in money or other articles; State v. Jones, 44 N.M. 623, 107 P.2d 324, 326; gambling contract by which for a valuable consideration one may by favor of the lot obtain a prize of value superior to the amount or value of that which he risks, Troy Amusement Co. v. Attenweller, 64 Ohio App. 105, 28 N.E.2d 207, 212, 17 O.O. 443; hazard in which sums are ventured for chance of obtaining a greater value, People v. Hines, 284 N.Y. 93, 29 N.E.2d 483, 488. Scheme by which result is reached by some action or means taken, and in which result man's choice or will has no part nor can human reason, foresight, sagacity, or design enable him to know or determine such result until the same has been accomplished, State v. Schwemeler, 154 Or. 533, 60 P.2d 938, 940; scheme for distribution of prizes or things of value by lot or chance, Engle v. State, 593 Ariz. 458, 90 P.2d 988, 992, 993; scheme for raising money by selling chances to share in distribution of prizes. Scheme where money is paid for chance of receiving money or a prize in return. People v. Pailis, Mag.Cl.N.Y., 12 N.Y.S.2d 796, 797, 798, 799. Scheme whereby one on paying money or other valuable thing to another becomes entitled to receive from him such a return in value or nothing as some formula of chance may determine. Scheme which, played or operated once, destroys the value of ticket provided as the prizes are distributed. Scheme which tends to induce one to pay or agree to pay a valuable consideration for a chance to draw a prize.

The sending of lottery tickets through the mails and by other instrumentalities of interstate commerce is prohibited by federal law. 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1301 et seq., 1953.

See also Dutch lottery; Gambling; Game of chance.
LOUAGE

Louage /luwázh/. Fr. This is the contract of hiring and letting in French law, and may be either of things or of labor. The varieties of each are the following: 1. Letting of things,—bail à loyer being the letting of houses; bail à ferme being the letting of lands. 2. Letting of labor, em loger being the letting of personal services; bail à cheptel being the letting of animals.

L’ou le ley done chose, la ceo done remediei a vener a cee /lùw le lèy dòw shòwz, là sòw dòw rêmédi à vanéy à sòw/. Where the law gives a right, it gives a remedy to recover.

Love and affection. Such is a sufficient consideration when a gift is contemplated, but is not considered "valuable" consideration where such is required. See Nudum pactum.

Love-day. In old English law, the day on which any dispute was amicably settled between neighbors; or a day on which one neighbor helps another without hire.

Lowbote. In old English law, a recompense for the death of a man killed in a tumult.

Lower of cost or market. A basis for inventory valuation where the inventory value is set at the lower of acquisition cost or current replacement cost (market).

Lowers. Fr. In French maritime law, wages.

Lowest responsible bidder. Bidder who not only has lowest price, but also is financially able and competent to complete work as evidenced by prior performance.

Low justice. In old European law, jurisdiction of petty offenses, as distinguished from "high justice" (q.v.).

Low-water mark. Line on the shore marking the lowest ebb of the tide. See also Water mark.

Loyal. Legal; authorized by or conforming to law. Also faithful in one’s political relations; giving faithful support and allegiance to one’s prince or sovereign or to the existing government. Faithful support to cause, ideal, office, or person.

Loyalty. Adherence to law. Faithfulness to one’s office or sovereign or to the existing government.

Loyalty oath. An oath whereby an individual declares his allegiance to his government and its institutions and disclaims any support of foreign ideologies or associations. Such oaths as are required of various classifications of public officials and persons working in “sensitive” government positions. See e.g. Art. II, § 1, cl. 7; Art. VI, cl. 3, U.S.Const. However, oaths too vague to specify what constitutes seditious acts and utterances have been declared unconstitutional. Communist Party of Indiana v. Whitcomb, 414 U.S. 441, 94 S.Ct. 656, 38 L.Ed.2d 635. See also Oath.

L.S. An abbreviation for “Locus sigilli,” the place of the seal; i.e., the place where a seal is to be affixed, or a scroll which stands instead of a seal. See Locus sigilli.

LSAT. Law School Admission Test. This test is given to law school applicants. The LSAT is a half-day multiple choice test designed to measure certain basic reasoning abilities important in the study of law, general academic ability and command of written English. It provides two scores: an LSAT score and a writing ability (WA) score. The LSAT portion measures the ability to understand and reason with a variety of verbal, quantitative, and symbolic materials. The writing ability portion measures the use of standard English to express ideas clearly and precisely. The test is intended to supplement the undergraduate record and other information about the student in the assessment of potential for law school work. It covers a broad range of disciplines, measures skills acquired over a long period of time, and gives no advantage to students with particular specializations.

Ltd. Limited.

Lubricum lingue non facile trahendum est in penam /lööbrokam lëgviy nöö fiešälly trahëndäm êst ên pylmëm/. A slip of the tongue ought not lightly to be subjected to punishment.

Lucid. Easily understood; clear; rational; sane.

Lucid interval. A temporary cure; temporary restoration to sanity. Intervals occurring in the mental life of an insane person during which he is completely restored to the use of his reason, or so far restored that he has sufficient intelligence, judgment, and will to enter into contractual relations, or perform other legal acts, without disqualification by reason of his disease. Oklahoma Natural Gas Corporation v. Lay, 175 Okl. 75, 51 P.2d 580, 583. With respect to marriage, refers to period of time during which person had sufficient mental capacity to know and understand nature and consequence of marriage relation, and the reciprocal and mutual duties and obligations thereof. Carter v. Bacle, Tex.Civ.App., 94 S.W.2d 817, 819. In connection with wills, a period of time within which an insane person enjoys the restoration of his faculties sufficient to enable him to judge his act. In re Cook’s Estate, 231 Or. 133, 372 P.2d 520, 522.

Lucra nuptialis /l(y)úkwérks nöfrhiyël/ý(y) favors/. Lat. In Roman law, a term including everything which a husband or wife, as such, acquires from the estate of the other, either before the marriage, or on agreeing to it, or during its continuance, or after its dissolution, and whether the acquisition is by pure gift, or by virtue of the marriage contract, or against the will of the other party by law or statute.

Lucrativa causa /l(y)úkwétärävä kóza/. Lat. In Roman law, a consideration which is voluntary; that is to say, a gratuitous gift, or such like. It was opposed to onerosa causa, which denoted a valuable consideration. It was a principle of the Roman law that two lucrative causes could not concur in the same person as regarded the same thing; that is to say, that, when the same thing was bequeathed to a person by two different testators, he could not have the thing (or its value) twice over.

Lucrativa usucapio /l(y)úkwétärävä yúwzhwaképi-yow/. Lat. This species of usucapio was permitted in Roman law only in the case of persons taking possession of property upon the decease of its late owner, and in exclusion or defacement of the heir, whence it was called "usu capio pro hærede." The adjective "lucrative" denoted that property was acquired by this usu capio without any consideration or payment for it by way of purchase; and, as the possessor who so acquired the property was a malâ fide possessor, his acquisition, or usu capio, was called also "improba" (i.e., dishonest); but this dishonesty was tolerated (until abolished by Hadrian) as an incentive to force the hæres to take possession, in order that the debts might be paid and the sacrifices performed; and, as a further incentive to the hæres, this usu capio was complete in one year.

Lucrative. Yielding gain or profit; profitable; bearing or yielding a revenue or salary.

Lucrative bailment. See Bailment.

Lucrative office. One which yields a revenue (in the form of fees or otherwise) or a fixed salary to the incumbent. According to some authorities, one which yields a compensation supposed to be adequate to the services rendered and in excess of the expenses incident to the office. One the pay of which is affixed to performance of duties of office.

Lucre /l(ə)yʉwr̩kə/. Gain in money or goods; profit; usually in an ill sense, or with the sense of something base or unworthy.

Luceri causa /l(ə)yʉwr̩kr̩y k̩o̱za/. Lat. In criminal law, a term descriptive of the intent with which property is taken in cases of larceny, the phrase meaning "for the sake of lucre" or gain.

Lucrum /l(ə)yʉwr̩kr̩m/. A small slip or parcel of land.

Lucrum cessans /l(ə)yʉwr̩kr̩m səsən(d)z/. Lat. A ceasing gain, as distinguished from damnum datum, an actual loss. That element of contract damages which accounts for lost profits.

Lucrum facere ex pupill tutela tutor non debet /l(ə)yʉwr̩kr̩m fəsəriˈ iːks p(ə)pəli y(ə)kiˈlə tuːdər nən dəbat/. A guardian ought not to make money out of the guardianship of his ward.

Luctuosa hereditas /l̩ɑkchuwʊwʊs hərɨdɨtəs/. A mournful inheritance. See Hereditas luctuosa.

Luctus /l̩ɑktus/. In Roman law, mourning. See Annus luctus.

Luminare /l(ə)yʉwmənəri/. A lamp or candle set burning on the altar of any church or chapel, for the maintenance whereof lands and rent-charges were frequently given to parish churches, etc.

Lumping sale. As applied to judicial sales, this term means a sale in mass, as where several distinct parcels of real estate, or several articles of personal property, are sold together for a "lump" or single gross sum. See Bulk sale.

Lump-sum alimony. Settlement or payment of money or property in divorce action made in single payment instead of installments. Sometimes called "alimony in gross." See Alimony.

Lump-sum distribution. Payment of the entire amount due at one time rather than in installments. Such distributions often occur from qualified pension or profit-sharing plans upon the retirement or death of a covered employee.

Lump-sum payment. A single amount in contrast to installments; e.g., single premium payment for life insurance; a single lump sum divorce settlement; or single worker's compensation payment in lieu of future monthly installment payments. See also Alimony.

Lunacy. Lunacy is that condition or habit in which the mind is directed by the will, but is wholly or partially misguided or erroneously governed by it; or it is the impairment of any one or more of the faculties of the mind, accompanied with or inducing a defect in the comparing faculty. This general legal term for a major mental disorder or illness is seldom used in medical terminology; the reference now being to the specific mental illness involved. See also Insanity.

Lunar. Belonging to or measured by the revolutions of the moon.

Lunar month. See Month.

Lunatic. See Lunacy.

Lushborow /l̩uʃbɔrəʊ/*l̩uʃbɔr̩/. In old English law, a base sort of money, coined beyond sea in the likeness of English coin, and introduced into England in the reign of Edward III. Prohibited by St. 25 Edw. III, c. 4.

Luxury tax. Generic term for excise imposed on purchase of items which are not necessaries; e.g., tax on liquor or cigarettes.

Lying by. A person who, by his presence and silence at a transaction which affects his interests, may be fairly supposed to acquiesce in it, if he afterwards propose to disturb the arrangement, is said to be prevented from doing so by reason that he has been lying by. See also Estoppel.

Lying in franchise. A term descriptive of waifs, wrecks, estrays, and the like, which may be seized without suit or action.

Lying in grant. A phrase applied to incorporeal rights, incapable of manual tradition, and which must pass by mere delivery of a deed.

Lying in wait. Lying in ambush; lying hidden or concealed for the purpose of making a sudden and unexpected attack upon a person when he shall arrive at the scene. In some jurisdictions, where there are several degrees of murder, lying in wait is made evidence of that deliberation and premeditated intent which is necessary to characterize murder in the first degree.

Lynch law. A term descriptive of the action of unofficial persons, organized bands, or mobs, who seize persons charged with or suspected of crimes, or take them out of the custody of the law, and inflict summary punishment upon them, without legal trial, and without the warrant or authority of law.

Lyndhurst's (Lord) Act /lɔrd lɪnd(h)ɔrsts əkt/. This English statute (5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 54) renders marriages within the prohibited degrees absolutely null and void. Theretofore such marriages were voidable merely.

Lyte /l̩ædɪ/.* In old Roman law, a name given to students of the civil law in the fourth year of their course, from their being supposed capable of solving any difficulty in law.
M. This letter, used as a Roman numeral, stands for one thousand.

It was also, in old English law, a brand or stigma impressed upon the brawn of the thumb of a person convicted of manslaughter and admitted to the benefit of clergy.

This letter was sometimes put on the face of treasury notes of the United States, and signified that the treasury note bears interest at the rate of one mill per centum, and not one per centum interest. U.S. v. Hardymon, 38 U.S. (13 Pet.) 176, 10 L.Ed. 113.

Mace. A large staff, made of the precious metals, and highly ornamented. It is used as an emblem of authority, and carried before certain public functionaries by a mace-bearer. In many legislative bodies, the mace is employed as a visible symbol of the dignity and collective authority of the house. In the house of lords and house of commons of the British parliament, it is laid upon the table when the house is in session. In the United States House of Representatives, it is borne upright by the sergeant-at-arms on extraordinary occasions, as when it is necessary to quell a disturbance or bring refractory members to order.

Chemical liquid which, when sprayed in face of person, causes dazzliness and immobilization.

Macedonian decree /mékédónjón děšriz/. In Roman law, this was the Senatus-consultum Macedonianum, a decree of the Roman senate, first given under Claudius, and renewed under Vespasian by which it was declared that no action should be maintained to recover a loan of money made to a child who was under the patria potestas. It was intended to strike at the practice of usurers in making loans, on unconcionable terms, to family heirs who would mortgage their future expectations from the paternal estate. The law is said to have derived its name from that of a notorious usurer.

Mace-griff /méysgrêf/. In old English law, one who buys stolen goods, particularly food, knowing it to have been stolen.

Mace-proof. Secure against arrest.

Machination /mékánестӣn/mếš̄/. The act of planning or contriving a scheme for executing some purpose, particularly an evil purpose; an artful design formed with deliberation.

Mactator /mékteydr̄/. L. Lat. In old European law, a murderer.

Maculare /mékuyár̄iȳ/. In old European law, to wound.

Made known. Where a process or other legal paper has been actually served upon a defendant, the proper return is that its contents have been “made known” to him. A crime is “made known” to an officer when facts which come to knowledge of the officer are such as to indicate to him that it is his official duty to act or to see that an investigation of the alleged crime is instituted within his jurisdiction. See also Notice.

Madman. This is not a technical term either of medicine or the law, and because of this it is incapable of being applied with scientific precision; as such, is no longer in use. See Insanity.

Mad Parliament. Henry III, in 1258, at the desire of the Great Council in Parliament, consented to the appointment of a committee of twenty-four, of whom twelve were appointed by the Barons and twelve by the King, in a parliament which was stigmatized as the “Mad Parliament.” Unlimited power was given to it to carry out all necessary reforms. It drew up the Provisions of Oxford.

Mac-burgh /meękber̄/. In Saxon law, kindred; family.

Mag /mэ̄g/. A kinsman.

Magbote /mэ̄gbȫv̄/. In Saxon law, a recompense or satisfaction for the slaying or murder of a kinsman.

Magle. In English statutes, witch-craft and sorcery.

Magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit /mэ̄ȳjas d̄ī bó̄n̄ow̄ kw̄í̄m d̄ī m̄é̄lov̄ lw̄̄ks ant̄é̄n̄d̄st̄/. The law favors a good rather than a bad construction. Where the words used in an agreement are susceptible of two meanings, the one agreeable to the other against the law, the former is adopted. Thus, a bond conditioned “to assign all offices” will be construed to apply to such offices only as are assignable.

Magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum /mэ̄ȳjas d̄īgn̄am tr̄é̄ȳ(h)st̄ r̄d̄ st̄́ s̄́m̄ấyn̄s d̄īgn̄am/. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy.
Magister. Lat. Civil law. A title of several offices under the Roman Empire.

English law. A master or ruler; a person who has attained to some eminent degree in science.

Magister ad facultates /maj'istar ad fakultedyiz/. In English ecclesiastical law, the title of an officer who grants dispensations; as to marry, to eat meat on days prohibited and the like.

Magister honorum vendendorum /maj'istar bon'orom vendo'dorom/. In Roman law, a person appointed by judicial authority to inventory, collect, and sell the property of an absent or absconding debtor for the benefit of his creditors. He was generally one of the creditors, and his functions corresponded generally to those of a receiver or an assignee for the benefit of creditors under modern bankruptcy practice.

Magister cancellarius /maj'istar kan'tzaleryiy/. In old English law, master of the chancery; master in chancery. These officers were said to be called “magistri,” because they were priests.

Magisterial /ma'jestriyal/. Relating or pertaining to the character, office, powers, or duties of a magistrate or of the magistracy.

Magisterial precinct. In some American states, a local subdivision of a county, defining the territorial jurisdiction of justices of the peace and constables; also called magisterial district.

Magister libellorum /maj'istar laybal'orum/. Master of requests. A title of office under the Roman Empire.

Magister litis /maj'istar lay'das/. Master of the suit; the person who controls the suit or its prosecution, or has the right so to do.

Magister navis /maj'istar ne'yvas/. In the civil law, the master of a ship or vessel. He to whom the care of the whole vessel is committed.

Magister palatii /maj'istar pal'eyshiyay/. Master of the palace or of the offices. An officer under the Roman Empire bearing some resemblance to the modern lord chamberlain.

Magister rerum usus /maj'istar ri'am yu'wssas/. Use is the master of things. Usage is a principal guide in practice.

Magister rerum usus; magistra rerum expedientiae /maj'istra ri'am yu'wssas, majistra ri'am akspiriyen'sh(ly)'a/. Use is the master of things; experience is the mistress of things.

Magister societatis /maj'istar sa'sa'atyeydas/. In the civil law, the master or manager of a partnership; a managing partner or general agent; a manager specially chosen by a firm to administer the affairs of the partnership.

Magistracy /ma'jestrasiy/. This term may have a more or less extensive signification according to the use and connection in which it occurs. In its widest sense it includes the whole body of public functionaries, whether their offices be legislative, judicial, executive, or administrative. In a more restricted (and more usual) meaning, it denotes the class of officers who are charged with the application and execution of the laws. In a still more confined use, it designates the body of judicial officers of the lowest rank, and more especially those who have jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of petty misdemeanors or the preliminary steps of a criminal prosecution, such as police judges and justices of the peace. The term also designates the office of a magistrate. Golden v. Golden, 41 N.M. 358, 68 P.2d 928, 930. See also Magistrate.

Magistralia brevia /ma'jestreel(i)'ya bry'y(i)'ya/. In old English practice, magisterial writs; writs adapted to special cases, and so called from being framed by the masters or principal clerks of the chancery.

Magistrate. The term in its generic sense refers to a person clothed with power as a public civil officer, or a public civil officer invested with executive or judicial power. Ex parte Noel, Ky., 338 S.W.2d 903, 907. Minor officials or officers with limited judicial authority; e.g. justices of the peace, judges of police courts, mayor's courts, or magistrate's courts. In a general sense, a “magistrate” is a public officer, possessing such power, legislative, executive, or judicial, as government appointing him may ordain, although in a narrow sense he is regarded as an inferior judicial officer. Shadwick v. City of Tampa, Fla., 250 So.2d 4, 5.

U.S. Magistrates. A judicial officer, appointed by judges of federal district courts, having some but not all of the powers of a judge. In the federal district courts magistrates may conduct many of the preliminary or pre-trial proceedings in both civil and criminal cases. In addition, U.S. Magistrates have jurisdiction to try minor offenses. The procedure in such trials is governed by the “Rules for Minor Offenses Before U.S. Magistrates.” 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 3401, 3402; 28 U.S.C.A. § 631 et seq. United States Magistrates have generally taken over the duties formerly performed by U.S. Commissioners.

For Chief magistrate; Committing magistrate; Police magistrate; and Stipendiary magistrates, see those titles.

Magistrate’s courts. The jurisdiction of these courts of limited jurisdiction differs from state to state. Such may be divisions of courts of general jurisdiction, and, may have concurrent jurisdiction with other courts. Commonly their jurisdiction is restricted to the handling of minor offenses, small claims or preliminary hearings.

Magistratus /ma'jestreydas/. Lat. In the civil law, a magistrate. A judicial officer who had the power of hearing and determining causes, but whose office properly was to inquire into matters of law, as distinguished from fact.

Magnia assisa /ma'ignya as'sya/. In old English law, the grand assize.

Magnia assisa eligenda /ma'ignya as'sya el'jende/. An ancient writ to summon four lawful knights before the justices of assize, there to choose twelve others, with themselves to constitute the grand assize or great jury, to try the matter of right. The trial by grand assize was instituted by Henry II, in parliament, as an alternative to the duel in a writ of right. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27.
Magna centum /mægənə sɛntəm/. The great hundred, or six score.

Magna Carta /mægənə kɑrə/. The great charter. The name of a charter (or constitutional enactment) granted by King John of England to the barons, at Runnymede, on June 15, 1215, and afterwards, with some alterations, confirmed in parliament by Henry III and Edward I. This charter is justly regarded as the foundation of English constitutional liberty. Among its thirty-eight chapters are found provisions for regulating the administration of justice, defining the temporal and ecclesiastical jurisdictions, securing the personal liberty of the subject and his rights of property, and the limits of taxation, and for preserving the liberties and privileges of the church. Magna Carta is so called, partly to distinguish it from the Charta de Foresta, which was granted about the same time, and partly to its own transcendent importance.

Magna Charta et Charta de Foresta sunt appelées les "deux grandes charters" /mægənə kɑr'də ɛk kɑr'də dɪ ʃɑr'tə sɔ̃ apɛlɛ lɛ dыв ɡrand ʃɑr'dɛrs/. Magna Charta and the Charter of the Forest are called the "two great charters."

Magna componere parvis /mægənə kɑmpənɔrni pərvɪs/. To compare great things with small things.

Magna culpa /mægənə ˈkɜlpa/. Great fault; gross negligence.

Magna negligenta /mægənə ˈnɛlɡɛnʃəntə/ /mægənə nɛlɡɨˈʃəntə/ /mægənə nɛlɡəˈʃəntə/ /mægə nɛlɡəˈʃəntə/ /mægənə nɛlɡɨˈʃəntə/ /mægənə nɛlɡəˈʃəntə/ /mægənə nɛlɡəˈʃəntə/. In the civil law, great or gross negligence.

Magna negligenta culpa est; magna culpa dolus est /mægənə nɛlɡɨˈʃəntə kəpə lɛst; mægənə kəlpo dəˈlʊs ɛst/. Gross negligence is fault; gross fault is fraud.

Magnus rotulus statutorum /mægnəs ðəˈtɔltəs ˈstætəˈtʃʊləs/ /mægnəs ðəˈtɔltəs ˈstætəˈtʃʊləs/ /mægnəs ðəˈtɔltəs ˈstætəˈtʃʊləs/ /mægnəs ðəˈtɔltəs ˈstætəˈtʃʊləs/ /mægnəs ðəˈtɔltəs ˈstætəˈtʃʊləs/ /mægnəs ðəˈtɔltəs ˈstætəˈtʃʊləs/ /mægnəs ðəˈtɔltəs ˈstætəˈtʃʊləs/. The great roll. The first of the English statute rolls, beginning with Magna Carta, and ending with Edward III.

Maiden. A young unmarried woman. In an indictment for adultery, not necessarily a virgin.

Maiden assize /məˈdɛn əˈsɪz/. In English law, originally an assize at which no person was condemned to die; later a session of a criminal court at which there were no prisoners to be tried.

Maiden rents. In old English law, a fine paid to lords of some manors, on the marriage of tenants, originally given in consideration of the lord's relinquishing his customary right of lying the first night with the bride of a tenant.

Malhem /məˈhɛm/. See Mayhem; Malm.

Malhematus /məˈhɛməˈtəs/. Maimed or wounded.

Malhemium /məˈhɛmiəm/. In old English law, mayhem (q.v.).

Malhemium est homicide inchoatum /məˈhɛmiəmə iˈnkwəiθətəm/. Mayhem is incipient homicide.

Malhemium est inter criminia majora minimentum, et inter minora maximum /məˈhɛmiəmə iˈstər kriˈmiːnə məˈjɔrə miˈnənəm, ət ətər məˈnɔrə miˈnəmən/ /məˈhɛmiəmə iˈstər kriˈmiːnə məˈjɔrə miˈnənəm, ət ətər məˈnɔrə miˈnəmən/. Mayhem is the least of great crimes, and the greatest of small.

Malhemium est membra mutilatio, et dicit poterit, ubi alius in aliqvis parte sul corporis effectus sit inutilis ad pugnam /məˈhɛmiəmə iˈstər miˈmbrə muˈtəliətə oˈbi əbi əliˈuəs iˈn aliˈkviˌv viˌparə sul kəˈpɔrɪs ˈɛfʌktəs sɪt iˈnjuˈɪliəli əd pʌˈgnaˌm/. Mayhem is the mutilation of a member, and can be said to take place when a man is injured in any part of his body so as to be useless in fight.

Mall. See Mailed; Registered mall.

Mailable. Suitable or admissible for transmission by the mail; belonging to the classes of articles which, by the laws and postal regulations, may be sent by mail.

Mailed. A letter, package, or other mailable matter is "mailed" when it is properly addressed, stamped with the proper postage, and deposited in a proper place for receipt of mail. Tex. Civ. App., 269 S.W. 2d 496, 497.

Mail fraud. The use of the mails to defraud is a federal offense requiring the government to prove a knowing use of the mails to execute the fraudulent scheme. U.S. v. Dondich (C.A.Cal.), 506 F.2d 1009. Elements of "mail fraud" are a scheme to defraud and the mailing of a letter for the purpose of executing the scheme. U.S. v. Scoblick, D.C.Pa., 124 F. Supp. 881, 887. See 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1341, 1342. See Using mail to defraud.

Mail order divorce. Divorce obtained by parties who are not physically present nor domiciled in the jurisdiction which purports to grant divorce (e.g. Mexican divorce). Such divorces are not recognized because of the complete absence of the usual bases for divorce jurisdiction. Unruh v. Industrial Commission, 81 Ariz. 118, 301 P.2d 1029.

Main. To cripple or mutilate in any way. To inflict upon a person any injury which deprives him of the use of any limb or member of the body, or renders him lame or defective in bodily vigor. To inflict bodily injury; to seriously wound or disfigure; disable. State v. Thomas, 157 Kan. 526, 142 P.2d 692, 693; Phillips v. State, 140 Tex.Cr.R. 84, 143 S.W.2d 591, 592. See also Mayhem.

At common law, to deprive a person of a member or part of the body, the loss of which renders him less capable of fighting, or of defending himself; to commit mayhem (q.v.).

Main. Principal, leading, primary, chief. Most important in size, extent, rank, importance, strength or utility.
Mainad. In old English law, a false oath; perjury. Probably from Sax. "manath" or "mainath" a false or deceitful oath.

Main-a-main. Immediately.

Main channel. The main channel of a river is that bed over which the principal volume of water flows. The deeper or more navigable channel of river.

Maine-port. In old English law, a small tribute, commonly of loaves of bread, which in some places the parishioners paid to the rector in lieu of small lites.

Mainly. Principally, chiefly, in the main.

Mainour /mëynør/. An article stolen, when found in the hands of the thief. A thief caught with the stolen goods in his possession is said to be taken "with the mainour," that is, with the property in manu, in his hands. 4 Bl.Comm. 307.

Mainovre, or maineuvre /manúvvr/. A trespass committed by hand.

Mainpernial /méynpərnəl/. Capable of being bailed; bailable; admissible to bail on giving surety by mainperners.

Mainpernor /méynpərnər/. In old practice, a surety for the appearance of a person under arrest, who is delivered out of custody into the hands of his bail.

Mainprise. In old English law, the delivery of a person into the custody of mainperners (q.v.). Also the name of a writ (now obsolete) commanding the sheriff to take the security of mainperners and set the party at liberty. "Mainperners" differ from "bail" in that a man's bail may imprison or surrender him up before the stipulated day of appearance; mainperners can do neither, but are barely sureties for his appearance at the day. Bail are only sureties that the party be answerable for the special matter for which they stipulate; mainperners are bound to produce him to answer all charges whatsoever. 3 Bl.Comm. 128. Other distinctions are made in the old books.

Main purpose doctrine. The Statute of Frauds requires contracts to answer for the debt, default or misdoing of another to be in writing to be enforceable. However, if the main purpose of the promisor’s undertaking is his own benefit or protection, such promise need not be in writing. MacDonald v. Stack, 345 Mass. 709, 189 N.E.2d 221. The “main purpose rule” is that whenever the main purpose and object of promisor is not to answer for another but to subserve some purpose of his own, his promise is not within statute of frauds, although it may be in form a promise to pay debt of another and although performance of promise may incidentally have effect of extinguishing liability of another. Cooper Petroleum v. La Gloria Oil & Gas Co., Tex.Civ.App., 423 S.W.2d 645, 655.

Main-rent. Vassalage.

Main sea. See Sea.

Maintain. The term is variously defined as acts of repairs and other acts to prevent a decline, lapse or cessation from existing state or condition; bear the expense of; carry on; commence; continue; furnish means for subsistence or existence of; hold; hold or keep in an existing state or condition; hold or preserve in any particular state or condition; keep from change; keep from falling, declining, or ceasing; keep in existence or continuance; keep in force; keep in good order; keep in proper condition; keep in repair; keep up; preserve; preserve from lapse, decline, failure, or cessation; provide for; rebuild; repair; replace; supply with means of support; supply with what is needed; support; sustain; uphold. Negatively stated, it is defined as not to lose or surrender; not to suffer or fail or decline. El Paso County Water Imp. Dist. No. 1 v. City of El Paso, D.C.Tex., 243 F.2d 927, 931.

To “maintain” an action is to uphold, continue on foot, and keep from collapse a suit already begun, or to prosecute a suit with effect. George Moore Ice Cream Co. v. Rose, Ga., 289 U.S. 373, 53 S.Ct. 620, 77 L.Ed. 1265. To maintain an action or suit may mean to commence or institute it; the term imports the existence of a cause of action. Maintain, however, is applied to actions already brought, but not yet reduced to judgment. Smalldow v. Gallardo, 275 U.S. 56, 48 S.Ct. 23, 72 L.Ed. 152. In this connection it means to continue or preserve in or with; to carry on.

The words “maintains” and “maintaining” in statutes prohibiting maintenance of a liquor nuisance denote continuous or recurrent acts approaching permanence. The term “maintaining government” means providing money to enable government to perform duties which it is required by law to perform.

See also Maintenance; Repair.

Maintained. Carried on; kept possession and care of; kept effectively; commenced and continued.

Maintainer. In criminal law, one that maintains or secords a cause pending in suit between others, either by disbursing money or otherwise giving assistance. One who is guilty of maintenance (q.v.).

Maintenance. Act of maintaining, keeping up, supporting; livelihood; means of sustenance. Federal Land Bank of St. Louis v. Miller, 184 Ark. 415, 42 S.W.2d 564, 566. The upkeep, or preserving the condition of property to be operated. See also Maintain.

Sustenance; support; assistance; aid. The furnishing by one person to another, for his support, of the means of living, or food, clothing, shelter, etc., particularly where the legal relation of the parties is such that one is bound to support the other, as between father and child, or husband and wife. State ex rel. Blume v. State Board of Education of Montana, 97 Mont. 371, 34 P.2d 515, 519. The supplying of the necessaries of life. Federal Land Bank of St. Louis v. Miller, 184 Ark. 415, 42 S.W.2d 564, 566. Term “maintenance” means primarily food, clothing and shelter, but it does include such items as reasonable and necessary transportation or automobile expenses, medical and drug expenses, utilities and household expenses. Hughes v. Hughes, La.App., 303 So.2d 766, 769. See also Support.
MAINTENANCE

Assets. Expenditures undertaken to preserve an asset’s service potential for its originally-intended life; these expenditures are treated as period expenses or product costs. Contrast with Improvement. See also Maintain; Repair.

Roads. “Maintenance” of public roads and highways includes all necessary powers to provide and keep up a system of highways. Handy v. Johnson, D.C.Tex., 51 F.2d 809, 813.

Seamen. See Maintenance and cure.

Suits. An officious intermeddling in a suit which in no way belongs to one, by maintaining or assisting either party, with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend it. Schnabel v. Taft Broadcasting Co., Inc., Mo.App., 525 S.W.2d 819, 823. See also Chancery.

Maintenance and cure. Contractual form of compensation given by general maritime law to seaman who falls ill while in service of his vessel. McCorpen v. Central Gulf S. S. Corp., C.A.Tex., 396 F.2d 547, 548. A shipowner is liable to a seaman under articles for illness and injury whether or not they arise out of his shipboard duties, and to this extent such benefits are broader than workmen’s compensation. The seaman who accepts such benefits is not deemed to have waived his right to sue the shipowner for negligence under the Jones Act. Pacific S.S. Co. v. Peterson, 278 U.S. 130, 49 S.Ct. 75, 73 L.Ed. 220.

Majof /mé(y)or/. An old form of “mayor.”

Malster /mýstér/. An old form of “master.”

Maitre /méytra/. Fr. In French maritime law, master; the master or captain of a vessel.

Majestas /majestás/. Lat. In Roman law, the majesty, sovereign authority, or supreme prerogative of the state or prince. Also a shorter form of the expression “crimen majestatis,” or “crimen læse majestatis,” an offense against sovereignty, or against the safety or organic life of the Roman people; i.e., high treason.

Majesty. Royal dignity. A term used of kings and emperors as a title of honor.

Major. A person of full age; one who is no longer a minor; one who has attained the management of his own concerns and the enjoyment of his civic rights. See also Adult; Legal age; Majority.

Military law. The officer next in rank above a captain.

Major and minor fault rule. Vessel guilty of gross fault has burden of showing that other vessel committed a plain fault. General Seafoods Corporation v. J. S. Packard Dredging Co., C.C.A.Mass., 120 F.2d 117, 119, 120. Where fault on part of one vessel is established by uncontradicted testimony and such fault is, of itself, sufficient to account for the disaster, it is not enough for such vessel to raise a doubt with regard to management of other vessel and any reasonable doubt with regard to propriety of conduct of such other vessel should be resolved in its favor. Intagliata v. Shipowners & Merchants Towboat Co., 26 Cal.2d 365, 159 P.2d 1, 10; General Seafoods Corporation v. J. S. Packard Dredging Co., C.C.A.Mass., 120 F.2d 117, 119, 120.

Major annus /mëýjar àñás/. The greater year; the bissextile year, consisting of 366 days.

Majora regalia /màjorà ragèyâ/i(y)a/. The king’s dignity, power, and royal prerogative, as opposed to his revenue, which is comprised in the minora regalia.

Major crimes. A loose classification of serious crimes such as murder, rape, armed robbery, etc.

Major dispute. Major disputes within Railway Labor Act are those concerned with formation of collective bargaining agreements or with efforts to secure such agreements and look to acquisition of rights of future rather than to rights which vested in past and “minor disputes” are those arising where there is existing agreement and there has been no effort to bring about formal change in terms or to create new agreement but dispute relates to application of particular provision. Railway Exp. Agency, Inc. v. Gulf Dept., Dist. Bd. of Adjustment, Broth. of Ry., Airline and S. S. Clerks, Freight Handlers, Exp. and Station Emp., D.C.Ga., 306 F.Supp. 1243, 1246. See also Minor dispute.

Majore pena affectus quam legisbus statuta est, non est infamis /màjóriy pëyna sëkìtas kwàm lìyîyàbas statûyëwa est, nòn est anfëynàs/. One affected with a greater punishment than is provided by law is not infamous.

Majores /màjóriyz/. In old English law, greater persons; persons of higher condition or estate.

In Roman law and genealogical tables, the male ancestors beyond the sixth degree.

Major general. An officer next in rank above a brigadier general, and next below a lieutenant general, and who usually commands a division or an army corps.

Major hereditas venit unlcuique nostrum a jure et legibus quam a parentibus /mèýjar harëdätas víynat wùwnak(yu)wàjìkìwi Nóstrom ë(y) jùrìyì èt lìyîyàbas kwàm ë(y) xàrëntabas/... A greater inheritance comes to every one of us from right and the laws from than from parents.

Majority. Full age; legal age; the age at which, by law, a person is entitled to the management of his own affairs and to the enjoyment of civic rights. The opposite of minority. Also the status of a person who is a major in age. See Adult; Capacity; Legal age.

The greater number. The number greater than half of any total.

Majority of qualified electors. Refers to those who actually vote on election day. Harris v. Baden, 154 Fla. 373, 17 So.2d 608, 609. See Majority rule; Majority vote.

Majority opinion. The opinion of an appellate court in which the majority of its members join. May also refer to a view of a legal principle in which most jurisdictions concur. See also Opinion.

Majority vote. Vote by more than half of voters for candidate or other matter on ballot. When there are only two candidates, he who receives the greater number of the votes cast is said to have a majority; when there are more than two competitors for the same office, the person who receives the greatest number of votes has a plurality, but he has not a majority unless he receives a greater number of votes than those cast for all his competitors combined.

As regards voting by stockholders, means majority per capita when the right to vote is per capita, and a majority of stock when each share of stock is entitled to a vote, each particular case being determined by provisions of charter regulating voting. Simon Borg & Co. v. New Orleans City R. Co., D.C.La., 244 F. 617, 619.

Major numerus in se continet minorem /méýjar n(y)úmaras in sý kóntan manóram/. The greater number contains in itself the less.

Majus dignum trahit ad se minus dignum /méýjas dinjm téry(h)ad sý máynas dinjm/. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy.

Majus est delictum sepsum occidere quam allum /méýjas ét daljktm sýjpm saksidari kwím éy-lijam/. It is a greater crime to kill one’s self than another. See Suicide.

Majus jus /méýjas jás/. In old practice, greater right or more right. A plea in the old real actions. Majus jus merum, more mere right.

A writ proceeding in some customary manors to try a right to land.

Majus Latium /méýjas léysh(y)am/. See Jus Latium.

Make. To cause to exist. United States v. Giles, 300 U.S. 41, 57 S.Ct. 340, 344, 81 L.Ed. 493. To form, fashion, or produce. To do, perform, or execute; as to make an issue, to make oath, to make a presentment. To do in form of law; to perform with due formalities; to execute in legal form; as to make answer, to make a return or report.

To execute as one’s act or obligation; to prepare and sign; to issue; to sign, execute, and deliver; as to make a conveyance, to make a note. To conclude, determine upon, agree to, or execute; as to make a contract.

To cause to happen by one’s neglect or omission; as to make default. To make acquisition of; to procure; to collect; as to make the money on an execution or to make a loan. To have authority or influence; to support or sustain; as in the phrase, “This precedent makes for the plaintiff.”

Make a contract. To agree upon, and conclude or adopt, a contract. In case of a written contract, to reduce it to writing, execute it in due form, and deliver it as binding.

Make an award. To form and publish a judgment on the facts.

Make default. To fail or be wanting in some legal duty; particularly to omit the entering of an appearance when duly summoned in an action at law or other judicial proceeding. To neglect to obey the command of a subpoena, etc. See also Default.

Maker. One who makes, frames, or ordains; as a “law-maker.” One who makes or executes; as the maker of a promissory note. One who signs a note to borrow. One who signs a check; in this context, synonymous with drawer. See Draft.

Accommodation maker. See Accommodation.

Making law. In old practice, the formality of denying a plaintiff’s charge under oath, in open court, with compurgators. One of the ancient methods of trial, frequently, though inaccurately, termed “waging law,” or “wager of law.” 3 Bl.Comm. 341.

Term may also refer to a court decision that establishes new law on a particular matter or subject.

Making record. The preparation of an appellate record. May also refer to the process of trying a case with a view towards an eventual appeal in which the record of the trial is important. In the latter instance care is taken during trial to make all appropriate objections so that such become part of the record on appeal.

Mal. A prefix meaning bad, wrong, fraudulent; as maladministration, malpractice, malversation, etc.

Mal /mél/. Lat. Bad; evil; wrongful.

Maladministration /méladmistrájsyan/. This term is used interchangeably with misadministration, and both words mean “wrong administration.”

Mala fides /mél fádiyz/. Bad faith. The opposite of bona fides (q.v.). Malé fidei possessor, a possessor in bad faith.

Mala grammatica non vitiat chartam. Sed in expositione instrumentorum mala grammatica quoad fieri possit evitanda est /mélé grámédaka nón višiñyát kýrdom sénd in ekspžishijóywníy instrúmentorám mélé grámédaka kwòwéd fáyray póosod évátánda sít/. Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed. But in the exposition of instruments, bad grammar, as far as it can be done, is to be avoided.

Mal in se /mélk ña sý/. Wrongs in themselves; acts morally wrong; offenses against conscience.

Malandrinos /mélándráný纳斯/. In old English law, a thief or pirate.

Malapportionment. An improper or unconstitutional apportionment of legislative districts. See Gerrymander; Legislative apportionment.

Mala praxis /mél práksás/. Malpractice; unskilful management or treatment. Particularly applied to the neglect or unskilful management of a physician, surgeon, or apothecary. See Malpractice.

Mala prohibita /mél prohibýdó/. Prohibited wrongs or offenses; acts which are made offenses by positive laws, and prohibited as such. Acts or omissions which are made criminal by statute but which, of themselves, are not criminal. Generally, no criminal intent or mens rea is required and the mere accomplishment of the act or omission is sufficient for criminal liability. Term is used in contrast to mala in se which are acts which are wrongs in themselves such as robbery.

Malconduct /mælkɒndʒekt/. Ill conduct, especially dishonest conduct, maladministration, or, as applied to officers, official misconduct. See Malfeasance; Misfeasance.

Male /mæl/. Of the masculine sex.

Male creditus /mælɪli kriːdəs/. In old English law, unfavorably thought of; in bad repute or credit.

Maledicta est expostito quæ corruptit textum /mælædɪkts ɛst ekspɔːstɪt(ɪ)yəʊ kwɪ kærɪmpt tɛktʊm/ . That is a cursed interpretation which corrupts the text.

Maledition /mælædɪʃkən/. A curse, which was ancienitly annexed to donations of lands made to churches or religious houses, against those who should violate thier rights.

Malefaction /mælæfækʃən/. A crime; an offense.

Malefactor /mælæfæktər/. He who is guilty, or has been convicted, of some crime or offense.

Maleficia non debent remanere impunita; et impunitas continuum affectum delinquenti /mælæfɪʃ(ɪ)yə nɒn dɪbənt rɪˈmænərɪ impjʊˈɪntə; eθ ɪmpjʊˈɪntəs kəntɪnjuəm əfˈfektəm dɪlˈkwɪntənti/. Evil deeds ought not to remain unpunished; and impunity affords continual incitement to the delinquent.

Maleficia propositis distinguuntur /mælæfɪʃ(ɪ)yə prəˈpozədɪs dɪstɪŋɡwəntər/ . Evil deeds are distinguished from evil purposes, or by their purposes.

Maleficium /mælæfɪʃ(ɪ)yəm/. In the civil law, waste; damage; tort; injury.

Maleson, or malison /mɛləsən/ /ˈmælɪsən/. A curse.

Malesworn, or malisworn /mɛlɪswɔːrn/. Forsworn.

Malfeasance /mælɪfɪzn(t)s/. Evil doing; ill conduct. The commission of some act which is positively unlawful; the doing of an act which is wholly wrongful and unlawful; the doing of an act which person ought not to do at all or the unjust performance of some act which the party had no right or which he had contracted not to do. Comprehensive term including any wrongful conduct that affects, interrupts or interferes with the performance of official duties. State ex rel. Knabb v. Frater, 198 Wash. 675, 89 P.2d 1046, 1048. Malfeasance is a wrongful act which the actor has no legal right to do, or any wrongful conduct which affects, interrupts, or interferes with performance of official duty, or an act for which there is no authority or warrant of law or which a person ought not to do at all, or the unjust performance of some act, which party performing it has no right, or has contracted not, to do. Daugherty v. Ellis, 142 W.Va. 340, 97 S.E.2d 33, 42. It differs from “misfeasance” and “non-feasance” (q.v.).

Mal gree /mæl griː/. L. Fr. Against the will; without the consent. Hence the single word “malgre,” and more modern “maugre” (q.v.).

Malice. The intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse, with an intent to inflict an injury or under circumstances that the law will imply an evil intent. A condition of mind which prompts a person to do a wrongful act willfully, that is, on purpose, to the injury of another, or to do intentionally a wrongful act toward another without justification or excuse. A conscious violation of the law (or the prompting of the mind to commit it) which operates to the prejudice of another person. A condition of the mind showing a heart regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. Cockrell v. State, 135 Tex.Cr.R. 218, 117 S.W.2d 1105, 1109, 1110.

In murder, that condition of mind which prompts one to take the life of another without just cause or provocation. A willful or corrupt intention of the mind. It includes not only anger, hatred and revenge, but also every other unlawful and unjustifiable motive. State v. Scherr, 243 Wis. 65, 9 N.W.2d 117, 119.

Malice in law is not necessarily personal hate or ill will, but it is that state of mind which is reckless of law and of the legal rights of the citizen.

In libel and slander, as to privileged communications, “malice” involves an evil intent or motive arising from spite or ill will; personal hatred or ill will; or culpable recklessness or a willful and wanton disregard of the rights and interests of the person defamed. In a libel case it consists in intentionally publishing, without justifiable cause, any written or printed matter which is injurious to the character of another. Becker v. Brinkop, 230 Mo.App. 871, 78 S.W.2d 538, 541. Malice may be defined, insofar as defamation is concerned, as acting in bad faith and with knowledge of falsity of statements. Rice v. Winkelman Bros. Apparel, Inc., 13 Mich.App. 281, 164 N.W.2d 417, 420. In the context of a libel suit brought by a public figure, it consists in publishing the false defamation knowing it to be false or with a reckless disregard of whether it is true or false. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. See also Libel; Slander.

In the law of malicious prosecution, it means that the prosecution was instituted primarily because of a purpose other than that of bringing an offender to justice. Brown v. Kisner, 192 Miss. 746, 6 So.2d 611, 617. See also Malicious prosecution.

Constructive malice. Implied malice; malice inferred from acts; malice imputed by law; malice which is not shown by direct proof of an intention to do injury (express malice), but which is inferentially established by the necessarily injurious results of the acts shown to have been committed. See also Implied malice, infra.

Express malice. Actual malice; malice in fact; ill will or wrongful motive. A deliberate intention to commit an injury, evidenced by external circumstances. Sparf v. U. S., 156 U.S. 51, 15 S.Ct. 273, 39 L.Ed. 343. See also Express malice.
Implied malice. Malice inferred by legal reasoning and necessary deduction from the res gestae or the conduct of the party. Malice inferred from any deliberate cruel act committed by one person against another, however sudden. What is called "general malice" is often thus inferred. Sparf v. U. S., 156 U.S. 51, 15 S.Ct. 273, 39 L.Ed. 343. See also Constructive malice, supra.

Legal malice. See Legal malice.

Particular malice. Malice directed against a particular individual. Ill will; a grudge; a desire to be revenged on a particular person. See also Special malice, below.

Preconceived malice. Malice prepense or aforethought. See Malice aforethought; Premeditation.

Premeditated malice. An intention to kill unlawfully, deliberately formed in the mind as the result of a determination meditated upon and fixed before the act. See Malice aforethought; Premeditation.

Special malice. Particular or personal malice; that is, hatred, ill will, or a vindictive disposition against a particular individual.

Universal malice. By this term is not meant a malicious purpose to take the life of all persons, but it is that depravity of the human heart which determines to take life upon slight or insufficient provocation, without knowing or caring who may be the victim.

Malice aforethought. A predetermination to commit an act without legal justification or excuse. Harrison v. Commonwealth, 279 Ky. 510, 131 S.W.2d 454, 455. A malicious design to injure. State v. Thomas, 157 Kan. 526, 142 P.2d 692, 693. The intentional doing of an unlawful act which was determined upon before it was executed. State v. Lane, Mo., 371 S.W.2d 261, 263. An intent, at the time of a killing, willfully to take the life of a human being, or an intent willfully to act in callous and wanton disregard of the consequences to human life; but "malice aforethought" does not necessarily imply any ill will, spite or hatred towards the individual killed. See also Premeditation.

Malice in fact. Express or actual malice. It implies desire or intent to injure, while "malice in law," or "implied malice," means wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse, and jury may infer it as a deduction from want of probable cause.

Malice in law. The intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse. Lyons v. St. Joseph Belt Ry. Co., 232 Mo.App. 575, 84 S.W.2d 933, 944. Implied, inferred, or legal malice. As distinguished from malice in fact, it is presumed from tortious acts, deliberately done without just cause, excuse, or justification, which are reasonably calculated to injure another or others.

Malice prepense. Malice aforethought; deliberate, pre-determined malice.

Malicious /malishas/. Characterized by, or involving, malice; having, or done with, wicked or mischievous intentions or motives; wrongful and done intentionally without just cause or excuse. See also Malice; Willful.

Malicious abandonment. In criminal law, the desertion of a wife or husband without just cause.

Malicious abuse of legal process. Wilfully misapplying court process to obtain object not intended by law. The wilful misuse or misapplication of process to accomplish a purpose not warranted or commanded by the writ; the malicious perversion of a regularly issued process, whereby a result not lawfully or properly obtained on a writ is secured; not including cases where the process was procured maliciously but not abused or misused after its issuance. The tort of "malicious abuse of process" requires a perversion of court process to accomplish some end which the process was not designed to accomplish, and does not arise from a regular use of process, even with ulterior motives. Capital Elec. Co. v. Cristaldi, D.C.Md., 157 F.Supp. 646, 648. See also Abuse (Process); Malicious use of process.

Malicious accusation. Procuring accusation or prosecution of another from improper motive and without probable cause. See Malicious prosecution.

Malicious act. A wrongful act intentionally done without legal justification or excuse; an unlawful act done willfully or purposely to injure another.

Malicious assault with deadly weapon. Form of aggravated assault in which the victim is threatened with death or serious bodily injury from the defendant's use of a deadly weapon. The element of malice can be inferred from the nature of the assault and the selection of the weapon.

Malicious injury. An injury committed against a person at the prompting of malice or hatred towards him, or done spitefully or wantonly. The willful doing of an act with knowledge it is liable to injure another and regardless of consequences. Injury involving element of fraud, violence, wantonness and willfulness, or criminality. An injury that is intentional, wrongful and without just cause or excuse, even in the absence of hatred, spite or ill will. Pancula v. Kaya, 59 Ohio App. 556, 18 N.E.2d 1003, 1005, 13 O.O. 301. Punitive damages may be awarded to plaintiff for such injury.

Malicious killing. Any intentional killing without a legal justification or excuse and not within the realm of voluntary manslaughter. State v. Cope, 78 Ohio App. 429, 67 N.E.2d 912, 920, 34 O.O. 171.

Maliciously. Imports a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another, or an intent to do a wrongful act, and may consist in direct intention to injure, or in reckless disregard of another's rights. See also Malice; Malicious.

Malicious mischief. Willful destruction of personal property, from actual ill will or resentment towards its owner or possessor. Though only a trespass at the common law, it is now, by most statutes, made severely penal.

Malicious motive. Any motive for instituting a prosecution, other than a desire to bring an offender to justice. Lounder v. Jacobs, 119 Colo. 511, 205 P.2d 236, 238. See Malicious prosecution.
MALICIOUS PROSECUTION

Malicious prosecution. One begun in malice without probable cause to believe the charges can be sustained. An action for damages brought by person, against whom civil suit or criminal prosecution has been instituted maliciously and without probable cause, after termination of prosecution of such suit in favor of person claiming damages. Beauline v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 426 S.W.2d 295, 298.

One who takes an active part in the initiation, continuation or procurement of civil proceedings against another is subject to liability to the other for wrongful civil proceedings if: (a) he acts without probable cause, and primarily for a purpose other than that of securing the proper adjudication of the claim in which the proceedings are based, and (b) except when they are ex parte, the proceedings have terminated in favor of the person against whom they are brought. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 674.

Elements of a cause of action for malicious prosecution are: (1) commencement of prosecution of proceedings against present plaintiff; (2) its legal causation by present defendant; (3) its termination in favor of present plaintiff; (4) absence of probable cause for such proceedings; (5) presence of malice therein; and (6) damage to plaintiff by reason thereof. Palermo v. Cotton, Mo.App., 525 S.W.2d 758, 764.

In addition to the tort remedy for malicious civil proceedings, the majority of states also permit tort actions for malicious institution of civil actions. See also Advice of counsel.

Malicious trespass. The act of one who maliciously or mischievously injures or causes to be injured any property of another or any public property.

Malicious use of process. Exists where plaintiff proceeds maliciously and without probable cause to execute object which law intends process to subserve. See also Abuse (Process); Malicious abuse of legal process.

Malignare /məlægnɛri/. To malign or slander; also to maim.

Malinger /məlɪŋɡər/. To feign sickness or any physical disablement or mental lapse or derangement, especially for the purpose of escaping the performance of a task, duty, or work. Person who consciously feigns or simulates mental or physical illness for gain.

Malitia /məlɪʃ(ə)ni/. Lat. Actual evil design; express malice.

Malitia est acida; est mali animi affectus /məlɪʃ(ə)ni ɛst ëssədə, ɛst məlæ ənəməi æfiɛkts/. Malice is sour; it is the quality of a bad mind.

Malitia precogitata /məlɪʃ(ə)ni priˈkoʊˌɡɪtətə/. Malice aforethought.

Malitia supplæt æstatem /məlɪʃ(ə)ni səˈplɛt əˈstɛtəm/. Malice supplies [the want of] age.

Malitlis hominem est obviandum /məlɪʃ(ə)liəs həʊˈnɛnəm ɛst əbˈviːəndəm/. The wicked or malicious designs of men must be thwarted.

Malleable /mələˈiəbl/. Capable of being drawn out and extended by beating; capable of extension by hammering; reducible to laminated form by beating.

Malloy Rule. Rule derived from case of the same name in which the court held that a confession given by one who had been detained an unreasonable time before being brought before magistrate was inadmissible though it was otherwise voluntary and trustworthy. Malloy v. U.S., 354 U.S. 449, 77 S.Ct. 1356, 1 L.Ed.2d 1479. Also known as McNabb-Malloy Rule.

Malum. In old European law, a court of the higher kind in which the more important business of the county was dispatched by the count or earl. A public national assembly.

Malo animo /mələʊ ænəməʊ/. Lat. With an evil mind; with a bad purpose or wrongful intention; with malice.

Malo grato /mələʊ ɡrɛtəʊ/. Lat. In spite; unwillingly.

Malpractice. Professional misconduct or unreasonable lack of skill. This term is usually applied to such conduct by doctors, lawyers, and accountants. Failure of one rendering professional services to exercise that degree of skill and learning commonly applied under all the circumstances in the community by the average prudent reputable member of the profession with the result of injury, loss or damage to the recipient of those services or to those entitled to rely upon them. It is any professional misconduct, unreasonable lack of skill or fidelity in professional or fiduciary duties, evil practice, or illegal or immoral conduct. Matthews v. Walker, 34 Ohio App.2d 128, 296 N.E.2d 569, 571, 63 O.O.2d 208. See also Discovery rule; Standard of care.

Legal malpractice. Consists of failure of an attorney to use such skill, prudence, and diligence as lawyers of ordinary skill and capacity commonly possess and exercise in performance of tasks which they undertake, and when such failure proximately causes damage it gives rise to an action in tort. Neel v. Magana, Olney, Levy, Cathcart and Gelfand, 6 Cal.3d 176, 98 Cal.Rptr. 837, 838, 491 P.2d 421.

Medical malpractice. In medical malpractice litigation, negligence is the predominant theory of liability. In order to recover for negligent malpractice, the plaintiff must establish the following elements: (1) the existence of the physician’s duty to the plaintiff, usually based upon the existence of the physician-patient relationship; (2) the applicable standard of care and its violation; (3) a compensable injury, and (4) a causal connection between the violation of the standard of care and the harm complained of. Kosberg v. Washington Hospital Center, Inc., 129 U.S.App.D.C. 322, 394 F.2d 947, 949. See also Captain of ship doctrine; Discovery rule; Maltreatment.

Maltreatment. In reference to the treatment of his patient by a surgeon, this term signifies improper or unskilful treatment; it may result either from ignorance, neglect, or willfulness; but the word does not necessarily imply that the conduct of the surgeon, in his treatment of the patient, is either willfully or grossly careless. See also Malpractice (Medical).
Malum /mæləm/, adj. Lat. Wrong; evil; wicked; reprehensible.

Malum in se /mæləm in sɪː/. A wrong in itself; an act or case involving illegality from the very nature of the transaction, upon principles of natural, moral, and public law. Grindstaff v. State, 214 Tenn. 58, 377 S.W.2d 921, 926; State v. Shedoudy, 45 N.M. 516, 118 P.2d 280, 287. An act is said to be malum in se when it is inherently and essentially evil, that is, immoral in its nature and injurious in its consequences, without any regard to the fact of its being noticed or punished by the law of the state. Such are most or all of the offenses cognizable at common law (without the denouncedment of a statute); as murder, larceny, etc.

Malum non habet efficientem, sed deficientem, causam /mæləm nɒn hæbʊd æfɪs(ɪ)ʃɪntɪm sɛd ˈdæfɪs(ɪ)ʃɪntɪm kɔʊzəm/. Evil has not an efficient, but a deficient, cause.

Malum non presumitur /mæləm nɒn prɛs(ɪ)muːtər/. Wickedness is not presumed.

Malum prohibitum /mæləm prəʊhɪbəˈdʌm/. A wrong prohibited; a thing which is wrong because prohibited; an act which is not inherently immoral, but becomes so because its commission is expressly forbidden by positive law; an act involving an illegality resulting from positive law. Contrasted with malum in se.

Malum quo communius eo pejus /mæləm kwɔw kæmjuˈɪnjuːɪ(ə)s ˈiːbələndəs ɛst/. The more common an evil is, the worse it is.

Malus usus abdolens est /mæləs ˈjuːsəs ˈæbəldənəs ɛst/. A bad or invalid custom is [ought] to be abolished.

Malvilles. In old English law, ill will; crimes and misdemeanors; malicious practices.

Malvies procurors /mælvɪs prəˈkɜːrərs/. L. Fr. Such as used to pack juries, by the nomination of either party in a cause, or other practice.

Malversation /mælvəˈsɛrʃən/. In French law, this word is applied to all grave and punishable faults committed in the exercise of a charge or commission (office), such as corruption, exactation, concussion, larceny.

In its most extended sense the term includes not only the adult male sex of the human species, but women and children. See Mankind.

In feudal law, a vassal; a tenant or feudatory. The Anglo-Saxon relation of lord and man was originally purely personal, and founded on mutual contract.

Manacles. Chain for the hands; shackles.

Manage. To control and direct, to administer, to take charge of. To conduct; to carry on the concerns of a business or establishment. Generally applied to affairs that are somewhat complicated and that involve skill and judgment.

Management. Government, control, superintendence, physical or manual handling or guidance; act of managing by direction or regulation, or administration, as management of family, or of household, or of servants, or of great enterprises, or of great affairs. Branch v. Veterans' Administration, 189 Ark. 662, 74 S.W.2d 800, 804. Discretionary power of direction.

Manager. One who has charge of corporation and control of its business, or of its branch establishments, divisions, or departments, and who is vested with a certain amount of discretion and independent judgment. Braniff v. McPherren, 177 Okl. 292, 58 P.2d 871, 872. A person chosen or appointed to manage, direct, or administer the affairs of another person or of a corporation or company. The designation of "manager" implies general power and permits reasonable inferences that the employee so designated is invested with the general conduct and control of his employer's business. U. S. Auto Ass'n v. Alexander Film Co., D.C.Mun.App., 93 A.2d 770, 771. See also General manager.

Also one of the persons appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to prosecute impeachments before the Senate.

Managers of a conference. In England, members of the houses of parliament appointed to represent each house at a conference between the two houses. It is an ancient rule that the number of commons named for a conference should be double those of the lords.

Managing agent. See Agent.

Managium /mænəˈdʒiəm/. A mansion-house or dwelling-place.

Manas media /ˈmænəs miːdɪˈdiːə/. Men of a mean condition, or of the lowest degree.

Manbote /mænbəʊt/. In Saxon law, a compensation or recompense for homicide, particularly due to the lord for killing his man or vassal, the amount of which was regulated by that of the were.

Manca, mancus, or muncusa /mæŋkə/mæŋkəs(ə)/. A square piece of gold coin, commonly valued at thirty pence.

Mancps /mænt(ə)sɛps/. Lat. In Roman law, a purchaser; one who took the article sold in his hand; a formality observed in certain sales. A farmer of the public taxes.

Manch-he-present /mɒnʃ prɛəˈzɛn/. A bribe; a present from the donor's own hand.

Mancpipe /mæŋsəˈpɜːrɪ/. Lat. In Roman law, to sell, alienate, or make over to another; to sell with certain formalities; to sell a person; one of the forms observed in the process of emancipation.

Mancpipe /mænt(ə)səˈpɜːrɪ/. To enslave; to bind; to tie.

Mancipatio /mænt(ə)səˈpɪʃən(ə)ˈjʊərə/. Lat. In Roman law, a certain ceremony or formal process anciently required to be performed, to perfect the sale or conveyance of res mancipi (land, houses, slaves, horses, or cattle).

The parties were present (vendor and vendee), with five witnesses and a person called "libripens," who held a balance or scales. A set form of words was repeated on either side, indicative of transfer of ownership, and certain prescribed gestures made, and the vendee then struck the scales with a piece of copper, thereby symbolizing the payment, or weighing out, of the stipulated price.

The ceremony of mancipatio was used, in later times, in one of the forms of making a will. The testator acted as vendor, and the heir (or familia empori) as purchaser, the latter symbolically buying the whole estate or succession, of the former. The ceremony was also used by a father in making a fictitious sale of his son, which sale, when three times repeated, effectuated the emancipation of the son.

Mancipi res /mánči(ː)piː ˈrɛς/. Lat. In Roman law, certain classes of things which could not be aliened or transferred except by means of a certain formal ceremony of conveyance called "mancipatio" (q.v.). These included land, houses, slaves, horses, and cattle. All other things were called "res nec mancipi." The distinction was abolished by Justinian. The distinction corresponded as nearly as may be to the early distinction of English law into real and personal property; res mancipi being objects of a military or agricultural character, and res nec mancipi being all other subjects of property. Like personal estate, res nec mancipi were not originally either valuable in se or valued.

Mancipium /mánˌsɪpiːmə/. Lat. In Roman law, the momentary condition in which a filius, etc., might be when in course of emancipation from the potestas, and before that emancipation was absolutely complete. The condition was not like the dominica potestas over slaves, but slaves are frequently called "mancipia" in the non-legal Roman authors.

To form a clear conception of the true import of the word in the Roman jurisprudence, it is necessary to advert to the four distinct powers which were exercised by the pater familias, viz., the manus, or manual power; the mancipium, resulting from the mancipatio, or alienatio per as et libram, of a freedman; the dominica potestas, the power of the master over his slaves, and the patria potestas, the paternal power. When the pater familias sold his son, venum dare, mancipare, the paternal power was succeeded by the mancipium, or the power acquired by the purchaser over the person whom he held in mancipio, and whose condition was assimilated to that of a slave. What is most remarkable is, that on the emancipation from the mancipium he fell back into the paternal power, which was not entirely exhausted until he had been sold three times by the pater familias. Si pater filium ter venum dat, filius a patre liber esto. Gaius speaks of the mancipatio as imaginaria quaedam venditio, because in his times it was only resorted to for the purpose of adoption or emancipation.

Mancomunal /mánˈkɔmuˌnwl/. In Spanish law, an obligation is said to be mancomunal when one person assumes the contract or debt of another, and makes himself liable to pay or fulfill it.

Mancus /mánˈkəs/. See Manca.

Mandamiento /mànˈdàmənˈt̪oʊ/. In Spanish law, commission; authority or power of attorney. A contract of good faith, by which one person commits to the gratuitous charge of another his affairs, and the latter accepts the charge.

Mandamus /məndəˈməs/. Lat. We command. This is the name of a writ (formerly a high prerogative writ) which issues from a court of superior jurisdiction, and is directed to a private or municipal corporation, or any of its officers, or to an executive, administrative or judicial officer, or to an inferior court, commanding the performance of a particular act therein specified, and belonging to his or their public, official, or ministerial duty, or directing the restoration of the complainant to rights or privileges of which he has been illegally deprived. A writ issuing from a court of competent jurisdiction, commanding an inferior tribunal, board, corporation, or person to perform a purely ministerial duty imposed by law. Nebel v. Nebel, 241 N.C. 491, 85 S.E.2d 876, 882. Extraordinary writ which lies to compel performance of ministerial act or mandatory duty where there is a clear legal right in plaintiff, a corresponding duty in defendant, and a want of any other appropriate and adequate remedy. Cohen v. Ford, 19 Pa. Cmwlth. 417, 339 A.2d 175, 177.

The U.S. District Courts have original jurisdiction of any action in the nature of mandamus to compel an officer or employee of the United States or any agency thereof to perform a duty owed to the plaintiff. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1361.

Mandamus has traditionally issued in response to abuses of judicial power. Thus, where a district judge refuses to take some action he is required to take or takes some action he is not empowered to take, mandamus will lie. Bankers Life & Cas. Co. v. Holland, 346 U.S. 379, 384, 74 S.Ct. 145, 98 L.Ed. 106. The Supreme Court may issue a writ of mandamus in aid of the appellate jurisdiction that might otherwise be defeated by the unauthorized action of the court below. McClellan v. Carland, 217 U.S. 268, 30 S.Ct. 501, 503, 54 L.Ed. 762.

The remedy of mandamus is a drastic one, to be invoked only in extraordinary situations. Will v. United States, 389 U.S. 90, 95, 88 S.Ct. 269, 273, 19 L.Ed.2d 305; Banker's Life & Cas. Co. v. Holland, 346 U.S. 379, 382–385, 74 S.Ct. 145, 147–149, 98 L.Ed. 106; Ex parte Fahey, 332 U.S. 258, 259, 67 S.Ct. 1558, 1559, 91 L.Ed. 2041. The writ has traditionally been used in the federal courts only "to confine an inferior court to a lawful exercise of its prescribed jurisdiction or to compel it to exercise its authority when it is its duty to do so." Will v. United States, 389 U.S., at 95, 88 S.Ct., at 273, quoting Roche v. Evaporated Milk Assn., 319 U.S. 21, 26, 63 S.Ct. 938, 941, 87 L.Ed. 1185.

Pleading. Like most of the extraordinary writs, the writ of mandamus has been abolished under rules practice in favor of a complaint in the nature of mandamus which accomplishes the same object; e.g. Mass.R.Civ.P. 81(b).

Mandans /məndəˈnæs/. Lat. In the civil law, the employing party in a contract of mandate. One who gives a thing in charge to another; one who requires, requests, or employs another to do some act for him.

Mandant /məndənt/. In French and Scotish law, the employing party in the contract of mandatum, or mandate.

Mandataria /məndəˈtaɾiə/. Fr. In French law, a person employed by another to do some act for him; a mandatory.
Mandata lícita reclipunt strictam interpretationem, sed illícita latam et extensam /mandéýda línáda rásipiyant strictam intéprétáshiyónnam, sèd álísida léyídám éd äsktén(t)sm/. Lawful commands receive a strict interpretation, but unlawful commands a broad and extended one.

Mandatarius terminos sibi positos transgressi non potest /mëndatéríyas tármánas sibáy pózdów trënn(d)z- gríday nón pówdést/. A mandatory cannot exceed the limits assigned him.

Mandatory /mëndatéríy/. He to whom a mandate, charge, or commandment is given; also, he that obtains a benefit by mandamus. Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U.S. 132, 11 S.Ct. 924, 35 L.Ed. 662.

Mandate. A command, order, or direction, written or oral, which court is authorized to give and person is bound to obey. Silverman v. Seneca Realty Co., 154 Misc. 35, 276 N.Y.S. 496. A judicial command or precept proceeding from a court or judicial officer, directing the proper officer to enforce a judgment, sentence, or decree. A precept or order issued upon the decision of an appeal or writ of error, directing action to be taken, or disposition to be made of case, by inferior court. Official mode of communicating judgment of appellate court to lower court, directing action to be taken or disposition to be made of cause by trial court. Tierney v. Tierney, Fla.App., 290 So.2d 136, 137. See also Decree; Order.

A bailment of property in regard to which the bailee engages to do some act without payment. Agreement to perform services for another without pay.

A contract by which a lawful business is committed to the management of another, and by him undertaken to be performed gratuitously. The mandatory is bound to the exercise of slight diligence, and is responsible for gross neglect. Williams v. Conger, 125 U.S. 397, 8 S.Ct. 933, 31 L.Ed. 778.

A mandate, procuration, or letter of attorney is an act by which one person gives power to another to transact for him and in his name one or several affairs. See also Power of attorney.

Mandato /mandatów/. In Spanish law, the contract of mandate.

Mandator /mandéýdar/. The person employing another to perform a mandate.

Mandatory /mëndat(s)ríy/. adj. Containing a command; preceptive; imperative; peremptory; obligatory.

Mandatory Injunction /mëndat(s)ríy injúshðshan/. See Injunction.

Mandatory Instructions. See Jury Instructions.

Mandatory sentencing. See Sentence.

Mandatory statutes. Generic term describing statutes which require and not merely permit a course of action. They are characterized by such directives as "shall" and not "may."

A "mandatory" provision in a statute is one the omission to follow which renders the proceedings to which it relates void, while a "directory" provision is one the observance of which is not necessary to validity of the proceeding. It is also said that when the provision of a statute is the essence of the thing required to be done, it is mandatory. Kavanaugh v. Fash, C.C.A.Okl., 74 F.2d 435, 437; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner, and wherein an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely.

Mandatory statutory provision is one which must be observed, as distinguished from "directory" provision, which leaves it optional with department or officer to which addressed to obey it or not. State ex rel. Dworken v. Court of Common Pleas of Cuyahoga County, 131 Ohio St. 23, 1 N.E.2d 138, 139, 5 O.O. 291.

Mandatum /mëndéýdsm/. Lat. In the civil law, the contract of mandate (q.v.).

Mandatum nisi gratulatum nullum est /mëndéýdám náýsya gróchúwędám nšám est/. Unless a mandate is gratuitous, it is not a mandate.

Mandavi bailwv /mëndéývá bálwv/. (I have commanded or made my mandate to the bailiff.) In English practice, the return made by a sheriff, where the bailiff of a liberty has the execution of a writ, that he has commanded the bailiff to execute it.

Manerium /mánýriyam/. In old English law, a manor.

Manerium dictur a manendo, secundum excellantiam, sedes magna, fixa, et stabilis /mánýrýyam díscár éy ménándow, sákándam éksalénsh(y)yam, síydlyz mágná, fíksám, ét stéýbálas/. A manor is so called from manendo, according to its excellence, a seat, great, fixed, and firm.

Mangone /mëngóngnéry/. In old English law, to buy in a market.

Manhood. The status of one who has reached his legal majority which in most jurisdictions is 18. Formerly, it was the age of 21. When this status is achieved, a person may act sui juris. See also Legal age; Majority.

In feudal law, a term denoting the ceremony of doing homage by the vassal to his lord. The formula used was, "Devenio vester homo", I become your man. 2 Bl.Comm. 54.

Mania /ményniy/. See Insanity.

Manic. Phase of manic-depressive psychosis in which the mood of the patient is overactive and expansive; characterized by excessive ego valuation and over-estimation of personal importance. Manic mood may include boisterousness, joviality, anger, joyousness.

Manifest. Evident to the senses, especially to the sight, obvious to the understanding, evident to the mind, not obscure or hidden, and is synonymous with open, clear, visible, unmistakable, indubitable, indisputable, evident, and self-evident. In evidence, that which is clear and requires no proof; that which is notorious. Houston v. Leyden Motor Coach Co., 102 Ill.App.2d 348, 243 N.E.2d 293, 296; Graf v. Ford Motor Co., 102 Ill.App.2d 390, 243 N.E.2d 337, 341; Little v. Scheu, 99 Ill.App.2d 421, 241 N.E.2d 702, 706.
The word "manifest", in rule that appellate court cannot substitute its opinion for that of trial court as to facts unless trial court's finding is manifestly against the weight of the evidence, means clearly evident, clear, plain, or indisputable, and requires that an opposite conclusion be clearly evident. Levin v. Siver, 27 Ill.App.2d 134, 169 N.E.2d 156.

Document used in shipping and warehousing containing a list of the contents, value, origin, carrier and destination of the goods to be shipped or warehoused. A written document required to be carried by merchant vessels, containing an account of the cargo, with other particulars, for the facility of the customs officers. The Sylvia II, D.C.Mass., 28 F.2d 215, 216. List of passengers and cargo kept by vessel and aircraft.

Manifesta probatone non indigent /mēnafēstå prabēyshiyōnyln nōn īndajnt/. Things manifest do not require proof.

Manifestation of intention. In trusts and wills, the external expression of intention as distinguished from the undisclosed internal intention. Restatement of Trusts, Second, § 2, comment g.

Manifest law. See Lex manifesta, s. v. Lex.

Manifest necessity. Doctrine of "manifest necessity" which will authorize granting of mistrial in criminal case, and preclude defendant from successfully raising plea of former jeopardy, contemplates a sudden and overwhelming emergency beyond control of court and unforeseeable, and it does not mean expediency. Fonseca v. Judges of Family Court of Kings County, 59 Misc.2d 432, 299 N.Y.S.2d 493, 495.

Manifesto /mēnafēstō/. A formal written declaration, promulgated by a sovereign, or by the executive authority of a state or nation, proclaiming its reasons and motives for declaring a war, or for any other important international action. Public declaration or proclamation of political or social principals.

Manipulation. Series of transactions involving the buying or selling of a security for the purpose of creating a false or misleading appearance of active trading or to raise or depress the price to induce the purchase or sale by others.

Mankind. The race or species of human beings. In law, females, as well as males, are included under this term.

Mann Act. Federal statute (White Slave Traffic Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 2421) making it a crime to transport a woman or girl in interstate or foreign commerce for the purpose of prostitution or debauchery, or for any other immoral purpose.

Manner. A way, mode, method of doing anything, or mode of proceeding in any case or situation. See also Custom and Usage.

Manner and form; modo et forma. In common law pleading, formal words introduced at the conclusion of a traverse. Their object is to put the party whose pleading is traversed not only to the proof that the matter of fact denied is, in its general effect, true as alleged, but also that the manner and form in which the fact or facts are set forth are also capable of proof.

Manning. A day's work of a man. A summoning to court.

Mannpire /mānʹāpyr/. To cite any person to appear in court and stand in judgment there. It is different from banpire; for, though both of them are citations, this is by the adverse party, and that is by the judge.

Mannopos /mānˈōpəs/. In old English law, goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief. The same as "mainour" (q.v.).

Man of straw. See Men of Straw.

Manor. A house, dwelling, seat, or residence.

In English law, the manor was originally a tract of land granted out by the king to a lord or other great person, in fee. It was otherwise called a "barony" or "lordship," and appendant to it was the right to hold a court, called the "court-baron." The lands comprised in the manor were divided into terre tenementales (tenemental lands or bocland) and terre dominicales, or demesne lands. The former were given by the lord of the manor to his followers or retainers in feefold. The latter were such as he reserved for his own use; but of these part were held by tenants in copyhold, i.e., those holding by a copy of the record in the lord's court; and part, under the name of the "lord's waste," served for public roads and commons of pasture for the lord and tenants. The tenants, considered in their relation to the court-baron and to each other, were called "pares curiae." The word also signified the franchise of having a manor, with jurisdiction for a court-baron and the right to the rents and services of copyholders.

Reputed manor. Whenever the demesne lands and the services become absolutely separated, the manor ceases to be a manor in reality, although it may (and usually does) continue to be a manor in reputation, and is then called a "reputed manor," and it is also sometimes called a "seigniory in gross."

Manorial extent /mānˈəriəl əkˈstənt/. In old English law, a survey of a manor made by a jury of tenants, often of unfree men sworn to sit for the particulars of each tenancy, and containing the smallest details as to the nature of the service due. These manorial extents were made in the interest of the lords, who were anxious that all due services should be done; but they imply that other and greater services were not due, that the customary tenants, even though they be unfree men, owed these services for their tenements, no less and no more. Statements that the tenants were not bound to do services of a particular kind were not very uncommon. The "extents" of manors are descriptions which give the numbers and names of the tenants, the size of their holdings, the legal kind of their tenure and the kind and amount of their service.

Manorial system. A medieval system of land ownership by lords of the manor for whom serfs and some freemen toiled in the soil in return for protection from the lord. See also Manor.

Manqueller /mānkwələr/ "kilər/. In Saxon law, a murderer.
Manse /mæn(t)s/. In old English law, a habitation or dwelling, generally with land attached. A residence or dwelling-house for the parish priest; a parsonage or vicarage house.

Manse /mæn(t)sə/. A bastard.

Mansio /mæns'hiəʊ/. In Anglo-Saxon times the amount of land which would support a man and his family, called by various names.

Mansion-house. In the law of burglary, etc., any species of dwelling-house.

Manslaughter. The unlawful killing of another without malice, either express or implied. Such may be either voluntarily, upon a sudden heat, or involuntarily, but in the commission of some unlawful act. The unlawful killing of a human without any deliberation, which may be involuntary, in the commission of a lawful act without due caution and circumspection. Wallace v. U. S., 162 U.S. 466, 16 S.Ct. 859, 40 L.Ed. 1039.

The unlawful killing of a human without malice and without premeditation and deliberation. State v. Wingler, 238 N.C. 465, 78 S.E.2d 303, 307. It is of two kinds: voluntary—upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion; and, involuntary—in the commission in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection, of a lawful act which might produce death. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1112.

Criminal homicide constitutes manslaughter when: (a) it is committed recklessly; or (b) a homicide which would otherwise be murder is committed under the influence of extreme mental or emotional disturbance for which there is reasonable explanation or excuse. The reasonableness of such explanation or excuse shall be determined from the viewpoint of a person in the actor’s situation under the circumstances as he believes them to be. Model Penal Code, § 210.3.

The heat of passion, which will reduce a murder to manslaughter, must be such passion as would be aroused naturally in the mind of the ordinary reasonable person under the same or similar circumstances, as shown by the evidence in the case.

See also Adequate cause; Assault with intent to commit manslaughter; Hot blood; Negligent manslaughter; Sudden heat of passion.

There are various degrees of manslaughter recognized by different states:

Involuntary manslaughter. Such exists where a person in committing an unlawful act not felonious or tending to great bodily harm, or in committing a lawful act without proper caution or requisite skill, unguardedly or undesignedly kills another. Model Penal Code, § 210.3(1)(a).

Voluntary manslaughter. Manslaughter committed voluntarily upon a sudden heat of the passions; as if, upon a sudden quarrel, two persons fight, and one of them kills the other. Model Penal Code, § 210-3(1)(b). It is the unlawful taking of human life under circumstances falling short of willful or deliberate intent to kill and approaching too near thereto to be justifiable homicide.

The absence of intention to kill or to commit any unlawful act which might reasonably produce death or great bodily harm is the distinguishing feature between voluntary and involuntary homicide.

Manstealing. A word sometimes used synonymously with “kidnapping” (q.v.).

Manuotae naturae /mænswɪ'dɪə nʌtɪˈriː/. Tamed and domesticated animals.

Manuotus /mænswɪ'дыs/. Lat. Tame; as though accustomed to come to the hand.

Mantheoff /mænθəf/. In Saxon law, a horse-stealer.

Manticulate /mæntɪkələt/. To pick pockets.

Mantle children /mæntəl chɪldrən/. See Pallio cooperire.

Manual. Of, or pertaining to, the hand or hands; done, made, or operated by or used with the hand or hands; or as manual labor. Performed by the hand; used or employed by the hand; held in the hand. See also Manual labor.

Manual delivery. Delivery of personal property sold, donated, mortgaged, etc., by passing it into the “hand” of the purchaser or transferee, that is, by an actual and corporeal change of possession.

Manual gift. The manual gift, that is, the giving of corporeal movable effects, accompanied by a real delivery; such is not subject to any formality.

Manualls obedientia /mænjuˈwɪdʒə səˈbiːdɪdɪˈɛnʃ(ə)ə/. Sworn obedience or submission upon oath.

Manual labor. Work done with the hand. State v. Ash, 53 Ariz. 197, 87 P.2d 270, 272. Labor performed by hand or by the exercise of physical force, with or without the aid of tools, machinery or equipment, but depending for its effectiveness chiefly upon personal muscular exertion rather than upon skill, intelligence oradroitness.

Manu brevi /mæn(ə)yəw bɹɪˈvɛɪ/. Lat. With a short hand. A term used in the civil law, signifying shortly; directly; by the shortest course; without circuity.

Manucapos /mænuˈwɪkɒps/ (lɪˈəʊ/). In old English practice, a writ which lay for a man taken on suspicion of felony, and the like, who could not be admitted to bail by the sheriff, or others having power to let to mainprise.

Manucaptors /mænuˈwɪkəptərz/. Same as mainperners (q.v.).

Manufacture, v. From Latin words manus and factura, literally, put together by hand. Now it means the process of making products by hand or machinery. United States v. Anderson, D.C.Cal., 45 F.Supp. 943, 946. Meaning of word “manufacture,” which is defined as the making of goods or wares by manual labor or by machinery, especially on a large scale, has expanded as workmanship and art have advanced, so that now nearly all artificial products of human industry, nearly all such materials as have acquired changed conditions or new and specific combinations, whether from the direct action of the human hand, from chemical processes devised and directed by human skill, or by the employment of machinery, are commonly designated as "manufactured."
MANUFACTURE

Manufacture, n. The process or operation of making goods or any material produced by hand, by machinery or by other agency; anything made from raw materials by the hand, by machinery, or by art. The production of articles for use from raw or prepared materials by giving such materials new forms, qualities, properties or combinations, whether by hand labor or machine. Cain’s Coffee Co. v. City of Muskogee, 171 Okl. 635, 44 P.2d 50, 52.

In patent law, any useful product made directly by human labor, or by the aid of machinery directed and controlled by human power, and either from raw materials, or from materials worked up into a new form. Also the process by which such products are made or fashioned.

Manufacturer. One who by labor, art, or skill transforms raw materials into some kind of a finished product or article of trade. Henry v. Mar kesan State Bank, C.C.A.Minn., 68 F.2d 554, 557. Any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal relationship which manufactures, assembles, or produces goods.

Manufacturers liability doctrine. The foundation for the liability under this doctrine is knowledge of the danger attending use of manufactured or assembled product and negligence in failing to give appropriate warning, or negligence in failing to discover and appreciate the danger, and the probable consequences that injury will proximately result from the use of such product for the purposes for which it was intended. See Strict liability.

Manufacturing corporation. A corporation engaged in the production of some article, thing, or object, by skill or labor, out of raw material, or from matter which has already been subjected to artificial forces, or to which something has been added to change its natural condition.

Manufacturing establishment. Any place where machinery is used for manufacturing purposes. Lilley v. Eberhardt, Mo., 37 S.W.2d 599, 601.

Manu forti /män(y)uww fórday/. Lat. With strong hand. A term used in old writs of trespass. Manu forti et cum multitutine gentium, with strong hand and multitude of people.

Manu longa /män(y)uww lóngh/. Lat. With a long hand. A term used in the civil law, signifying indirectly or circuitously.

Manumission /mënyamishan/. The act of liberating a slave from bondage and giving him freedom. In a wider sense, releasing or delivering one person from the power or control of another. Enfranchisement.

Manumittore idem est quod extra manum vel postesta- tem ponere /mënyamidíry áydam ést kwó ékstra mënam vél pówdstéstéydam pównáry/. To manumit is the same as to place beyond hand and power.

Manung, or monung. In old English law, the district within the jurisdiction of a reeve, apparently so called from his power to exercise therein one of his chief functions, viz., to exact (amanian) all fines.

Manu opera /män(y)uww őpara/. Lat. Cattle or implements of husbandry; also stolen goods taken from a thief caught in the fact.

Manupes /mënyapíyiz/. In old English law, a foot of full and legal measure.

Manupretium /mënyspriyish(ii)yam/. Lat. In Roman law, the hire or wages of labor; compensation for labor or services performed.

Manurable /mán(y)uрабал/. In old English law, capable of being had or held in hand; capable of manual occupation; capable of being cultivated; capable of being touched; tangible; corporeal.

Manure. In old English law, to occupy; to use or cultivate; to have in manual occupation; to bestow manual labor upon.

Manus /mënas/. Lat. A hand.

In the civil law, this word signified power, control, authority, the right of physical coercion, and was often used as synonymous with "potestas."

In old English law, it signified an oath or the person taking an oath; a compurgator.

Manuscript. An author’s work product which is submitted to the publisher either in his own hand or typewritten. Lit., written by hand. A writing; a paper written with the hand; a writing that has not been printed.

Manus mortua /mënas mórchuwa/. A dead hand; mortmain.

Manutenentia /mënyatanéns(i)y(a)/. The old writ of maintenance.

Manworth. In old English law, the price of value of a man’s life or head.

Many. The word “many” is defined as consisting of a great number, numerous, not few. Many is a word of very indefinite meaning, and, though it is defined to be numerous and multitudinous, it is also recognized as synonymous with “several”, “sundry”, “various” and “divers”. Goslin v. Kurn, 351 Mo. 395, 173 S.W.2d 79, 87.

Map. A representation of the earth’s surface, or of some portion of it, showing the relative position of the parts represented, usually on a flat surface. See also Plat map.

Mapp v. Ohio. Landmark Supreme Court case decided in 1961 in which it was ruled that evidence illegally obtained by state officers is not admissible in a state trial if appropriate motions are filed to suppress. The rationale for the rule is that the 4th Amendment (U.S.Const.) protection against unreasonable search and seizure is applicable to the states under and through the 14th Amendment. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081.

Mar. To make defective; to damage greatly; to impair, spoil, ruin; to do physical injury to, especially by cutting off or defacing a part; to mutilate; mangle; disfigure; deface.

Marbury v. Madison. Landmark case decided in 1803 in which the Supreme Court established the right of the judicial branch to pass on the constitutionality of an act of Congress, thereby establishing the functions and prerogatives of the judiciary in its relation to the legislative branch. Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 2 L.Ed. 60.

Marcatus /markéydas/. The rent of a mark by the year customarily reserved in leases, etc.

Marchandises avariees. In French mercantile law, damaged goods.

Marchers. In old English law, noblemen who lived on the marches of Wales or Scotland, and who, according to Camden, had their private laws, as if they had been petty kings; which were abolished by the statute 27 Hen. VIII, c. 26. Called also "lords marchers."

Marches. An old English term for boundaries or frontiers, particularly the boundaries and limits between England and Wales, or between England and Scotland, or the borders of the dominions of the crown, or the boundaries of properties in Scotland.

Marcheta /markéyda/. In old English law, a fine paid for leave to marry, or to bestow a daughter in marriage.

Marchioness /máráshanés/. A dignity in a woman answerable to that of marquis in a man, conferred either by creation or by marriage with a marquis.

Mare /márey/. Lat. The sea.

Marescallus /márraskábls/. In old English law, a marshal; a master of the stables; an officer of the exchequer; a military officer of high rank, having powers and duties similar to those of a constable. See also Marshal.

Mareschal /máráshál/. L. Fr. Marshal; a high officer of the royal household.

Marettum /máredám/. Marshy ground overflowed by the sea or great rivers.

Margin. The edge or border: the edge of a body of water where it meets the land. As applied to a boundary line of land, the "margin" of a river, creek, or other watercourse means the center of the stream. But in the case of a lake, bay, or natural pond, the "margin" means the line where land and water meet.

A sum of money, or its equivalent, placed in the hands of a stockbroker by the principal or person on whose account a purchase or sale is to be made, as a security to the former against losses to which he may be exposed by subsequent fluctuations in the market value of the stock. The amount paid by the customer when he uses his broker's credit to buy a security. See also Margin account; Margin transaction.

In commercial transactions the difference between the purchase price paid by a middleman or retailer and his selling price. Also called gross margin. See also Profit.

Margin account. Securities industry's method of extending credit to customers. Under such practice customer purchases specified amount of stock from securities firm by advancing only portion of purchase price, with brokerage firm extending credit or making loan for balance due, and firm maintains such stock as collateral for loan and charges interest on balance of purchase price. Stephens v. Reynolds Securities, Inc., D.C.Ala., 413 F.Supp. 50.

Marginal street. Dock or wharf used in conjunction with and in furtherance of commerce and navigation. In re Triborough Bridge Approach, City of New York, 159 Misc. 617, 268 N.Y.S. 697, 711, 716.

Margin call. A demand by a broker to put up money or securities upon purchase of a stock, or, if the stock is already owned on margin, to increase the money or securities in the event the price of the stock has fallen since purchase. The last process is margining.

Margin list. List of Federal Reserve Board which limits the loan value of a bank's stock to a certain per cent (e.g. 50%) of its market value. When a bank is not on the margin list, no limit is placed on the value of its stock for use as collateral.

Margin profit. See Margin; Profit.

Margin trading. See Margin; Margin account; Margin transaction.

Margin transaction. The purchase of a stock or commodity with payment in part in cash (called the margin) and in part by a loan. Usually the loan is made by the broker effecting the purchase. See also Margin account.

Marihuana, marijuana, marihuana /máir(a)hwayná/. An annual herb, cannabis sativa, having angular rough stem and deeply lobed leaves. The bast fibres of cannabis are the hemp of commerce. A drug prepared from "cannabis sativa," designated in technical dictionaries as "cannabis" and commonly known as marihuana, marihuana, marajuana, maraguna, or marihuana. State v. Navaro, 83 Utah 6, 26 P.2d 955.

"Marihuana" means all parts of the plant Cannabis sativa L., whether growing or not; the seeds thereof; the resin extracted from any part of the plant; and every compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of the plant, its seeds or resin. It does not include the mature stalks of the plant, fiber produced from the stalks, oil or cake made from the seeds of the plant, any other compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of the mature stalks (except the resin extracted therefrom), fiber, oil, or cake, or the sterilized seed of the plant which is incapable of germination. Uniform Controlled Substances Act, § 101(n). See also Cannabis.

Marihuana is also commonly referred to as "pot", "grass", "tea", "weed" or "Mary-Jane"; and in cigarette form as a "joint" or "reefer".

Marinarius /máranérías/. An ancient word which signifies a mariner or seaman. In England, marinarius capitanus was the admiral or warden of the ports.

Marine. Naval; relating or pertaining to the sea; native to or formed by the sea, such as marine life; transacted at sea; doing duty or service on the sea.
The mercantile and naval shipping of a country. Concerned with navigation and commerce of the sea; i.e. maritime matters. Member of U.S. Marine Corps. See also Maritime.

Marine belt. That portion of the main or open sea, adjacent to the shores of a given country, over which the jurisdiction of its municipal laws and local authorities extends. Territorial waters, defined by international law as extending out three miles from the shore. See also Territorial waters.

Marine carrier. By statutes of several states this term is applied to carriers plying upon the ocean, arms of the sea, the Great Lakes, and other navigable waters within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Marine contract. One relating to maritime affairs, shipping, navigation, marine insurance, affreightment, maritime loans, or other business to be done upon the sea or in connection with navigation.

Marine court in the city of New York. Formerly, a local court of New York City, originally created as a tribunal for the settlement of causes between carriers. It was the predecessor of the City Court of the city of New York.

Marine insurance. See Insurance.

Marine interest. Interest, allowed to be stipulated for at an extraordinary rate, for the use and risk of money loaned on respondentia and bottomry bonds.

Marine league /märiny liyg/. A measure of distance commonly employed at sea, being equal to one-twentieth part of a degree of latitude, or three geographical or nautical miles.

Mariner. A seaman or sailor; one engaged in navigating vessels upon the sea; persons employed aboard ships or vessels.

Marine risk. The perils of the sea; the perils necessarily incident to navigation.

Mariner's will. A nuncupative or oral will permitted in some jurisdictions for the sailor who is actually at sea at the time of making the will. Generally, such will affects personal property only.

Maris et femine conjunctio est de jure naturæ /mēræs ét fēminæ kānjünktoh(i)yow êst dī jūriy nachûriy/. The connection of male and female is by the law of nature.

Maritaggio amissio per defaltam /märîtajj(i)yow amisow pîr dafîltam/. An obsolete writ for the tenant in frank-marriage to recover lands, etc., of which he was deforced.

Maritaglium /märîtajj(i)yam/. The portion which is given with a daughter in marriage. The power which the lord or guardian in chivalry had of disposing of his infant ward in matrimony.

Maritaglium est aut libenum aut servitio obligatum; libenum maritaglium dicitur ubi donator vult quod terrae sic data quëta sit et libera ab omni seculari servitio. A marriage portion is either free or bound to service; it is called “frank-marriage” when the giver wills that land thus given be exempt from all secular service.

Maritagium habere /märîtajj(i)yam habiriy/. To have the free disposal of an heiress in marriage.

Marital /märîsal/mârîyal/. Relating to, or connected with, the status of marriage; pertaining to husband; incident to a husband.

Marital agreements. Contracts between parties who are either on the threshold of marriage or on the verge of separation, though, in general, the term refers to agreements between married people. Such agreements are primarily concerned with the division and ownership of marital property. In some jurisdictions, the contract must be made through a third person if the law does not permit the spouses to contract directly with each other. See also Antenuptial settlements: Equitable distribution: Marriage settlement: Postnuptial agreement.

Marital communications privilege. In most jurisdictions private communications between the spouses during the marriage are privileged at the option of the witness spouse and hence inadmissible in a trial. In some jurisdictions the communications are disqualified, and hence not admissible, even with the consent of the witness spouse. This privilege is subject to certain limitations, e.g. prosecutions for crimes committed by one spouse against the other or against the children of either. See also Husband-wife privilege.

Marital deduction. A deduction allowed upon the transfer of property from one spouse to another. The deduction is allowed under the Federal gift tax for lifetime (i.e., inter vivos) transfers and also under the Federal estate tax for testamentary transfers. I.R.C. §§ 2056, 2523. See also Pecuniary formulas.

Minimum deduction. Under the Tax Reform Act of 1976, a minimum marital deduction of $250,000 is allowed for death tax purposes if this amount of qualifying property passes to the surviving spouse. The previous limitation of 50% of the deceased spouse’s adjusted gross estate continues to be in effect when the marital deduction exceeds $250,000. The minimum marital deduction for gift tax purposes is the first $100,000 passing from one spouse to the other spouse. To the extent that the marital deduction allowed for gift tax purposes exceeds one-half of the value of the property transferred, there is a dollar-for-dollar offset to the estate’s allowable minimum marital deduction (or the marital deduction computed in accordance with the 50% of the adjusted gross estate rule).

Marital deduction trust. In estate planning, a device in the form of a trust utilized to gain the maximum benefit of the marital deduction by dividing the property in half. Commonly, one half of the property is transferred to the marital deduction trust and the other half is disposed of in a trust or like arrangement with a view towards having it escape taxation in the estate of the surviving spouse.

Marital portion. In Louisiana, the name given to that part of a deceased husband’s estate to which the widow is entitled.

Marital privileges. Those rights, immunities and advantages which attach to the state of marriage such as the right to connubial relations and the right to hold property as husband and wife. See also Marital communications privilege.
Marital property. Property purchased by persons while married to each other and which, in some jurisdictions, on dissolution of the marriage is divided in proportions as the court deems fit. Claunch v. Claunch, Mo.App., 525 S.W.2d 788, 790. See Community property; Equitable distribution.

Marital rights and duties. Those arising from marriage contract and constituting its object, and therefore embracing what the parties agree to perform towards each other and to society. Rights of husband and wife to a specified share of other's personal estate upon death of other. In re Dean's Estate, 350 Mo. 494, 166 S.W.2d 529, 534, 535.

Maritima Angliae /maridama ∫gildiy/. In old English law, the emolument or revenue coming to the king from the sea, which the sheriffs ancienly collected, but which was afterwards granted to the admiral. Maritima incrementa /maridama ∫krimenta/. In old English law, marine increases. Lands gained from the sea.

Maritime. Pertaining to navigable waters, i.e. to the sea, ocean, great lakes, navigable rivers, or the navigation or commerce thereof.

See also Federal Maritime Commission; Maritime court; Navigable waters.

Maritime Administration. An agency within the Department of Commerce which promotes and regulates the activities of the U.S. merchant marine, directs emergency operations related to merchant marine activities, establishes specifications for shipbuilding and design, determines routes, and manages other areas of merchant operations. See also Maritime Commission.

Maritime belt. That part of the sea which, in contradistinction to the open sea, is under the sway of the riparian states. Louisiana v. Mississippi, 202 U.S. 1, 26 S.Ct. 408, 50 L.Ed. 913. See also Marine belt; Territorial waters.

Maritime bills. See Bill (Maritime Law).

Maritime cause. A case arising on the sea, ocean, great lakes, or navigable rivers, or from some act or contract concerning the commerce and navigation thereof. The Thomas Jefferson, 23 U.S. (10 Wheat.) 428, 6 L.Ed. 358; and Peyroux v. Howard, 32 U.S. (7 Pet.) 324, 8 L.Ed. 700. An action based upon an injury to a passenger of a vessel while on navigable waters and caused by negligence comes within scope of "maritime cause of action" within original jurisdiction of federal District Court. Cuozzo v. Italian Line, Italia-Societa Per Azioni Di Navigazione—Genoa, D.C.N.Y., 168 F.Supp. 304, 306. See also Maritime law; Maritime tort; Navigable waters.

Maritime Commission. The Federal Maritime Commission regulates the waterborne foreign and domestic offshore commerce of the United States, assures that United States international trade is open to all nations on fair and equitable terms, and guards against unauthorized monopoly in the waterborne commerce of the United States. This is accomplished through maintaining surveillance over steamship conferences and common carriers by water; assuring that only the rates on file with the Commission are charged; approving agreements between persons subject to the Shipping Act; guaranteeing equal treatment to shippers and carriers by terminal operators, freight forwarders, and other persons subject to the shipping statutes; and ensuring that adequate levels of financial responsibility are maintained for indemnification of passengers or oil spill cleanup. See also Maritime Administration.

Maritime court. A court exercising jurisdiction in maritime causes; one which possesses the powers and jurisdiction of a court of admiralty. See Admiralty Court; Maritime jurisdiction.

Maritime interest. An expression equivalent to marine interest (q.v.).

Maritime law. That which the Congress has enacted or the Federal courts, sitting in admiralty, or in the exercise of their maritime jurisdiction, have declared and would apply. J. B. Effenson Co. v. Three Bays Corp., C.A.Fla., 238 F.2d 611, 615. That system of law which particularly relates to marine commerce and navigation, to business transacted at sea or relating to navigation, to ships and shipping, to seamen, to the transportation of persons and property by sea, and to marine affairs generally. The law relating to harbors, ships, and seamen, divided into a variety of subject areas, such as those concerning harbors, property of ships, duties and rights of masters and seamen, contracts of affreightment, average, salvage, etc. It extends to civil marine torts and injuries, illegal dispossession or withholding of possession from the owners of ships, municipal seizures of ships, etc.

Substantively, in the United States, it is federal law, and jurisdiction to administer it is vested in the federal courts, though not to the entire exclusion of the courts of the states. O'Donnell v. Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co., 318 U.S. 36, 63 S.Ct. 488, 87 L.Ed. 596. See Maritime jurisdiction.

Maritime lien. A privileged claim on a vessel for some service rendered to it to facilitate its use in navigation, or an injury caused by it in navigable waters, to be carried into effect by legal process in the admiralty court. The Westmore, D.C.Or., 27 F.2d 886, 887. A special property right in a ship given to a creditor by law as security for a debt or claim subsisting from the moment the debt arises with right to have the ship sold and debt paid out of proceeds. Such a lien is a proprietary interest or right of property in the vessel itself, and not a cause of action or demand for personal judgment against the owner. The lien is enforced by a direct proceeding against the vessel or other property in which it exists.

Any person furnishing repairs, supplies, towage, use of dry dock or marine railway, or other necessaries, to any vessel, whether foreign or domestic, upon the order of the owner of such vessel, or of a person authorized by the owner, shall have a maritime lien on the vessel, which may be enforced by suit in rem, and it shall not be necessary to allege or prove that credit was given to the vessel. Federal Maritime Lien Act, § 971.

Maritime lien. A contract or agreement by which one, who is the lender, lends to another, who is the borrower, a certain sum of money, upon condition that if the thing upon which the loan has been made should be lost by any peril of the seas, or vis major, the lender shall not be repaid unless what remains shall be equal to the sum borrowed; and if the thing arrive in safety, or in case it shall not have been injured but by its own defects or the fault of the master or mariners, the borrower shall be bound to return the sum borrowed, together with a certain sum agreed upon as the price of the hazard incurred.

Maritime prize. See Prize.

Maritime service. In admiralty law, a service rendered upon the seas, ocean, great lakes, or a navigable river, and which has some relation to commerce or navigation—some connection with a vessel employed in trade, with her equipment, her preservation, or the preservation of her cargo or crew.

Maritime state. In English law, consists of the officers and mariners of the British navy, who are governed by express and permanent laws, or the articles of the navy, established by act of parliament.

See Jones Act; Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

Maritus /maráydas/mártds/. Lat. A husband; a married man.

Mark. A character, usually in the form of a cross, made as a substitute for his signature by a person who cannot write, in executing a conveyance, will or other legal document.

It is commonly made as follows: A third person writes the name of the marksman, leaving a blank space between the Christian name and surname; in this space the latter traces the mark, or crossed lines, and above the mark is written “his” (or “her”), and below it, “mark.”

The sign, writing, or ticket put upon manufactured goods to distinguish them from others, appearing thus in the compound, “trade-mark.”

A token, evidence, or proof; as in the phrase “a mark of fraud.”

A weight used in several parts of Europe, and for several commodities, especially gold and silver.

Monetary unit, e.g. German Deutsche mark.

The word is sometimes used as another form of “marque,” a license of reprisals.

In early Teutonic and English law, a species of village community, being the lowest unit in the political system; one of the forms of the gens or clan, variously known as the “mark,” “gemeinde,” “commune,” or “parish.” Also the land held in common by such a community. The union of several such village communities and their marks, or common lands, forms the next higher political union, the hundred.

See also Bench mark; Certification mark; Collective mark.

Demi-mark. Half a mark; a sum of money which was customarily required to be tendered in a writ of right, the effect of such tender being to put the demandant, in the first instance, upon proof of the seisin as stated in his count; that is, to prove that the seisin was in the king’s reign there stated.

High and low water-mark. See Water-mark.

Trademark. See Trade-mark.

Marked money. Term used to describe money given by undercover agent who buys contraband or gives bribe in money, or ransom money given to kidnapper, or money given to bank robber, which bears a tell-tale mark for use in identifying and connecting the money to the perpetrator of the crime.

Market. Place of commercial activity in which articles are bought and sold. Zemel v. Commercial Warehouses, 132 N.J.L. 341, 40 A.2d 642, 643. The region in which any commodity can be sold; the geographical or economic extent of commercial demand. A public time and appointed place of buying and selling; also purchase and sale. It differs from the forum, or market of antiquity, which was a public marketplace on one side only, or during one part of the day only, the other sides being occupied by temples, theaters, courts of justice, and other public buildings.

In a limited sense, “market” is the range of bid and asked prices reported by brokers making the market in over-the-counter securities. Oppen v. Hancock Securities Corp., D.C.N.Y., 250 F. Supp. 668, 675.

By the term “market” is also understood the demand there is for any particular article; as, “the cotton market is depressed.” Is also an abbreviated term for “stock” or “commodity” markets.

See also Common market; Current market value.

Clerk of the market. See Clerk of the market.

Geographic market. In antitrust context, that geographic area in which a product is sold and in which there is or is not competition. It generally implies agreement allocating different areas to each competitor with the understanding that the other competitors will not sell in those areas. Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. U.S., 341 U.S. 593, 71 S. Ct. 971, 95 L.Ed. 1350.

A relevant “geographic market” for purposes of assessing monopoly power is the territorial area in which businessmen effectively compete. Telex Corp. v. International Business Machines Corp., D.C.Okl., 367 F. Supp. 258, 336. Within broad geographic market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute “geographic markets” for antitrust purposes. U.S. Steel Corp. v. F. T. C., C.A. Ohio, 426 F.2d 592, 596. See also Product market; Relevant market, infra.

Listed market securities. The market value of a security as reflected by transactions of that security on the floor of an exchange.

Open market. A market wherein supply and demand are expressed in terms of a price.

Product market. In antitrust context, a market in which competitors agree among themselves to limit the manufacture or sales of products so as to prevent competition among themselves. Hartford Empire Co. v. U.S., 323 U.S. 386, 65 S.Ct. 373, 89 L.Ed. 322.

Public market. A market which is not only open to the resort of the general public as purchasers, but also available to all who wish to offer their wares for sale, stalls, stands, or places being allotted to those who apply, to the limits of the capacity of the market, on payment of fixed rents or fees.

Relevant market. In antitrust context, it may refer to geographic area in which competitors agree to respect the rights of others to sell a product. It may also refer to product markets in which competitors agree among themselves to limit the manufacture or sales of products so as to prevent or limit competition among themselves. Hartford Empire Co. v. U.S., 323 U.S. 386, 65 S.Ct. 373, 89 L.Ed. 322. See also Relevant market.

Marketability. Salability. The probability of selling property at a specific time, price, and terms.

Marketable. Salable. Such things as may be sold in the market; those for which a buyer may be found; merchantable.

Marketable securities. Stocks and bonds held of other companies that can be readily sold on stock exchanges or over-the-counter markets and that the company plans to sell as cash is needed. Classified as current liquid assets and as part of working capital.

Marketable title. A title which is free from encumbrances and any reasonable doubt as to its validity, and such as a reasonably intelligent person, well informed as to facts and their legal bearings, and ready and willing to perform his contract, would be willing to accept in exercise of ordinary business prudence. Sinclair v. Weber, 204 Md. 324, 104 A.2d 561, 565. Such a title is free from reasonable doubt in law and in fact; not merely a title valid in fact, but one which readily can be sold or mortgaged to a reasonably prudent purchaser or mortgagee; one acceptable to a reasonable purchaser, informed as to the facts and their legal meaning, willing to perform his contract, in the exercise of that prudence which businessmen usually bring to bear on such transactions, one under which a purchaser may have quiet and peaceful enjoyment of the property; one that is free from material defects, or grave doubts, and reasonably free from litigation. Myrick v. Austin, 141 Kan. 778, 44 P.2d 266, 268.

Marketable title is one which is free from reasonable doubt and will not expose party who holds it to hazards of litigation. Tri-State Hotel Co. v. Sphinx Investment Co., 212 Kan. 234, 510 P.2d 1223, 1230.

One that may be freely made the subject of resale. Kruele v. F. C. Huyck & Sons, 121 Vt. 299, 156 A.2d 74, 77.

A marketable title to land is such a title as a court, when asked to decree specific performance of the contract of sale, will compel the vendee to accept as sufficient. It is said to be not merely a defensible title, but a title which is free from plausible or reasonable objections.

See also Merchantable title.

Marketable Title Acts. Many states have adopted Marketable Title Acts the purpose of which is to simplify land title transactions through making it possible to determine marketability by limited title searches over some reasonable period of the immediate past (e.g. 40 yrs.) and thus avoid the necessity of examining the record back into distant time for each new transaction.

Market geld. The toll of a market.

Marketing contract. An agreement between a cooperative and its members in which the members agree to sell their products through the cooperative and the cooperative agrees to obtain their price. Hiroshi Kake-nko v. Jones, 192 Or. 523, 235 P.2d 768.

Market making. Regarding securities in over the counter trading, the process consisting of bid and ask quotations which results in the establishment of a market for such securities. Oppen v. Hancock Securities Corp., D.C.N.Y., 250 F.Supp. 668, 671.

Market order. An order to buy or sell on a stock or commodity exchange at the current price when the order reaches the floor of the exchange.

Market overt. In English law, an open and public market. The market-place or spot of ground set apart by custom for the sale of particular goods is, in the country, the only market overt; but in London every shop in which goods are exposed publicly to sale is market overt, for such things only as the owner professes to trade in.

Market price. The price at which a seller is ready and willing to sell and a buyer ready and willing to buy in the ordinary course of trade. The price actually given in current market dealings; the actual price at which given stock or commodity is currently sold, or has recently been sold in open market, that is, not at forced sale, but in the usual and ordinary course of trade and competition between sellers and buyers equally free to bargain, as established by records of late sales. In the case of a security, market price is usually considered the last reported price at which the stock or bond sold.

Market price is synonymous with market value, and means the price actually given in current market dealings, or the price at which the supply and demand are equal. Public Service Commission of State v. Montana-Dakota Utilities Co., N.D., 100 N.W.2d 140, 146. The point of intersection of supply and demand in the market.

See also Market value.

Market quotations. The latest (most current) prices at which securities or commodities have been bought and sold on an exchange or other market. Board of
MARKET QUOTATIONS

Market share. The percentage of a market that is controlled by a firm. A 20 percent share of market means that the firm has captured 20 percent of the actual sales in the market.

Market structure. Refers to the broad organizational characteristics of a market. The major characteristics are seller concentration, product differentiation, and barriers to entry.

Market value. The price property would command in the market. The highest price a willing buyer would pay and a willing seller accept, both being fully informed, and the property being exposed for a reasonable period of time. The market value may be different from the price a property can actually be sold for at a given time (market price). The market value of an article or piece of property is the price which it might be expected to bring if offered for sale in a fair market; not the price which might be obtained on a sale at public auction or a sale forced by the necessities of the owner, but such a price as would be fixed by negotiation and mutual agreement, after ample time to find a purchaser, as between a vendor who is willing (but not compelled) to sell and a purchaser who desires to buy but is not compelled to take the particular article or piece of property. U.S. v. Certain Property in Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York, C.A.N.Y., 403 F.2d 800, 802. See also Actual market value; Clear market value; Fair cash market value; Fair market value.

Marking up. The process wherein a legislative committee goes through a bill section by section, revising its language and amending the bill as desired. Extensive revision may lead to the introduction of a clear bill under a new number. May also refer to procedure by which a case is placed on the trial calendar; e.g. "marking up for trial."

Markon. An amount originally added to cost to obtain list price. Usually expressed as a percentage of cost. Further increases in list price are called markups; decreases are called markdowns. See also Markup.

Marksman. In practice and conveyancing, one who makes his mark; a person who cannot write, and only makes his mark in executing instruments.

Markup. An amount originally added to cost. Usually expressed as a percentage of selling price. Also refers to an increase above an originally-established retail price. See Markon.

Markush doctrine /ˈmɑrkəʃ doʊˈkrɑn/. The doctrine permits an applicant for a patent where there is no known subgeneric term which would include elements which applicant found useful and exclude those which are not, to employ a generic term limited to the elements found to be operative and recognizes as unobjectionable as to form, claims containing a coined subgeneric expression. In re Swenson, C.C. P.A., 132 F.2d 336.

Marque and reprisal, letters of /ˈlɛdərz əv mɑrk ən ˈreprɪzaʊl/. These words, "marque" and "reprisal," are frequently used as synonymous, but, taken in their strict etymological sense, the latter signifies a "taking in return;" the former, the passing the frontiers (marches) in order to such taking. Letters of marque and reprisal are grantable, by the law of nations, whenever the subjects of one state are oppressed and injured by those of another, and justice is denied by that state to which the oppressor belongs; and the party to whom these letters are granted may then seize the bodies or the goods of the subjects of the state to which the offender belongs, until satisfaction be made, wherever they happen to be found. Reprisals are to be granted only in case of a clear and open denial of justice. At the present day, in consequence partly of treaties and partly of the practice of nations, the making of reprisals is confined to the seizure of commercial property on the high seas by public cruisers, or by private cruisers specially authorized thereto. Article I, Sec. 8, of U.S.Const. grants Congress the power to grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal.

Marque, law of /ˈlɑːkəv əv márk/ /ˈmɑrkli/ /ˈmɑrkəvəs/. In English law, one of the second order of nobility; next in order to a duke.

Marquis, or marquess /ˈmɑrkɪs/ /ˈmɑrkɪsə/. In English law, one of the second order of nobility; next in order to a duke.

Marquisate /ˌmɑrkəˈvæt/ /ˈzæt/. The seigniory of a marquis.

Marriage. Legal union of one man and one woman as husband and wife. Singer v. Hara, 11 Wash.App. 247, 522 P.2d 1187, 1193. Marriage, as distinguished from the agreement to marry and from the act of becoming married, is the legal status, condition, or relation of one man and one woman united in law for life, or until divorced, for the discharge to each other and the community of the duties legally incumbent on those whose association is founded on the distinction of sex. A contract, according to the form prescribed by law, by which a man and woman capable of entering into such contract, mutually engage with each other to live their whole lives (or until divorced) together in state of union which ought to exist between a husband and wife. The word also signifies the act, ceremony, or formal proceeding by which persons take each other for husband and wife.

In old English law, marriage is used in the sense of "maritagium" (q.v.), or the feudal right enjoyed by the lord or guardian in chivalry of disposing of his ward in marriage.

See also Avail of marriage; Banns of matrimon; Common-law marriage; Consensual marriage; Restraint of marriage; Voidable marriage; Void marriage.

Ceremonial marriage. Marriage which follows all the statutory requirements of blood tests, license, waiting period, and which has been solemnized before an official (religious or civil) capable of presiding at the marriage.

Informal marriage. A marriage in which promises are exchanged between the parties without an official ecclesiastical representative present. In most cases, the law requires consummation of the marriage to consider such valid. See Consensual marriage.

Jactitation of marriage. See Jactitation.

Manus marriage. A form of marriage in early Rome; it formed a relation called manus (hand) and brought the wife into the husband’s power, placing her as to legal rights in the position of a daughter.

Marriage in jest. A marriage in jest is subject to annulment for lack of requisite consent and intention to marry.

Mixed marriage. A marriage between persons of different nationalities or religions; or, more particularly, between persons of different racial origin; as between a white person and a negro or an Indian. See Miscegenation.

Morganatic marriage. The lawful and inseparable conjunction of a man, of noble or illustrious birth, with a woman of inferior station, upon condition that neither the wife nor her children shall partake of the titles, arms, or dignity of the husband, or succeed to his inheritance, but be contented with a certain allowed rank assigned to them by the morganatic contract. But since these restrictions relate only to the rank of the parties and succession to property, without affecting the nature of a matrimonial engagement, it must be considered as a just marriage. The marriage ceremony is regularly performed; the union is indissoluble; the children legitimate.

Plural marriage. In general, any bigamous or polygamous union, but particularly, a second or subsequent marriage of a man who already has one wife living under system of polygamy. Such marriages are prohibited.

Proxy marriage. Marriage contracted or celebrated by one or more agents rather than by the parties themselves.

Putative marriage. One contracted in good faith and in ignorance of some existing impediment on the part of at least one of the contracting parties. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Henderson, Tex.Civ.App., 53 S.W.2d 811. Such marriages are recognized in very few jurisdictions.

Marriage Act, Royal. An English act of 12 Geo. III, c. 1 (1772), by which members of the royal family are forbidden to marry without the king’s (or queen’s) consent, or except on certain onerous conditions.

Marriage articles. Articles of agreement between parties contemplating marriage, intended as preliminary to a formal marriage settlement, to be drawn after marriage.

Marriage broker. One who for a consideration brings a woman and man together in marriage. Such activity is void and illegal as against public policy.

Marriage ceremony. The form, religious or civil, for the solemnization of a marriage.

Marriage certificate. An instrument which certifies a marriage, and is executed by the person officiating at the marriage; it is not intended to be signed by the parties, but is evidence of the marriage.

Marriage license. A license or permission granted by public authority to persons who intend to intermarry, usually addressed to the minister or magistrate who is to perform the ceremony, or, in general terms, to any one authorized to solemnize marriages. By statute in most jurisdictions, it is made an essential prerequisite to the lawful solemnization of the marriage.

Marriage-notice book. A book kept, in England, by the registrar, in which applications for and issue of registrar’s licenses to marry are recorded.

Marriage per verba de praesenti /marraj per varbi diy prazentay/. To constitute such a marriage, there must be an agreement to become husband and wife immediately from the time when the mutual consent is given. Pitney v. Pitney, 151 Kan. 848, 101 P.2d 933, 935.

Marriage portion. Dowry; a sum of money or other property which is given to or settled on a woman on her marriage.

Marriage promise. Betrothal; engagement to intermarry with another.

Marriage records. Those documents kept by a state, city or town official which are permanent records of marriages and which include the names of the spouses, the maiden name of the wife, their addresses and the date of the marriage. From these documents certificates of marriages are prepared.

Marriage settlement. An agreement in contemplation of marriage in which each party agrees to release or modify property rights which would otherwise arise from the marriage. A written agreement in the nature of a conveyance, called a “settlement,” which is made in contemplation of a proposed marriage and in consideration thereof, either by the parties about to marry, or one of them, or by a parent or relation on their behalf, by which the title to certain property is settled, i.e., fixed or limited to a prescribed course of succession; the object being, usually, to provide for the wife and children. Thus, the estate might be limited to the husband and issue, or to the wife and issue, or to husband and wife for their joint lives, remainder to the survivor for life, remainder over to the issue, or otherwise. Such settlements may also be made after marriage, in which case they are called “postnuptial.” See also; Antenuptial agreement; Marital agreements: Palimony; Postnuptial agreement.

 Married woman. A woman who has a husband living and not divorced; a feme covert.

Marshall. The President is required to appoint a U.S. Marshal to each judicial district. It is the responsibility of U.S. marshals to execute all lawful writs, process and orders issued under authority of the United States. In executing the laws of the United States within a state, the marshal may exercise the same powers which a sheriff of the State may exercise in executing the laws thereof. 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 561, 569, 570.

Also, in some of the states, this is the name of a law officer in certain cities having powers and duties corresponding generally to those of a constable or sheriff. Administrative head of city police or fire department.
See also Provost-Marshal.

In old English law, the title borne by several officers of state and of the law, of whom the most important were the following: (1) The earl-marshall, who presided in the court of chivalry; (2) the marshal of the king’s house, or knight-marshall, whose special authority was in the king’s palace, to hear causes between members of the household, and punish faults committed within the verge; (3) the marshal of the king’s bench prison, who had the custody of that jail; (4) the marshal of the exchequer, who had the custody of the king’s debts; (5) the marshal of the judge of assize, whose duty was to swear in the grand jury.

Marshaling. Arranging, ranking, or disposing in order; particularly, in the case of a group or series of conflicting claims or interests, arranging them in such an order of sequence, or so directing the manner of their satisfaction, as shall secure justice to all persons concerned and the largest possible measure of satisfaction to each. Equitable doctrine of “marshaling” rests upon principle that creditor having two funds to satisfy his debt may not, by his application of them to his demand, defeat another creditor, who may resort to only one of the funds. Columbia Bank for Cooperatives v. Lee, C.A.N.C., 368 F.2d 934, 939. Under the doctrine of “marshaling”, one claiming a lien against two or more classes of property, one of which is also subject to a junior lien, is required to exact satisfaction from the property not subject to the junior lien; thus, the junior lien is preserved where other assets exist sufficient to satisfy the senior lien. In re Einhorn Bros., Inc., D.C.Pa., 171 F.Supp. 655, 660. See sub-titles infra.

Marshaling assets. In equity, the arranging or ranking of assets in the due order of administration. Such an arrangement of the different funds under administration as shall enable all the parties having equities therein to receive their due proportions, notwithstanding any intervening interests, liens, or other claims of particular persons to prior satisfaction out of a portion of these funds. In re Van Zandt’s Estate, 142 Misc. 663, 255 N.Y.S. 359, 366. The arrangement or ranking of assets in a certain order towards the payment of debts. The arrangement of assets or claims so as to secure the proper application of the assets to the various claims; especially when there are two classes of assets, and some creditors can enforce their claims against both, and others against only one, and the creditors of the former class are compelled to exhaust the assets against which they alone have a claim before having recourse to other assets, thus providing for the settlement of as many claims as possible. Equitable rule of “marshaling assets” is that where one claimant has two funds to which he may resort to answer his demand, and another claimant has interest in only one of such funds, he can compel former to take satisfaction out of fund in which latter has no lien. In re Creem’s Will, Sur., 147 N.Y.S.2d 634, 636.

Marshaling liens. The ranking or ordering of several estates or parcels of land, for the satisfaction of a judgment or mortgage to which they are all liable, though successively conveyed away by the debtor. The rule is that, where lands subject to the lien of a judgment or mortgage have been sold or incumbered by the owner at different times to different purchasers, the various tracts are liable to the satisfaction of the lien in the inverse order of their alienation or incumbrance, the land last sold being first chargeable.

Marshaling remedies. The basis for “marshaling of remedies” is that where one creditor has security on two funds of common debtor and another creditor has security on only one of such funds, second creditor has right in equity to compel first creditor to resort to the other fund, if it is necessary for satisfaction of both creditors and will not prejudice rights or interests of party entitled to double fund, do injustice to debtor, or operate inequitably on other persons’ interests. Greenwich Trust Co. v. Tyson, 129 Conn. 211, 27 A.2d 168, 174.

Marshaling securities. An equitable practice, which consists in so ranking or arranging classes of creditors, with respect to the assets of the common debtor, as to provide for satisfaction of the greatest number of claims. The process is this: where one class of creditors have liens or securities on two funds, while another class of creditors can resort to only one of these funds, equity will compel the double-secured creditors to first exhaust that fund which will leave the single security of the other creditors intact.

Marshalsea /märshəlsə/ In English law, a prison belonging to the king’s bench. It was subsequently consolidated with others, under the name of the “King’s Prison.”

Marshalsea, court of /kɔrd əv märshəlsə/ In English law, the court or seat of the marshal. A court originally held before the steward and marshal of the king’s house, instituted to administer justice between the king’s domestic servants. It had jurisdiction of all trespasses committed within the verge of the king’s court, where one of the parties was of the royal household; and of all debts and contracts, when both parties were of that establishment. It was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict., c. 101, § 13.

Mart. A place of public traffic or sale. See also Market.

Marte suo decurrere /mɑːrdɪ 附加值 kə dəkˈɛrərə/ Lat. To run by its own force. A term applied in the civil law to a suit when it ran its course to the end without any impediment.

Martial law /ˈmɑrʃəl lɔ/ Exists when military authorities carry on government or exercise various degrees of control over civilians or civilian authorities in domestic territory. Ochikubo v. Bonesteel, D.C.Cal., 60 F.Supp. 916, 928, 929, 930. Such may exist either in time of war or when civil authority has ceased to function or has become ineffective. A system of law, obtaining only in time of actual war and growing out of the exigencies thereof, arbitrary in its character, and depending only on the will of the commander of an army, which is established and administered in a place or district of hostile territory held in belligerent possession, or, sometimes, in places occupied or pervaded by insurgents or mobs, and which suspends all existing civil laws, as well as the civil authority and the ordinary administration of justice. See also Military government; Military law.

Mary Carter agreement. The term "Mary Carter Agreement" arises from the agreement popularized by the case of Booth v. Mary Carter Paint Co., Fla.App. 1967, 202 So.2d 8, and now is used rather generally to apply to any agreement between the plaintiff and some, but less than all, defendants whereby the parties place limitations on the financial responsibility of the agreeing defendants, the amount of which is variable and usually in some inverse ratio to the amount of recovery which the plaintiff is able to make against the nonagreeing defendant or defendants. Such agreements are held to be void as against public policy in certain states, while in others are permissible if disclosed to the jury.

Mashglicht /mashgilyak/. A qualified supervisor designated by rabbinical authority to supervise the receipt and handling of kosher meat. People on Complaint of Waller v. Jacob Bransf & Son, 147 Misc. 290, 263 N.Y.S. 629.

Masochism /məsəˈkɪzm/. [From Leopold von Sacher-Masoch, a nineteenth-century Austrian novelist and historian.] A form of perversion in which sexual pleasure is heightened when one is beaten and maltreated at the hands of the other party; the opposite of sadism. Sexual perversion, in which a member of one sex takes delight in being dominated, even to the extent of violence or cruelty, by one of the other sex.

Mason and Dixon Line. The boundary line between Pennsylvania on the north and Maryland on the south, celebrated before the extinction of slavery as the line of demarcation between the slave and the free states. It was run by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, commissioners in a dispute between the Penn Proprietors and Lord Baltimore. The line was carried 244 miles from the Delaware river where it was stopped by Indians. A resurvey was made in 1849, and in 1900 a new survey was authorized by the two states.

Massa /mɑːsə/. In the civil law, a mass; an unwrought substance, such as gold or silver, before it is wrought into cups or other articles.

Massachism. See Masochism.

Massachusetts ballot. The office-block type of Austra-lillian ballot in which, under each office, the names of candidates, with party designations, are printed in alphabetical order.

Massachusetts rule. As regards sending out checks through banks for collection, the "Massachusetts rule" is that each bank that receives the item acts as an agent for the depositor; but in some other states, the "New York rule" prevails, under which only the bank first receiving the item is responsible to, or is the agent of, the depositor, the other banks being the agent of the bank, in the process of the collection.

Massachusetts trust. A business organization wherein property is conveyed to trustees and managed for benefit of holders of certificates like corporate stock certificates. A "Massachusetts business trust" is an unincorporated association organized under Massa-

Masses. Religious ceremonials or observances of the Roman Catholic Church.

Master. A principal who employs another to perform service in his affairs and who controls or has right to control physical conduct of other in performance of the service. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 2. A "master" is one standing to another in such a relation that he not only controls the results of the work of that other but also may direct the manner in which such work shall be done. Matoni v. Research-Cotrell, Inc., D.C.Pa., 202 F.Supp. 527, 532.

One having authority; one who rules, directs, instructs, or superintends; a head or chief; an instructor; an employer. Applied to several judicial officers. See infra.

One who has reached the summit of his trade and who has the right to hire apprentices and journeymen.

Fed.R.Civ.P. 53, and analogous state rules, provide for the appointment by the court of a master to assist it in specific judicial duties as may arise in a case. The master's powers and duties depend upon the terms of the order of reference and the controlling court rule, and may include taking of testimony, discovery of evidence and other acts or measures necessary for the performance of his duties specified in the order of reference. The master is required to prepare a report of his proceedings for the court. In the federal courts the appointment of a master is the "exception rather than the rule", while under money state rules, the court has more liberal powers to appoint such. See also Reference.

Special master. A master appointed to act as the representative of the court in some particular act or transaction, as, to make a sale of property under a decree. Pewabic Min. Co. v. Mason, 145 U.S. 349, 12 S.Ct. 897, 36 L.Ed. 732.

Master agreement. The omnibus labor agreement reached between a union and the leaders of the industry or a trade association. It becomes the pattern for labor agreements between the union and individual employers.

Master and servant. The relation of master and servant exists where one person, for pay or other valuable consideration, enters into the service of another and devotes to him his personal labor for an agreed period. The relation exists where the employer has the right to select the employee, the power to remove and discharge him and the right to direct both what work shall be done and the manner in which it shall be done. Matoni v. Research-Cotrell, Inc., D.C.Pa., 202 F.Supp. 527, 532. Such term has generally been replaced by "employer and employee".

Master at common law. The title of officers of the English superior courts of common law appointed to record the proceedings of the court to which they belong; to superintend the issue of writs and the formal proceedings in an action; to receive and account for the fees charged on legal proceedings, and moneys paid into court.
Master deed or lease. Conveyancing document used by owners or lessees of condominiums.

Master in chancery. An officer of a court of chancery who acts as an assistant to the judge or chancellor. His duties are to inquire into such matters as may be referred to him by the court, examine causes, take testimony, take accounts, compute damages, etc., reporting his findings to the court in such shape that a decree may be made; also to take oaths and affidavits and acknowledgments of deeds. In modern practice, many of the functions of a master are performed by clerks, commissioners, auditors, and referees, and in those states that have merged law and equity courts in adopting Rules of Civil Procedure the office has been superseded. See Master.

Master in lunacy. In old English law, the masters in lunacy were judicial officers appointed by the lord chancellor for the purpose of conducting inquiries into the state of mind of persons alleged to have been lunatics. Such inquiries usually took place before a jury.

Master of a ship. In maritime law, the commander of a merchant vessel, who has the chief charge of her government and navigation and the command of the crew, as well as the general care and control of the vessel and cargo, as the representative and confidential agent of the owner. He is commonly called the "captain."

Master of the Crown Office. In England, the Queen's coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the court of Queen's bench, who prosecutes at the complaint or relation of some private person or common informer, the crown being the nominal prosecutor. He is an officer of the Supreme Court.

Master of the Faculties. In English law, an officer under the archbishop, who grants licenses and dispensations, etc.

Master of the Horse. In English law, the third great officer of the royal household, being next to the lord steward and lord chamberlain. He has the privilege of making use of any horses, footmen, or pages belonging to the royal stables.

Master of the Mint. In English law, an officer who receives bullion for coining, and pays for it, and superintends everything belonging to the mint. He is usually called the "warden of the mint." It is provided by St. 33 Vict., c. 10, § 14, that the chancellor of the exchequer for the time being shall be the master of the mint.

Master of the Ordnance. In English law, a great officer, to whose care all the royal ordnance and artillery were committed.

Master of the rolls. In English law, an assistant judge of the court of chancery, who held a separate court ranking next to that of the lord chancellor, and had the keeping of the rolls and grants which passed the great seal, and the records of the chancery. He was originally appointed only for the superintendence of the writs and records appertaining to the common-law department of the court, and is still properly the chief of the masters in chancery. Under the act constituting the Supreme Court of Judicature, the master of the rolls became a judge of the high court of justice and ex officio a member of the court of appeal. The same act, however, provided for the abolition of this office, under certain conditions, when the next vacancy occurs.

Master plan. Term used in land use control law, zoning and urban redevelopment to describe the omnibus plan of a city or town for housing, industry and recreational facilities and their impact on environmental factors. See also Planned unit development.

Master policy. An insurance policy which covers a group of persons as in health or life insurance written as group insurance. Generally, there is only one master policy and the participants have only certificates evidencing their participation.

Masters of the supreme court. In English law, officials deriving their title from Jud. (Officers') Act 1879, and being, or filling the places of, the sixteen masters of the common-law courts, the queen's coroner and attorney, the master of the crown office, the two record and writ clerks, and the three associates.

Master's report. The formal report or statement made by a master in chancery of his decision on any question referred to him, or of any facts or action he has been directed to ascertain or take. The document filed with the court after a master has heard the evidence and made his findings. The report should contain his findings and conclusions of law where necessary. Fed.R.Civ. P. 53(e).

Mast-selling. In old English law, the practice of selling the goods of dead seamen at the mast.

Mate. A spouse. The officer second in command on a merchant vessel. In Navy, petty officer who is assistant to warrant officer.

Mattleottage /mætləʊtədʒ/. In French law, the hire of a ship or boat.

Seamanship; seaman's wages, pay.

Mater-familias /mætər fæmɪliəs/. Lat. In civil law, the mother or mistress of a family. A chaste woman, married or single.

Materia /mætɪrɪə/. Lat. In Civil law, materials; as distinguished from species, or the form given by labor and skill.

In English law, matter; substance; subject-matter. 3 Bl.Comm. 322.

Material. Important; more or less necessary; having influence or effect; going to the merits; having to do with matter, as distinguished from form. Representation relating to matter which is so substantial and important as to influence party to whom made is "material." See Material fact.

Material allegation. An allegation is said to be material when it forms a substantive part of the case presented by the pleading. An allegation in a pleading is one essential to the claim or defense, and which could not be stricken from the pleading without leaving it insufficient.

Material alteration. A material alteration in any written instrument is one which changes its tenor, or its legal meaning and effect; one which causes it to speak a language different in effect from that which it originally spoke. A material alteration of a deed is one which effectuates a change in its legal effect. Boys v. Long, Okl., 268 P.2d 890, 893.

Any alteration of an instrument is material which changes the contract of any party thereto in any respect, including any such change in: (a) the number or relations of the parties; or (b) an incomplete instrument, by completing it otherwise than as authorized; or (c) the writing as signed, by adding to it or by removing any part of it. U.C.C. § 3–407(1).

Material evidence. That quality of evidence which tends to influence the trier of fact because of its logical connection with the issue. Evidence which has an effective influence or bearing on question in issue is "material". Barr v. Dolphin Holding Corp., Sup., 141 N.Y.S.2d 906, 908. "Materiality" of evidence refers to pertinency of the offered evidence to the issue in dispute. Vine Street Corp. v. City of Council Bluffs, Iowa, 220 N.W.2d 860, 863.

Material evidence is evidence which is material to question in controversy, and which must necessarily enter into the consideration of the controversy, and which by itself or in connection with other evidence is determinative of the case. Camurati v. Sutton, 48 Tenn.App. 54, 342 S.W.2d 732, 733.

See also Evidence; Relevancy; Relevant evidence.

Material fact. Contracts. One which constitutes substantially the consideration of the contract, or without which it would not have been made. See also Reliance.

Insurance. A fact which, if communicated to the agent or insurer, would induce him either to decline the insurance altogether, or not accept it unless a higher premium is paid. One which necessarily has some bearing on the subject-matter. A fact which increases the risk, or which, if disclosed, would have been a fair reason for demanding a higher premium. Any fact the knowledge or ignorance of which would naturally influence the insurer in making or refusing the contract, or in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the rate.

Pleading and practice. One which is essential to the case, defense, application, etc., and without which it could not be supported. One which tends to establish any of issues raised. The "material facts" of an issue of fact are such as are necessary to determine the issue. Material fact is one upon which outcome of litigation depends. Arnant v. Pacific Power & Light Co., 10 Wash.App. 785, 520 P.2d 481, 484.

Securities. To be a "material" fact within the Securities Act of 1933, it must concern information about which an average prudent investor ought reasonably be informed before purchasing a security. Gridley v. Sayre & Fisher Co., D.C.S.D., 409 F.Supp. 1266, 1270. With respect to securities fraud violations, a material fact is one that a reasonable man would attach importance to in determining his choice of action in the transaction in question. List v. Fashion Park, Inc., C.A.N.Y., 340 F.2d 457; Gilbert v. Nixon, C.A.Kan., 426 F.2d 681. An existing fact is material if there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable shareholder would consider it important in deciding how to vote.

Summary judgment. In determining what constitutes a genuine issue as to any material fact for purposes of summary judgment, an issue is "material" if the facts alleged are such as to constitute a legal defense or are of such nature as to affect the result of the action. Austin v. Wilder, 26 N.C.App. 229, 215 S.E.2d 794, 796. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c).

A fact is "material" and precludes grant of summary judgment if proof of that fact would have effect of establishing or refuting one of essential elements of a cause of action or defense asserted by the parties, and would necessarily affect application of appropriate principle of law to the rights and obligations of the parties. Johnson v. Soulii, Wyo., 542 P.2d 867, 872.

Materialman. A person who has furnished materials or supplies used in the construction or repair of a building, structure, etc.

Materialman's lien. By statute in most states, a person who furnishes material for the construction, improvement or alteration of a building or other structure has a priority for payment of his claim based on his lien as a supplier of such materials. See also Mechanic's lien.

Material representation. In law of deceit, a statement or undertaking of sufficient substance and importance as to be the foundation of an action if such representation is false. See also Material fact; Representation.

Material witness. A person who can give testimony no one else, or at least very few, can give. In an important criminal case, a material witness may sometimes be held by the government against his or her will. He may be the victim or an eye witness. See also Witness.

Maternal. That which belongs to, or comes from, the mother; as maternal authority, maternal relation, maternal estate, maternal line.

Maternal line. A line of descent or relationship between two persons which is traced through the mother of the younger.

Maternal property. That which comes from the mother of the party, and other ascendants of the maternal stock.

Materna maternis /matārā matārm/. Lat. A maxim of the French law, signifying that property of a decedent acquired by him through his mother descends to the relations on the mother's side.

Maternity. The character, relation, state, or condition of a mother.

Matrētā /matārdā/. Lat. In civil law, a maternal aunt; a mother's sister.

Matrētā magna /matārdā māγνa/. A great aunt; a grandmother's sister (avias soror).

Matrētā maior /matārdā mēyjav/. A greater aunt; a great-grandmother's sister (provias soror); a father's or mother's great-aunt (patris vel matris matertera magna).

Matertera maxima /matšárd markšáma/. A greatest aunt; a great-great-grandmother's sister (abavia soror); a father's or mother's greater aunt (patris vel matris matertera major).

Mathematical evidence. Demonstrative evidence; such as establishes its conclusions with absolute necessity and certainty. It is used in contradistinction to moral evidence.

Matrila. A godmother.

Matricide /matšrasáy/. The murder of a mother; or one who has slain his mother.

Matricula /matšíkyl/. In civil and old English law, a register of the admission of officers and persons entered into any body or society, whereof a list was made. Hence those who are admitted to a college or university are said to be "matriculated." Also a kind of almshouse, which had revenues appropriated to it, and was usually built near the church, whence the name was given to the church itself.

Matriculate /matšíkylez/. To enroll; to enter in a register; specifically, to enter or admit to membership in a body or society, particularly in a college or university, by enrolling the name in a register; to go through the process of admission to membership, as by examination and enrollment, in a society or college.

Matrimonia debent esse libera /matšramów(i)yá děbent ésy libera/. Marriages ought to be free. A maxim of the civil law.

Matrimonial. Of or pertaining to matrimony or the estate of marriage.

Matrimonial action. The term "matrimonial action" includes actions for a separation, for an annulment or dissolution of a marriage, for a divorce, for a declaration of the nullity of a void marriage, for a declaration of the validity or nullity of a foreign judgment of divorce, and for a declaration of the validity or nullity of a marriage. New York C.P.L.R. § 105. See also Annulment; Custody; Divorce; Equitable distribution; Separation of Spouses.

Matrimonial cohabitation. The living together of a man and woman ostensibly as husband and wife. Also the living together of those who are legally husband and wife, the term carrying with it, in this sense, an implication of mutual rights and duties as to sharing the same habitation.

Matrimonial domicile. Place where parties live together as husband and wife either actually or constructively.

Matrimonium /matšramów(i)yam/. Lat. In Roman law, a legal marriage, contracted in strict accordance with the forms of the older Roman law, i.e., either with the farreum, the coemptio, or by usu. This was allowed only to Roman citizens and to those neighboring peoples to whom the right of connubium had been conceded. The effect of such a marriage was to bring the wife into the manus, or marital power, of the husband, and to create the patra potestas over the children.

Matrimonium subsecundum tolit seccatum precedens /matšramów(i)yam sábšikwan(d)yz tólat pokéydam praslyžen(d)yz/. Subsequent marriage cures preceding criminality.

Matrimony. Marriage (q.v.), in the sense of the relation or status, not of the ceremony.

Matrix /méntraks/. In civil law, the protocol or first draft of a legal instrument, from which all copies must be taken.

Matrix ecclesis /méntraks sklyzya/. Lat. A mother church. This term was anciently applied to a cathedral, in relation to the other churches in the same see, or to a parochial church, in relation to the chapels or minor churches attached to it or depending on it.

Matron. A married woman; an elderly woman. The female superintendent of an establishment or institution, such as a hospital, an orphan asylum, etc., is often so called.

Matrons, jury of. Jury impaneled to determine if a woman condemned to death is pregnant. In common-law practice, a jury of twelve matrons or discreet women, impaneled upon a writ of ventre insipienti, or where a female prisoner, being under sentence of death, pleaded her pregnancy as a ground for staying execution. In the latter case, such jury inquired into the truth of the plea.

Matter. Substantial facts forming basis of claim or defense; facts material to issue; substance as distinguished from form; transaction, event, occurrence; subject-matter of controversy. See Issue; Material fact; Matter in issue; Subject-matter.

Matter in controversy, or in dispute. Subject of litigation; matter on which action is brought and issue is joined and in relation to which, if issue be one of fact, testimony is taken. Golden v. Sixth Judicial Dist. Ct. In and for Pasco County, 59 Nev. 114, 38 P.2d 1042, 1044. Rights which plaintiffs assert and seek to have protected and enforced. Gavica v. Donough, C.C.A.O., 93 F.2d 173, 175. See also Cause of action; Issue; Matter in issue; Subject-matter.

Matter in deed. In English law, such matter as may be proved or established by a deed or specialty. Matter of fact, in contradistinction to matter of law. See also Matter of record.

Matter in issue. That matter on which plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which defendant controverts by his pleadings. MacKenzie v. Union Guardian Trust Co., 262 Mich. 593, 247 N.W. 914. Not including facts offered in evidence to establish the matters in issue. That ultimate fact or state of facts in dispute upon which the verdict or finding is predicated. See also *Matter in controversy, or in dispute."

Matter in ley ne serra mise in boutche del Jurors /méntr in léy ns sàra miyz in bùsh dél jùrz/. Matter of law shall not be put into the mouth of the jurors.

Matter in pais /méntr in pęy/. Matter of fact that is not in writing; thus distinguished from matter in deed and matter of record; matter that must be proved by parol evidence.

Matter of course. Anything done or taken in the course of routine or usual procedure, which is permissible and valid without being specially applied for and allowed.

Matter of fact. That which is to be ascertained by the senses, or by the testimony of witnesses describing what they have perceived. Distinguished from matter of law and matter of opinion. See also Fact.

Matter of form. See Form.

Matter of law. Whatever is to be ascertained or decided by the application of statutory rules or the principles and determinations of the law, as distinguished from the investigation of particular facts, is called "matter of law."

Matter of record. Any judicial matter or proceeding entered on the records of a court, and to be proved by the production of such record. It differs from matter in deed, which consists of facts which may be proved by specialty.

Matter of record, estoppel by. See Record, estoppel by.

Matter of substance. That which goes to the merits. The opposite of matter of form.

Matters of subsistence for man. This phrase comprehends all articles or things, whether animal or vegetable, living or dead, which are used for food, and whether they are consumed in the form in which they are bought from the producer or are only consumed after undergoing a process of preparation, which is greater or less, according to the character of the article.

Matured claim. Claim which is unconditionally due and owing. See Liquidated claim.

Maugre /mógar/. L. Fr. In spite of; against the will of.

Maxim /mæksam/. Maxims are but attempted general statements of rules of law and are law only to extent of application in adjudicated cases. Sweetland v. Curtiss Airports Corporation, D.C.Ohio, 41 F.2d 929, 936. An established principle or proposition. A principle of law universally admitted as being a correct statement of the law, or as agreeable to reason. Principles invoked in equity jurisdiction; e.g. "equity treats as done what ought to be done."

The various maxims of law appear in alphabetical order throughout this dictionary.

Maxime pacl sunt contraria vis et injuria /mæksəmi pêysay sânt kontrêrîs vîs êd aŋjûrîs/. The greatest enemies to peace are force and wrong.

Maximum. The highest or greatest amount, quality, value, or degree.

Maximus erroris populus magister /mæksəməs arôras pôpûlas maʤîsta/. The people is the greatest master of error.

May. An auxiliary verb qualifying the meaning of another verb by expressing ability, competency, liberty, permission, possibility, probability or contingency. U. S. v. Lexington Mill & E. Co., 232 U.S. 399, 34 S.Ct. 337, 340, 58 L.Ed. 658. Regardless of the instrument, however, whether constitution, statute, deed, contract or whatever, courts not infrequently construe "may" as "shall" or "must" to the end that justice may not be the slave of grammar. However, as a general rule, the word "may" will not be treated as a word of command unless there is something in context or subject matter of act to indicate that it was used in such sense. Bloom v. Texas State Bd. of Examiners of Psychologists, Tex.Civ.App., 475 S.W.2d 374, 377. In construction of statutes and presumably also in construction of federal rules word "may" as opposed to "shall" is indicative of discretion, or choice between two or more alternatives, but context in which word appears must be controlling factor. U. S. v. Cook, C.A.III., 432 F.2d 1093, 1098.

Mayhem /mèy(h)əm/. Mayhem at common law required a type of injury which permanently rendered the victim less able to fight offensively or defensively; it might be accomplished either by the removal of (dismemberment), or by the disablement of, some bodily member useful in fighting. Today, by statute, permanent disfigurement has been added; and as to dismemberment and disablement, there is no longer a requirement that the member have military significance. See also Maim.

Mayn /mèyn/. L. Fr. A hand; handwriting.

Maynover /mèynôwər/mànôwər/. L. Fr. A work of the hand; a thing produced by manual labor.

Mayor. A governmental figure who is generally the principal administrative officer of a city or other municipal area. The position of mayor varies from city to city. In some cities the mayor is essentially a ceremonial figure, while in others he is a major executive official. In some instances he is popularly elected and in others, such as in the commission plan, he is selected from within the administrative council to serve as a presiding officer and ceremonial figure. Duties of mayor are usually prescribed by statute or municipal charter.

Mayorality /mèy(ə)rəlîti/. The office or dignity of a mayor.

Mayorazgo /mäyôrəsˈgoʊ/. In Spanish law, the right to the enjoyment of certain aggregate property, left with the condition thereon imposed that they are to pass in their integrity, perpetually, successively to the eldest son.

Mayor's court. A court established in some cities, in which the mayor sits with the powers of a police judge or committing magistrate in respect to offenses committed within the city (e.g. traffic or ordinance violations) and sometimes with civil jurisdiction in small causes, or other special statutory powers.

McCarran Act. A federal statute which permits a state to regulate and to tax foreign insurance companies.
McCARRAN ACT

which do business within the state. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1011 et seq. See also Internal security acts.

McNab-Mallory Rule. The rule which requires that a suspect be promptly brought before a magistrate or else incriminating statements made by him during the illegal detention will be suppressed. McNabb v. U. S., 318 U.S. 332, 63 S.Ct. 608, 87 L.Ed. 819, and Mallory v. U. S., 354 U.S. 449, 77 S.Ct. 1356, 1 L.Ed.2d 1479. "McNabb Rule" is that there must be reasonable promptness in taking prisoner before committing magistrate, or confession obtained during period between arrest and commitment is inadmissible in prosecution of party arrested, and that rule applies to voluntary as well as involuntary confessions. Muldrow v. U. S., C.A.Cal., 281 F.2d 903, 906.

McNaghten Rule. See M'Naghten Rule.

M.D. An abbreviation for "Middle District," in reference to the division of the United States into judicial districts; e.g. U.S. District Court for middle district of Ohio. Also an abbreviation for "Doctor of Medicine" or "Medical Doctor."

Meadow. A tract of low or level land producing grass which is mown for hay. A tract which lies above the shore, and is overflowed by spring and extraordinary tides only, and yields grasses which are good for hay.

Mean, or mesne. A middle between two extremes, whether applied to persons, things, or time. Average, having an intermediate value between two extremes or between the several successive values of variable quantity during one cycle of variation. Western & Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Huwe, C.C.A. Ohio, 116 F.2d 1008, 1009.

Meander /miˈyəndər/. To meander means to follow a winding or flexuous course; and when it it said, in a description of land, "thence with the meander of the river," it must mean a meandered line—a line which follows the sinuosities of the river—or, in other words, that the river is the boundary between the points indicated.

This term is used in some jurisdictions with the meaning of surveying and mapping a stream according to its meanderings, or windings and turnings. See Meander lines.

Meander lines. Lines run in surveying particular portions of the public lands which border on navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but for the purpose of defining the sinuosities of the banks of the stream, and as the means of ascertaining the quantity of land in the fraction subject to sale, and which is to be paid for by the purchaser. In preparing the official plat from the field notes, the meander line is represented as the border line of the stream, and shows that the watercourse, and not the meander line as naturally run on the ground, is the boundary. Niles v. Cedar Point Club, 175 U.S. 300, 20 S.Ct. 124, 44 L.Ed. 171.

Mean high tide. The "mean high tide" or "ordinary high tide" is a mean of all the high tides, and the average to be used should be, if possible, the average of all the high tides over a period of 18.6 years. O'Neill v. State Highway Dept., N.J., 50 N.J. 307, 235 A.2d 1, 9.

Meaning. That which is, or is intended to be, signified or denoted by act or language; signification; sense; import. See also Construction.

Mean lower low tide. The average of lower low tides over a fixed period of time. State v. Edwards, 188 Wash. 467, 62 P.2d 1094, 1095.

Mean low tide. The average of all low tides both low and lower low over a fixed period of time. State v. Edwards, 188 Wash. 467, 62 P.2d 1094, 1095.

Mean reserve. The mean of the reserve at the beginning of the policy year, after the premium for such year is paid, and the terminal reserve at end of such policy year. Kentucky Home Life Ins. Co. v. Leisman, 268 Ky. 825, 105 S.W.2d 1046, 1047.

Means. That through which, or by the help of which, an end is attained; something tending to an object desired; intermediate agency or measure; necessary condition or co-agent; instrument. Under insurance policy, equivalent to cause. Pope v. Business Men's Assur. Co. of America, 235 Mo.App. 263, 131 S.W.2d 872, 892.

Resources; available property; money or property, as an available instrumentality for effecting a purpose, furnishing a livelihood, paying a debt, or the like.

Measure. That by which extent or dimension is ascertained, either length, breadth, thickness, capacity, or amount. The rule by which anything is adjusted or proportioned. See Land measure; Metes and bounds; Survey.

Measure of damages. The rule, or rather the system of rules, governing the adjustment or apportionment of damages as a compensation for injuries in actions at law. See Damages.

Measure of value. In the ordinary sense of the word, "measure" would mean something by comparison with which we may ascertain what is the value of anything. When we consider, further, that value itself is relative, and that two things are necessary to constitute it, independently of the third thing, which is to measure it, we may define a "measure of value" to be something by comparing with which any two other things we may infer their value in relation to one another. See Value.

Measuring money. In old English law, a duty which some persons exacted, by letters patent, for every piece of cloth made, besides alnage. Now abolished.

Mechanical equivalent. If two devices do the same work in substantially the same way, and accomplish substantially the same result, they are "mechanical equivalents." Wire Tie Machinery Co. v. Pacific Box Corporation, C.C.A.Cal., 107 F.2d 54, 56. A device which may be substituted or adopted, instead of another, by any person skilled in the particular art from his knowledge of the art, and which is competent to perform the same functions or produce the same result, without introducing an original idea or changing the general idea of means. The test of equivalent-cy is whether the substituted element operates in substantially the same way to produce substantially the same result. See also Equivalent.

Mechanical process. See Process.

Mechanic’s lien. A claim created by state statutes for the purpose of securing priority of payment of the price or value of work performed and materials furnished in erecting or repairing a building or other structure, and as such attaches to the land as well as buildings and improvements erected thereon. In re Louisville Daily News & Enquirer, D.C.Ky., 20 F.Supp. 465, 466. Such lien covers materialmen, tradesmen, suppliers, and the like, who furnish services, labor, or materials on construction or improvement of property. See also Commence (Commencement of building improvement); Lien waiver.

Mechanic’s lienor. The term “mechanic’s lienor” means any person who under local law has a lien on real property (or on the proceeds of a contract relating to real property) for services, labor, or materials furnished in connection with the construction or improvement of such property. I.R.C. § 6323(h).

Meddle /mêdfyl/. In old English law, a bribe or reward; a compensation given in exchange, where the things exchanged were not of equal value.

Media annata /mêdiyâ anâta/mîdîyâ anêyda/. In Spanish law, half-yearly profits of land.

Media concluendã /mêdiyâ kôngkuândéyâ/. The steps of an argument. Thus “a judgment is conclusive as to all the media concluendã.” Faunterley v. Lum, 210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641, 52 L.Ed. 1039. The theory or basis of facts upon which a legal conclusion is reached, per Holmes, C. J., in Hoseason v. Keegen, 178 Mass. 247, 59 N.E. 627. Grounds for asserting the right known when the suit was brought. Mendez v. Baetjer, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 106 F.2d 163, 166.

Medie et infirme manus homines /mêdiyîy éd infîrmy mênas hômânylz/. Men of a middle and base condition.

Media noct. /mêdiyâ nôkts/. In old English law, midnight. Ad medium noctem, at midnight.

Medianus homo /mîdîyêynas hômwnow/. A man of middle fortune.

Mediate datum /mêdiyêydiy dêydam/. A fact from whose existence may be rationally inferred the existence of ultimate facts. The Evergreens v. Nunan, C.C.A.N.Y., 141 F.2d 927, 928.

Mediate descent. See Descent.

Mediate powers. Those incident to primary powers given by a principal to his agent. For example, the general authority given to collect, receive, and pay debts by or to the principal is a primary power. In order to accomplish this, it is frequently required to settle accounts, adjust disputed claims, resist those which are unjust, and answer and defend suits. These subordinate powers are sometimes called “mediate powers.”

Mediate testimony. Secondary evidence (q.v.).

Mediation. Intervention; interposition; the act of a third person in intermediating between two contending parties with a view to persuading them to adjust or settle their dispute. Settlement of disputes by action of intermediary (neutral party). See also Arbitration; Conciliation.

Also, the friendly interference of a neutral nation in the controversies of others, for the purpose, by its influence and by adjusting their difficulties, of keeping the peace in the family of nations.

Mediation and Conciliation Service. An independent department of the federal government charged with trying to settle labor disputes by conciliation and mediation. 29 U.S.C.A. § 172 et seq.

The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service represents the public interest by promoting the development of sound and stable labor-management relationships; preventing or minimizing work stoppages by assisting labor and management to settle their disputes through mediation; advocating collective bargaining, mediation, and voluntary arbitration as the preferred processes for settling issues between employers and representatives of employees; developing the art, science, and practice of dispute resolution; and fostering constructive joint relationships of labor and management leaders to increase their mutual understanding and solution of common problems. See also National Mediation Board.

Mediator. One who interposes between parties at variance for purpose of reconciling them.

Mediators of questions. In old English law, six persons authorized by statute (27 Edw. III, St. 2, c. 24), who, upon any question arising among merchants relating to unmerchantable wool, or undue packing, etc., might, before the mayor and officers of the staple upon their oath certify and settle the same; to whose determination therein the parties concerned were to submit.

Medical. A form of public assistance sponsored jointly by the federal and state governments providing medical aid for people whose income falls below a certain level. See also Medicare.

Medical. Pertaining, relating or belonging to the study and practice of medicine, or the science and art of the investigation, prevention, cure, and alleviation of disease.

Medical care. The term “medical care” is defined broadly in the Internal Revenue Code (I.R.C. § 213) and more comprehensively in the regulations. It includes expenses for doctors, nurses and other medical services, as well as payments for operations, hospitals, institutional care and transportation necessary to obtain medical care. The basic test for the allowance of medical deductions is whether the expense was incurred and paid primarily for the prevention or alleviation of a physical or mental defect or illness. Edward A. Harvey, 12 T.C. 409 (1949). See also Medical expenses.

Medical deduction. See Medical care.

Medical evidence. Evidence furnished by doctors, nurses, and other medical personnel testifying in their professional capacity as experts, or by standard trea-

Medical examiner. Public officer charged with responsibility of investigating all sudden, unexplained, unnatural or suspicious deaths reported to him, including the performance of autopsies and assisting the state in criminal homicide cases. Term may also include a physician who conducts examinations for insurance companies and other institutions. The medical examiner has replaced the coroner in many states. See also Coroner.

Medical expenses. Medical expenses of an individual and his dependents are allowed as an itemized deduction to the extent that such amounts (less insurance reimbursements) exceed 3 percent of adjusted gross income. Special rules are provided for medicines and drugs and health insurance premiums. I.R.C. § 213.

Medical jurisprudence. The science which applies the principles and practice of the different branches of medicine to the elucidation of doubtful questions in a court of justice. Otherwise called "forensic medicine" (q.v.). A sort of mixed science, which may be considered as common ground to the practitioners both of law and medicine.

Medical malpractice. See Malpractice.

Medicare. Federal Act to provide hospital and medical insurance for aged under Social Security Act. See also Medicaid (state provided medical assistance).

Medicine. The science and art dealing with the prevention, cure and alleviation of diseases; in a narrower sense that part of the science and art of restoring and preserving health which is the province of the physician as distinguished from the surgeon and obstetrician. Burke v. Kansas State Osteopathic Ass’n, C.C. A.Kan., 111 F.2d 250, 253. The term is not limited to substances supposed to possess curative or remedial properties. People v. Kabana, 321 Ill.App. 158, 52 N.E.2d 320.

Forensic medicine. Another name for medical jurisprudence. See Forensic medicine.

Schools of medicine. See Osteopathy; Psychotherapy.

Medico-legal. Relating to the law concerning medical questions. See Forensic medicine.

Medietas lingue /mēdiēta līngwē/. In old practice, moiety of tongue; half-tongue. Applied to a jury impaneled in a cause consisting the one half of natives, and the other half of foreigners. See De medietate lingue.

Medio acqueolando /mēdiyōw akwēōlāndōw/. A judicial writ to disarray for the acquitting of a mesne lord from a rent, which he had acknowledged in court not to belong to him.

Mediterranean passport. A pass issued by the admiralty of Great Britain under various treaties with the Barbary States in the eighteenth century. They were granted to British built ships and were respected by the Barbary pirates. They were also issued by the United States.

Medium of exchange. Anything which serves to facilitate the exchange of things by providing a common basis of measurement such as money, checks, drafts, etc. See Legal tender.

Medium tempus /mēdiētam tēmpōs/. In old English law, meantime; mesne profits.

Medietum /mēdiētum/. In old English law, a mixing together; a medley or mêlée; an affray or sudden encounter. An offense suddenly committed in an affray. The English word "medley" is preserved in the term "chance-medley." An intermeddling, without violence, in any matter of business.

Medley /mēdīlī/. An affray; a sudden or casual fighting; a hand to hand battle; a mêlée. See Chance-medley; Chaud-medley.

Medscbeit /mēdschēyit/. In old English law, a bribe; hush money.

Meeting. A coming together of persons; an assembly. Particularly, in law, an assembling of a number of persons for the purpose of discussing and acting upon some matter or matters in which they have a common interest; e.g. in corporate law, a meeting of the Board of Directors or of the stockholders.

Called meeting. In the law of corporations, a meeting not held at a time specially appointed for it by the charter or by-laws, but assembled in pursuance of a "call" or summons proceeding from some officer, committee or group of stockholders, or other persons having authority in that behalf.

Family meeting. See Family.

General meeting. A meeting of all the stockholders of a corporation, all the creditors of a bankrupt, etc.

Regular meeting. In the law of public and private corporations, a meeting (of directors, trustees, stockholders, etc.) held at the time and place appointed for it by statute, by-law, charter or other positive direction.

Special meeting. In the law of corporations, a meeting called for special purposes: one limited to particular business; a meeting for those purposes of which the parties have had special notice.

Stated meeting. A meeting held at a stated or duly appointed time and place; a regular meeting (q.v.).

Town meeting. See Town.

Meeting of creditors. Under federal bankruptcy law, at the first meeting of creditors the bankrupt is examined, claims may be allowed or disallowed and a trustee appointed. There may also be interim meetings of creditors to consider the affairs of the bankrupt and a final meeting when the affairs are to be closed. 11 U.S.C.A. § 341.

Meeting of minds. Mutual agreement and assent of parties to contract to substance and terms. The "meeting of the minds" required to make a contract is not based on secret purpose or intention on the part of one of the parties, stored away in his mind and not brought to the attention of the other party, but must be based on purpose and intention which has been made known or which from all the circumstances should be known. McClintock v. Skelly Oil Co., 232 Mo.App. 1204, 114 S.W.2d 181, 189.
Megalomania /mégalóma'niya/. See Insanity.

Megalopolis. Heavily populated continuous urban area including many cities.

Megbote /még'bót/. In Saxon law, a recompense for the murder of a relation.

Meigne, or maisnader /mýn'/. In old English law, a family.

Melnder age /mýndar éýj/ *ázh/. L. Fr. Minority; lesser age.

Meiny, melne, or melnie /mýyn(y)'/. In old English law, a household; staff or suite of attendants; a retinue; particularly, the royal household.

Melancholia /mél Ling'kóliya/. A kind of mental un-soundness characterized by extreme depression of spirits, ill-grounded fears, delusions, and brooding over one particular subject or train of ideas. Depressed phase of manic-depressive psychosis, the intensity and duration of which is out of proportion to any apparent precipitating factors. See Insanity.

Meldfeoh /mýdféa/. In Saxon law, the recompense due and given to him who made discovery of any breach of penal laws committed by another person, called the "promoter's [i.e., informer's] fee."

Mellor /mýl(i)yar/. Lat. Better; the better. Mellior res, the better (best) thing or chattel.

Mellorations /mýl(i)yar'éshon(d)x/. In Scottish law, improvements of an estate, other than mere repairs; betterments. Occasionally used in English and American law in the sense of valuable and lasting improvements or betterments.

Mellorem conditionem ecclesiae sue facere potest prelatus, deterrorem nequauquam /mýl(i)yyóram kandishiyównam s'(y)ý'ý twoñ fásarly pówdst måynar, datiriyóram nakweýk'wam/. A bishop may make the condition of his own church better, but by no means worse.

Mellorem conditionem suam facere potest minor, deter- lorem nequauquam /mýl(i)yyóram kandishiyównam s'(y)ý'ý twoñ fásarly pówdst måynar, datiriyóram nakweýk'wam/. A minor may make his own condition better, but by no means worse.

Mellor est causa possidentis /mýl(i)yyar ést kóza pósadéntas/. The cause of the possessor is preferable.

Mellor est condito defendentis /mýl(i)yyar ést kandishiyow daféndéntas/. The condition in the party in possession is the better one, i.e., where the right of the parties is equal.

Mellor est condito possidentis, et rei quam actoris mýl(i)yyar ést kandishiyow pósadéntas ét riyay kwa'm ektórás/. The condition of the possessor is the better, and the condition of the defendant is better than that of the plaintiff.

Mellor est condito possidentis ubi neuter jus habet /mýl(i)yyar ést kandishiyow pósadéntas yúwbay n(y)ý'ý'ý wár jás hý'bát/. The condition of the possessor is the better where neither of the two has a right.

Mellor est justitia vere præveniens quam severe puniens /mýl(i)yyar ést ét jástishiy(ya) viry právlyn(y)ym(d)z kwa'm savirý pyúwniyá(y)dm(d)z/. That justice which absolutely prevents [a crime] is better than that which severely punishes it.

Mellius est in tempore occurrere, quam post causam vulneratum remedium querere /mýl(i)yyas ét in tém porý pyúzhraríy, kwa'm póst kóza mávnáryédm ramýl(i)yyam kwa'mírýy/. It is better to meet a thing in time than after an injury inflicted to seek a remedy.

Mellius est jus deficiens quam jus incertum /mýl(i)yyas ét jás dáfishiyan(d)z kwa'm jás ansárda'm/. Law that is deficient is better than law that is uncertain.

Mellius est omnia mala pati quam malo consentire /mýl(i)yyas ét ómý'ý málo péday kwa'm málov konsentáryiy/. It is better to suffer every ill than to consent to ill.

Mellius est petere fontes quam secundi rivulos /mýl(i)yyas ét pédayri féntiý z kwa'm séktéry révlóla's/. It is better to go to the fountain head than to follow little streamlets.

Mellius est recurrire quam malo currere /mýl(i)yyas ét kákháráríy kwa'm málov kákháráríy/. It is better to run back than to run badly; it is better to retrace one's steps than to proceed improperly.

Mellius inquirendum /mýl(i)yyas inkwárend'm/. To be better inquired into.

In old English law, the name of a writ commanding a further inquiry respecting a matter; as, after an imperfect inquisition in proceedings in outlawry, to have a new inquest as to the value of lands.

Member. One of the persons constituting a family, partnership, association, corporation, guild, court, legislature, or the like.

A part or organ of the body; especially a limb or other separate part. California Casualty Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Accident Commission, Cal. App., 82 P.2d 1115, 1116.

Member bank. A bank which has become affiliated with (i.e. purchased stock in) one of the Federal Reserve banks. See Federal Reserve System.

Member firm. In securities and commodities trading, a brokerage firm that is a member of a particular exchange (e.g. member of New York Stock Exchange).

Member of Congress. A member of the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States. In popular usage, particularly the latter.

Member of Parliament. One having the right to sit in either house of the British parliament.

Membrana /membrá'ya/. Lat. In old Civil and English law, a skin of parchment. The ancient rolls usually consist of several of these skins, and the word "membrana" is used, in citations to them, in the same way as "page" or "folio," to distinguish the particular skin referred to.
Membrum /mémbrum/. A slip or small piece of land.

Mémoire /mémwɔʁ/mémwɔːr/. In French law, a document in the form of a petition, by which appeals to the court of cassation are initiated.

Memorandum /məˈmərəndəm/. Lat. To be remembered; be it remembered. A formal word with which the body of a record in the Court of King’s Bench antecedently commenced.

An informal note or instrument embodying something that the parties desire to fix in memory by the aid of written evidence, or that is to serve as the basis of a future formal contract or deed. A brief written statement outlining the terms of an agreement or transaction. Informal interoffice communication.

Under portion of statute of frauds providing that a contract not to be performed within a year is invalid unless to be in writing, one memorandum of the contract, in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or his agent, the word “memorandum” implies something less than a complete contract, and the “memorandum” functions only as evidence of the contract and need not contain every term, so that a letter may be a sufficient “memorandum” to take a case out of the statute of frauds. Kerner v. Hughes Tool Co., 128 Cal.Rptr. 839, 845, 56 C.A.3d 924.

This word is used in the statute of frauds as the designation of the written agreement, or note or evidence thereof, which must exist in order to bind the parties in the cases provided. The memorandum must be such as to disclose the parties, the nature and substance of the contract, the consideration and promise, and be signed by the party to be bound or his authorized agent. See U.C.C. § 2–201. See also Contract.

Memorandum articles. In the law of marine insurance, this phrase designates the articles of merchandise which are usually mentioned in the memorandum clause (q.v.), and for which the underwriter’s liability is thereby limited.

Memorandum check. See Check.

Memorandum clause. In a policy of marine insurance the memorandum clause is a clause inserted to prevent the underwriters from being liable for injury to goods of a peculiarly perishable nature, and for minor damages. It might begin, for example, as follows: “N. B. Corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed are warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded,”—meaning that the underwriters are not to be liable for damage to these articles caused by seawater or the like.

Memorandum decision. A court’s decision that gives the ruling (what it decides and orders done), but no opinion (reasons for the decision). Memorandum decision is not judgment nor decision of court but merely announcement of court’s intended decision and is not appealable order. In re Pieper’s Estate, 224 C.A.2d 670, 37 Cal.Rptr. 46, 50.

Memorandum in error. A document alleging error in fact, accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact.

Memorandum of alteration. Formerly, in England, where a patent was granted for two inventions, one of which was not new or not useful, the whole patent was bad, and the same rule applied when a material part of a patent for a single invention had either of those defects. To remedy this the statute 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 83, empowers a patentee (with the fiat of the attorney general) to enter a disclaimer (q.v.) or a memorandum of an alteration in the title or specification of the patent, not being of such a nature as to extend the exclusive right granted by the patent, and thereupon the memorandum is deemed to be part of the letters patent or the specification.

Memorandum of association. In England, a document to be subscribed by seven or more persons associated for a lawful purpose, by subscribing which, and otherwise complying with the requisitions of the companies’ acts in respect of registration, they may form themselves into an incorporated company, with or without limited liability. See also Articles of association; Articles of incorporation.

Memorandum sale. See Sale.

Memorial. A document presented to a legislative body, or to the executive, by one or more individuals, containing a petition or a representation of facts.

In practice, a short note, abstract, memorandum, or rough draft of the orders of the court, from which the records thereof may at any time be fully made up.

In English law, that which contains the particulars of a deed, etc., and is the instrument registered, as in the case of an annuity which must be registered.

Memoriter /məˈmərɪtər/. Lat. From memory; by or from recollection. Thus, memoriter proof of a written instrument is such as is furnished by the recollection of a witness who had seen and known it.

Memory. The word as used in Blackstone and other ancient authorities, appeared to be synonymous with “mind”, whereas the word “memory” in modern times is used in a more restricted sense of recollection of past events rather than the general state of one’s mental power.

Mental capacity; the mental power to review and recognize the successive states of consciousness in their consecutive order.

This word, as used in jurisprudence to denote one of the psychological elements necessary in the making of a valid will or contract or the commission of a crime, implies the mental power to conduct a consecutive train of thought, or an orderly planning of affairs, by recalling correctly the past states of the mind and past events, and arranging them in their due order of sequence and in their logical relations with the events and mental states of the present. See also Mind and memory.

The phrase “sound and disposing mind and memory” means not merely distinct recollection of the items of one’s property and the persons among whom it may be given, but entire power of mind to dispose of property by will. See Capacity.

The reputation and name, good or bad, which a man leaves at his death.

Legal memory. An ancient usage, custom, supposed grant (as a foundation for prescription) and the like, are said to be immemorial when they are really or fictitiously of such an ancient date that “the memory of man runneth not to the contrary,” or, in other words, “beyond legal memory.” And legal memory or “time out of mind,” according to the rule of the common law, commenced from the reign of Richard I,
A.D. 1189. But under the statute of limitation of 32
Hen. VIII this was reduced to 60 years, and again by that of 2 & 3 Wm. IV, c. 71, to 20 years. In the American states, by statute, the time of legal memory is generally fixed at a period corresponding to that prescribed for actions for the recovery of real property, usually about 20 years.

Menace. A threat; the declaration or show of a disposition or determination to inflict an evil or injury upon another.

Men of straw. Men who used in former days to play about courts of law, so called from their manner of making known their occupation (i.e., by a straw in one of their shoes), recognized by the name of “straw-shoes.” An advocate or lawyer who wanted a convenient witness knew by these signs where to meet with one, and the colloquy between the parties was brief. “Don’t you remember?” said the advocat; to which the ready answer was, “To be sure I do.” “Then come into court and swear it.” And straw-shoes went into court and swore. Athens abounded in straw-shoes. See also Straw man.

Mens /mén(d)z/. Lat. Mind; intention; meaning; understanding; will.

Mensa et thoros /mén(t)sös ét ðórow/. From bed and board. See Divorce.

Mensalia /mén(t)séyl(i)yas/. Parsonages or spiritual livings united to the tables of religious houses, and called “mensal benefices” amongst the canonists.

Mensis /men(t)sös/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a month. Mensis velitus, the prohibited month; fence-month (q.v.).

Mens legis /mén(d)z liyjas/. The mind of the law; that is, the purpose, spirit, or intention of a law or the law generally.

Mens legislatoris /mén(d)z léjaslatóras/. The intention of the law-maker.

Mensor /mén(t)sórv/. In civil law, a measurer of land;
a surveyor.

Mensa rea /mén(d)z ríyav/. A guilty mind; a guilty or wrongful purpose; a criminal intent. Guilty knowldge and willfulness. United States v. Greenbaum, C.C.A.N.J., 138 F.2d 437, 438. See also Knowledge.

Mens testatoris in testamentis spectanda est /mén(d)z téstatóras in téstméntas spektánda èst/. The intention of the testator is to be regarded in wills.

Mensularius /mén(t)séléryas/. In civil law, a moneychanger or dealer in money.

Mensura /mens(y)úra/. In old English law, a measure.

Mensura domini regis /mens(y)úra dómánay ríyjas/.
“The measure of our lord the king,” being the weights and measures established under King Richard I, in his parliament at Westminster, 1197.

Mental. Relating to or existing in the mind; intellectual, emotional, or psychic, as distinguished from bodily or physical.

Mental alienation. A phrase sometimes used to describe insanity (q.v.).

Mental anguish. When connected with a physical injury, this term includes both the resultant mental sensation of pain and also the accompanying feelings of distress, fright, and anxiety. In other connections, and as a ground for divorce or for damages or an element of damages, it includes the mental suffering resulting from the excitation of the more poignant and painful emotions, such as grief, severe disappoi-tment, indignation, wounded pride, shame, public humiliation, despair, etc. See also Mental cruelty.

Mental capacity or competence. Term contemplates the ability to understand the nature and effect of the act in which a person is engaged and the business he or she is transacting. Jones v. Traders & General Ins.
Co., Tex.Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 688, 694. Such a measure of intelligence, understanding, memory, and judgment relative to the particular transaction (e.g. making of will) as will enable the person to understand the nature of his act. Conley v. Naior, 118 U.S. 127, 6 S.Ct. 1001, 30 L.Ed. 112. See also Capacity; Insanity.

Mental cruelty. A course of conduct on the part of one spouse toward the other spouse which can endanger the mental and physical health and efficiency of the other spouse to such an extent as to render continuance of the marital relation intolerable. Such conduct is normally a ground for divorce. Steele v.
Steele, Fla.App., 177 So.2d 873. See also Indignity; Mental anguish.

Mental disease or defect. See Insanity.

Mental incapacity; mental incompetency. Such is esblished when there is found to exist an essential privation of reasoning faculties, or when a person is incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life. See Incapacity; Insanity.

Mental reservation. A silent exception to the general words of a promise or agreement not expressed, on account of a general understanding on the subject.
But the word has been applied to an exception existing in the mind of the one party only, and has been degraded to signify a dishonest excuse for evading or infringing a promise.

Mental state. Capacity or condition of one’s mind in terms of ability to do or not do a certain act. See Mental capacity.

Mental suffering. See Mental anguish; Mental cruelty.

Mente captus /ménti képtas/. Persons who are habitually insane. Clanton v. Shattuck, 211 La. 750, 30
So.2d 823, 824.

Mentiri /méntáray/. Lat. To lie; to assert a falsehood.

Mention /méntishan/. The act of lying; a falsehood.

Mera noctis /míra nóktas/. Midnight.
Mercable /mærksbæl/. Merchantable; to be sold or bought.

Mercant /mærkənt/ or /mɜːrkənt/. A foreign trader.

Mercantile /mærkəntəl/ or /mɑːrkəntəl/. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of, merchants, or the business of merchants; having to do with trade or commerce or the business of buying and selling merchandise; trading; commercial; conducted or acting on business principles.

Mercantile agencies. See Credit bureau.

Mercantile law. An expression substantially equivalent to commercial law. It designates the system of rules, customs, and usages generally recognized and adopted by merchants and traders, and which, either in its simplicity or as modified by common law or statutes, constitutes the law for the regulation of their transactions and the solution of their controversies. The Uniform Commercial Code is the general body of law governing commercial or mercantile transactions.

Mercantile Law Amendment Acts. The statutes 19 & 20 Vict., cc. 60, 97; passed mainly for the purpose of assimilating the mercantile law of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

Mercantile paper. See Commercial paper; Negotiable instruments.

Mercative /mɑrkətiv/. Belonging to trade.

Mercature /mɑrkətʃər/. The practice of buying and selling.

Mercedary /mərsədər/. A hirer; one that hires.

Mercenarius /mɑrəsnəriəs/. A hirerling or servant.

Mercen-iage /mɑrəsnəj/. The law of the Mercians. One of the three principal systems of laws which prevailed in England about the beginning of the eleventh century. It was observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales. 1 Bl.Comm. 65.

Merces /mɑrəstə /. Lat. In the civil law, reward of labor in money or other things. As distinguished from "pensio," it means the rent of farms (praedii rustici).

Merchandise. All goods which merchants usually buy and sell, whether at wholesale or retail; wares and commodities such as are ordinarily the objects of trade and commerce. But the term is generally not understood as including real estate, and is rarely applied to provisions such as are purchased day by day for immediate consumption (e.g. food). Stock of merchandise. See Stock.

Merchandise broker. One who negotiates the sale of merchandise without having it in his possession or control, being simply an agent with very limited powers. Hughes v. Young, 17 Tenn.App. 24, 65 S.W.2d 858. See Broker.

Merchandise Marks Act, 1882. The statute 25 & 26 Vict., c. 88, designed to prevent the fraudulent marking of merchandise and the fraudulent sale of merchandise falsely marked.

Merchant. One who is engaged in the purchase and sale of goods; a trafficker; a retailer; a trader. Term commonly refers to person who purchases goods at wholesale for resale at retail; i.e. person who operates a retail business (retailer).

A person who deals in goods of the kind or otherwise by his occupation holds himself out as having knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction or to whom such knowledge or skill may be attributed by his employment of an agent or broker or other intermediary who by his occupation holds himself out as having such knowledge or skill. U.C.C. § 2–104(1).

A man who traffics or carries on trade with foreign countries, or who exports and imports goods and sells them by wholesale. Merchants of this description are commonly known by the name of "shipping merchants."

Commission merchant. See Commission merchant.

Law merchant. See Commercial law; Mercantile law.

Statute merchant. See Statute.

Merchantability /mɑrʃəntəbələti/. Means that the article sold shall be of the general kind described and reasonably fit for the general purpose for which it shall have been sold, and where the article sold is ordinarily used in but one way, its fitness for use in that particular way is impliedly warranted unless there is evidence to the contrary. See also Fitness for particular purpose; Merchantable; Warranty.

Merchantable /mɑrʃəntəbəl/. Goods to be merchantable must be at least such as: pass without objection in the trade under the contract description; and in the case of fungible goods, are of fair average quality within the description; and are fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used; and run, within the variations permitted by the agreement, of even kind, quality and quantity within each unit and among all units involved; and are adequately contained, packaged, and labeled as the agreement may require; and conform to the promises or affirmations of fact made on the container or label if any. U.C.C. § 2–314(2).

Goods, to be "merchantable," must be fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are to be used. Consolidated Supply Co. v. Babbit, 96 Idaho 636, 534 P.2d 466, 468. Within § 2–314 of the U.C.C. creating implied warranty of merchantability, term "merchantable" implies that the goods sold conform to ordinary standards of care and that they are of average grade, quality and value of similar goods sold under similar circumstances. Woodruff v. Clark County Farm Bureau Co-op Ass'n, 153 Ind.App. 31, 286 N.E.2d 188, 194.

Merchantable title. A good and marketable title in fee simple, free from litigation, palpatable defects, and grave doubts, a title which will enable the owner not only to hold it in peace but to sell it to a person of reasonable prudence. Overboe v. Overboe, N.D., 160 N.W.2d 650, 654. Good record title acceptable to a knowledgeable buyer not being under duress to purchase. One that can be held without reasonable apprehension of being assailed and readily transferable in market. Crow Creek Gravel & Sand Co. v. Dooley, 182 Ark. 1009, 33 S.W.2d 369, 370. See also Marketable title; Warranty (Warranty of title).

Merchant appraiser. See Appraiser.

Merchantman /mærʃtəntmən/. A ship or vessel employed in foreign or domestic commerce or in the merchant service.

Merchants' accounts. Accounts between merchant and merchant, which must be current, mutual, and unsettled, consisting of debts and credits for merchandise.

Merchant seaman. A sailor employed in a private vessel, as distinguished from one employed in the navy or public ships.

Merchant Shipping Acts. Certain English statutes, beginning with the St. 16 & 17 Vict., c. 131, whereby a general superintendence of merchant shipping is vested in the board of trade. See Maritime Commission.

Merchant /mærʃtənt/. In feudal law, a fine or composition paid by inferior tenants to the lord for liberty to dispose of their daughters in marriage. The same as marcheta (q.v.).

Merciament /mərkˈɨəmənt/. An amercement, penalty, or fine (q.v.).

Mercimoniatus Anglice /ˈmærksəməˈnətəs ˈæŋɡliətəs/. In old records, the impost of England upon merchandise.

Mercis appellatio ad res mobiles tantum pertinet /mærsəs əˈpɛləˌʃið(ə)nəʊ əd rɪˈzɔ məʊˈbɛlɪəz ˈtæntəm pərdəˈnæt/. The term “merchandise” belongs to movable things only.

Mercis appellatio homines non contineri /mærsəs əˈpɛləˌʃið(ə)nəˌhiː miˈnəz ˈnɒn kəntənəˈrɛi/. Men are not included under the denomination of “merchandise.”

Mercna lagu /ˈmærkə ləˈgu/. See Lagu; Mercen-lage.

Mercy. In old English practice, the arbitration of the king or judge in punishing offenses not directly censured by law. So, “to be in mercy” signifies to be amerced or fined for bringing or defending an unjust suit, or to be liable to punishment in the discretion of the court.

In criminal law, the discretion of a judge, within the limits prescribed by law, to remit altogether the punishment to which a convicted person is liable, or to mitigate the severity of his sentence; as when a jury recommends the prisoner to the mercy of the court.

Mercy killing. Euthanasia. The affirmative act of bringing about immediate death allegedly in a painless way and generally administered by one who thinks that the dying person wishes to die because of a terminal or hopeless disease or condition. See also Brain death; Death (Natural Death Acts).

Mere /mər/. L. Fr. Mother. Àle, mere, fille, grandmother, mother, daughter. En venter sa mere, in its mother's womb.

Mere evidence rule. In search and seizure, it was once the rule that in a lawful search the officer had a right to seize instrumentalities and fruits of the crime but no right to seize other items (e.g. clothing of the suspect) which are mere evidence. This rule no longer prevails. Warden, Md. Penitentiary v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294, 87 S.Ct. 1642, 18 L.Ed.2d 782.

Mere licensee. One who enters upon the land or property of another without objection, or by the mere permission, sufferance, or acquiescence of the owner or occupier. Mann v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 232 Iowa 1049, 7 N.W.2d 45, 50. See License.

Merely. Without including anything else; purely; only; solely; absolute; wholly. In re Plymouth Motor Corporation, Cust. & Pat.App., 46 F.2d 211, 212.

Mere motion. The free and voluntary act of a party himself, done without the suggestion or influence of another person, is said to be done of his mere motion, ex mero motu (q.v.).

The phrase is used of an interference of the courts of law, who will, under some circumstances, of their own motion, object to an irregularity in the proceedings, though no objection has been taken to the irregularity by the plaintiff or defendant in the suit.

Mere right. The mere right of property in land; the jus proprietatis, without either possession or even the right of possession. The abstract right of property.

Mere-stone. In old English law, a stone for bounding or dividing lands.

Mericrètious /mèstrəˈtʃiəs/. Of the nature of unlawful sexual connection. The term is descriptive of the relation sustained by persons who contract a marriage that is void by reason of legal incapacity.

Merger. The fusion or absorption of one thing or right into another; generally spoken of a case where one of the subjects is of less dignity or importance than the other. Here the less important ceases to have an independent existence.

Corporations. The absorption of one company by another, latter retaining its own name and identity and acquiring assets, liabilities, franchises, and powers of former, and absorbed company ceasing to exist as separate business entity. Morris v. Investment Life Ins. Co., 27 Ohio St.2d 26, 272 N.E.2d 105, 108, 109, 56 O.O.2d 14. It differs from a consolidation wherein all the corporations terminate their existence and become parties to a new one.

The antitrust laws seek not only to control existing monopolies but also to discourage the acquisition of market power. Historically, mergers have provided an important route to positions of market dominance. Therefore, Congress has required all mergers, whether vertical, horizontal, or conglomerate, to be scrutinized under the provisions of section 7 of the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C.A. § 18. See also Kefauver-Celler Act.

Accounting methods. See Pooling of interests; Purchase method of accounting.
Merger

Conglomerate merger. Merger of corporations which are neither competitors nor potential or actual customers or suppliers of each other. U.S. v. General Dynamics Corp., D.C.N.Y., 258 F.Supp. 36, 56. One in which there are no economic relationships between the acquiring and the acquired firm. Kennecott Copper Corp. v. F.T.C., C.A.Colo., 467 F.2d 67, 75. A conglomerate merger is one that is neither vertical nor horizontal and can be any of three types. A geographic extension merger occurs when the acquiring firm, by merger, extends its dominance to an adjacent geographic market. See, e.g., United States v. Marine Bancorporation, 418 U.S. 602, 94 S.Ct. 2856, 41 L.Ed.2d 978. A product extension merger occurs when the merger joins firms in related product markets. See, e.g., FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co. (Clorox), 386 U.S. 568, 87 S.Ct. 1224, 18 L.Ed.2d 303. A "pure" conglomerate merger occurs when the two merging firms operate in unrelated markets having no functional economic relationship. See, e.g., United States v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., 324 F.Supp. 19. These categories are not mutually exclusive: for example, a merger may have both horizontal and vertical aspects. See, e.g., Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510.

Horizontal merger. Merger between business competitors, such as manufacturers of the same type products or distributors selling competing products in the same market area. See also Vertical merger.

Short form merger. A number of states provide special rules for the merger of a subsidiary corporation into its parent where the parent owns substantially all of the shares of the subsidiary. This is known as a "short-form" merger. Short-form mergers under such special statutes may generally be effected by: (a) adoption of a resolution of merger by the parent corporation, (b) mailing a copy of the plan of merger to all shareholders of record of the subsidiary, and (c) filing the executed articles of merger with the secretary of state and his issuance of a certificate of merger. This type of merger is less expensive and time consuming than the normal type merger.

Criminal law. When a man commits a major crime which includes a lesser offense, or commits a felony which includes a tort against a private person, the latter is merged in the former.

Divorce law. Substitution of rights and duties under judgment or decree for those under property settlement agreement. Roesbery v. Roesbery, 88 Idaho 514, 401 P.2d 805, 807.

Judgments. A valid and personal judgment merges the original claim in the judgment and thereafter interest is brought on the judgment and not on the original claim. Restatement of Judgments § 45, comment a.

Law and equity. Under Rules of Civil Procedure, there is now only one form of action, the "civil action," in which the parties may be given both legal and equitable relief. Fed.R.Civl P. 2.

Property interests. It is a general principle of law that where a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately annihilated, or, in the law phrase, is said to be merged; that is, sunk or drowned, in the greater. Thus, if there be tenant for years, and the reversion in fee-simple descends to or is purchased by him, the term of years is merged in the inheritance, and shall never exist any more. Similarly, a lesser interest in real estate mergers into a greater interest when lessee purchases leased property.

Rights. This term, as applied to rights, is equivalent to "confusio" in the Roman law, and indicates that where the qualities of debtor and creditor become united in the same individual, there arises a confusion of rights which extinguishes both qualities; whence, also, merger is often called "extinguishment."

Rights of action. In the law relating to rights of action, when a person takes or acquires a remedy or security of a higher nature, in legal estimation, than the one which he already possesses for the same right, then his remedies in respect of the minor right or security merge in those attaching to the higher one; as, for example, where a claim is merged in the judgment recovered upon it.

Sentences. If a defendant is charged in two duplicous indictments with commission of two crimes, he may be sentenced on conviction of the more serious crime but not on both indictments, e.g. possession of marihuana and possession of the same marihuana at the same time and place with intent to sell. Kuldiss v. Com., 361 Mass. 302, 280 N.E.2d 155.

Merger clause. A provision in a contract to the effect that the written terms may not be varied by prior or oral agreements because all such agreements have been merged into the written document. See U.C.C. § 2-202.

Meridians. These are imaginary north and south lines which are used in the Governmental Survey System. These intersect the base line to form a starting point for the measurement of land under that system.

Meritorious /mɛhrəˈtɔrɪ/ /jaːs/. Possessing or characterized by "merit" in the legal sense of the word. See Merits.

Meritorious cause of action. This description is sometimes applied to a person with whom the ground of action, or the consideration, originated from whom it moved. For example, where a cause of action accrues to a woman while single, and is sued for, after her marriage, by her husband and herself jointly, she is called the "meritorious cause of action."

Meritorious consideration. One founded upon some moral obligation; a valuable consideration in the second degree.

Meritorious defense. See Defense.

Merits. The word "merit" as a legal term is to be regarded as referring to the strict legal rights of the parties. Mink v. Keim, 266 App.Div. 184, 41 N.Y. S.2d 769, 771.

Merit system. System used by federal and state governments for hiring and promoting governmental employees to civil service positions on basis of competence. See also Civil service.

Military boards. A military board is a body of persons appointed to act as a fact finding agency or as an advisory body to the appointing authority. A military board may be appointed to investigate, advise, administer or adjudicate. Military boards may act as investigating committees to determine the cause of property damage, injury, or death, or to inquire into loss or misappropriation of property or funds. Boards may also act as administrative tribunals to examine the applicable facts, hear evidence, and make determination concerning personnel matters such as promotion, separation, and retirement.

Military bounty land. See Bounty.

Military commissions. Courts whose procedure and composition are modeled upon courts-martial, being the tribunals by which alleged violations of military law are tried and determined. The membership of such commissions is commonly made up of civilians and army officers. They are probably not known outside of the United States, and were first used by General Scott during the Mexican war.

Military courts. Courts convened subject to the Code of Military Justice (10 U.S.C.A. § 801 et seq.): e.g. Courts-martial, Court of Military Review, U.S. Court of Military Appeals.

Military feuds. See Feud.

Military government. Exercised by military commander under direction of President in time of foreign war without the boundaries of the United States, or in time of rebellion and civil war within states or districts occupied by rebels. Hammond v. Squier, D.C. Wash., 51 F.Supp. 227, 230. See Martial law.

Military jurisdiction. There are under the Constitution, three kinds of military jurisdiction: one to be exercised both in peace and war; another to be exercised in time of foreign war without the boundaries of the United States or in time of rebellion and civil war within states or districts occupied by rebels treated as belligerents; and a third to be exercised in time of invasion or insurrection within the limits of the United States or during rebellion within the limits of states maintaining adhesion to the National Government, when the public danger requires its exercise. The first of these may be called jurisdiction under "military law" and is found in acts of Congress prescribing rules and articles of war, or otherwise providing for the government of the national forces; the second may be distinguished as "military government" superseding, as far as may be deemed expedient the local law, and exercised by the military commander under the direction of the President, with the express or implied sanction of Congress, while the third may be denominated "martial law," and is called into action by Congress, or temporarily when the action of Congress cannot be invited, and in the face of justifying or excusing peril, by the President in times of insurrection or invasion, or of civil or foreign war, within districts or localities where ordi- nary law no longer adequately secures public safety and private rights. United States v. Minoru Yasui, D.C.Ore., 48 F.Supp. 40, 46, 47.

Military justice. See Code of Military Justice; Court Martial; Court of Military Appeals.

Military law. A system of regulations for the government of armed forces. That branch of the laws which respects military discipline and the government of persons employed in the military service. Military law is distinct from martial law, in that it applies only to persons in the military or naval service of the government; whereas, martial law, when once established, applies alike to citizens and soldiers and supersedes civil law. See Code of Military Justice.

Military offenses. Those offenses which are cognizable by the military courts, as insubordination, sleeping on guard, desertion, etc. See Code of Military Justice.

Military office. See Office.

Military officer. See Officer.

Military Review, Courts of. Each armed service has a Court of Military Review which reviews courts-martial decisions. Further appeal is to the U.S. Court of Military Appeals.

Military tenures. The various tenures by knight-service, grand-serjeancy, cornage, etc., were frequently called "military tenures," from the nature of the services which they involved.

Military testament. See Testament.

Military /ml̄/diyz/. Lat. Knights.

Military /mal̄sha/. The body of citizens in a state, enrolled for discipline as a military force, but not engaged in actual service except in emergencies, as distinguished from regular troops or a standing army.

Mill. One-tenth of one cent. Many states use a mill rate to compute property taxes.

Milled money. This term means merely coined money; and it is not necessary that it should be marked or rolled on the edges.

Miller Act. Federal statute which requires the posting of performance and payment bonds before an award may be made for a contract beyond a certain amount for construction, alteration or repair of a public building or public work of the U.S. government. 40 U.S.C.A. §§ 270a-270f.

Miller-Tydings Act. Federal Act (15 U.S.C. § 1) granting anti-trust exemption to State laws which permitted resale price maintenance agreements (fair trade laws). This exemption was repealed in 1975.

Milling in transit. A special privilege allowable at certain designated points, whereby the carrier, having transported grain to a shipper's mill, agrees that the shipper may reship the meal without charge and for which extra compensation is usually exacted by inter-state carriers under control of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mill power. An expression designating a unit of water power. It is the descriptive term used to rate water power for the purpose of renting it. It indicates the amount of power due to a stated quantity of water used on the particular fall. It is a term of practical convenience in defining the quantity and weight of water available for use by the lessee. The actual amount of horse power developed may vary with the efficiency of the water wheels and other appliances supplied by the lessee.

Mill privilege. The right of a riparian proprietor to erect a mill on his land and to use the power furnished by the stream for the purpose of operating the mill, with due regard to the rights of other owners above and below him on the stream.

Millrate. See Mill.

Mill site. A parcel of land on or contiguous to a water-course, suitable for the erection and operation of a mill operated by the power furnished by the stream. Specifically, in mining law, a parcel of land constituting a portion of the public domain, located and claimed by the owner of a mining claim under the laws of the United States (or purchased by him from the government and patented), not exceeding five acres in extent, not including any mineral land, not contiguous to the vein or lode, and occupied and used for the purpose of a mill or for other uses directly connected with the operation of the mine; or a similar parcel of land located and actually used for the purpose of a mill or reduction plant, but not by the owner of an existing mine nor in connection with any particular mining claim. See 30 U.S.C.A. § 42.

Mina /máynə/. In old English law, a measure of corn or grain.

Minage /máynaj/. A toll or duty paid for selling corn by the mina.

Minare /maneriy/. In old records, to mine or dig mines. Minator, a miner.

Minatur innocentibus qui parcit nocentibus /man'ydrəd insentsəbas kwų péxíst nasentsəbas/. He threatens the innocent who spares the guilty.
Mind. In its legal sense, "mind" means only the ability to will, to direct, to permit, or to assent.

Mind and memory. A phrase applied to testators, denoting the possession of mental capacity to make a will. In other words, one ought to be capable of making his will, with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the objects of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them. See also Capacity.

Mind, state of. Evidence is admissible to show a person's state of mind when this issue is material and relevant to the case; e.g. statements indicating despair may be admissible on issue of suicide. Fed. Evid.R. 803(3). See also Mental state.

Mine. An excavation in the earth from which ores, coal, or other mineral substances are removed by digging or other mining methods, and in its broader sense it denotes the vein, lode, or deposit of minerals. Atlas Milling Co. v. Jones, C.C.A.Okl., 115 F.2d 61, 63. It may include open cut, strip, or hydraulic methods of mining. Rudd v. Hayden, 265 Ky. 495, 97 S.W.2d 35, 37.

Mineral, adj. Relating to minerals or the process and business of mining; bearing or producing valuable minerals.

Mineral, n. Any valuable inert or lifeless substance formed or deposited in its present position through natural agencies alone, and which is found either in or upon the soil of the earth or in the rocks beneath the soil.

Any natural constituent of the crust of the earth, inorganic or fossil, homogeneous in structure, having a definite chemical composition and known crystallization. The term includes all fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence anything may be dug, such as beds of stone which may be quarried.

The word is not a definite term and is susceptible of limitations or extensions according to intention with which it is used. Standing alone it might by itself embrace the soil, hence include sand and gravel, or, under a strict definition, it might be limited to metallic substances. Puget Mill Co. v. Duecy, 1 Wash.2d 421, 96 P.2d 571, 573, 574. The term "mineral" as it is used in the public land laws is more restricted than it is when used in some other respects. Its definition has presented many difficulties. It has been held that for purposes of mining laws, a mineral is whatever is recognized as mineral by the standard authorities on the subject. United States v. Toole, D.C.Mont., 224 F.Supp. 440, 444.

Mineral deed. A realty conveyance involving a severance from fee of present title to minerals in place, either effecting such severance in first instance or conveying part of such mineral ownership previously severed from the fee. Hickey v. Dirks, 156 Kan. 326, 133 P.2d 107, 109, 110.

Mineral district. A term occasionally used in acts of congress, designating in a general way those portions or regions of the country where valuable minerals are mostly found, or where the business of mining is chiefly carried on, but carrying no very precise meaning and not a known term of the law.

Mineral land entry. See Entry.

Mineral lands. Lands containing deposits of valuable, useful, or precious minerals in such quantities as to justify expenditures in the effort to extract them, and which are more valuable for the minerals they contain than for agricultural or other uses. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 188 U.S. 526, 23 S.Ct. 365, 47 L.Ed. 575; Deffeback v. Hawke, 115 U.S. 392, 5 S.Ct. 95, 29 L.Ed. 423. Lands on which metals or minerals have been discovered in rock in place. Such lands include not merely metalliciferous lands, but all such as are chiefly valuable for their deposits of mineral character, which are useful in arts or valuable for purposes of manufacture, Dunbar Lime Co. v. Utah-Idaho Sugar Co., C.C.A.Utah, 17 F.2d 351, 354; and embrace not only those which the lexicon defines as "mineral", but, in addition, such as are valuable for deposits of marble, slate, petroleum, asphaltum, and even guano. United States v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 311 U.S. 317, 61 S.Ct. 264, 284, 85 L.Ed. 210.

Mineral lease. An agreement permitting use of land to explore, and then, if mineral is discovered, giving right to take mineral either for definite term or so long as it can be produced in paying quantities upon reserved royalty. Gordon v. Empire Gas & Fuel Co., C.C.A.Tex., 63 F.2d 487, 488. A mineral lease so characterized as a real right, is merely a contract which permits the lessee to explore for minerals on the land of the lessor in consideration of the payment of a rental and/or bonuses. Prestridge v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., La.App., 131 So.2d 810, 820. See also Mining lease.

Mineral lode. A mineral bed of rock with definite boundaries in a general mass of the mountain and also any zone or belt of mineralized rock lying within boundaries clearly separating it from the neighboring rock.

Mineral servitude. The right to exploit or develop. Frost Lumber Industries v. Republic Production Co., C.C.A.La., 112 F.2d 462, 466.

Minerat /minəðerəd/. In old records, a miner.

Miner's Inch. See Inch.

Minimal contacts. That doctrine of jurisdiction which provides that before a foreign corporation is subject to suit in a state such corporation's activity within the state must meet basic activity requirements. International Shoe Co. v. State of Wash., 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95. For nonresident to be subject to state's personal jurisdiction, he must have certain minimum contacts with state such that maintenance of suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice, and this is the “minimum contacts principle.” Lichina v. Futura, Inc., D.C.Colo., 260 F.Supp. 252, 254. See also Doing business.

Minima pena corporalis est major qualibet pecuniaria /mínima piýna körprêylas êst mêjyar kwêylabost pokûwnîlyêriya/. The smallest corporal punishment is greater than any pecuniary one.

Mini-maxi. An underwriting arrangement with a broker requiring the broker to sell the minimum on an all-or-none basis and the balance on a best-efforts basis.

Minimum. The least quantity assignable, admissible or possible in given case and is opposed to maximum. Board of Ed. of City of Rockford v. Page, 33 Ill.2d 372, 211 N.E.2d 361, 363.

Minimum contacts. See Minimal contacts.

Minime mutanda sunt que certam habuerunt interpretationem /mínamiy mywûtâwêndå sânt kwiy sûrdam hábyuwîrânt antâprâêtshiyowâm/. Things which had had a certain interpretation [whose interpretation has been settled, as by common opinion] are not to be altered.

Miniment /mínamant/. An old form of muniment (q.v.).

Minimum charge. The lowest tariff which may be charged to a customer of a public utility or common carrier regardless of the amount of service rendered.

Minimum est nihil proximum /mínamam êst náy- (h)olow prôksamam/. The smallest is next to nothing.

Minimum fee schedules. Schedules of fees which may be charged by lawyers and published generally by bar associations for guidance of the members of the local bar. The trend has been to abolish such schedules as being in violation of the anti-trust laws. Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar Ass'n, 421 U.S. 773, 95 S.Ct. 2004, 44 L.Ed.2d 572.

Minimum royalty clause. Provision in royalty agreement which prescribes a fixed obligation of the licensee regardless of whether the invention is used or not.

Minimum sentence. The least severe sentence which a judge may impose.

Minimum wage. Such an amount as will maintain a normal standard of living, including the preservation of the health and efficiency of the worker. The least wage on which an ordinary individual can be self-sustaining and obtain the ordinary requirements of life. Associated Industries of Oklahoma v. Industrial Welfare Commission, 185 Okl. 177, 90 P.2d 899, 913. Such minimum wages are set and required by federal statutes of employers engaged in businesses which affect interstate commerce. See Fair Labor Standards Act.

Mining. The process or business of extracting from the earth the precious or valuable metals, either in their native state or in their ores.

Mining claim. A parcel of land, containing precious metal in its soil or rock, and appropriated by an individual, according to established rules, by the process of “location.” St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U.S. 636, 26 L.Ed. 875. 30 U.S.C.A. § 21 et seq.

A mining claim on public lands is a possessory interest in land that is mineral in character and as respects which discovery within the limits of the claim has been made. Best v. Humboldt Placer Min. Co., 371 U.S. 334, 83 S.Ct. 379, 382, 9 L.Ed.2d 350. See also Mining location: Placer claim.

Mining district. A section of country usually designated by name and described or understood as being confined within certain natural boundaries, in which the precious metals (or their ores) are found in paying quantities, and which is worked therefor, under rules and regulations prescribed or agreed upon by the miners therein. See also Mining location.

Mining lease. A lease of a mine or mining claim or a portion thereof, to be worked by the lessee, usually under conditions as to the amount and character of work to be done, and reserving compensation to the lessor either in the form of a fixed rent or a royalty on the tonnage of ore mined, and which (as distinguished from a license) conveys to the lessee an interest or estate in the land, and (as distinguished from an ordinary lease) conveys not merely the temporary use and occupation of the land, but a portion of the land itself, that is, the ore in place and unsevered and to be extracted by the lessee. See also Mineral lease.

Mining location. The act of appropriating and claiming, according to certain established rules and local customs, a parcel of land of defined area, upon or in which one or more of the precious metals or their ores have been discovered, and which constitutes a portion of the public domain, with the declared intention to occupy and work it for mining purposes under the implied license of the United States. Also the parcel of land so occupied and appropriated. St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U.S. 636, 26 L.Ed. 875. Essential to any valid location is the discovery of a valuable mineral deposit. Upon making a valid location the locator has vested rights in the land which are property in the true sense of the word. Cole v. Ralph, 252 U.S. 286, 295, 40 S.Ct. 321, 325, 64 L.Ed. 567. Once the land is patented, the land is private property. See also Location (Mining law).

Mining partnership. An association of several owners of a mine for co-operation in working the mine. Kahn v. Central Smelting Co., 102 U.S. 645, 26 L.Ed. 266; Kimberly v. Arms, 129 U.S. 512, 9 S.Ct. 355, 32 L.Ed. 764. Generally, where the parties co-operate in developing a lease for oil and gas, each agreeing to pay his part of the expenses and to share in the profits or losses, a “mining partnership” exists. Continental Supply Co. v. Dickson Oil Co., 194 Okl. 660, 153 P.2d 1017, 1019. A special type of partnership different in many respects from ordinary or trading partnerships. Meister v. Farrow, 109 Mont. 1, 92 P.2d 753, 757, 758, 760, 761.

Mining rent. Consideration given for a mining lease, whether such lease creates a tenancy, conveys a fee, or grants an incorporeal right or a mere license.

Minister. Person acting as agent for another in performance of specified duties or orders. A person ordained according to the usages of some church or associated body of Christians for the preaching of the gospel and filling the pastoral office. In England, holder of government office; e.g. Prime Minister.

Foreign minister. An ambassador, minister, or envoy from a foreign government.

International law. An officer appointed by the government of one nation as a mediator or arbitrator between two other nations who are engaged in a controversy, with their consent, with a view to effecting an amicable adjustment of the dispute.

A general name given to the diplomatic representatives sent by one state to another, including ambassadors, envoys, and residents.

Public law. One of the highest functionaries in the organization of civil government, standing next to the sovereign or executive head, acting as his immediate auxiliary, and being generally charged with the administration of one of the great bureaus or departments of the executive branch of government. In England, otherwise called a "cabinet minister," "secretary of state," or "secretary of a department". See also Ministry.

Public minister. A general term comprehending all the higher classes of diplomatic representatives—as ambassadors, envoys, residents—but not including the commercial representatives, such as consuls.

Ministerial power. See Power.

Ministerial trust. See Trust.

Ministers plenipotentiary /mínastarz plénaspotén(t)-sháriy/*shiyéhriy/. Ministers plenipotentiary possess full powers, and are of much greater distinction than simple ministers. These are without any particular attribute of rank and character, but by custom are now placed immediately below the ambassador, or on a level with the envoy extraordinary.

Ministrant /mínístranti/. The party cross-examining a witness was so called, under the old system of the ecclesiastical courts.

Ministri regis /mínistri ríyjas/. Lat. In old English law, ministers of the king, applied to the judges of the realm, and to all those who hold ministerial offices in the government.

Ministry. The term as used in England is wider than Cabinet and includes all the holders of public office who come in and go out with the Prime Minister. In this respect it may be contrasted with the Permanent Civil Service, whose tenure is independent of public changes. The first English Ministry as now understood was formed after the general election of 1696. "Ecclesiastical functions," or "duties." Rector, etc., of St. George's Church in City of New York v. Morgan, 86 Misc. 702, 152 N.Y.S. 497, 498.

Minor. An infant or person who is under the age of legal competence. A term derived from the civil law, which described a person under a certain age as less than so many years. In most states, a person is no longer a minor after reaching the age of 18. See also Delinquent child; Infancy; Juvenile; Legal age; Majority.

Also, less; of less consideration; lower; a person of inferior condition.

Minor atas /máynar íytìs/. Lat. Minority or infancy. Literally, lesser age.

Minor ante tempus agere non potest in casu proprietas nec etiam convenire; differetur usque atatem; sed non cadit breve /máynar ántly témpas ájary nón pówdest in kéys(y)uw prpráyatyéydos nék éshyam kónvánárýıy; dífíryáðár ąskwiy átéyám; séd nón kéyzd bríyvíy/. A minor before majority cannot act in a case of property, nor even agree; it should be deferred until majority; but the writ does not fail.

Minora regalla /món ár regál(ı)yá/. In English law, the lesser prerogatives of the crown, including the rights of the revenue.

Minor deviation rule. Under "minor deviation rule" for determining when the deviation from purpose and use for which permission to drive insured vehicle is granted will preclude coverage under omnibus clause of policy, if bailee's use is not gross, substantial, or major violation, even though it may have amounted to deviation, protection is still afforded to bailee under omnibus clause. James v. Aetna Life & Cas., 1148, 26 Ariz.App. 137, 546 P.2d 1146.

Minor dispute. A "major dispute" is one which arises over the formation of collective agreements or where there is no such agreement while a "minor dispute" contemplates the existence of collective agreement, no effort is made to bring about a new agreement and the dispute arises over the meaning of the agreement or the proper application of the agreement. Piedmont Aviation, Inc. v. Air Line Pilots Ass'n, Intern., D.C.N.C., 347 F.Supp. 363, 365, 367. See also Major dispute.
MINOR DISPUTE

Minor fact. In the law of evidence, a relative, collateral, or subordinate fact; a circumstance.

Minority. The state or condition of a minor; infancy. Opposite of "majority." See Minor.
The smaller number of votes of a deliberative assembly; opposed to majority (q.v.).

Minority opinion. See Opinion.

Minority stockholder. Those stockholders of a corporation who hold so few shares in relation to the total outstanding that they are unable to control the management of the corporation or to elect directors.

Minor jurare non potest /máynár járéhíri nón póvdást/. A minor cannot make oath. An infant cannot be sworn on a jury.

Minor minorem custodire non debet, alios enim presuntur male regere qui seipsum regere nescit /máynár mánnorám kástózádáryír nón déhít, éylíyows fýmam praz(y)úvwdádár májíly réjáryí kwáý sóyípsám réjáryí nésá/. A minor ought not to be guardian to a minor, for he who knows not how to govern himself is presumed to be unfit to govern others.

Minor non tenetur respondere durante minori statum, nisi in causa dotis, propert favorém /máynár nón táñyvád réspóndárii d(y)úrýxánty mánnoráy stéydyi, náysey in dówđas, próptar favórérm/. A minor is not bound to reply during his minority, except as a matter of favor in a cause of dower.

Minor offenses. See Petty offense.

Minor qui infra estatem 12 annorum fuerit uteagari non potest, nec extra legem ponit, qua ante talem estatem, non est sub lege alliqua, nec in decenna /máynár kwáý infra stéydam d(y)úvxsdásm mánnorám fúlywárd stéydyáy nón póvdást, nék ékstra liýyam póvnáyi, kwáýs ántly téyám stéydam, nón ést sáb liýyj síikwá nék in dáséná/. A minor who is under twelve years of age cannot be outlawed, nor placed without the law, because before such age he is not under any law, nor in a decennary.

Minor septemdecim annis non admittitur fore executorem /máynár séptamádásm ánás nón admiçdád föríy agsýkástórérm/. A person under seventeen years is not admitted to be an executor. A rule of ecclesiastical law.

Minors' estates. Property of those who have not reached their legal majority and which must be administered after their death or during their lives under a court appointed fiduciary.

Mint. The place designated by law where bullion is coined into money under authority of the government.

Mintage /mintáj/. The charge or commission taken by the mint as a consideration for coinage into money the bullion which is brought to it for that purpose; the same as "seigniorage."

Also that which is coined or stamped as money; the product of the mint.

Mint-mark. The masters and workers of the English mint, in the indentures made with them, agreed "to make a privy mark in the money they make, of gold and silver, so that they may know which moneys were of their own making." After every trial of the pix, having proved their moneys to be lawful, they were entitled to their quietus under the great seal, and to be discharged from all suits or actions.

Mint-master. One who manages the coinage.

Minus /máynás/. Lat. In the civil law, less; less than. The word had also, in some connections, the sense of "not at all." For example, a debt remaining wholly unpaid was described as "minus solutum."

Minus Latium /máynás léysham/. See Jus Latium.

Minus solvit, qui tardius solvit /máynás sóvát kwáý tárdiyís sóvát/. He does not pay who pays too late.

Minute. In measures of time or circumference, a minute is the sixtieth part of an hour or degree.

Minutes. Memoranda or notes of a transaction or proceeding. Thus, the record of the proceedings at a meeting of directors or shareholders of a company is called the "minutes."

A memorandum of what takes place in court, made by authority of the court.

Minutes book. A book kept by the clerk or prothonotary of a court for entering memoranda of its proceedings. A record of all actions authorized at corporate board of directors’ or stockholders’ meeting.

Minuto /mántu(y)úwsh(y)éów/. Lat. In the civil law, a lessening; diminution or reduction.

Miranda hearing. A pre-trial proceeding to determine whether there has been compliance with the requirements of the Miranda Rule (q.v.). The outcome will decide whether the prosecution will be permitted to introduce into evidence statements of the defendant made during custodial interrogation. See Miranda Rule.

Miranda Rule /miránda rúwl/. Prior to any custodial interrogation (that is, questioning initiated by law enforcement officers after a person is taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom in any significant way) the person must be warned: 1. That he has a right to remain silent; 2. That any statement he does make may be used as evidence against him; 3. That he has a right to the presence of an attorney; 4. That if he cannot afford an attorney, one will be appointed for him prior to any questioning if he so desires.

Unless and until these warnings or a waiver of these rights are demonstrated at the trial, no evidence obtained in the interrogation may be used against the accused. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 478, 479, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 1612, 1630, 16 L.Ed.2d 694.

Mis. An inseparable particle used in composition, to mark an ill sense or depravation of the meaning; as "miscomputation" or "misacounting," i.e., false reckoning.

Misa /máyza/. In old English law, the mise or issue in a writ of right; a compact or agreement; a form of compromise.

Misadventure. A mischance or accident; a casualty caused by the act of one person inflicting injury upon another. Homicide "by misadventure" occurs where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another.

Mislage /misálé/. To cite falsely as a proof or argument.

Misapplication. Improper, illegal, wrongful, or corrupt use of application of funds, property, etc. See also Misappropriation.

Misappropriation. The act of misappropriating or turning to a wrong purpose; wrong appropriation; a term which does not necessarily mean peculation, although it may mean that. Term may also embrace the taking and use of another's property for sole purpose of capitalizing unfairly on good will and reputation of property owner. Pocket Books, Inc. v. Dell Pub. Co., 49 Misc.2d 252, 267 N.Y.S.2d 269, 272.

Misbehavior. Ill conduct; improper or unlawful behavior. So as to support contempt conviction is conduct inappropriate to particular role of actor, be he judge, juror, party, witness, counsel or spectator. U. S. v. Seale, C.A.III., 461 F.2d 345, 366.

Misbranding. False or misleading labeling. People v. Rosenbloom, 119 Cal.App. 759, 2 P.2d 228, 231. Such practices are prohibited by federal and state statutes; e.g. Fair Packaging and Labeling Act.

Miscarriage /maskáraj/miskéráj/. Poor management or administration; mismanagement.

Misdemeanor. In legislative parlance, the word is sometimes used to signify the evil or danger which a statute is intended to cure or avoid.

In the phrase "malicious mischief," (q.v.) it imports a wanton or reckless injury to persons or property.

A person is guilty of criminal mischief if he: (a) damages tangible property of another purposely, recklessly, or by negligence in the employment of fire, explosives, or other dangerous means, or (b) purposely or recklessly tampers with tangible property of another so as to endanger person or property; or (c) purposely or recklessly causes another to suffer pecuniary loss by deception or threat. Model Penal Code, § 220.3.

Misconduct. A transgression of some established and definite rule of action, a forbidden act, a dereliction from duty, unlawful behavior, willful in character, improper or wrong behavior; its synonyms are misdemeanor, misdeed, misbehavior, delinquency, impropriety, mismanagement, offense, but not negligence or carelessness. Term "misconduct" when applied to act of attorney, implies dishonest act or attempt to persuade court or jury by use of deceptive or reprehensible methods. People v. Sigal, 249 C.A.2d 299, 57 Cal.Rptr. 541, 549. Misconduct, which renders discharged employee ineligible for unemployment compensation, occurs when conduct of employee evinces willful or wanton disregard of employer's interest, as in deliberate violations, or disregard of standards of behavior which employer has right to expect of his employees, or in carelessness or negligence of such degree or recurrence as to manifest wrongful intent or evil design. Wilson v. Brown, La.App., 147 So.2d 27, 29. See also Wanton misconduct.

Misconduct in office. Any unlawful behavior by a public officer in relation to the duties of his office, willful in character. Term embraces acts which the office holder had no right to perform, acts performed improperly, and failure to act in the face of an affirmative duty to act. See also Malfeasance; Misfeasance.

Miscontinuance. In practice, an improper continuance; want of proper form in a continuance; the same with "discontinuance."

Miscreant /miskriyant/. In old English law, an apostate; an unbeliever; one who totally renounced Christianity. 4 Bl.Comm. 44.

Misdraft. A false or erroneous date affixed to a paper or document.

Misdraft. Delivery of mail, freight, goods, or the like, to person other than authorized or specified recipient. The delivery of property by a carrier or warehouseman to a person not authorized by the owner or person to whom the carrier or warehouseman is bound by his contract to deliver it.

Misdemeanant /misdaménant/. A person guilty of a misdemeanor; one sentenced to punishment upon conviction of a misdemeanor.

Misdemeanor /misdaménor/. Offenses lower than felonies and generally those punishable by fine or imprisonment otherwise than in penitentiary. Under federal law, and most state laws, any offense other than a felony is classified as a misdemeanor. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1. Certain states also have various classes of misdemeanors (e.g. Class A, B, etc.). See also Infraction; Petty offense.

Misdescription. An error or falsity in the description of the subject-matter of a contract which deceives one of the parties to his injury, or is misleading in a material or substantial point. See also Misrepresentation.

Misdirection. An error made by a judge in instructing the jury upon the trial of a cause.

Mise /ˈmáyz/ /ˈmáyz/. In common law pleading, the issue in a writ of right. When the tenant in a writ of right pleads that his title is better than the demandant’s, he is said to join the mise on the mere right.

Also expenses; costs; disbursements in an action.

Mise-money. In old English law, money paid by way of contract or composition to purchase any liberty, etc.

Miserable depositum /ˈmizərəbli dəˈpɔːzdəm/. Lat. In the civil law, the name of an involuntary deposit, made under pressing necessity; as, for instance, shipwreck, fire, or other inevitable calamity.

Misera est servitus, ubi jus est vagum aut incertum /ˈmizərə ēst sərvətəs jūs ēst vəˈgəm ət ənˈsərdəm/. It is a wretched state of slavery where subsists where the law is vague or uncertain.

Misere re /ˈmizərIrɪ/ /ˈmizərIrɪ/. The name and first word of one of the penitential psalms, being that which was commonly used to be given by the ordinary to such condemned malefactors as were allowed the mercy; whence it is also called the "psalm of mercy."

Misericordia /ˈmizərəkɔrdɪə/ /ˈmizərəkɔrdɪə/. Lat. Mercy; a fine or amerciament; an arbitrary or discretionary amerciament.

Misericordia communis /ˈmizərəkɔrdɪə kəmənɪəns/ /ˈmizərəkɔrdɪə kəmənɪəns/. In old English law, a fine set on a whole county or hundred.

Misfeasance /ˈmɪsfɪziənt/ /ˈmɪsfɪziənt/. The improper performance of some act which a man may lawfully do. "Nonfeasance" means the omission of an act which a person ought to do; "misfeasance" is the improper doing of an act which a person might lawfully do; and "malfeasance" is the doing of an act which a person ought not to do at all.

Misfeasance. See Misfeasance.

Misfortune. An adverse event, calamity, or evil fortune, arising by accident (or without the will or concurrence of him who suffers from it), and not to be foreseen or guarded against by care or prudence. In its application to the law of homicide, this term always involves the further idea that the person causing the death is not at the time engaged in any unlawful act. See also Accident.

Misjoinder. See Joinder.

Miskennning /ˈmiskənɪŋ/. In Saxon and old English law, an unjust or irregular summoning to court; to speak unsteadily in court; to vary in one’s plea.

Mislaid property. See Property.

Mislay. To deposit in a place not afterwards recollected; to lose anything by forgetfulness of the place where it was laid.

Misleading. Delusive; calculated to lead astray or to lead into error. A Judge's instructions which are of such a nature as to be misunderstood by the jury, or to give them a wrong impression, are said to be "misleading." See also Misrepresentation.

Msimner. Mistake in name; giving incorrect name to person in accusation, indictment, pleading, deed or other instrument. Under rules practice in some states, such is ground for dismissal by motion. In most states, however, as well as in the federal courts, such misnomer can be corrected by amendment of the pleadings.

When a misnomer occurs in a deed, the normal procedure is to prepare and record a correction deed. Commonly, a quit claim deed is used for this purpose.

Mispleading. Pleading incorrectly, or omitting anything in pleading which is essential to the support or defense of an action, is so called; as in the case of a plaintiff not merely stating his title in a defective manner, but setting forth a title which is essentially defective in itself; or if, to an action of debt, the defendant pleads "not guilty" instead of nil debet. Rules of Civil Procedure (in effect in the federal and many state courts) permit liberal amendment of incorrect or deficient pleadings. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 15.

Mispri son. A word used to describe an offense which does not possess a specific name. United States v. Perlstein, C.C.A.N.J., 126 F.2d 789, 798. But more particularly and properly the term denotes either: (1) a contempt against the sovereign, the government, or the courts of justice, including not only contempt of court, properly so called, but also all forms of seditious or disloyal conduct and lese-majesty; (2) maladministration of public office; neglect or improper performance of official duty, including peculation of public funds; (3) neglect of light account made of a crime, that is, failure in the duty of a citizen to endeavor to prevent the commission of a crime, or, having knowledge of its commission, to fail to reveal it to the proper authorities.

Concealment of crime. See Mispri son of felony.

Negative misprison. The concealment of something which ought to be revealed; that is, misprison in the third of the specific meanings given above.

Positive misprison. The commission of something which ought not to be done; that is, misprison in the first and second of the specific meanings given above.

Mispri son of felony. The offense of concealing a felony committed by another, but without such previous concert with or subsequent assistance to the felon as would make the party concealing an accessory before or after the fact. United States v. Perlstein, C.C.A. N.J., 126 F.2d 789, 798.

Whoever, having knowledge of the actual commission of a felony cognizable by a court of the United States, conceals and does not as soon as possible make known the same to some judge or other person in civil or military authority under the United States, Misprision of treason. The bare knowledge and concealment of an act of treason or treasonable plot by failing to disclose it to the appropriate officials; that is, without any assent or participation therein, for if the latter elements be present the party becomes a principal. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2382.

Misreading. Reading a deed or other instrument to an illiterate or blind man (who is a party to it) in a false or deceitful manner, so that he conceives a wrong idea of its tenor or contents.

Misrectal /mísráyadal/. The erroneous or incorrect recital of a matter of fact, either in an agreement, deed, or pleading.

Misrepresentation. Any manifestation by words or other conduct by one person to another that, under the circumstances, amounts to an assertion not in accordance with the facts. An untrue statement of fact. An incorrect or false representation. That which, if accepted, leads the mind to an apprehension of a condition other and different from that which exists. Colloquially it is understood to mean a statement made to deceive or mislead.

In a limited sense, an intentional false statement respecting a matter of fact, made by one of the parties to a contract, which is material to the contract and influential in producing it. A “misrepresentation,” which justifies the rescission of a contract, is a false statement of a substantive fact, or any conduct which leads to a belief of a substantive fact material to proper understanding of the matter in hand, made with intent to deceive or mislead.

See also Decit; Fraud; Material fact; Reliance.

Insurance law. A statement of something as a fact which is untrue and material to the risk, and which assured states knowing it to be untrue and with intent to deceive, or which insured states positively as true, not knowing it to be true, and which has a tendency to mislead. One that would influence a prudent insurer in determining whether or not to accept the risk, or in fixing the amount of the premium in the event of such acceptance. See also Material fact.

Missilia /másáy(í)yá/. In Roman law, gifts or liberalties, which the prætors and consuls were in the habit of throwing among the people.

Missing ship. In maritime law, a vessel is so called when, computed from her known day of sailing, the time that has elapsed exceeds the average duration of similar voyages at the same season of the year.

Missions. In church parlance, the establishment of churches and schools and relief depots through which are taught the principles of Christianity, the afflicted cared for, and the needy supplied.

Missura /mís(y)úra/. The ceremonies used in a Roman Catholic church to recommend and dismiss a dying person.

Mistake. Some unintentional act, omission, or error arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence. A mistake exists when a person, under some erroneous conviction of law or fact, does, or omits to do, some act which, but for the erroneous conviction, he would not have done or omitted. It may arise either from unconsciousness, ignorance, forgetfulness, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Salazar v. Steelman, 22 Cal.App.2d 402, 71 P.2d 79, 82. See also Error; Ignorance.

Mistake of fact is a mistake not caused by the neglect of a legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake, and consisting in (1) an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact, past or present, material to the contract; or (2) belief in the present existence of a thing material to the contract which does not exist, or in the past existence of such a thing which has not existed.

A mistake of law happens when a party, having full knowledge of the facts, comes to an erroneous conclusion as to their legal effect. It is a mistaken opinion or inference, arising from an imperfect or incorrect exercise of the judgment, upon facts, Page v. Provinces, 179 Okl. 391, 66 P.2d 7, 10; and necessarily presupposes that the person forming it is in full possession of the facts. The facts precede the law, and the true and false opinion alike imply an acquaintance with them. The one is the result of a correct application of legal principles, which every man is presumed to know, and is called “law;” the other, the result of a faulty application, and is called a “mistake of law.”

Mutual mistake is where the parties have a common intention, but it is induced by a common or mutual mistake. “Mutual” as used in the expression mutual mistake of fact expresses a thought of reciprocity and distinguishes it from a mistake which is a common mistake of both parties. There is something of the thought of a common mistake because it must affect both parties. Mistake of fact as ground for relief may be neither “mutual” nor common in the strict sense because it may be wholly the mistake of one of the parties, the other being wholly ignorant of both of the facts upon which the mistake is based, whereas the other has mistakenly acted and that the other has acted upon such an understanding of the fact situation.

Mistery. A trade or calling.

Mistrial. An erroneous, invalid, or nugatory trial. A trial of an action which cannot stand in law because of want of jurisdiction, or a wrong drawing of jurors, or disregard of some other fundamental requisite before or during trial. Trial which has been terminated prior to its normal conclusion. The judge may declare a mistrial because of some extraordinary event (e.g. death of juror, or attorney), for prejudicial error that cannot be corrected at trial, or because of a deadlocked jury.

Mitigating circumstances. Such as do not constitute a justification or excuse of the offense in question, but which, in fairness and mercy, may be considered as extenuating or reducing the degree of moral culpability. Mitigating circumstances which will reduce degree of homicide to manslaughter are the commission
MITIGATING CIRCUMSTANCES

Those that affect basis for award of exemplary damages, or reduce actual damages by showing, not that they were never suffered, but that they have been partially extinguished.

In actions for libel and slander, circumstances bearing on defendant's liability for exemplary damages by reducing mens rea culpability, or on liability for actual damages by showing partial extinguishment thereof. The "mitigating circumstances" which the statute allows defendant in libel action to prove are those which tend to show that defendant in speaking the slanderous words acted in good faith, with honesty of purpose, and not maliciously. Roemer v. Retail Credit Co., 44 C.A.3d 926, 119 Cal.Rptr. 82, 91.

Mitigation. Alleviation, reduction, abatement or diminution of a penalty or punishment imposed by law.

Mitigation of damages. Doctrine of "mitigation of damages," sometimes called doctrine of avoidable consequences, imposes on injured party duty to exercise reasonable diligence and ordinary care in attempting to minimize his damages after injury has been inflicted and care and diligence required of him is the same as that which would be used by man of ordinary prudence under like circumstances. Darnell v. Taylor, La.App., 236 So.2d 57, 61. Mitigation of damages is an affirmative defense and applies when plaintiff fails to take reasonable actions that would tend to mitigate his injuries. Mott v. Persichetti, Colo.App., 534 P.2d 823, 825. See Restatement, Contracts § 336(1); U.C.C. § 2-603. See also Avoidable consequences, doctrine of.

Mitigation of punishment. A judge may reduce or order a lesser sentence in consideration of such factors as the defendant's past good behavior, his family situation, his cooperation with the police and kindred factors.

Mitior sensus /mithiər sen(t)as/. Lat. The more favorable acception.

Mitius imperanti melius pareatur /mithiyas imperantay myli(ə)yas pariydar/. The more mildly one commands, the better he is obeyed.

Mitter. L. Fr. To put, to send, or to pass; as, mitter l'estate, to pass the estate; mitter le droit, to pass a right. These words are used to distinguish different kinds of releases.

Mitter avant /mɪtər əvənt/. L. Fr. In old practice, to put before; to present before a court; to produce in court.

Mitimus /mɪtɪməs/. The name of a precept in writing, issuing from a court or magistrate, directed to the sheriff or other officer, commanding him to convey to the prison the person named therein, and to the jailer, commanding him to receive and safely keep such person until he shall be delivered by due course of law. State v. Lenihan, 151 Conn. 552, 200 A.2d 476, 478. Transcript of minutes of conviction and sentence duly certified by court clerk. United States ex rel. Chasteen v. Denemark, C.C.A.III., 138 F.2d 289, 291.

Old English law. A writ enclosing a record sent to be tried in a county palatine; it derives its name from the Latin word mittimus, "we send." It is the jury process of these counties, and commands the proper officer of the county palatine to command the sheriff to summon the jury for the trial of the cause, and to return the record, etc.

Mixed. Formed by admixture or commingling; partaking of the nature, character, or legal attributes of two or more distinct kinds or classes.

Mixed Action; Blood relations (Mixed blood); Contract; Government; Jury; Larceny; Marriage; Nuisance; Policy; Presumption; Property; Tithes; and War, see those titles.

Mixed insurance company. One which has, at least in part, the nature of both stock and mutual companies, and in which a certain portion of the profits is divided among the stockholders and distribution of other funds is made among the insured. Ohio Farmers Indemnity Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Ohio, 108 F.2d 665, 667; Pink v. Town Taxi Co., 138 Me. 44, 21 A.2d 656, 658, 659.

Mixed laws. A name sometimes given to those which concern both persons and property.

Mixed question of law and fact. A question depending for solution on questions of both law and fact, but is really a question of either law or fact to be decided by either judge or jury.

Mixed questions. This phrase may mean either those which arise from the conflict of foreign and domestic laws, or questions arising on a trial involving both law and fact.

Mixed subjects of property. Such as fall within the definition of things real, but which are attended, nevertheless, with some of the legal qualities of things personal, as emblems, fixtures, and shares in public undertakings, connected with land. Besides these, there are others which, though things personal in point of definition, are, in respect of some of their legal qualities, of the nature of things real; such are animals, ferae naturae, charters and deeds, court rolls, and other evidences of the land, together with the chests in which they are contained, ancient family pictures, ornaments, tombstones, coats of armor, with pennons and other ensigns, and especially heirlooms.

Mixture /mɪks(h)ɪˈtʃiː/. The mixture or confusion of goods or chattels belonging severally to different owners, in such a way that they can no longer be separated or distinguished; as where two measures of wine belonging to different persons are poured together into the same cask. See also Commingling; Fungibles.

Mixture imperium /mɪkstəm ɪmpɪrɪəm/. Lat. In old English law, mixed authority; a kind of civil power. A term applied by Lord Hale to the "power" of certain subordinate civil magistrates as distinct from "jurisdiction."

M'Naghten Rule. In the majority of jurisdictions in this country, what is most often referred to as the M'Naghten Rule has long been accepted as the test to be applied for the defense of insanity. Under M'Naghten test or rule, an accused is not criminally responsible if, at the time of committing the act, he was laboring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or if he did know it that he did not know he was doing what was wrong. M'Naghten's Case, 8 Eng.Rep. 718 (1843).

The standard under the “M'Naghten insanity” test to determine whether a person is sane is did the defendant have sufficient mental capacity to know and understand what he was doing, and did he know and understand that it was wrong and a violation of the rights of another; to be “ sane” and thus responsible to the law for the act committed, the defendant must be able to both know and understand the nature and quality of his act and to distinguish between right and wrong at the time of the commission of the offense. People v. Crosier, 41 Cal.App.3d 712, 116 Cal.Rptr. 467, 471.

See also Insanity, supra, regarding other tests used by courts in determining criminal responsibility.

Mob. An assemblage of many people, acting in a violent and disorderly manner, defying the law, and committing, or threatening to commit, depredations upon property or violence to persons.

The word, in legal use, is practically synonymous with “riot,” but the latter is the more correct term.

Modíllia /mowbliyə/. Lat. Movable; movable things; otherwise called “res mobiles.”

Mobília non habent situm /mowbliyə nən hɛyβbant səy̩dəm/. Movables have no situs or local habitation.

Mobília sequuntur personam /mowbliyə sɛkwəntə parsəwɔnəm/. Movables follow the [law of the] person.

Mock. To deride, to laugh at, to ridicule, to treat with scorn and contempt.

Modal legacy. See Legacy.

Mode. The manner in which a thing is done; as the mode of proceeding, the mode of process.

Model. A preliminary pattern or representation of something to be made or something already made. A facsimile of something invented, made on a reduced scale, in compliance with the patent laws. Style or design of product or item. See also Sample.

Model act. Statute proposed by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws for adoption by state legislatures, e.g. Model Business Corporation Act; Model Penal Code; Model Probate Code. Frequently, the state adopting the model act will modify it to some extent to meet its own needs or may adopt only a portion of such.

Model jury instructions. See Jury instructions.

Moderamen inculpate tutele /modərəˈmeɪn inˈkælpəˈdiə tjuˈwɪftɪli/. Lat. In Roman law, the regulation of justifiable defense. A term used to express that degree of force in defense of the person or property which a person might safely use, although it should occasion the death of the aggressor.

Moderata miserercordia /məˈdərəˈɛdə mɪzərəˈkɔrdɪə/. A writ founded on Magna Charta, which lies for him who is amerced in a court, not of record, for any transgression beyond the quality or quantity of the offense. It is addressed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amercement of the parties.

Moderate castigavit /məˈdərəˈɛdɪdɪ kəˈstɪɡəvɪt/. Lat. In old pleading, be moderately chastised. The name of a plea in trespass which justifies an alleged battery on the ground that it consisted in a moderate chastisement of the plaintiff by the defendant, which, from their relations, the latter had a legal right to inflict.

Moderator. A chairman or president of an assembly. A person appointed to preside at a popular meeting. The presiding officer of town meetings in New England is so called.

Modiatio /mɒdɪəˈjɪəʃ(ə)n/. In old English law, a certain duty paid for every tine of wine.

Modica circumstantia facti jus mutat /mɒdɪkə sərəkəˈstənʃ(ə)n jʊs mətət/. A small circumstance attending an act may change the law.

Modification. A change; an alteration or amendment which introduces new elements into the details, or cancels some of them, but leaves the general purpose and effect of the subject-matter intact.

Modify. To alter; to change in incidental or subordinate features; enlarge, extend; amend; limit, reduce. Such alteration or change may be characterized, in quantitative sense, as either an increase or decrease. Johnson v. Three Bays Properties No. 2, Inc., Fla. App., 159 So.2d 924, 926. See Modification.

Modius /mɒdiˈjuːs/. Lat. A measure. Specifically, a Roman dry measure having a capacity of about 550 cubic inches; but in medieval English law used as an approximate translation of the word “bushel.”

Modius terre vel agrī /mɒdɪˈjuːs tɛrə vɛl əˈgrɛ/. In old English law, a quantity of ground containing in length and breadth 100 feet.

Modo et forma /mɒˈdouə ët fɔrˈma/. Lat. In manner and form. Words used in the old Latin forms of pleadings by way of traverse, and literally translated in the modern precedents, importing that the party traversing denies the allegation of the other party, not only in its general effect, but in the exact manner and form in which it is made.

Modus /mɒdʊs/. Lat. In Civil law, manner; means; way.

Criminal pleading. The modus of an indictment is that part of it which contains the narrative of the commission of the crime; the statement of the mode or manner in which the offense was committed.

Ecclesiastical law. A peculiar manner of tithing, growing out of custom.

Old conveyancing. Mode; manner; the arrangement or expression of the terms of a contract or conveyance.

Also a consideration; the consideration of a conveyance, technically expressed by the word “itr.”
A qualification, involving the idea of variance or departure from some general rule or form, either by way of restriction or enlargement, according to the circumstances of a particular case, the will of a donor, the particular agreement of parties, and the like.

Rank modus. One that is too large. Rankness is a mere rule of evidence, drawn from the improbability of the fact, rather than a rule of law.

Modus decimandi /mówdas dèsmànday/. In Ecclesiastical law, a manner of tithing: a partial exemption from tithes, or a pecuniary composition prescribed by immemorial usage, and of reasonable amount; for it will be invalid as a rank modus if greater than the value of the tithes in the time of Richard I.

Modus de non decimando /mówdas díy nòn dèsmàndow/. In Ecclesiastical law, a custom or prescription of entire exemption from the payment of tithes; this is not valid, unless in the case of abbey-lands.

Modus de non decimando non valet /mówdas díy nòn dèsmàndow nòn válet/. A modus (prescription) not to pay tithes is void.

Modus et conventio vicrunt legem /mówdas èt kanvénsh(i)yow víkpant líyjim/. Custom and agreement overrule law. This maxim forms one of the first principles relative to the law of contracts. The exceptions to the rule here laid down are in cases against public policy, morality, etc.

Modus habillis /mówdas hêbalas/. A valid manner.

Modus legem dat donationi /mówdas líyjim dàt dàneshshlîöwñay/. Custom gives law to the gift.

Modus operandi /mówdas òpàrènday/. Method of operating or doing things (M.O.). Term used by police and criminal investigators to describe the particular method of a criminal’s activity.

Modus tenendi /mówdas tâñnday/. The manner of holding; i.e., the different species of tenures by which estates are held.

Modus transferendi /mówdas tînshfarânday/. The manner of transferring.

Modus vacandi /mówdas vâkênday/. The manner of vacating. How and why an estate has been relinquished or surrendered by a vassal to his lord might well be referred to by this phrase.

Moerda /mârd/. The secret killing of another; murder.

Mohatra. In French law, a transaction covering a fraudulent device to evade the laws against usury. It takes place where an individual buys merchandise from another on a credit at a high price, to sell it immediately to the first seller, or to a third person who acts as his agent, at a much less price for cash.

Meolyt acts. A name sometimes applied to penal and criminal statutes which provide that half the penalty or fine shall inure to the benefit of the informer.

Molliter manus imposuit /mòlsdr mènas impózh(i)-yuvat/. Lat. He gently laid hands upon. Formal words in the old Latin pleas in actions of trespass and assault where a defendant justified laying hands upon the plaintiff, as where it was done to keep the peace, etc. The phrase is literally translated in the modern precedents, and the original is retained as the name of the plea in such cases.

Monarchial. Of or pertaining to a monarchy or government by royalty. See Monarchy.

Monarchy /mònsarki/. A government in which the supreme power is vested in a single person. Where a monarch is invested with absolute power, the monarchy is termed “despotic”; where the supreme power is virtually in the laws, though the majesty of government and the administration are vested in a single person, it is a “limited” or “constitutional” monarchy. It is hereditary where the regal power descends immediately from the possessor to the next heir by blood, as in England; or elective, as was formerly the case in Poland.

Moneta /mânîyda/. Lat. Money (q.v.).

Moneta est justum medium et mensura rerum commutabilium, nam per medium monetae fit omnium rerum conveniens et justa estimatio. /mânîyda èst jåstom mîydiyam èt mens(y)úra rîrâm komyuwadibil(i)yan, nàm pêr mîydiyam mânîdyi fid omnîyam rîrâm kanvyn(i)(yan(d)z èt jâsta èstêmëshsh(i)yow)/. Money is the just medium and measure of commutable things, for by the medium of money a convenient and just estimation of all things is made.

Monétagulum /mônstëyj(i)yam/. Mintage, or the right of coining money. Hence, anciently, a tribute payable to a lord who had the prerogative of coining money, by his tenants, in consideration of his refraining from changing the coinage.

Monetandus jus comprehenditur in regalis quod nuncquam a regio sceptro abdicantur /mônstëyjand jås kômpréhëndadser ñérègëlshbas kwiñ nàkgwëm ëy riy(i)yow séptrow ëbëköntñar/. The right of coinage money is comprehended among those royal prerogatives which are never relinquished by the royal scepter.

Monetary. The usual meaning is “pertaining to coinage or currency or having to do with money”, but it has been held to include personal property. In re Kipp’s Will, Sur., 37 N.Y.3d 541, 543.

Monetary bequest. A transfer by will of cash. It is often designated as a pecuniary bequest.

Money. In usual and ordinary acceptance it means coins and paper currency used as circulating medium of exchange, and does not embrace notes, bonds, evidences of debt, or other personal or real estate. Lane v. Railey, 280 Ky. 319, 133 S.W.2d 74, 79, 81. See also Currency; Current money; Flat money; Legal tender; Near money; Scrip; Wampum. A medium of exchange authorized or adopted by a domestic or foreign government as a part of its currency. U.C.C. § 1–201(24).
Public money. Revenue received from federal, state, and local governments from taxes, fees, fines, etc. See Revenue.

Money-bill. An act by which revenue is directed to be raised, for any purpose or in any shape whatsoever, either for governmental purposes, and collected from the whole people generally, or for the benefit of a particular district, and collected in that district, or for making appropriations. All federal revenue bills must arise in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills. Art. I, Sec. 7, U.S.Const.

Money changers. A money changer is one whose occupation is the exchanging of kinds or denominations of currency, and the common meaning of the term pertained to those persons who, in early history, engaged in the business of foreign exchange and it includes the business of a banker and buying and selling of uncurrent funds and the exchanging of one kind of money for another. Arnold v. City of Chicago, 387 Ill. 532, 56 N.E.2d 795, 799. Such functions are today handled by the international departments of banks.

Money claims. In English practice, under the Judicature Act of 1875, claims for the price of goods sold, for money lent, for arrears of rent, etc., and other claims where money is directly payable on a contract express or implied, as opposed to the cases where money is claimed by way of damages for some independent wrong, whether by breach of contract or otherwise. These "money claims" correspond very nearly to the "money counts" or "common counts" formerly in use.

Money demand. A claim for a fixed and liquidated amount of money, or for a sum which can be ascertained by mere calculation; in this sense, distinguished from a claim which must be passed upon and liquidated by a jury, called "damages."

Moneyed corporation. See Corporation.

Money had and received. In common law pleading, the technical designation of a form of declaration in assumpsit, wherein the plaintiff declares that the defendant had and received certain money, etc.

Gist of action for "money had and received" is that defendant has received money which, in equity and good conscience, should have been paid to plaintiff and under such circumstances that he ought to pay it over.

Money judgment. A final order, decree or judgment of a court by which a defendant is required to pay a sum of money in contrast to a decree or judgment of equity in which the court orders some other type of relief; e.g. injunction or specific performance. See also Judgment. For enforcement of money judgments, see Execution.

Money land. A phrase descriptive of money which is held upon a trust to convert it into land.

Money lent. In common law pleading, the technical name of a declaration in an action of assumpsit for which the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff for money lent.

Money made. The return made by a sheriff to a writ of execution, signifying that he has collected the sum of money required by the writ.

Money market. The financial machinery for dealing in short term paper such as notes and loans in contrast to the capital market which furnishes long term financing.

Money of adieu. In French law, earnest money; so called because given at parting in completion of the bargain. Arrhes is the usual French word for earnest money; "money of adieu" is a provincialism found in the province of Orleans.

Money order. A type of negotiable draft issued by banks, post offices, telegraph companies and express companies and used by the purchaser as a substitute for a check. Form of credit instrument calling for payment of money to named payee, and involving three parties: remitter, payee, and drawee. Fidelity Bank & Trust Co. v. Fitzimons, Minn., 261 N.W.2d 586, 589. Money order may encompass nonnegotiable as well as negotiable instruments and may be issued by a governmental agency, a bank, or private person or entity authorized to issue it, but essential characteristic is that it is purchased for purpose of paying a debt or to transmit funds upon credit of the issuer of the money order. People v. Norwood, 26 C.A.3d 148, 103 Cal.Rptr. 7, 12.

Money-order office. One of the post-offices authorized to draw or pay money orders.

Money paid. In common law pleading, the technical name of a declaration in assumpsit, in which the plaintiff declares for money paid for the use of the defendant. See also Money had and received.

Money-purchase plan. A pension plan where the employee contributes a specified amount of cash each year to each employee's pension fund. Benefits ultimately received by the employee are not specifically defined but depend on the rate of return on the cash invested.

Monger /mógər/. A dealer or seller. It is seldom or never used alone, or otherwise than after the name of any commodity, to express a seller of such commodity; e.g. fishmonger, moneymonger.

Moniers, or moneyeers /mōniyarz/māniyarz/. Ministers of the mint; also bankers.

Moniment /mónəmant/. A memorial, superscription, or record.

Monition /mənɪʃən/. In admiralty, formerly the summons to appear and answer, issued on filing the libel; which was either a simple monition in personam or an attachment and monition in rem. With the unification of the Admiralty Rules and Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in 1966, the monition was abolished.

General monition. In civil law practice, a monition or summons to all parties in interest to appear and show cause against the decree prayed for.

Practice. A monition is a formal order of the court commanding something to be done by the person to whom it is directed, and who is called the "person monished." Thus, when money is decreed to be paid, a monition may be obtained commanding its payment. In ecclesiastical procedure, a monition is an order monishing or warning the party complained against to do or not to do a certain act "under pain of the law and contempt thereof." A monition may also be appended to a sentence inflicting a punishment for a past offense; in that case the monition forbids the repetition of the offense.

Monitory letters /mónat(oi)ríy lédar/. Communications of warning and admonition sent from an ecclesiastical judge, upon information of scandal and abuses within the cognizance of his court.

Monocracy /mánôkrasy/. A government by one person.

Monocrat /mónakrat/. A monarch who governs alone; an absolute governor.

Monogamy /mónôgamiy/. The marriage of one wife only, or the state of such as are restrained to a single wife. The term is used in opposition to "bigamy" and "polygamy."

Monomachy /mónômakiy/. A duel; a single combat. It was anciently allowed by law for the trial or proof of crimes. It was even permitted in pecuniary cases, but it is now forbidden both by the civil law and canon laws.

Monopolla dicitur, cum unus solus aliquod genus mercaturae universum emit, pretium ad suum libitum statuens. It is said to be a monopoly when one person alone buys up the whole of one kind of commodity, fixing a price at his own pleasure.

Monopolium /mónôpôl(i)yam/. The sole power, right, or privilege of sale; monopoly; a monopoly.

Monopoly /mónôp(ö)ly/. A privilege or peculiar advantage vested in one or more persons or companies, consisting in the exclusive right (or power) to carry on a particular business or trade, manufacture a particular article, or control the sale of the whole supply of a particular commodity. A form of market structure in which one or only a few firms dominate the total sales of a product or service.

"Monopoly", as prohibited by Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, has two elements: possession of monopoly power in relevant market and willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. U. S. v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 86 S.Ct. 1698, 1704, 16 L.Ed.2d 778. A monopoly condemned by the Sherman Act is the power to fix prices or exclude competition, coupled with policies designed to use or preserve that power. U. S. v. Otter Tail Power Co., D.C.Minn., 331 F.Supp. 54, 58.

It is "monopolization" in violation of Sherman Antitrust Act for persons to combine or conspire to acquire or maintain power to exclude competitors from any part of trade or commerce, provided they also have such power that they are able, as group, to exclude actual or potential competition and provided that they have intent and purpose to exercise that power. Davidson v. Kansas City Star Co., D.C.Mo., 202 F.Supp. 613, 617.

See also Market; Relevant market.

Natural monopoly. A natural monopoly is one resulting where one firm of efficient size can produce all or more than market can take at remunerative price. Ovitrion Corp. v. General Motors Corp., D.C.N.Y., 295 F.Supp. 373, 377. One which is created from circumstances over which the monopolist has no power. For example, a market for a particular product may be so limited that it is impossible to profitably produce such except by a single plant large enough to supply the whole demand. U. S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, C.C.A.N.Y., 148 F.2d 416, 430.

Monopoly power. The "monopoly power" which must exist in order to establish a violation of Sherman Antitrust Act may be defined as the power to fix prices, to exclude competitors, or to control the market in the relevant geographical area in question. H. F. & S. Co. v. American Standard, Inc., D.C.Kan., 336 F.Supp. 110, 123. See also Market; Relevant market.

Monopsony. A condition of the market in which there is but one buyer for a particular commodity.

Monstrans de droit /môôstrán(d)z də drôyt/. L. Fr. In English law, a showing or manifestation of right; one of the common law methods of obtaining possession or restitution from the crown, of either real or personal property. It is the proper proceeding when the right of the party, as well as the right of the crown, appears upon record, and consists in putting in a claim of right grounded on facts already acknowledged and established, and praying the judgment of the court whether upon these facts the king or the subject has the right. 3 Bl.Comm. 256.

Monstrans de faits /môôstrán(d)z də fê(t)s/. L. Fr. In old English practice, a showing of deeds; a species of proferit.

Monstraverunt, writ of /rid v móômôstrávîrn/. In English law, a writ which lies for the tenants of ancient demesne who hold by free charter, and not for those tenants who hold by copy of court roll, or by the rod, according to the custom of the manor.

Montes plétatis /môntîzî páyatêydiːs/. Public pawnbroking establishments; institutions established by government, in some European countries, for lending small sums of money on pledges of personal property. In France they are called "monts de piété."

Month. Word "month," unless otherwise defined, means "calendar month," or time from any day of any of the months as adjudged in the calendar to corresponding day, if any, if not any, to last day of next month.

The space of time denoted by this term varies according as one or another of the following varieties of months is intended:

Astronomical, containing one-twelfth of the time occupied by the sun in passing through the entire zodiac.

Calendar, civil, or solar, which is one of the months in the Gregorian calendar,—January, February, March, etc.—which are of unequal length.

Lunar, being the period of one revolution of the moon, or twenty-eight days.

The word "month," when used in a statute or contract without qualification, meant at common law a lunar month of 28 days. State v. White, 73 Fla. 426, 74 So. 486, 487.

Monument. Anything by which the memory of a person, thing, idea, art, science or event is preserved or perpetuated. A tomb where a dead body has been deposited.

In real-property law and surveying, monuments are visible marks or indications left on natural or other objects indicating the lines and boundaries of a survey. In this sense the term includes not only posts, pillars, stone markers, carins, and the like, but also fixed natural objects, blazed trees, and even a watercourse. Any physical object on ground which helps to establish location of line called for; it may be either natural or artificial, and may be a tree, stone, stake, pipe, or the like. Delphye v. Savage, 227 Md. 373, 177 A.2d 249, 251. See also Natural monument.

Monumenta que nos recorda vocamus sunt veritatis et vetustatis vestigia /mónyménta kwíw nówš ráskórda vovkéýmas sín věhrátěýas ět vědástěýas vásti(t)(y)ás/. Monuments, which we call "records," are the vestiges of truth and antiquity.

Monung. See Manung.

Moonshine. Intoxicating liquor illicitly produced or smuggled into community for beverage purposes, or spirituous liquor, illegally distilled or manufactured. State v. King, 331 Mo. 268, 53 S.W.2d 252, 254.

Mooring. Anchoring or making fast to the shore or dock. The securing or confining a vessel in a particular station, as by cables and anchors or by a line or chain run to the wharf.

Moot. A subject for argument; unsettled; undecided. A moot point is one not settled by judicial decisions.

A case is "moot" when a determination is sought on a matter which, when rendered, cannot have any practical effect on the existing controversy. Leonhart v. McCormick, D.C.Pa., 395 F.Supp. 1073, 1076. Question is "moot" when it presents no actual controversy or where the issues have ceased to exist. Matter of Lawson's Estate, 41 Ill.App.3d 37, 353 N.E.2d 345, 347.

Generally, an action is considered "moot" when it no longer presents a justiciable controversy because issues involved have become academic or dead. Sigma Chi Fraternity v. Regents of University of Colo., D.C.Colo., 258 F.Supp. 515, 523. Case in which the matter in dispute has already been resolved and hence, one not entitled to judicial intervention unless the issue is a recurring one and likely to be raised again between the parties, Super Tire Engineering Co. v. McCorkle, 416 U.S. 115, 94 S.Ct. 1694, 40 L.Ed.2d 1.

Moot court. A court held (normally in law schools) for the arguing of moot or hypothetical cases.

Moot hill. Hill of meeting (gemot), on which the Britons used to hold their courts, the judge sitting on the eminence; the parties, etc., on an elevated platform below.

Mooting. The exercise of arguing questions of law or equity, raised for the purpose. See Moot court.

Moot man. One of those who used to argue the reader's cases in the inns of court.

Mora /móra/. Lat. In the civil law, delay; default; neglect; culpable delay or default.

Moral. Pertains to character, conduct, intention, social relations, etc.

1. Pertaining or relating to the conscience or moral sense or to the general principles of right conduct.

2. Cognizable or enforceable only by the conscience or by the principles of right conduct, as distinguished from positive law.

3. Depending upon or resulting from probability; raising a belief or conviction in the mind independent of strict or logical proof.

4. Involving or affecting the moral sense; as in the phrase "moral insanity."

Moral actions. Those only in which men have knowledge to guide them, and a will to choose for themselves.

Moral certainty. That degree of assurance which induces a man of sound mind to act, without doubt, upon the conclusions to which it leads. A high degree of impression of the truth of a fact, falling short of absolute certainty, but sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty, even in a capital case. Such signifies a probability sufficiently strong to justify action on it; a very high degree of probability, although not demonstrable, as a certainty. It has also been used as indicating a conclusion of the mind established beyond a reasonable doubt. Gray v. State, 56 Okl.Cr. 208, 38 P.2d 967.

Moral consideration. See Consideration.

Moral duress. Consists in imposition, oppression, undue influence, or the taking of undue advantage of the business or financial stress or extreme necessity or weakness of another. Lafayette Dramatic Productions v. Ferentz, 305 Mich. 193, 9 N.W.2d 57, 66. See also Coercion; Duress.

Moral evidence. As opposed to "mathematical" or "demonstrative" evidence, this term denotes that kind of evidence which, without developing an absolute and necessary certainty, generates a high degree of probability or persuasive force. It is founded upon analogy or induction, experience of the ordinary course of nature or the sequence of events, and the testimony of men.

Moral fraud. This phrase is one of the less usual designations of "actual" or "positive" fraud or "fraud in fact," as distinguished from "constructive fraud" or "fraud in law." It means fraud which involves actual guilt, a wrongful purpose, or moral obliquity.

Moral hazard. See Hazard.

Moral law. The law of conscience; the aggregate of those rules and principles of ethics which relate to right and wrong conduct and prescribe the standards to which the actions of men should conform in their dealings with each other. See also Natural law.
MORAL OBLIGATION

Moral obligation. See Obligation.

Moral turpitude. The act of baseness, vileness, or the depravity in private and social duties which man owes to his fellow man, or to society in general, contrary to accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man. State v. Adkins, 40 Ohio App.2d 473, 320 N.E.2d 308, 311, 69 O.O.2d 416. Act or behavior that gravely violates moral sentiment or accepted moral standards of community and is a morally culpable quality held to be present in some criminal offenses as distinguished from others. Lee v. Wisconsin State Bd. of Dental Examiners, 29 Wis.2d 330, 139 N.W.2d 61, 65. The quality of a crime involving grave infringement of the moral sentiment of the community as distinguished from statutory mala prohibita. People v. Ferguson, 55 Misc.2d 711, 286 N.Y.S.2d 976, 981. See also Turpitude.

Morande solutionis causa /mɔɾəndə tiˈsλənˈɔnəs kəˈzo/. Lat. For the purpose of delaying or postponing payment or performance.

Mora reprobatur in lege /mɔɾa ɾeˈprɔbətəɹ i lʲiˈʤiɹ/. Delay is reprobated in law.

Moratorium /mɔɾəˈtɔrɪəm/. A term designating suspension of all or of certain legal remedies against debtors, sometimes authorized by law during financial distress. A period of permissive or obligatory delay; specifically, a period during which an obligor has a legal right to delay meeting an obligation. State ex rel. Jensen Livestock Co. v. Hyslop, 111 Mont. 122, 107 P.2d 1086, 1092. Delay or postponement of an action or proceeding. See Injunction: Restraining order.

More favorable terms clause. A provision in a labor-management contract by which the union agrees not to make more favorable agreements with other and competing employers.

More or less. About, substantially; or approximately; implying that both parties assume the risk of any ordinary discrepancy. The words are intended to cover slight or unimportant inaccuracies in quantity, Carter v. Finch, 186 Ark. 954, 57 S.W.2d 408; and are ordinarily to be interpreted as taking care of substantial differences or differences of small importance compared to the whole number of items transferred.

Moreover. In addition thereto, also, furthermore, likewise, beyond this, besides this.

Morganatic-marriage. See Marriage.

Morgangia, or morgangyva /mɔɾˈɡæniˈja, ˌmɔɾˈɡæniˈva/. A gift on the morning after the wedding; dowry; the husband's gift to his wife on the day after the wedding.

Morgue /mɔɾˈɡwe/. A place where the bodies of persons found dead are kept for a limited time and exposed to view, to the end that their relatives or friends may identify them.

Mormon. A member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The Church was organized in 1830 at Seneca, New York, by Joseph Smith, and today its headquarters are in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Morning loan. An unsecured loan to permit the borrower, generally a stockbroker, to carry on his business for the day.

Moron. A term indicating a mentally defective person usually having a mental age of eight to twelve years and an I.Q. of 50 to 70.

Morphinomania, or morphinism /ˈmɔɾfənəˌmənə/ /ˈmɔɾfənɪˈzəm/. The opium habit. An excessive desire for morphia.

Morris Plan Company. An industrial bank which accepts money from the public for investment in investment certificates which draw interest periodically payable to the investor, and which bank lends money principally to steadily employed salaried people who are required to secure repayment with the endorsement of two other employed salaried people, the contract calling for installment payments over a one-year period. Other secured loans are also made. Board of Com'trs of Tulsa County v. Remedial Finance Corporation, 186 Okl. 648, 100 P.2d 240, 242.

Mors dictur ultimum supplicium /ˈmɔrɔs dɪˈsaðər ˈʃtɛməˌʃplɪʃ(ɨ)ˈʃəm/. Death is called the "last punishment," the "extremity of punishment."

Morsellum, or morsellus, terra /mɔrˈsɛləm tɛˈriɹ/ /ˈtʃɛrə/ /ˈtʃɛrə/. In old English law, a small parcel or bit of land.

Mors omnia solvit /ˈmɔrɔs ˈomniə sɔˈlvat/. Death dissolves all things. Applied to the case of the death of a party to an action.

Mortal. Destructive to life; causing or occasioning death; exposing to or deserving death, especially spiritual death; deadly; fatal; as, a mortal wound, or mortal sin, or pertaining to time of death.

Mortality. The relative incidence of death.

Mortality tables. A means of ascertaining the probable number of years any man or woman of a given age and of ordinary health will live. A mortality table expresses, on the basis of the group studied, the probability that, of a number of persons of equal expectations of life who are living at the beginning of any year, a certain number of deaths will occur within that year. National Life & Acc. Ins. Co. v. U. S., D.C.Tenn., 381 F.Supp. 1034, 1037.

Such tables are used by insurance companies to determine the premium to be charged for those in the respective age groups.

Mort civile /mɔr(t)/ səvˈjel/. In French law, civil death, as upon conviction for felony. It was nominally abolished in 1854, but something very similar to it, in effect at least, still remains. Thus, the property of the condemned, possessed by him at the date of his conviction, goes and belongs to his successors (héritiers), as in case of an intestacy; and his future acquired property goes to the state by right of its prerogative (par droit de désertion), but the state may, as a matter of grace, make it over in whole or in part to the widow and children.

Mort d'ancestor /mɔr t ˈdeːnasteɾ/. An ancient and now almost obsolete remedy in the English law. An as- a size of mort d'ancestor was a writ which lay for a person whose ancestor died seised of lands in fee-simple, and after his death a stranger abated; and this writ directed the sheriff to summon a jury or assize, who should view the land in question and recognize whether such ancestor were seised thereof on the day of his death, and whether the demandant were the next heir.

Mortgage /mɔrˈɡeɪt/. A mortgage is an interest in land created by a written instrument providing security for the performance of a duty or the payment of a debt. At common law, an estate created by a conveyance absolute is subject to secure the performance of some act, such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, and to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed at the time of making such conveyance. The mortgage operates as a conveyance of the legal title to the mortgagee, but such title is subject to defeasance on payment of the debt or performance of the duty by the mortgagor.

The above definitions are applicable to the common-law (i.e. estate or title) conception of a mortgage. Such conception is still applicable in certain states. But in many other states, a mortgage is regarded as a mere lien, and not as creating a title or estate. Zeigler v. Sawyer, Tex.Civ.App., 16 S.W.2d 894, 896. It is a pledge or security of particular property for the payment of a debt or the performance of some other obligation, whatever form the transaction may take, but is not now regarded as a conveyance in effect, though it may be cast in the form of a conveyance. Still other states have adopted a hybrid or intermediate theory or category of mortgage.

See also Assumption of mortgage; Balloon mortgage; Bulk mortgage; Chattel mortgage; Collateral mortgage; Corporate mortgage trust; Deed (Deed of trust); Due on sale clause; In rem mortgage; Potomac mortgages; Release (Release of mortgage); Ship Mortgage Act; Submortgage; Tacit mortgage; Trust (Trust deed); Union mortgage clause. For "bona fide mortgage," see Bona fide.

Amortized mortgage. One in which the mortgagor pays the current interest charge as well as a portion of principal in his periodic payment.

Blanket mortgage. One which conveys title to or creates a lien on all the borrower’s assets or a substantial portion of them rather than on a specific asset.

Closed-end mortgage. One in which neither the property mortgaged nor the amount borrowed may be altered during the term of the mortgage.

Consolidated mortgage. A single mortgage given to replace or to combine several outstanding mortgages.

Construction draw mortgage. Type of mortgage used to finance building construction.

Conventional mortgage. The conventional mortgage is a contract by which a person binds the whole of his property, or a portion of it only, in favor of another, to secure the execution of some engagement, but without divesting himself of possession. It is distinguished from the "legal" mortgage, which is a privilege which the law alone in certain cases gives to a creditor over the property of his debtor, without stipulation of the parties. This last is very much like a general lien at common law, created by the law rather than by the act of the parties, such as a judgment lien.

Conventional home mortgage. The common security device used by those who wish to purchase a home by transferring to the bank or other financial institution a lien or defeasible legal title in return for the price or part of the price of the home. A non-FHA or VA home loan; i.e. not backed by government insurance or security. The mortgage is conventional in that the lender looks only to the credit of the borrower and the security of the property, and not to the additional backing of another such as would be the case with an FHA insured mortgage.

Equitable mortgage. A specific lien upon real property to secure the payment of money or the performance of some other obligation, which a court of equity will recognize and enforce, in accordance with the clearly ascertained intent of the parties to that effect, but which lacks the essential features of a legal mortgage, either because it grows out of the transactions of the parties without any deed or express contract to give a lien, or because the instrument used for that purpose is wanting in some of the characteristics of a common-law mortgage, or, being absolute in form, is accompanied by a collateral reservation of a right to redeem, or because an explicit agreement to give a mortgage has not been carried into effect.

FHA mortgage. One in which the loan has been insured in whole or in part by the Federal Housing Administration.

First mortgage. The first (in time or right) of a series of two or more mortgages covering the same property and successively attaching as liens upon it. Also, in a more particular sense, a mortgage which is a first lien on the property, not only as against other mortgages, but as against any other charges or incumbrances. Also called "senior" mortgage.

First mortgage bonds. Bonds the payment of which is secured by a first mortgage on property.

General mortgage. Mortgages are sometimes classified as general and special, a mortgage of the former class being one which binds all property, present and future, of the debtor (sometimes called a "blanket" mortgage); while a special mortgage is limited to certain particular and specified property.

Graduated payment mortgage (GPM). Type of mortgage financing, offered primarily to aid first-time home buyers, wherein the monthly payments gradually increase over a number of years as the income of the mortgagor increases.

Joint mortgage. One which is given to or by two or more mortgagors jointly.

Judicial mortgage. In the law of Louisiana, the lien resulting from judgments, whether rendered on contested cases or by default, whether final or provisional, in favor of the person obtaining them. Civ.Code La. art. 3321.

Junior mortgage. One which ranks below another mortgage of the name property in the value of the security, and is subordinate to senior mortgages in its rights.

Leasehold mortgage. Mortgage secured by lessee’s interest in leased property.
Legal mortgage. A term used in Louisiana. The law alone in certain cases gives to the creditor a mortgage on the property of his debtor, without it being requisite that the parties should stipulate it. That is called "legal mortgage." It is also called a tacit mortgage, because it is established by the law without the aid of any agreement. Civ. Code La. art. 3311.

Mortgage of goods. See Chattel mortgage.

Open-end mortgage. A mortgage permitting the mortgagor to borrow additional money under the same mortgage, with certain conditions, usually as to the assets of the mortgagor.

Package mortgage. A package mortgage is used to include not only the real property but many items of personal property incident to the real property, such as stoves, refrigerators, and the like.

Purchase money mortgage. Generally, any mortgage given to secure a loan made for the purpose of acquiring the land on which the mortgage is given; more particularly, a mortgage given to the seller of land to secure payment of a portion of the purchase price. A mortgage given, concurrently with a conveyance of land, by the vendee to the vendor, on the same land, to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price.

Second mortgage. One which takes rank immediately after a first mortgage on the same property, without any intervening liens, and is next entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds of the property. Properly speaking, however, the term designates the second of a series of mortgages, not necessarily the second lien. For instance, the lien of a judgment might intervene between the first and second mortgages; in which case, the second mortgage would be the third lien. Also called "junior" mortgage. See also Wrap-around mortgage, below.

Senior mortgage. One which ranks ahead of another mortgage in terms of rights in the security. See also First mortgage, supra.

Straight mortgage. One in which the mortgagor is obligated to pay interest during the term of the mortgage and a final payment of principal at the end of the term in contrast to an amortized mortgage.

Tacit mortgage. See Legal mortgage, supra.

Variable rate mortgage. A long-term mortgage contract which includes a provision permitting the lending institution to adjust, upward and downward, the contract's interest rate in response to changes in money market rates and the conditions of demand for mortgages.

Wrap around mortgage. Method of refinancing whereby a new mortgage to cover a new loan is placed in a secondary position to the existing mortgage on the original loan. The entire loan is treated as a single obligation.

Mortgage banker. A person or firm engaged in the business of dealing in mortgages including their placement and refinancing. Normally such banker uses its own funds as opposed to a commercial or savings and loan bank which uses primarily funds of depositors. While some mortgage bankers do provide long term (permanent) financing, the majority specialize in short term and interim financing.

Mortgage bond. Bonds for which real estate or personal property is pledged as security that the bond will be paid as stated in its terms. May be first, second, refunding, and so on.

Mortgage broker. Person or firm who functions as intermediary between borrower and lender in securing loan.

Mortgage certificate. Document evidencing participation in a large mortgage held by the mortgagee for the benefit of the certificate holders.

Mortgage clause. Provision in fire insurance policies protecting the mortgagee as his interest may appear.

Mortgage commitment. A formal written communication by a lender, agreeing to make a mortgage loan on specific property, specifying the loan's amount, length of time, and conditions.

Mortgage company. A firm engaged in the business of originating and closing mortgages which are then assigned or sold to investors.

Mortgage contingency clause. Clause in an agreement for sale of real estate conditioning the purchaser's performance on his obtaining a mortgage from a third party.

Mortgagee /ˈmɔrɡəˌji/. He that takes or receives a mortgage.

Mortgagor in possession. A mortgagee of real property who is in possession of it with the agreement or assent of the mortgagor, express or implied, and in recognition of his mortgage and because of it, and under such circumstances as to make the satisfaction of his lien an equitable prerequisite to his being dispossessed.

Mortgage foreclosure. See Foreclosure.

Mortgage guarantee insurance. A type of insurance which guarantees to the mortgagee a given portion of the loss if the mortgagee suffers a loss due to nonpayment on the loan. See Federal Housing Administration; Insurance.

Mortgage insurance. See Insurance.

Mortgage lien. Lien on property of mortgagor which secures debt obligation. In some states, the mortgagor retains legal title until foreclosure and the mortgagee has a security interest called a lien which is recognized ahead of other claims to the property.

Mortgage loan. A loan secured by a mortgage on real estate in which the borrower is the mortgagor and the lender the mortgagee. See Mortgage.

Mortgaging out. The process by which a mortgagor secures one hundred percent financing of his purchase. He purchases property with no money of his own but entirely with mortgage money.

Mortgagor /ˈmɔrɡəˌɡɑr/. One who, having all or some part of title to property, by written instrument pledges that property for some particular purpose such as security for a debt. That party to a mortgage who gives legal title or a lien to the mortgagee to secure the mortgage loan.
Morth. Sax. Murder, answering exactly to the French "assassinat" or "muerte de guet-apens".

Morthlaga /môrôlˈlɛɡə/. A murderer.

Morthlage /môrôlˈlɛɡə/. Murder.

Mortis causa /môrdɔs kōˈza/. Lat. By reason of death; in contemplation of death. Thus used in the phrase "Donatio mortis causa" (q.v.).

Mortis momentum est ultimum vite momentum /môrdɔs məmˈɑntɔm ɛst ˈʃtɛməm vəˈdɪlvə məmˈɑntɔm/. The last moment of life is the moment of death.

Mortmain /mɔrˈmɪn/. A term applied to denote the alienation of lands or tenements to any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. These purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence of which lands became perpetually inherent in one dead hand, this has occasioned the general appellation of "mortmain" to be applied to such alienations. 2 Bl.Comm. 268; Perin v. Carey, 65 U.S. (24 How.) 465, 16 L.Ed. 701.

Mortmain acts. These acts had for their object to prevent lands getting into the possession or control of religious corporations, or, as the name indicates, in mortuis manu. After numerous prior acts dating from the reign of Edward I, it was enacted by the statute 9 Geo. II, c. 36 (called the "Mortmain Act" par excellence), that no lands should be given to charities unless certain requisites should be observed.

Mortuary. A burial-place. Term applied to undertaking and embalming establishments.

A kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift of the second best living animal belonging to the deceased, claimed by and due to the minister in many parishes, on the death of his parishioners, whether buried in the church-yard or not. 2 Bl.Comm. 425.

Term has been sometimes used in a civil as well as in an ecclesiastical sense, and applied to a payment to the lord of the fee.

Mortuary tables. See Actuarial table; Mortality tables.

Mortuum vadum /môrˈчувəm vɛˈdiːɛˌm/. A dead pledge; a mortgage (q.v.); a pledge where the profits or rents of the thing pledged are not applied to the payment of the debt.

Mortuos /môrˈchuwaʃə/. Lat. Dead. So in sheriff's return. Mortus est, he is dead.

Mortuos civiliter /môrˈchuwaʃə savɪˈlaðər/. Civil death (q.v.).

Mortuos exitus non est exitus /môrˈchuwaʃə ɛɡˈzadas nɔn ɛst ɛɡˈzadas/. A dead issue is no issue. A child born dead is not considered as issue.

Mortuos sine prole /môrˈchuwaʃə səˈni prɔˈliː/. Dead without issue. In genealogical tables often abbreviated to "m.s.p."

Moslem Law. One of the two great systems of customary law which the English found in India. It regulated the life and relations of all Moslems, and parts of it, especially its penal provisions, were applied to both Moslems and Hindus.

Mos retiniendum est fidelissime vetustatis /mɔs rɛtəˈniːnˌdəm ɛst fɛdɪlɪˈsɪmə vɛtʊstəˈtæs/. A custom of the truest antiquity is to be retained.

Most favored nation clause. A clause found in most treaties providing that the citizens or subjects of the contracting nations may enjoy the privileges accorded by either party to those of the most favored nations. The general design of such clauses is to establish the principle of equality of international treatment. The test of whether this principle is violated by the concession of advantages to a particular nation is not the form in which such concession is made, but the condition on which it is granted; whether it is given for a price, or whether this price is in the nature of a substantial equivalent, and not of a mere evasion. The United States has generally taken the stand that reciprocal commercial concessions are given for a valuable consideration and are not within the scope of this clause. Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U.S. 190, 8 S.Ct. 456, 31 L.Ed. 386. See also Reciprocal trade agreements.

A primary effect of "most favored nation" status is lower import tariffs or duties.

Most suitable use valuation. For gift and death tax purposes, property that is transferred normally is valued in accordance with its most suitable or highest and best use. Thus, if a farm is worth more as a potential shopping center, this value will control even though the transferor (i.e., the donee or heir) continues to use the property as a farm. For an exception to this rule concerning the valuation of certain kinds of real estate transferred by death, see Special use valuation.

Mote /moʊt/. Sax. A meeting; an assembly. Used in composition, as burgmote, folkmote, etc.

Moteer. A customary service or payment at the mote or court of the lord, from which some were exempted by charter or privilege.

Mother. A woman who has borne a child. A female parent. The term includes maternity during prebirth period.

Mother-in-law. The mother of one's wife or of one's husband.

Motion. In parliamentary law, the formal mode in which a member submits a proposed measure or resolve for the consideration and action of the meeting.

An application made to a court or judge for purpose of obtaining a rule or order directing some act to be done in favor of the applicant. State v. James, Mo., 347 S.W.2d 211, 216. It is usually made within the framework of an existing action or proceeding and is ordinarily made on notice, but some motions may be made without notice. One without notice is called an ex parte motion. Written or oral application to court for ruling or order, made before (e.g. motion to dismiss) during (e.g. motion for directed verdict), or after (e.g. motion for new trial) trial. For requisite form of motions, see Fed.R.Civ.P. 7(b).

See also Speaking motion.
MOTION

Motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict. A motion that judgment be entered in accordance with the movant's earlier motion for a directed verdict and notwithstanding the contrary verdict actually returned by the jury. Huff v. Thornton, 287 N.C. 1, 213 S.E.2d 106, 204. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 50(b).

Motion for judgment on pleadings. Under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(c) any party may move after the pleadings are closed for judgment thereon. It is a device for disposing of cases when the material facts are not in dispute and only questions of law remain. See also Summary judgment.

Motion for more definite statement. If a pleading is so vague or ambiguous that a party cannot reasonably be required to frame a responsive pleading, he may move for a more definite statement. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(e).

Motion for new trial. A request that the judge set aside the judgment and order a new trial on the basis that the trial was improper or unfair due to specified prejudicial errors that occurred. Fed.R.Civ.P. 59.

Motion in bar. One which, if allowed, will absolutely bar the action; e.g. plea of double jeopardy. U. S. v. Jorn, 400 U.S. 470, 91 S.Ct. 547, 27 L.Ed.2d 543.

Motion in limine. A written motion which is usually made before or after the beginning of a jury trial for a protective order against prejudicial questions and statements. Robinson v. State, Ind.App., 309 N.E.2d 833, 854. Purpose of such motion is to avoid injection into trial of matters which are irrelevant, inadmissible and prejudicial and granting of motion is not a ruling on evidence and, where properly drawn, granting of motion cannot be error. Redding v. Ferguson, Tex.Civ.App., 501 S.W.2d 717, 724.

Motion to dismiss. One which is generally interposed before trial to attack the action on the basis of insufficiency of the pleading, of process, venue, joiner, etc. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b).

Motion to strike. On motion of either party, the court may order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense, or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous matter. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(f).

Motion to suppress. Device used to eliminate from the trial of a criminal case evidence which has been secured illegally, generally in violation of the Fourth Amendment (search and seizure), the Fifth Amendment (privilege against self-incrimination), or the Sixth Amendment (right to assistance of counsel, right of confrontation etc.), of U.S. Constitution. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 12(b) and 41(f); also Suppression hearing.

Motive. Cause or reason that moves the will and induces action. An inducement, or that which leads or tempts the mind to indulge a criminal act. People v. Lewis, 275 N.Y. 33, 9 N.E.2d 763, 768.

In common usage intent and "motive" are not infrequently regarded as one and the same thing. In law there is a distinction between them. "Motive" is the moving power which impels to action for a definite result. Intent is the purpose to use a particular means to effect such result. "Motive" is that which incites or stimulates a person to do an act. People v. Weiss, 232 App.Div. 463, 300 N.Y.S. 249, 255.

As to criminal motive, see Criminal. See also Intent.

Motor Carrier Act. Federal statute (administered by ICC) which regulates (routes, rates, etc.) motor carriers of freight and passengers in interstate commerce. 49 U.S.C.A. § 301 et seq.

Mouth of river. By statute in some states, the mouth of a river or creek, which empties into another river or creek, is defined as the point where the middle of the channel of each intersects the other.

Movable. That which can be changed in place, as movable property; or in time, as movable feasts or terms of court. Compare Fixture.

Movable estate. A term equivalent to "personal estate" or "personal property."

Movable freehold. A term applied by Lord Coke to real property which is capable of being increased or diminished by natural causes; as where the owner of seashore acquires or loses land as the waters recede or approach.

Movables. Things movable; movable or personal chattels which may be annexed to or attendant on the person of the owner, and carried about with him from one place to another. Things which may be carried from one place to another whether they move by themselves or whether they are inanimate objects capable of being moved by extraneous power. Succession of Young, La.App., 205 So.2d 791, 796.

Movant. One who moves; one who makes a motion before a court; the applicant for a rule or order.

Move. To make an application to a court for a rule or order, or to take action in any matter. The term comprehends all things necessary to be done by a litigant to obtain an order of the court directing the relief sought. See Motion.

To propose a resolution, or recommend action in a deliberate body.

To pass over; to be transferred, as when the consideration of a contract is said to "move" from one party to the other.

To occasion; to contribute to; to tend or lead to.

Move. An alternative spelling of movant.

Move out. To vacate; to yield up possession.

Moving papers. Such papers as are made the basis of some motion in court proceedings, e.g. a motion for summary judgment with supporting affidavits.

Mrs. Title of courtesy prefixed to name of woman to indicate that she is or has been married. Guide Pub. Co. v. Futrell, 175 Va. 77, 7 S.E.2d 133, 138.

Muciana cautio /m(y)w$ljêysn kôsh(l)ow/. See Cautio.

Mug book. Collection of pictures or "mug shots" of suspects in criminal cases kept by police and FBI and displayed to victim or witnesses in order to obtain identification of criminal offender.

Mugshot. Pictures taken when person is booked; usually used as an official photograph by police officers.
MULTI MULTA

Mulatto /mʌlədəu/ /m(y)uw/ /ˈda/. A person that is the offspring of a negro by a white man, or of a white woman by a negro. In a more general sense, a person of mixed Caucasian and negro blood, or Indian and negro blood.

Mulet /mʌlkt/. A penalty or punishment imposed on a person guilty of some offense, tort, or misdemeanor, usually a pecuniary fine or condemnation in damages. A forfeit, fine, or penalty. To sentence to a pecuniary penalty or forfeiture as a punishment; fine; hence to fine unjustly; to punish. Gorton v. Doty, 57 Idaho 792, 69 P.2d 136, 142.

Formerly, an imposition laid on ships or goods by a company of trade for the maintenance of consuls and the like.

Mulcta damnum famae non irrogat /mʌlktə dæmnəm fɛˈmiː niːn ɪˈrəɡət/. A fine does not involve loss of character.

Muller /ˈmuːlər/ /ˈmuːliər/ /ˈmuːliər/ /ˈmuːliər/. Lat. A woman; a wife; a widow; a virgin; a legitimate child.

The term is used always in contradistinction to a bastard, mulier being always legitimate.

Multerus /mʌlərəs/ /ˈmuːlərəs/. A legitimate son.

Mulier pulsané /mʌliər pʊɬˈsənə/. Fr. When a man has a bastard son, and afterwards marries the mother, and by her has also a legitimate son, the elder son is bastard eigné, and the younger son is mulier pulsané.

Mulility /ˈmuːlɪlɪti/ /ˈmuːlɪlɪti/ /ˈmuːlɪlɪti/ /ˈmuːlɪlɪti/. In old English law, the state or condition of a mulier, or lawful issue. The opposite of bastardy.

Multa /mʌltə/. A fine or final satisfaction, anciently given to the king by the bishops, that they might have power to make their wills, and that they might have the probate of other men’s wills, and the granting of administration. Called, also, multura episcopi.

A fine imposed ex arbitrio by magistrates on the praesides probinciarum.

Multa conceduntur per obliquum que non conceduntur de directo /mʌltə kəʊnˈsɛn(t)ər pər əbˈleɪkJkwəm kwiː nən kəʊnˈsɛn(t)ər dɪə dərəktəʊ/ /ˈmʌltə kəʊnˈsɛn(t)ər pər əbˈleɪkJkwəm kwiː nən kəʊnˈsɛn(t)ər dɪə dərəktəʊ/. Many things are allowed indirectly which are not allowed directly.

Multa fidem promissa levant /mʌltə fɛˈdɛm prəˈmɪsə ləvənt/ /ˈmʌltə fɛˈdɛm prəˈmɪsə ləvənt/. Many promises lessen confidence.

Multa ignorantius que nobis non lateret si veterum lectio nobis fuit familiaris /mʌltə ɪɡnərətjuːs kwiː nəbəs nən ləˈrɛt əʃ vəˈtərm kəlɛʃ(ə)wəʊ nəbəs fiˈwɜːt fæməlɪˈɛrəs/ /ˈmʌltə ɪɡnərətjuːs kwiː nəbəs nən ləˈrɛt əʃ vəˈtərm kəlɛʃ(ə)wəʊ nəbəs fiˈwɜːt fæməlɪˈɛrəs/. We are ignorant of many things which would not be hidden from us if the reading of old authors was familiar to us.

Multa in jure communi contra rationem disputandi, pro communi utilitate introducunt sunt /mʌltə ɪn dʒuːri kæməkwɔɪn kəntrə rəˈʃiʃəʊm dɪˈspɜːrwtəndə, prəʊ kæməkwɔɪn jwʊˈtwɪˈlɛdɪ ɪnˈtrədrəktsə sənt/ /ˈmʌltə ɪn dʒuːri kæməkwɔɪn kəntrə rəˈʃiʃəʊm dɪˈspɜːrwtəndə, prəʊ kæməkwɔɪn jwʊˈtwɪˈlɛdɪ ɪnˈtrədrəktsə sənt/. Many things have been introduced into the common law, with a view to the public good, which are inconsistent with sound reason.

Multa multo exercitatione facilus quam regulis percipies /mʌltə mʌltəʊ egˈzærstēˈʃiːvoʊni fasˈliːəs kwəm rəˈɡyləs pərˈsɪpiəliːz/. You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules.

Multa non vetat lex, que tamen tacite damnavit /mʌltə nən vəˈtət lɛks, kətəm təˈmən təˈmeɪt kəˈtəm dəˈmænəvət/ /ˈmʌltə nən vəˈtət lɛks, kətəm təˈmən təˈmeɪt kəˈtəm dəˈmænəvət/. The law forbids not many things which yet it has silently condemned.

Multa transeunt cum universitate que non per se transseunt /mʌltə trəˈznəliənt kəm ˈjuːnvrəsəti kətəˈn pər sə təˈznəliənt/ /ˈmʌltə trəˈznəliənt kəm ˈjuːnvrəsəti kətəˈn pər sə təˈznəliənt/. Many things pass with the whole which do not pass separately.

Multicraft union. A labor union which craftsmen in different trades may join.

Multidistrict litigation. When civil actions involving one or more common (and often complex) questions of fact are pending in several different federal district courts, such actions may be transferred to one district for coordinated and consolidated management and trial under a single judge. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1407. The types of cases in which massive filings of multi-district litigation are reasonably certain to occur include not only civil antitrust actions but also, common disaster (air crash) actions, patent and trademark suits, products liability actions and securities law violation actions, among others. Such cases are assigned and transferred by a Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, and are governed by the “Manual for Complex Litigation” and “Rules of Procedure of the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation.”

Multifariousness /mʌltəˈfəʃər(ə)siˈnəz/. In equity pleading, the misjoinder of causes of action in a bill. The fault of improperly joining in one bill distinct and independent matters, and thereby confounding them; as, for example, the uniting in one bill of several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected against one defendant (more commonly called misjoinder of claims), or the demand of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants, in the same bill. Essen v. Adams, 342 Mo. 1196, 119 S.W.2d 773, 777.

This problem does not generally arise in the federal courts or in the majority of state courts, for Rule of Civil Procedure 8(e) permits pleading of inconsistent claims or defenses and Rule 18(a) permits liberal joinder of independent or alternative claims. Civil Rule 18 permits a party to join, either as independent or as alternate claims, as many claims, legal, equitable, or maritime, as he has against an opposing party. Legislation. The joining, in a single legislative act, of dissimilar and discordant subjects, which, by no fair intention, can be considered as having a legitimate connection or relation to the subject of the act.

Multilateral agreement. An agreement among more than two persons, firms, or governments.

Mutli multa, nemo omnia novit /mʌltə mʌltə, nəˈmiː oʊmniə nəˈvɪt/ /ˈmʌltə mʌltə, nəˈmiː oʊmniə nəˈvɪt/. Many men have known many things; no one has known everything.
MULTINATIONAL

Multinational. In a strict sense this term is descriptive of a firm which has centers of operation in many countries in contrast to an "international" firm which does business in many countries but is based in only one country, though the terms are often used interchangeably.

Mutultipartite /məlˈtɪpərˈtɑːt/. Divided into many or several parts.

Multiple access. The defense of several lovers in paternity actions. Yarmark v. Strickland, Fla.App., 193 So.2d 212.

Multiple counts. A civil pleading (e.g. complaint) or a criminal indictment which contains several separate causes of action or crimes within the framework of one pleading. Joinder of multiple claims against opposing party is permitted under Fed.R.Civ.P. 18.

Multiple evidence. That which is admissible for a specific purpose to which it must be confined and inadmissible to prove a different fact.

Multiple listing. An agreement between the owner of real estate and a broker in which the broker will permit other brokers to sell property for a percentage of his commission or on some other basis satisfactory to the brokers. Device used by real estate brokers to give wide exposure to properties listed for sale whereby each cooperating broker informs all other participating brokers of properties listed with him. Grempler v. Multiple Listing Bureau of Harford County, Inc., 258 Md. 419, 266 A.2d 1, 3. See also Listing.

Multiple offenses. A single act may be an offense against two statutes, and if each statute requires proof of an additional fact which the other does not, an acquittal or conviction under either statute does not exempt the defendant from prosecution and punishment under the other. If there is identity between the two charges, the defendant may not be punished for both, though he may be punished for the more serious. Com. v. Kuklis, 361 Mass. 302, 280 N.E.2d 155.

Multiple-party accounts. A multiple-party account is any of the following types of account: (i) a joint account, (ii) a P.O.D. account, or (iii) a trust account. It does not include accounts established for deposit of funds of a partnership, joint venture, or other association for business purposes, or accounts controlled by one or more persons as the duly authorized agent or trustee for a corporation, unincorporated association, charitable or civic organization or a regular fiduciary or trust account where the relationship is established other than by deposit agreement. Uniform Probate Code, § 6-101(5).

Multiple sentences. If a defendant has been found guilty of more than one offense, he may be given consecutive ("on and after") sentences.

Multiplex et indistinctum partit confusionem; et questiones, quo simpliciores, eo lucidiores /məlˈtɪplɛks ɛd ɪndɪstɪŋktəm pərˈtɪt kəˈfjuːʒən(ə)m ɛt kəˈwɛsθ(ə)nɪˈmɪz, kəˈwɔːd ˈsɪmplɪsɪtərɪtɪz ˈljuːdəʊ kəˈkwɛdɪˈkɜːrɪz/. Multiplicity and indistinctness produce confusion; and questions, the more simple they are, the more lucid.

Multiplicata transgressione crescit pene infictio /məlˈtɪplɪkətə tɛnsgrɛʃənsi ˈkɛrɪst pɛnɛ ɪnfɪktiə(ʊ)ˈləʊ/. As transgression is multiplied, the infliction of punishment should increase.

Multiplicity /məlˈtɪplɪsɪdɪ/.
A state of being many.
That quality of a pleading which involves a variety of matters or particulars. A multiplying or increasing.

Multiplicity of actions, or suits. Numerous and unnecessary attempts to litigate the same right. A phrase descriptive of the situation where several different suits or actions are brought upon the same issue. The actions must be against a single defendant. Prospect Park & C. R. Co. v. Morey, 155 App.Div. 347, 140 N.Y.S. 380, 385. Under Civil Rules practice such claims should properly be joined or maintained as a single class action. Fed.R.Civ.P. 23.

Term "multiplicity" refers to the practice of charging the commission of a single offense in several counts. Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure have been drafted to discourage this practice. U. S. v. Allied Chemical Corp., D.C.Va., 420 F.Supp. 122, 123.

See Collateral estoppel doctrine; Final decision rule; Res (Res judicata).

Multitude. An assemblage of many people.

Multitudinem decem factunt /məltɪˈduːt(ə)ən ˈdekrənt. Ten makes a multitude.

Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocinium /məltɪˈduːtəʊ ˈɛrətəm ˈnɒn pərˈærtər patrəˈsiːnjʊm/. The multitude of those who err furnishes no countenance or excuse for error. It is no excuse for error that it is entertained by numbers.

Multitudo impertorium perdit curiam /məltɪˈduːtəʊ ˈɛmpətroʊrɪəm pərˈdɪt kəˈriəm/. A great number of unskilful practitioners ruins a court.

Multo utilius est paucia idonea effundere quam multus inutilibus homines gravari /məltuˈo ˈjuːtɪlɪəs ɛst ˈpɔːkə ɪˈdənə ˈɛfənˌdərə ˈkwæm ˈmʌltəs ɪnˈjuːətɪls ˈhəʊmɪniz ˈɡrævəri/. It is more useful to pour forth a few useful things than to oppress men with many useless things.

Multa episcopi /məltəˈkkɪsiˈpɪkəpi/. See Multa.

Mummification /məˈmɪfɪkəʃən/. The complete drying up of the body as the result of burial in a dry, hot soil, or the exposure of the body to a dry, cold atmosphere.

Mund. In old English law, peace; whence mundbryc, a breach of the peace.

Mundbyrd, mundeburde /mʌndˈbɜːrd/. A receiving into favor and protection.

Mundium /mʌnˈdiəm/. In old French law, a tribute paid by a church or monastery to their seignorial avoués and vidames, as the price of protecting them.

Munera /ˈmjuːnərə/. In the early ages of the feudal law, the name given to the grants of land made by a king or chieftain to his followers, which were held by no certain tenure, but merely at the will of the lord. Afterwards they became life-estates, and then hereditary, and were called first "benefices," and then "feuds."
Municipal, in narrower, more common, sense, it means pertaining to a local governmental unit, commonly, a city or town or other governmental unit. In its broader sense, it means pertaining to the public or governmental affairs of a state or nation or of a people. Chadwick v. City of Crawfordsville, 216 Ind. 399, 24 N.E.2d 937, 941, 942. Relating to a state or nation, particularly when considered as an entity independent of other states or nations. Hammel v. Little, 66 App.D.C. 356, 87 F.2d 907, 910.

Municipal action. Exercise of governmental power by a municipal board, agency, or other body, or by a municipal officer. Orme v. Atlas Gas & Oil Co., 217 Minn. 27, 15 N.W.2d 757, 761.

Municipal affairs. A term referring to the internal business affairs of a municipality. Griffin v. City of Los Angeles, 134 Cal.App. 763, 26 P.2d 655. The term is frequently used in constitutional and statutory provisions concerning the power to legislate as to the concerns of municipalities. And it has come to include public service activities, such as supplying water to the inhabitants, the construction of a reservoir for their benefit, the sale and distribution of electrical energy, and the establishment and operation of transportation service, which were once regarded as being of a strictly private nature. See also Municipal function.

Municipal aid. A contribution or assistance granted by a municipal corporation towards the execution or progress of some enterprise, undertaken by private parties, but likely to be of benefit to the municipality; e.g., urban redevelopment projects.

Municipal authorities. As used in statutes contemplating the consent of such authorities, the term means the consent by the legislative authorities of the city acting by ordinance; for example, in a town, the members of the town board.

Municipal bonds. Evidences of indebtedness issued by cities or other corporate public body, negotiable in form, payable at designated future time, and intended for sale in market with object of raising money for municipal expense, which is beyond immediate resources of reasonable taxation, as distinguished from temporary evidences of debt, such as vouchers, certificates of indebtedness, orders, or drafts drawn by one officer on another and similar devices for liquidating current obligations in anticipation of collection of taxes. A bond issued by a village, town, city, county, state, or other public body. Interest on such bonds is generally exempt from federal income taxes and from some state income taxes. Sometimes referred to as "tax exempts."

Municipal charter. A legislative enactment conferring governmental powers of the state upon its local agencies.

Municipal corporation. A legal institution formed by charter from sovereign (i.e. state) power erecting a populous community of prescribed area into a body politic and corporate with corporate name and continuous succession and for the purpose and with the authority of subordinate self-government and improvement and local administration of affairs of state. A body corporate consisting of the inhabitants of a designated area created by the legislature with or without the consent of such inhabitants for governmental purposes, possessing local legislative and administrative power, also power to exercise within such area so much of the administrative power of the state as may be delegated to it and possessing limited capacity to own and hold property and to act in purveyance of public conveniences.

Municipal corporation is a body politic and corporate, created to administer the internal concerns of the district embraced with its corporate limits, in matters peculiar to such place and not common to the state at large. Tribe v. Salt Lake City Corp., Utah, 540 P.2d 499, 502. A municipal corporation has a dual character, the one public and the other private, and exercises correspondingly twofold functions and duties—one class consisting of those acts performed by it in exercise of delegated sovereign powers for benefit of people generally, as arm of state, enforcing general laws made in pursuance of general policy of the state, and the other consisting of acts done in exercise of power of the municipal corporation for its own benefit, or for benefit of its citizens alone, or citizens of the municipal corporation and its immediate locality. Associated Enterprises, Inc. v. Toltec Watershed Imp. Dist., Wyo., 490 P.2d 1069, 1070.

Quasi municipal corporations. Bodies politic and corporate, created for the sole purpose of performing one or more municipal functions. Public corporations organized for governmental purposes and having for most purposes the status and powers of municipal corporations (such as counties, townships, school districts, drainage districts, irrigation districts, etc.), but not municipal corporations proper, such as cities and incorporated towns.

Municipal corporation de facto. One which exists when there is (1) some law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might lawfully have been created; (2) a colorable and bona fide attempt to perfect an organization under such a law; (3) user of the rights claimed to have been conferred by the law.

Municipal courts. In the judicial organization of several states, courts are established under this name with territorial authority confined to the city or community in which they are established. Such courts usually have a criminal jurisdiction corresponding to that of the police court, and, in some cases, possess civil jurisdiction in small causes. In certain cities, small claims or traffic courts are under the jurisdiction of the municipal court.

Municipal domicile. Sometimes used in contradistinction to "national domicile" and "quasi national domicile" to refer to residence in a county, township, or municipality; called also "domestic domicile."
Municipal election. One at which municipal officers are chosen.

Municipal function. One created or granted for the special benefit and advantage of the urban community embraced within the corporate boundaries. State ex rel. Gebhardt v. City Council of Helena, 102 Mont. 27, 55 P.2d 671, 673.

Municipal functions are those which specially and peculiarly promote the comfort, convenience, safety and happiness of the citizens of the municipality, rather than the welfare of the general public. Unless this class of functions are included, in most jurisdictions, the proper care of streets and alleys, parks and other public places, and the erection and maintenance of public utilities and improvements generally.

Municipal government. Instrumentalities of state for purpose of local government. Moore v. State, 159 Tenn. 468, 19 S.W.2d 233. This term, in certain state constitutions, embraces the governmental affairs of counties, and includes all forms of representative municipal government—towns, cities, villages, etc. See also Municipality.

Municipality. A legally incorporated or duly authorized association of inhabitants of limited area for local governmental or other public purposes. A body politic created by the incorporation of the people of a prescribed locality invested with subordinate powers of legislation to assist in the civil government of the state and to regulate and administer local and internal affairs of the community. State ex rel. McIntire v. City Council of City of Libby, 107 Mont. 216, 82 P.2d 587, 588. A city, borough, town, township or village. Also, the body of officers taken collectively, belonging to a city, who are appointed to manage its affairs and defend its interests.

Political subdivision or public agency or instrumentality of a State. Bankruptcy Act, § 101(29).

See also Person.

Municipal law. That which pertains solely to the citizens and inhabitants of a state, and is thus distinguished from political law, commercial law, and international law. City of Louisville v. Babb, C.C.A.Ind., 75 F.2d 162, 165. In its more common and narrower connotation however it means those laws which pertain to towns, cities and villages and their local government. People ex rel. Ray v. Martin, 294 N.Y. 61, 60 N.E.2d 541, 547, 548.

Municipal lien. A lien or claim existing in favor of a municipal corporation against a property owner for his proportionate share of a public improvement, made by the municipality, whereby his property is specially and individually benefited.

Municipal officer. One who holds an office of a municipality; e.g. mayor, city manager.

Municipal ordinance. A law, rule, or ordinance enacted or adopted by a municipal corporation for the proper conduct of its affairs or the government of its inhabitants; e.g. zoning or traffic ordinances, building codes. Particularly a regulation under a delegation of power from the state.

Municipal purposes. Public or governmental purposes as distinguished from private purposes. It may comprehend all activities essential to the health, morals, protection, and welfare of the municipality.

Municipal securities. The evidences of indebtedness issued by cities, towns, counties, townships, school districts, and other such territorial divisions of a state. They are of two general classes: (1) Municipal warrants, orders, or certificates; (2) municipal bonds.

The term "municipal securities" means securities which are direct obligations of, or obligations guaranteed as to principal or interest by, a State or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of a State or any political subdivision thereof, or any municipal corporate instrumentality of one or more States, or any security which is an industrial development bond (as defined in § 103(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) the interest on which is excludable from gross income. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 3.

See Municipal bonds; Municipal warrants.

Municipal warrants. A municipal warrant or order is an instrument drawn by an officer of a municipality upon its treasurer, directing him to pay an amount of money specified therein to the person named or his order, or to bearer.

Municiplum /myûwñasipiyəm/. In Roman law, a foreign town to which the freedom of the city of Rome was granted, and whose inhabitants had the privilege of enjoying offices and honors there. A free town which retained its original right of self-government, but whose inhabitants also acquired certain rights of Roman citizens.

Muniment-house, or muniment-room. A house or room of strength, in cathedrals, collegiate churches, castles, colleges, public buildings, etc., purposely made for keeping deeds, charters, writings, etc.

Muniments of title /myûwñmannts əw tāydl/. Documentary evidence of title. The instruments of writing and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has, by which he is enabled to defend the title of his estate. See Deed.

The records of title transactions in the chain of title of a person purporting to create the interest in land claimed by such person and upon which he relies as a basis for the marketability of his title, commencing with the root of title and including all subsequent transactions.

Under "muniment of title doctrine" when ownership of property has been litigated between individuals and title has been adjudicated in one of the parties, the losing party cannot relegate the matter with those who rely upon the title of the winning party. Purdes v. Carvel Hall, Inc., D.C.Iowa, 301 F.Supp. 1256, 1264.

Murder. The unlawful killing of a human being by another with malice aforethought, either express or implied. State v. Hutter, 145 Neb. 798, 18 N.W.2d 205. Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being, or fetus, with malice aforethought. Cal.Penal Code, § 187. The crime is defined by statute in most states. The Model Penal Code definition is as follows:

Criminal homicide constitutes murder when: (a) it is committed purposely or knowingly; or (b) it is... committed recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the values of human life. Such recklessness and indifference are presumed if the actor is engaged or is an accomplice in the commission of, or an attempt to commit, or flight after committing or attempting to commit robbery, rape or deviate sexual intercourse by force or threat of force, arson, burglary, kidnapping or felonious escape. Model Penal Code, § 210.2.

See also Assassination; Assault with intent to commit murder; Felony murder doctrine; Homicide; Manslaughter.

Degrees of murder. In most states murder is divided into two degrees, for the purpose of awarding a more severe penalty for some murders than for others. All murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery or burglary, are commonly deemed murder of the first degree; and all other kinds of murder are deemed murder of the second degree. This general pattern has been followed in most of the states although slight changes have been made in a few of these. Some, for example, have omitted any reference to “poison”, while a few have added “torture” to “poison”. To the felony-murder clause of the statute several have added “mayhem” and sometimes the inclusion of some other felony may be found, such as kidnapping, sodomy or larceny. In certain states there is also the crime of murder in the third degree.

Depraved heart murder. Killing of a human being accomplished by extreme atrocity; malice is inferred from the act of atrocity. Extremely negligent conduct, which creates what a reasonable man would realize to be not only an unjustifiable but also a very high degree of risk of death or serious bodily injury to another or to others—though unaccompanied by any intent to kill or do serious bodily injury—and which actually causes the death of another, may constitute murder.

Muderum /márdrum/. In old English law, the killing of a man in a secret manner. The fine formerly imposed in England upon a person who had committed homicide per infortunium or se defendendo.

Murorum operat4 /myúrórám ōpréýsh(y)ow/. Lat. The service of work and labor done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle; their personal service was commuted into murage (q.v.).

Must. This word, like the word “shall,” is primarily of mandatory effect, State ex rel. McCabe v. District Court of Third Judicial Dist. in and for Deer Lodge County, 106 Mont. 272, 76 P.2d 634, 637; and in that sense is used in antithesis to “may”. But this meaning of the word is not the only one, and it is often used in a merely directory sense, and consequently is a synonym for the word “may” not only in the permissive sense of that word, but also in the mandatory sense which it sometimes has.

Muster. To assemble together troops and their arms, whether for inspection, drill, or service in the field.

To take recruits into the service in the army and inscribe their names on the muster-roll or official record. To summon together; to enroll in service. In the latter sense the term implies that the persons mustered are not already in the service.

Muster-roll. In maritime law, a list or account of a ship’s company, required to be kept by the master or other person having care of the ship, containing the name, age, national character, and quality of every person employed in the ship. At time of war it is of great use in ascertaining the ship’s neutrality.

Mustizó /mástiýzow/. A name given in a South Carolina Act of 1740 to the issue of an Indian and a negro.

Mutatio nominis /myuwteýsh(y)ow nómámas/. Lat. In the civil law, change of name.

Mutatis mutandis /myuwteýdas myuwteýdas/. Lat. With the necessary changes in points of detail, meaning that matters or things are generally the same, but to be altered when necessary, as to names, offices, and the like. Housman v. Waterhouse, 191 App.Div. 850, 182 N.Y.S. 249, 251.

Mute. Speechless; dumb; that cannot or will not speak.

Mutiation. As applied to written documents, such as wills, court records, and the like, this term means rendering the document imperfect by the subtraction from it of some essential part, as, by cutting, tearing, burning, or erasure, but without totally destroying it. See U.C.C. § 3–407. Also, the alteration in the writing, as in a negotiable instrument, so as to make it another and different instrument and no longer evidence of the contract which the parties made. Clem v. Chapman, Tex.Civ.App., 262 S.W. 168, 171. See also Alteration; Deface; Spoliation.

In criminal law, the depriving a man of the use of any of those limbs which may be useful to him in fight, the loss of which amounts to mayhem. People v. Bullington, 27 Cal.App.2d 396, 80 P.2d 1030, 1032. See also Maim; Mayhem.

Mutinous. Insubordinate; disposed to mutiny; tending to incite or encourage mutiny.

Mutiny, v. To rise against lawful or constituted authority, particularly in the naval or military service.

Mutiny, n. In criminal law, an insurrection of soldiers or seamen against the authority of their commanders; a sedition or revolt in the army or navy. One is guilty of mutiny who with intent to usurp or override lawful military authority refuses in concert with any other person or persons to obey orders or otherwise do his duty or creates any violation or disturbance. 10 U.S.C.A. § 894. (Uniform Code of Military Justice, Art 94.) See also Desertion.

Mutiny Act. In English law, an act of parliament annually passed to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters. It was first passed April 12, 1689, and was the only provision for the payment of the army. 1 Bl.Comm. 419.

Mutual. Common to both parties. Interchangeable; reciprocal; each acting in return or correspondence to the other; given and received;—spoken of an engagement or relation in which like duties and obligations are exchanged; e.g., the marital relation.

As to mutual Account; Assent; Combat; Condition; Contract; Covenant; Credits; Debt; Insurance; Insurance (Mutual insurance); Mistake; Promise; and Testament, see those titles. See also Mutualy.

Mutual fray. A fight in which both parties willingly enter and is similar to a duel. Taylor v. Commonwealth, 281 Ky. 442, 136 S.W.2d 544.

Mutual agreement. A meeting of the minds on a specific subject, and a manifestation of intent of the parties to do or refrain from doing some specific act or acts. See Agreement; Contract; Treaty.

Mutual benefit association. One based on reciprocal contracts and requires that a member receive benefits as a matter of right. In re Henderson’s Estate, 17 Cal.2d 853, 112 P.2d 605, 609. Commonly a fraternal or social organization which provides insurance for its members on an assessment basis.

Mutual benefit insurance. Type of insurance offered to members of a mutual benefit association commonly characterized by assessment of members to meet claims. See Mutual benefit association.

Mutual company. A corporation in which shares are held exclusively by members to whom profits are distributed as dividends in proportion to the business which the members did with the company. One in which the members are both the insurers and the insured. Pink v. Town Taxi Co., 138 Me. 44, 21 A.2d 656, 659.

Mutual demands. Those between the same parties and due in the same capacity or right. Thompson v. Prince, Tex.Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 574, 576.

Mutual fund. An investment company that raises money by selling its own stock to the public and investing the proceeds in other securities, with the value of its stock fluctuating with its experience with the securities in its portfolio. Mutual funds are of two types: "open-end," in which capitalization is not fixed and more shares may be sold at any time, and "closed-end," in which capitalization is fixed and only the number of shares originally authorized may be sold.

See also Investment company; Open-end investment company.

Load fund. Type of open-end investment trust in which a charge is made at time of purchase of shares to cover administrative and commission expenses.

No-load fund. A mutual fund that has no service charge for buying its shares.

Mutual insurance company. Type of insurance company in which there is no capital stock and in which the policyholders are the owners. See also Insurance (Mutual insurance).

Mutuality. Reciprocation; interchange. An acting by each of two parties; an acting in return. "Mutuality of contract" means that obligation rests on each party to do or permit doing of something in consideration of other party’s act or promise; neither party being bound unless both are bound. Aden v. Dalton, 341 Mo. 454, 107 S.W.2d 1070, 1073. Called, also, mutuality of obligation. United Appliance Corporation v. Boyd, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W.2d 760, 764.

As to mutuality of "Assent," "Mistake," etc., see those titles.

Mutuality doctrine. Doctrine in equity to the effect that equitable relief will be denied a party to a contract on a showing that the plaintiff is not bound to the same extent as the defendant in fulfilling the contract. In another context, it refers to the obligation of a meeting of the minds before a contract can be found.

Mutuality of obligation. Mutuality of obligation requires that unless both parties to a contract are bound, neither is bound. Sala & Ruthe Realty, Inc. v. Campbell, 89 Nev. 483, 515 P.2d 394, 396. Mutuality of obligation as pertains to executory contract requires that each party to agreement be bound to perform, and if it appears that one party was never bound to do the acts which formed the consideration for promise of the other, there is lack of mutuality of obligation and other party is not bound. McCandies v. Schick, 85 Idaho 509, 380 P.2d 893, 898.

Mutuality of remedy. In equity, one party to a contract may not have equitable relief if he is not bound by the contract to the same extent as the other party, or if his remedy is not co-extensive. Generally, specific performance will be granted only where there is "mutuality of remedy", which means that right to performance must be mutual. Burr v. Greenland, Tex. Civ.App., 358 S.W.2d 370, 375.

Mutual mistake. One common to both contracting parties, wherein each labors under same misconception as to past or existing material fact. Artman v. O’Brien, Mo.App., 398 S.W.2d 24, 27. Mutual mistake with regard to contract exists where there has been a meeting of the minds of the parties and an agreement actually entered into but the agreement in its written form does not express what was really intended by the parties. Sierra Blanca Sales Co., Inc. v. Newco Industries, Inc., App., 84 N.M. 524, 505 F.2d 867, 873.

Mutual relief association. An insurer, chartered under a designated statute, having no capital stock, having relief funds created and sustained by assessments made upon the members, which files reports with insurance commissioner evidencing that it is not conducted for profit of its officers. State v. Texas Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 51 S.W.2d 405, 412.

Mutual reserve company. A company issuing "benefit trust certificates" containing both savings features and renewable term insurance features, paid for by a single premium, with cash and loan values and limitation upon the expense liable for cost of supervision and management, was a "mutual reserve company".

Mutual savings bank. A bank organized by depositors, whose interest is shown by certificates of deposit, for the purpose of furnishing a safe depositary for savings of members. It need not be incorporated or under supervision unless state law so requires. A-C Investment Ass’n v. Helvering, 62 App.D.C. 339, 68 F.2d 386, 387. A banking institution in which the depositors are the owners and which has no capital stock.
See also Savings and Loan Association.

Mutual wills. Those made as the separate wills of two people which are reciprocal in provision. Or those executed pursuant to agreement or compact between two or more persons to dispose of their property in particular manner, each in consideration of the other.
See Reciprocal wills.

Mutuant. The person who lends chattels in the contract of mutuum (q.v.).

Mutuar /myúwchuwéray/. To borrow; mutuatus, a borrowing.

Mutuary /myúwchuwérhiy/. A person who borrows personal chattels to be consumed by him and returned to the lender in kind and quantity; the bor-rrower in a contract of mutuum.

Mutuatus /myúwchuwédas/. A loan of money.

Mutus et surdus /myúw dés et sár dés/. Lat. In civil and old English law, dumb and deaf.

Mutuum /myúwchuwam/. Lat. A loan for consumption; a loan of chattels, upon an agreement that the borrower may consume them, returning to the lender an equivalent in kind and quantity; as, a loan of corn, wine, or money which is to be used or consumed, and is to be replaced by other corn, wine, or money. In re Ellis' Estate, 24 Del.Ch. 393, 6 A.2d 602, 611. At common law, such a transaction is regarded as a sale or exchange, and not a bailment. See also Loan for exchange; Loan for use.

Mysterious disappearance. Term refers to theft insurance policy provision covering any disappearance or loss under unknown, puzzling or baffling circumstances which arouse wonder, curiosity or speculation, or circumstances which are difficult to understand or explain. Claiborne v. U. S. Fire Ins. Co.,

Mystery. A trade, art, or occupation. Masters fre-cently bind themselves in the indentures with their apprentices to teach them their art, trade, and mystery.
N.A. An abbreviation for "non allocatur"; it is not allowed. Also sometimes used as abbreviation for "not available" or "not applicable".

Naam /náəm/ . Sax. The attaching or taking of movable goods and chattels, called "vif" or "mort" according as the chattels were living or dead.

Naît /náyɛt/ . L. Fr. A villein; a born slave; a bondwoman.

Nail. A lineal measure of two inches and a quarter.

Naked. Bare; wanting in necessary conditions; incomplete, as a naked contract (nudum pactum), i.e., a contract devoid of consideration, and therefore invalid; or, simple, unilateral, comprising but a single element, as a naked authority, i.e., one which is not coupled with any interest in the agent, but subsists for the benefit of the principal alone.

As to naked Confession; Deposit; Possession; Possibility; Power; Promise; and Trust, see those titles.

Nam /nəm/ . In old English law, a distress or seizure of chattels.

As a Latin conjunction, for; because. Often used by the old writers in introducing the quotation of a Latin maxim.

Namare /næmɛɾɪ/ . L. Lat. In old English law, to take, seize or distraint.

Namatio /næmæʃ(i)yɔw/ . L. Lat. In old English and Scotch law, a distrainting or taking of a distress; an impounding.

Name. The designation of an individual person, or of a firm or corporation.

A person's "name" consists of one or more Christian or given names and one surname or family name. It is the distinctive characterization in words by which one is known and distinguished from others, and description, or abbreviation, is not the equivalent of a "name."

See also Alias; Christian name; Corporate name; Fictitious name; Full name; Generic (Generic name); Legal name; Nickname; Street name; Surname; Tradename.

Corporate name. Most states require corporations doing business under an assumed or fictitious name to register, record, or register and record, the name with state, county, or state and county officials.

Distinctive name. As used in regulation of United States Department of Agriculture, a trade, arbitrary, or fancy name which clearly distinguishes a food product, mixture, or compound from any other food product, mixture, or compound. U. S. v. Forty Barrels and Twenty Kegs of Coca Cola, 241 U.S. 265, 36 S.Ct. 573, 580, 60 L.Ed. 995.

Generic name. The general or nontrademark name of a product. For example, the trade names of a particular type of fiber may be Antron, Cantrece, Qiana; but the generic name of that fiber is nylon.

Name and arms clause. The popular name in English law for the clause, sometimes inserted in a will or settlement by which property is given to a person, for the purpose of imposing on him the condition that he shall assume the surname and arms of the testator or settlor, with a direction that, if he neglects to assume or discontinues the use of them, the estate shall devolve on the next person in remainder, and a proviso for preserving contingent remainders.

Named insured. In insurance, the person specifically designated in the policy as the one protected and, commonly, it is the person with whom the contract of insurance has been made.

Namely. A difference, in grammatical sense, in strictness exists between the words namely and including. Namely imports interpretation, i.e., indicates what is included in the previous term; but including imports addition, i.e., indicates something not included.

Namium /nɛ̃jɪmɪəm/ . L. Lat. In old English law, a taking; a distress. Things, goods, or animals taken by way of distress. Simpex namium, a simple taking or pledge.

Namium vetium /nɛ̃jɪmɪam ˈvɛ́dədam/ . An unjust taking of the cattle of another and driving them to an unlawful place, pretending damage done by them.

Nantissemment /nɔ̃tɪsmɔ̃/ . In French law, the contract of pledge; if of a movable, it is called "gage;" and if of an immovable, it is called "antichrèse."

Narcoanalysis. Process whereby a subject is put to sleep, or into a semi-somnolent state by means of chemical injections and then interrogated while in this dreamlike state.

Narcotic. Generic term for any drug which dulls the senses or induces sleep and which commonly becomes addictive after prolonged use.
NAR. National Association of Realtors.

Narr. A common abbreviation of "narratio" (q.v.). A declaration in an action.

Narr and cognovit law. Law providing that judgment may be had for plaintiff on notes by confession of any attorney that amount shown on notes, together with interest and costs, constitutes legal and just claim; word "narr" being an abbreviation of Latin word "narratio," meaning complaint or petition, and word "cognovit" meaning that defendant has confessed judgment and justice of claim. Dyer v. Johnson, Tex.Civ.App., 19 S.W.2d 421, 422. See Judgment (Confession of judgment).

Narratio /nærēysh(i)yəw/. Lat. One of the common law names for a plaintiff's count or declaration, as being a narrative of the facts on which he relies.

Narrative evidence. Testimony from a witness which he is permitted to give without the customary questions and answers; e.g. when witness explains in detail what happened without interruption.

Narrator. A counter; a pleader who draws narrs. Serviens narrator, a serjeant at law.

Narrow seas. Those seas which run between two coasts not far apart. The term is sometimes applied to the English channel.

NASA. National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Nasciturus /nās(t)yərəs/. Lat. That shall hereafter be born. A term used in marriage settlements to designate the future issue of the marriage, as distinguished from "natus," a child already born.

NASD. The National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc. An association of brokers and dealers in the over-the-counter securities business. The Association has the power to expel members who have been declared guilty of unethical practices.

Natale /nätələ/. The state and condition of a man acquired by birth.

Nati et nascitur /nē’dəyət nē’s(t)yərəy/. Born and to be born. All heirs, near and remote.

Natio /nē’yəsh(i)yəw/. In old records, a native place.

Nation. A people, or aggregation of men, existing in the form of an organized jural society, usually inhabiting a distinct portion of the earth, speaking the same language, using the same customs, possessing historic continuity, and distinguished from other like groups by their racial origin and characteristics, and generally, but not necessarily, living under the same government and sovereignty. Montoya v. U.S., 180 U.S. 261, 21 S.Ct. 358, 45 L.Ed. 521; Worcester v. Georgia, 31 U.S. (6 Pet.) 515, 8 L.Ed. 483.

In American constitutional law the word "state" is applied to the several members of the American Union, while the word "nation" is applied to the whole body of the people embraced within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

National. Pertaining or relating to a nation as a whole. Commonly applied in American law to institutions, laws, or affairs of the United States or its government, as opposed to those of the several states. "National" contemplates an activity with a nationwide scope. In re National Foundation for Diarrheal Diseases, 8 Misc.2d 12, 164 N.Y.S.2d 177, 178. See also Federal.

The term "national" as used in the phrase "national of the United States" is broader than the term "citizen." Brassert v. Biddle, D.C.Conn., 59 F.Supp. 457, 462.

National bank. A bank incorporated and doing business under the laws of the United States, as distinguished from a state bank, which derives its powers from the authority of a particular state. Most such banks are members of the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

National currency. Legal tender; that which circulates as money. Notes issued by national banks, and by the United States government. See Currency; Federal Reserve notes; Legal tender.

National debt. The money owing by government to some of the public or to financial institutions, the interest of which is paid out of the taxes raised by the whole of the public (i.e. out of general revenues).

National defense. A generic concept and refers to the military and naval establishments and the related activities of national preparedness and includes all matters directly and reasonably connected with the defense of the nation against its enemies. Gorin v. United States, 312 U.S. 19, 61 S.Ct. 429, 434, 436, 85 L.Ed. 488.

National domain. See Domain.

National domicile. See Domicile.

National emergency. A state of national crisis; a situation demanding immediate and extraordinary national or federal action. Congress has made little or no distinction between a "state of national emergency" and a "state of war." Brown v. Bernstein, D.C.Pa., 49 F.Supp. 728, 732.

National Environmental Policy Act. Federal Act setting forth declaration of national environmental policy and goals. Major provision requires that every federal agency submit an environmental impact statement with every legislative recommendation or program affecting the quality of the environment. See Environmental impact statements.

National government. The government of a whole nation, as distinguished from that of a state, local or territorial division of the nation, and also as distinguished from that of a league or confederation. Commonly referred to as the "federal government".

National Guard. Organization of men maintained as a reserve for the U.S. Army and Air Force. Members serve on a state-wide basis but are subject to being activated for federal service as well as for state emergencies.

Nationality. That quality or character which arises from the fact of a person's belonging to a nation or state. Nationality determines the political status of the individual, especially with reference to allegiance; while domicile determines his civil status. Nationality arises either by birth or by naturalization. See also Naturalization.

Nationality Act. Shortened name for Immigration and Nationality Act which is a comprehensive federal statute embracing such matters as immigration, naturalization and admission of aliens. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101 et seq.

Naturalization. The acquisition and control of privately owned business by government. See also Denationalization.

National Labor Relations Act. A federal statute known as the Wagner Act of 1935 and amended by the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947; it is comprehensive legislation regulating the relations between employers and employees, and establishing National Labor Relations Board. 29 U.S.C.A.

National Labor Relations Board. The National Labor Relations Board is an independent agency created by the National Labor Relations Act of 1935 (Wagner Act), as amended by the acts of 1947 (Taft-Hartley Act) and 1959 (Landrum-Griffin Act).

The Board has two principal functions under the act: preventing and remedying unfair labor practices by employers and labor organizations or their agents; and conducting secret ballot elections among employees in appropriate collective-bargaining units to determine whether or not they desire to be represented by a labor organization. The Board also conducts secret ballot elections among employees who have been covered by a union-shop agreement to determine whether or not they wish to revoke their union's authority to make such agreements; in jurisdictional disputes, decides and determines which competing group of workers is entitled to perform the work involved; and conducts secret ballot elections among employees concerning employers' final settlement offers in national emergency labor disputes.

The Board's major responsibilities are: (1) the mediation of disputes over wages, hours, and working conditions which arise between rail and air carriers and organizations representing their employees, and (2) the investigation of representation disputes and certification of employee organizations as representatives of crafts or classes of carrier employees.

National origin. Term "national origin," within equal employment provision prohibiting discrimination based upon national origin, refers not to alienage, but to country where a person was born, or, more broadly, country from which his or her ancestors came. Jones v. United Gas Imp. Corp., D.C.Pa., 68 F.R.D. 1, 20.

National Service Life Insurance. Special type of life insurance for military and naval personnel during and after their service created by the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940 and containing highly favorable rates and terms.

Nations, law of. See International law.

Native. A natural-born subject or citizen; a citizen by birth; one who owes his domicile or citizenship to the fact of his birth within the country referred to. The term may also include one born abroad, if his parents were then citizens of the country, and not permanently residing in foreign parts. U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 849, 18 S.Ct. 456, 42 L.Ed. 890.

The word "natives", as used in Alien Enemy Act, refers to person's place of birth, so that a person remains a native of country of his birth, though he has moved away therefrom. United States ex rel. D'Esquiva v. Uhl, C.C.A. N.Y., 137 F.2d 903, 905.

Native born. See Native.

Nativi conventionari /natáyvay kanvêns(h)y)anêriyay/. Villeins or bondmen by contract or agreement.

Nativi de stipite /natáyvay diyi stipódîy/. Villeins or bondmen by birth or stock.

Nativitas /nativitâs/. Villenage; that state in which men were born slaves.

Nativo habendo /natáyvow habéndow/. In old English law, a writ which lay for a lord when his villein had run away from him. It was directed to the sheriff, and commanded him to apprehend the villein, and to restore him together with his goods to the lord.

Nativus /natáyvas/. Lat. In old English law, a native; specifically, one born into a condition of servitude; a born serf or villein.

Natura appetite perfectum; ita et lex /nachúrâ apédat prêfektom; áyda est léks/. Nature covets perfection; so does law also.

Nature vis maxima; natura bis maxima /nachúriy vis máksâma; nachûri bâs máksâma/. The force of nature is greatest; nature is doubly great.

Natura fide jussioâis sit strictissimi juris et non durat vel extendatur de re ad rem, de personâ ad personam, de tempore ad tempus /nâtyûrâ fâdyî jásîyówâs siit strîkstîsismây jûras êt nôn dyûrât vel èkstendèdêyár dîy rîy ëd rêm, dîy persôwén ëd persôwnâm, dîy têmpôrîy ëd têmpas/. The nature of the contract of suretyship is strictissimi juris, and cannot endure nor be extended from thing to thing, from person to person, or from time to time.

Natural. The juristic meaning of this term does not differ from the vernacular, except in the cases where it is used in opposition to the term "legal;" and then it means proceeding from or determined by physical causes or conditions, as distinguished from positive enactments of law, or attributable to the nature of man rather than to the commands of law, or based upon moral rather than legal considerations or sanctions.

As to natural Allegiance; Boundary; Channel; Child; Day; Death; Domicile; Equity; Fruit; Guardian; Heirs; Infancy; Liberty; Obligation; Person; Possession; Presumption; Rights; Succession; Watercourse, and Year, see those titles.

Natural affection. Such as naturally subsists between near relatives, as a father and child, brother and sister, husband and wife. This is regarded in law as a good consideration.
NATURAL RIGHTS

Natural and probable consequences. Those consequences that a person by prudent human foresight can anticipate as likely to result from an act, because they happen so frequently from the commission of such an act that in the field of human experience they may be expected to happen again. Pope v. Pinkerton-Hays Lumber Co., Fla.App., 120 So.2d 227, 230.

Natural-born subject. In English law, one born within the dominions, or rather within the allegiance, of the king of England.

Naturale est quidlibet dissolvi eo modo quo ligatur /nachareylv ést kwidlabat dazovavy iyov mówdog kwów lagéyda/. It is natural for a thing to be unbound in the same way in which it was bound.

Natural flood channel. A channel beginning at some point on banks of stream and ending at some other point lower down stream, through which flood waters naturally flow at times of high water. C. M. Bott Furniture Co. v. City of Buffalo, 131 Misc. 624, 227 N.Y.S. 660, 665.

Naturalization. The process by which a person acquires nationality after birth and becomes entitled to the privileges of citizenship. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1101 et seq.

In the United States collective naturalization occurs when designated groups are made citizens by treaty (as Louisiana Purchase), or by a law of Congress (as in annexation of Texas and Hawaii). Individual naturalization must follow certain steps: (a) petition for naturalization by a person of lawful age who has been a lawful resident of the United States for 5 years; (b) investigation by the Immigration and Naturalization Service to determine whether the applicant can speak and write the English language, has a knowledge of the fundamentals of American government and history, is attached to the principles of the Constitution and is of good moral character; (c) hearing before a U.S. District Court or certain State courts of record; and (d) after a lapse of at least 30 days a second appearance in court when the oath of allegiance is administered.

Naturalization clause. The Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, Section 1, provides that all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States, and of the State wherein they reside.

Naturalization courts. Both federal and state courts of record have jurisdiction over naturalization matters. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1421.

Naturalized citizen. One who, being an alien by birth, has received citizenship under naturalization laws.

Natural law. This expression, "natural law," or jus naturale, was largely used in the philosophical speculations of the Roman jurists of the Antonine age, and was intended to denote a system of rules and principles for the guidance of human conduct which, independently of enacted law or of the systems peculiar to any one people, might be discovered by the rational intelligence of man, and would be found to grow out of and conform to his nature, meaning by that word his whole mental, moral, and physical constitution. The point of departure for this conception was the Stoic doctrine of a life ordered "according to nature," which in its turn rested upon the purely supposititious existence, in primitive times, of a "state of nature:" that is, a condition of society in which men universally were governed solely by a rational and consistent obedience to the needs, impulses, and promptings of their true nature, such nature being as yet undefaced by dishonesty, falsehood, or indulgence of the baser passions. In ethics, it consists in practical universal judgments which man himself elicits. These express necessary and obligatory rules of human conduct which have been established by the author of human nature as essential to the divine purposes in the universe and have been promulgated by God solely through human reason.

Natural life. The period of a person's existence considered as continuing until terminated by physical dissolution or death occurring in the course of nature; used in contradistinction to that juristic and artificial conception of life as an aggregate of legal rights or the possession of a legal personality, which could be terminated by "civil death" (q.v.), that is, that extinction of personality which resulted from entering a monastery or being attained of treason or felony.

Natural monument. Objects permanent in character which are found on the land as they were placed by nature, such as streams, lakes, ponds, shores, and beaches, sometimes including highways and streets, walls, fences, trees, hedges, springs, and rocks, and the like.

Natural object of testator's bounty. In testamentary law, term comprises whoever would take, in the absence of a will, because they are the persons whom the law has so designated, and in the ordinary case the law follows the normal condition of near relationship.

Natural objects. In interpretation of boundaries term includes mountains, lakes, rivers, etc. See also Natural monument.

Natural premium. Actual sum necessary to meet maturing death claims each year and is necessarily exceeded by the "net premium." Fox v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 107 F.2d 715, 718.

Natural resources. Any material in its native state which when extracted has economic value. Timberland, oil and gas wells, ore deposits, and other products of nature that have economic value. The cost of natural resources is subject to depletion. Often called "wasting assets."

The term includes not only timber, gas, oil, coal, minerals, lakes, and submerged lands, but also, features which supply a human need and contribute to the health, welfare, and benefit of a community, and are essential to the well-being thereof and proper enjoyment of property devoted to park and recreational purposes.

Natural rights. Those which grow out of nature of man and depend upon his personality and are distinguished from those which are created by positive laws enacted by a duly constituted government to create an orderly civilized society. In re Gogabashvele's Estate, 195 Cal.App.2d 503, 16 Cal.Rptr. 77, 91.
Natura non facit saltum; ita nec lex /nachúra nōn féysát sóltam; aýda nēk léks/ Nature makes no leap [no sudden or irregular movement]; so neither does law.
Applied in old practice to the regular observance of the degrees in writs of entry, which could not be passed over per saltem.

Natura non facit vacuum, nec lex supremacuum /nachúra nōn féysát věkyúvam, nēk léks s(y)úvpar-věkyúvam/. Nature makes no vacuum, the law nothing purposeless.

Natus /néýdas/. Lat. Born, as distinguished from nas-citurus, about to be born. Ante natus, one born before a particular person or event, e.g., before the death of his father, before a political revolution, etc. Post natus, one born after a particular person or event.

Naucerus /nóklíras/. Lat. In the civil law, the master or owner of a merchant vessel.

Naulage /nólíj/. The freight of passengers in a ship.

Naulum /nólam/. In the civil law, the freight or fare for the transportation of cargo or passengers over the sea in a vessel. This is a Latinized form of a Greek word.

Nauta /nóda/. Lat. In the civil and maritime law, a sailor; one who works a ship. Any one who is on board a ship for the purpose of navigating her. The employer of a ship.

Nautical. Pertaining to ships or to the art of navigation or the business of carriage by sea. See also Marine.

Nautical assessors. Experienced shipmasters, or other persons having special knowledge of navigation or nautical affairs, who are called to the assistance of a court of admiralty, in difficult cases involving questions of negligence, and who sit with the judge during the argument, and give their advice upon questions of seamanship or the weight of testimony.

Nautical mile. See Mile.

Nautica pecunia /nódkay pókýwúm(j)ýa/. A loan to a shipowner, to be repaid only upon the successful termination of the voyage, and therefore allowed to be made at an extraordinary rate of interest (nauticum fænus).

Nauticum fænus /nódkam fýnas/. Lat. In the civil law, nautical or maritime interest; an extraordinary rate of interest agreed to be paid for the loan of money on the hazard of a voyage; corresponding to interest on contracts of bottomry or respondentia in English and American maritime law.

Navagium /navýj(i)am/. In old English law, a duty on certain tenants to carry their lord's goods in a ship.

Naval. Appertaining to the navy (q.v.).

Naval base. See Base.

Naval law. The system of regulations and principles for the government of the navy. See also Code of Military Justice.

Navarchus /návárkás/. In the civil law, the master or commander of a ship; the captain of a man-of-war.

Navicularius /navikyálérying/. In the civil law, the master or captain of a ship.

Navigable. Capable of being navigated; that which may be navigated or passed over by ships or vessels. Natcher v. City of Bowling Green, 264 Ky., 584, 95 S.W.2d 255, 259. The term at common law was understood in a more restricted sense, viz., subject to the ebb and flow of the tide. Luscher v. Reynolds, 153 Or. 625, 56 P.2d 1158, 1162. See also Navigable waters.

Navigable in fact. Streams or lakes are navigable in fact when they are used or are susceptible of being used in their natural and ordinary condition as highways for commerce over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water. Taylor Fishing Club v. Ham-mett, Tex.Civ.App., 88 S.W.2d 127, 129. See also Navigable waters.

Navigable river or stream. At common law, a river or stream in which the tide ebbs and flows, or as far as the tide ebbs and flows. But as to the definition in American law, see Navigable, supra.

Navigable waters. Those waters which afford a channel for useful commerce.

Any body of water, navigable in fact, which by itself or by uniting with other waters forms a continued highway over which commerce may be carried on with other states or countries. United States v. Appalachian Electric Power Co., 311 U.S. 377, 61 S.Ct. 291, 85 L.Ed. 243, rehearing denied 312 U.S. 712, 61 S.Ct. 548, 85 L.Ed. 1143, petition denied 317 U.S. 594, 63 S.Ct. 67, 87 L.Ed. 487. Waters are navigable in fact when used or susceptible of use in their ordinary condition as highways for commerce. United States v. Oregon, 295 U.S. 1, 55 S.Ct. 610, 79 L.Ed. 1663.

A water is "navigable," for purposes of admiralty jurisdiction, provided that it is used or susceptible of being used as an artery of commerce. Adams v. Montana Power Co., C.A.Mont., 528 F.2d 437, 440. Rivers are "navigable" in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition as highways for commerce over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water. Madole v. Johnson, D.C.Ca., 241 F.Supp. 379, 381.

Navigable waters of the United States. Waters are "navigable waters of the United States" when they form in their ordinary condition by themselves, or by uniting with other waters, a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other states or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water. United States v. Appalachian Electric Power Co., D.C.Va., 23 F.Supp. 83. Navigable waters of the United States are only those waters in or adjacent to states and territories and the District of Columbia. 33 U.S.C.A. § 902(9).

Navigate. To journey by water; to go in a vessel; to sail or manage a vessel; to use the waters as a highway for commerce or communication; to ply. To direct one's course through any medium; to steer, especially to operate an airplane or airship. United States v. Monstad, C.C.A.Cal., 134 F.2d 986, 987, 988.
Navigation. The act or the science or the business of traversing the sea or other navigable waters in ships or vessels. The Silvia, 171 U.S. 462, 19 S.Ct. 7, 43 L.Ed. 241.

Regular navigation. In this phrase, the word "regular" may be used in contradistinction to "occasional," rather than to "unlawful," and refer to vessels that, alone or with others, constitute lines, and not merely to such as are regular in the sense of being properly documented under the laws of the country to which they belong.

Rules of navigation. Rules and regulations adopted by commercial nations to govern the steering and management of vessels approaching each other at sea so as to avoid the danger of collision or fouling.

Navigational visibility. Visibility as affecting speed with reference to distance within which boat in fog could be brought to stop, before any course of any vessel emerging from fog on either side would cross her projected course alongside the fog bank at its nearest point. The Silver Palm, C.C.A.Cal., 94 F.2d 754, 767.

Navis /nēvās/. Lat. A ship; a vessel.

Navy. A fleet of ships; the aggregate of vessels of war belonging to a nation. In a broader sense, and as equivalent to "naval forces," the entire corps of officers and men enlisted in the naval service and who man the public ships of war, including in this sense, in the United States, the officers and men of the Marine Corps. Wilkes v. Dinsman, 48 U.S. (7 How.) 89, 12 L.Ed. 618; U. S. v. Dunn, 120 U.S. 249, 7 S.Ct. 507, 30 L.Ed. 667. One of the Armed Forces of the United States.

Navy Department. Part of the Department of Defense, presided over by the Secretary of the Navy, who is responsible to the Secretary of Defense for the operation and efficiency of the Navy. (10 U.S.C.A. § 5031). The primary mission of the Navy is to protect the United States, as directed by the President or the Secretary of Defense, by the effective prosecution of war at sea including, with its Marine Corps component, the seizure or defense of advanced naval bases; to support, as required, the forces of all military departments of the United States; and maintain freedom of the seas.

Nazeranna /nēzarānā/. In old English law, a sum paid to government as an acknowledgment for a grant of lands, or any public office.

N.B. An abbreviation for "nota bene." mark well, observe; also "nulla bona," no goods.

N.C.D. Nemin contra dicente. No one dissenting.

N.D. An abbreviation for "Northern District," e.g. U.S. District Court for Northern District of N.Y.

Ne admissas /nē admissās/. Lat. In ecclesiastical law, the name of a prohibitory writ, directed to the bishop, at the request of the plaintiff or defendant, where a square impedit is pending, when either party fears that the bishop will admit the other's clerk pending the suit between them.

Neap tide /nēyp tāyd/-. When the moon is in its first and third quarters, the tides do not rise as high, nor fall as low, as at such times the tides are known as "neap tides." Borax Consolidated v. City of Los Angeles, Cal., 296 U.S. 10, 56 S.Ct. 23, 80 L.Ed. 9.

Near. Proximate; close-by; about; adjacent; contiguous; abutting. The word as applied to space is a relative term without positive or precise meaning, depending for its signification on the subject-matter in relation to which it is used and the circumstances under which it becomes necessary to apply it to surrounding objects. Closely akin or related by blood; as, near relative. Close to one's interests and affections, etc.; touching or affecting intimately, as one's near affairs, friends. Not far distant in time, place or degree; not remote; adjoining. Zeigenfus v. Snelbaker, 38 N.J.Super. 304, 118 A.2d 876, 879.

Near money. Liquid assets which are readily convertible into money.

Neat, net. The clear weight or quantity of an article, without the bag, box, keg, or other thing in which it may be enveloped.

Ne bāla pas /nē bēlā pā-. L. Fr. He did not deliver. A plea in detinue, denying the delivery to the defendant of the thing sued for.

Necation. The act of killing.

Nec curia deficeret in justitia exhibenda /nēk kyūriya dafisare it jastisṭiˈiya āgzbēndā-. Nor should the court be deficient in showing justice.

Necessaries. An article which a party actually needs. State v. Earnest, Mo.App., 162 S.W.2d 338, 341. Things indispensable, or things proper and useful, for the sustenance of human life.

The word has no hard and fast meaning, but varies with the accustomed manner of living of the parties. Smitti v. Roth Cadillac Co., 145 Pa.Super. 292, 21 A.2d 127, 130. Word includes not only those services which are proper and required to sustain life but also those suitable for the individual involved according to his circumstances and condition in life. Trask v. Davis, Mo.App., 297 S.W.2d 792.

Necessaries consist of food, drink, clothing, medical attention, and a suitable place of residence, and they are regarded as necessaries in the absolute sense of the word. However, liability for necessaries is not limited to articles required to sustain life; it extends to articles which would ordinarily be necessary and suitable, in view of the rank, position, fortune, earning capacity, and mode of living of the husband or father.

Whether attorney's services are to be considered "necessaries" depends on whether there is necessity therefor. Fenn v. Hart Dairy Co., 231 Mo.App. 1005, 83 S.W.2d 120, 124. But such services are usually "necessaries". Leonard v. Alexander, 50 Cal.App.2d 385, 122 P.2d 984, 986.

What constitutes "necessaries" for which an admiralty lien will attach depends upon what is reasonably needed in the ship's business, regard being had to the character of the voyage and the employment in which the vessel is being used. Walker Skageth Food Stores v. The Bavois, D.C.N.Y., 43 F.Supp. 109, 110, 111.

See also Necessary; Necessitous circumstances; Support.

Necessaries, doctrine of. One who sells goods to a wife or child may charge the husband or father if the goods are required for their sustenance or support.

Necessarily included offense. For a lesser offense to be "necessarily included" in offense charged, within lesser included offense rule, it must be such that the greater offense cannot be committed without also committing the lesser. Kelly v. U. S., 125 U.S.App. D.C. 205, 370 F.2d 227, 228. Necessarily included offense is that which occurs when offense cannot be committed without necessarily committing another offense. People v. Doolittle, 23 C.A.3d 14, 99 Cal. Rptr. 810, 814.

Necessarium est quonod potest aliter se habere /néssébrényam ést kwód nón pówdast áládor síi haboríy/. That is necessary which cannot be otherwise.

Necessarius /néssébrényas/. Lat. Necessary; unavoidable; indispensable; not admitting of choice or the action of the will; needful.

Necessary. This word must be considered in the connection in which it is used, as it is a word susceptible of various meanings. It may import absolute physical necessity or inevitability, or it may import which is only convenient, useful, appropriate, suitable, proper, or conducive to the end sought. It is an adjective expressing degrees, and may express mere convenience or that which is indispensable or an absolute physical necessity. It may mean something which in the accomplishment of a given object cannot be dispensed with, or it may mean something reasonably useful and proper, and of greater or lesser benefit or convenience, and its force and meaning must be determined with relation to the particular object sought. Kay County Excite Board v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 185 Okl. 327, 91 P.2d 1087, 1088.

In eminent domain proceedings, it means land reasonably requisite and proper for accomplishment of end in view, not absolute necessity of particular location. State v. Whitcomb, 94 Mont. 415, 22 P.2d 823.

With respect to taxation, means appropriate and helpful in furthering the taxpayer's business or income producing activity. I.R.C. §§ 162(a) and 212. See also Ordinary.

As to necessary Damages; Deposit; Domicile; Implication; Intromission; Repairs; and Way, see those titles. See also Necessaries; Necessity.

Necessary and proper. Words "necessary and proper" mean appropriate and adapted to carrying into effect given object. Petition of Public Service Coordinated Transport, 103 N.J.Super. 505, 247 A.2d 888, 891.

Necessary and proper clause. Art. I, § 8, par. 18 of U.S. Constitution, which authorizes Congress to make all laws necessary and proper to carry out the enumerated powers of Congress and all other powers vested in the government of the United States or any department or officer thereof. See Penumbra doctrine.

Necessary inference. One which is inescapable or unavoidable from the standpoint of reason. Taylor v. Twiner, 193 Miss. 410, 9 So.2d 644, 646.

Necessary parties. In pleading and practice, those persons who must be joined in an action because, inter alia, complete relief cannot be given to those already parties without their joiner. Fed.R.Civ.P. 19(a).

Necessary parties are those who must be included in action either as plaintiffs or defendants, unless there is a valid excuse for their nonjoinder. City of Hutchinson for Human Relations Commission of Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, Kansas Office of Kansas State Employment Service, 213 Kan. 399, 517 P.2d 117, 122. Those persons who have such an interest in controversy that a final judgment or decree cannot be made without either affecting their interests or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final adjudication may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Royal Petroleum Corp. v. Dennis, 160 Tex. 392, 332 S.W.2d 313, 314. A "necessary party" is one whose joiner is required in order to afford the plaintiff the complete relief to which he is entitled against the defendant who is properly suable in that county. Orange Associates, Inc. v. Albright, Tex.Civ.App., 548 S.W.2d 806, 807.

See also Indispensable parties; Joiner; Parties.

Necessitas /nésséstía/. Lat. Necessity; a force, power, or influence which compels one to act against his will.

Necessitas culpabilis /nésséstía kálpébybalos/. Culpable necessity; unfortunate necessity; necessity which, while it excuses the act done under its compulsion, does not leave the doer entirely free from blame. The necessity which compels a man to kill another in self-defense is thus distinguished from that which requires the killing of a felon.

Necessitas est lex temporis et loci /nésséstía ést léks témparas ét lówosay/. Necessity is the law of time and of place.

Necessitas excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitallis, quod non operatur idem in civilibus /nésséstía fészat télém kvód éyylas nón ést lísdámat/. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise is not lawful.

Necessitas inducit privilegium quod jura privata /nésséstía súndyéwus privályif(i)lyam kwówad jura pravvéydá/. Necessity gives a privilege with reference to private rights. The necessity involved in this maxim is of three kinds, viz.: (1) Necessity of self-preservation; (2) of obedience; and (3) necessity resulting from the act of God, or of a stranger.

Necessitas non habet iegem /nésséstías nón hébyat liiýjam/. Necessity has no law.

Necessitas publica major est quam privata /nésséstás pábliks méýjar ést kwówad pravvéydá/. Public necessity is greater than private. "Death," it has been observed, "is the last and furthest point of particular necessity, and the law imposes it upon every subject that he prefer the urgent service of his king and country before the safety of his life."

Necessitas quod cogit, defendit /nasēstās kwōd kōwōят defēndat/. Necessity defends or justifies what it compels. Applied to the acts of a sheriff, or ministerial officer, in the execution of his office.

Necessitas sub lege non continentur, quia quod alias non est licitum necessitas factit licitum /nasēstās sāb lījījī nōn kōntānītād, kwāyā kwōd ēlīlīsā nōn ēst līsādām nasēstās fēysat līsādām/. Necessity is not restrained by law, since what otherwise is not lawful, necessity makes lawful.

Necessitas vincet legem; legum vincula irredet /nasēstās vīnsat lījījam; līygam vīnjīkyla irredet/. Necessity overcomes law; it derides the fetters of laws.

Necessitas vincit legem /nasēstās vīnsat lījījam/. Necessity overrules the law.

Necessities. See Necessaries.

Necessitous /nasēsādas/. Indigent or pressed by poverty. See Indigent.

Necessitous circumstances /nasēsādas sārkōmsātēn(-)ssz/. Needing the necessaries of life, which cover not only primitive physical needs, things absolutely indispensable to human existence and decency, but those things, also, which are in fact necessary to the particular person left without support. In the civil code of Louisiana the words are used relative to the fortunate of the deceased and to the condition in which the claimant lived during the marriage. See also Necessaries; Non-support.

Necessitudo /nasēsāt(y)ūwdow/. Lat. In the civil law, an obligation; a close connection; relationship by blood.

Necessity. Controlling force; irresistible compulsion; a power or impulse so great that it admits no choice of conduct. That which makes the contrary of a thing impossible. The quality or state of being necessary, in its primary sense signifying that which makes an act or event unavoidable. Quality or state of fact of being in difficulties or in need, a condition arising out of circumstances that compels a certain course of action. Bykofsky v. Borough of Middletown, D.C.Pa., 401 F.Supp. 1242, 1250. See Irresistible impulse.

A person is excused from criminal liability if he acts under a duress of circumstances to protect life or limb or health in a reasonable manner and with no other acceptable choice. See Self-defense.

The word "necessity", within certificate of public convenience and necessity, is not used in the sense of being essential or absolutely indispensable but merely that certificate is reasonably necessary for public good. Alabama Public Service Commission v. Crow, 247 Ala. 120, 22 So.2d 721, 724. To fulfill requirements for easement of right of way of necessity, the necessity must be actual, real, and reasonable, as distinguished from inconvenience, but it need not be absolute and irresistible necessity. When used in relation to power of eminent domain does not mean absolute necessity, but only reasonable necessity.

The "necessity" of and appurtenance for the beneficial use of leased premises, which will entitle the lessee thereto, is not an absolute necessity in the sense that it must be completely indispensable, but is a real necessity and not a mere convenience or advantage.

See also Necessaries; Necessary.

Neck-verse. The Latin sentence, "Miserere mei, Deus," was so called, because the reading of it was made a test for those who claimed benefit of clergy.

Necrophilism /nakrōfīlīzam/. See Insanity.

Necropsy /nēkrōpˈsī/. An autopsy, or post-mortem examination of a human body.

Nec tempus nec locus occurrit regi /nēk tēmphās nēk lōvksk sākhrīt rījīyā/. Neither time nor place affects the king.

Nec veniam effuso sanguine casus habet /nēk vīnjīlam, sāyōwzō sāngwānī, kēyās hēybat/. Where blood is spilled, the case is unpardonable.

Nec veniam, lēso numine, casus habet /nēk vīnjīlam, lījōw m(y)ūwmanī, kēyās hēybat/. Where the Divinity is insulted the case is unpardonable.

Ne disturb a pas /nā dāstārā pā/. L. Fr. (Does or did disturb.) In old English practice, the general issue or general plea in quare impedit.

Ne dona pas, or non dedit /na dōwna pā/nōn dīydayt/. The general issue in a formed, now abolished. It denied the gift in tail to have been made in manner and form as alleged; and was therefore the proper plea, if the tenant meant to dispute the fact of the gift, but did not apply to any other case.

Need. A relative term, the conception of which must, within reasonable limits, vary with the personal situation of the individual employing it. Term means to have an urgent or essential use for (something lacking); to want, require. City of Dayton v. Borchers, 13 Ohio Misc. 273, 232 N.E.2d 437, 440. See Necessaries.

Needful. Necessary, requisite, essential, indispensable. See Necessaries.

Needless. In a statute against "needless" killing or mutilation of any animal, this term denotes an act done without any useful motive, in a spirit of wanton cruelty, or for the mere pleasure of destruction.

Ne exeat /nīy ēksījāt/. A writ which forbids the person to whom it is addressed to leave the country, the state, or the jurisdiction of the court. Available in some cases to keep a defendant within the reach of the court's process, where the ends of justice would be frustrated if he should escape from the jurisdiction. Sometimes a ne exeat writ is issued only to restrain a person from leaving the jurisdiction, and sometimes it is issued against a person who is removing or attempting to remove property beyond the Ne exeat regno /nǐ yékṣiṣṭ rēҗɲow/. Lat. In English practice, a writ which issues to restrain a person from leaving the kingdom. It was formerly used for political purposes, but is now only resorted to in equity when the defendant is about to leave the kingdom; it is only in cases where the intention of the party to leave can be shown that the writ is granted.

Ne exeat república /nǐ yékṣiṣṭ ɾapǐbłaka/. Lat. In American practice, a writ similar to that of ne exeat regno (q.v.), available to the plaintiff in a civil suit, under some circumstances, when the defendant is about to leave the state.

Nefas /nǐfəs/. Lat. That which is against right or the divine law. A wicked or impious thing or act.

Nefastus /nəfəstəs/. Lat. Inauspicious. Applied, in the Roman law, to a day on which it was unlawful to open the courts or administer justice.

Negatio conclusionis est error in lege /nəɡəˈʃiʃɪ(ɨ)əw kənkluˈw(ɨ)əwɪnəs ɛst ɛhrər ɪn lɪˈja/. The denial of a conclusion is error in law.

Negatio destruct negationem, et ambe faciunt affirmationem /nəɡəˈʃiʃɪ(ɨ)əw dɛstruˈwət nəɡəˈʃiʃɪəˈwəm əd æmˈbi fəˈʃiʃɪˈɛnt əˈfɪrməˈʃiʃɪəˈwəm/. A negative destroys a negative, and both make an affirmative.

Negatio duplex est affirmatio /nəɡəˈʃiʃɪ(ɨ)əw ˈd(ɨ)əwˈpɫəks ɛst əˈfɪrməˈʃiʃɪ(ɨ)əw/. A double negative is an affirmative.

Negative. A denial; a proposition by which something is denied; a statement in the form of denial. Two negatives do not make a good issue.

As to negative Covenant; Easement; Statute; and Testimony, see those titles.

Negative averment. As opposed to the traverse or simple denial of an affirmative allegation, a negative averment is an allegation of some substantive fact, e.g., that premises are not in repair, which, although negative in form, is really affirmative in substance, and the party alleging the fact of non-repair must prove it. An averment in some of the pleadings in a case in which a negative is asserted. U. S. v. Eisenminger, D.C.Del., 16 F.2d 816, 819.

Negative condition. One by which it is stipulated that a given thing shall not happen.

Negative covenant. A provision in an employment agreement or a contract of sale of a business which prohibits the employee or seller from competing in the same area or market. Such restriction must be reasonable in scope and duration.

Negative easement. A right in owner of dominant tenement to restrict owner of servient tenement in exercise of general and natural rights of property. Fort Dodge, D. M. & S. Ry. v. American Community Stores Corp., 256 Iowa 1344, 131 N.W.2d 515, 521. A negative easement is one effect of which is not to authorize doing of act by person entitled to easement, but merely to preclude owner of land subject to easement from doing of an act which, if no easement existed, he would be entitled to do. McLaughlin v. Neiger, Mo.App., 286 S.W.2d 380, 383.

Negative evidence. Testimony that an alleged fact did not exist. See Rebuttal evidence.

Negative pregnant. In pleading, a negative implying also an affirmative. Such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry within it an affirmative. A denial in such form as to imply or express an admission of the substantial fact which apparently is controverted; or a denial which, although in the form of a traverse, really admits the important facts contained in the allegations to which it relates. Cramer v. Aiken, 63 App.D.C. 16, 68 F.2d 761, 762.

Neggildare. To claim kindred.

Neglect. May mean to omit, fail, or forbear to do a thing that can be done, or that is required to be done, but it may also import an absence of care or attention in the doing or omission of a given act. And it may mean a designed refusal or unwillingness to perform one's duty. In re Perkins, 234 Mo.App. 716, 117 S.W.2d 686, 692.

The term is used in the law of bailment as synonymous with "negligence." But the latter word is the closer translation of the Latin "negligentia."

Failure to pay money which the party is bound to pay without demand. An omission to do or perform some work, duty, or act. Failure to perform or discharge a duty, covering positive official misdoing or official misconduct as well as negligence.

See also Excusable neglect; Negligence.

Culpable neglect. Such neglect which exists where the loss can fairly be ascribed to the party's own careless ness, improvidence, or folly. State ex rel. Fulton v. Coburn, 133 Ohio St. 192, 12 N.E.2d 471, 477, 10 O.O. 249.

Willful neglect. The neglect of the husband to provide for his wife the common necessaries of life, he having the ability to do so; or it is the failure to do so by reason of idleness, profligacy, or dissipation.

Neglected child. A child is "neglected" when his parent or custodian, by reason of cruelty, mental incapacity, immorality or depravity, is unfit properly to care for him, or neglects or refuses to provide necessary physical, affectional, medical, surgical, or institutional or hospital care for him, or he is in such condition of want or suffering, or is under such improper care or control as to endanger his morals or health. In re DuMond, 196 Misc. 16, 17, 92 N.Y.S.2d 805.

Negligence. The omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those ordinary considerations which ordinarily regulate human affairs, would do, or the doing of something which a reasonable and prudent man would not do.

Negligence is the failure to use such care as a reasonably prudent and careful person would use under similar circumstances; it is the doing of some act which a person of ordinary prudence would not have done under similar circumstances or failure to do what a person of ordinary prudence would have done under similar circumstances. Amoco Chemical Corp. v. Hill, Del. Super, 318 A.2d 614, 617. Conduct which falls below the standard established by law for the protection of others against unreasonable risk of harm; it is a departure from the conduct expectable of a reasonably prudent person under like circumstances. Pence v. Ketchum, La., 326 So.2d 831, 836.

The term refers only to that legal delinquency which results whenever a man fails to exhibit the care which he ought to exhibit, whether it be slight, ordinary, or great. It is characterized chiefly by inadvertence, thoughtlessness, inattention, and the like, while "wantonness" or "recklessness" is characterized by willfulness. The law of negligence is founded on reasonable conduct or reasonable care under all circumstances of particular case. Doctrine of negligence rests on duty of every person to exercise due care in his conduct toward others from which injury may result.

Actionable negligence. See Actionable negligence.

Active negligence. See Active negligence.

Collateral negligence. In the law relating to the responsibility of an employer or principal for the negligent acts or omissions of his employee, the term "collateral" negligence is sometimes used to describe negligence attributable to a contractor employed by the principal and for which the latter is not responsible, though he would be responsible for the same thing if done by his servant. Weber v. Buffalo Railway Co., 20 App.Div. 292, 47 N.Y. S. 7.

Comparative negligence. See Comparative negligence.

Concurrent negligence. Arises where the injury is proximately caused by the concurrent wrongful acts or omissions of two or more persons acting independently. See also Concurrent negligence.

Contributory negligence. The act or omission amounting to want of ordinary care on part of complaining party, which, concurring with defendant’s negligence, is proximate cause of injury. Honaker v. Crutchfield, 247 Ky. 495, 37 S.W.2d 502. Conduct by a plaintiff which is below the standard to which he is legally required to conform for his own protection and which is a contributing cause which cooperates with the negligence of the defendant in causing the plaintiff’s harm. Li v. Yellow Cab Co. of California, 13 Cal.3d 804, 119 Cal.Rptr. 858, 864, 532 P.2d 1226.

Conduct for which plaintiff is responsible amounting to a breach of duty which law imposes on persons to protect themselves from injury, and which, concurring and cooperating with actionable negligence for which defendant is responsible, contributes to injury complained of as a proximate cause. Cowan v. Dean, 81 S.D. 486, 137 N.W.2d 337, 341.

The defense of contributory negligence has been replaced by the doctrine of comparative negligence (q.v.) in many states. See also Exceptions and limitations, infra.

An affirmative defense which must be pleaded and proved by defendant. Fed.R.Civ.P., Rule 8(c).

Doctrine is also applicable to one who through his own negligence has contributed to material alteration of a negotiable instrument. U.C.C. § 3-406.

Criminal negligence. Criminal negligence which will render killing a person manslaughter is the omission on the part of the person to do some act which an ordinarily careful and prudent man would do under like circumstances, or the doing of some act which an ordinarily careful, prudent man under like circumstances would not do by reason of which another person is endangered in life or bodily safety; the word "ordinary" being synonymous with "reasonable" in this connection.

Negligence of such a character, or occurring under such circumstances, as to be punishable as a crime by statute; or (at common law) such a flagrant and reckless disregard of the safety of others, or wilful indifference to the injury liable to follow, as to convert an act otherwise lawful into a crime when it results in personal injury or death.

That species of want of care by which a person may be criminally liable. It varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction and is called culpable negligence in some. However, it generally refers to conduct which is not intentional and ordinarily not wilful, wanton and reckless.

See Negligent homicide; Negligently; Negligent manslaughter.

Culpable negligence. Failure to exercise that degree of care rendered appropriate by the particular circumstances, and which a man of ordinary prudence in the same situation and with equal experience would not have omitted.

Degrees of negligence. While there are degrees of care, and failure to exercise proper degree of care is "negligence," most courts hold that there are no degrees (e.g. slight, ordinary, gross) of negligence, except in balmant cases or under automobile guest statutes. Murray v. De Luxe Motor Stages of Illinois, Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1074, 1078. The prevailing view is that there are no "degrees" of care in negligence, as a matter of law; there are only different amounts of care as a matter of fact. To the extent that the degrees of negligence survive, they are described below.

Exceptions and limitations. The general rule in automobile accident cases that contributory negligence bars recovery for the injuries sustained is subject to various exceptions and limitations. Thus the defense of contributory negligence may be inapplicable where defendant’s negligence is of a gross or willful character. Moreover, application of the doctrine of contributory negligence is limited by the last clear chance doctrine or similar doctrines, or by comparative negligence statutes.

Gross negligence. The intentional failure to perform a manifest duty in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another.
NEGLIGENCE

It is materially more want of care than constitutes simple inadvertence. It is an act or omission respecting legal duty of an aggravated character as distinguished from a mere failure to exercise ordinary care. It is very great negligence, or the absence of slight diligence, or the want of even scant care. It amounts to indifference to present legal duty and to utter forgetfulness of legal obligations so far as other persons may be affected. It is a heedless and palpable violation of legal duty respecting the rights of others. The element of culpability which characterizes all negligence is in gross negligence magnified to a high degree as compared with that present in ordinary negligence. Gross negligence is a manifestly smaller amount of watchfulness and circumspection than the circumstances require of a person of ordinary prudence. But it is something less than the wilful, wanton and reckless conduct which renders a defendant who has injured another liable to the latter even though guilty of contributory negligence, or which renders a defendant in rightful possession of real estate liable to a trespasser whom he has injured. It falls short of being such reckless disregard of probable consequences as is equivalent to a wilful and intentional wrong. Ordinary negligence and gross negligence differ in degree of inattention, while both differ in kind from wilful and intentional conduct which is or ought to be known to have a tendency to injure.

Gross negligence consists of conscious and voluntary act or omission which is likely to result in grave injury when in face of clear and present danger of which alleged tortfeasor is aware. Glaab v. Caudill, Fla.App., 236 So.2d 180, 182, 183, 185. That entire want of care which would raise belief that act or omission complained of was result of conscious indifference to rights and welfare of persons affected by it. Claunch v. Bennett, Tex.Civ.App., 396 S.W.2d 719, 724; Snyder v. Jones, Tex.Civ.App., 392 S.W.2d 504, 505, 507. Indifference to present legal duty and utter forgetfulness of legal obligations, so far as other persons may be affected, and a manifestly smaller amount of watchfulness and circumspection than the circumstances require of a person of ordinary prudence.

Hazardous negligence. Such carelessness or reckless conduct as exposes one to very great danger of injury or to imminent peril.

Imputed negligence. Refers to doctrine that places upon one person responsibility for the negligence of another; such responsibility or liability is imputed by reason of some special relationship of the parties, such as parent and child, husband and wife, driver and passenger, owner of vehicle and driver, bailor and bailee, master and servant, joint enterprise, and parent and custodian of a child. Schmidt v. Martin, 212 Kan. 373, 510 P.2d 1244, 1246.

Generally the doctrine of imputed negligence, as applied to automobile accidents, visits on one person legal responsibility for the negligent conduct of another. The doctrine applies only in limited classes of cases, as where there is a right to control in the relationship of master and servant, principal and agent, or a joint enterprise. The independent negligence of one person ordinarily is not imputable to another person except where the relation between the persons gives rise to an express or implied agency in the person committing the act of negligence.

Legal negligence. See Legal negligence.

Ordinary negligence. The omission of that care which a man of common prudence usually takes of his own concerns. Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U.S. 132, 11 S.Ct. 924, 35 L.Ed. 662. Failure to exercise care of an ordinarily prudent person in some situation. A want of that care and prudence that the great majority of mankind exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Wherever distinctions between gross, ordinary and slight negligence are observed, "ordinary negligence" is said to be the want of ordinary care.

Ordinary negligence is based on fact that one ought to have known results of his acts, while "gross negligence" rests on assumption that one knew results of his acts, but was recklessly or wantonly indifferent to results. The distinction between "ordinary negligence" and "gross negligence" is that the former lies in the field of inadvertence and the latter in the field of actual or constructive intent to injure.

Passive negligence. Failure to do something that should have been done. It is negligence which permits defects, obstacles, or pitfalls to exist on premises; that is, negligence which causes dangers arising from physical condition of land. Pachowitz v. Milwaukee & Suburban Transport Corp., 56 Wis.2d 383, 202 N.W.2d 268, 275.

Difference between "active" and "passive" negligence is that one is only passively negligent if he merely fails to act in fulfillment of duty of care which law imposes upon him, while one is actively negligent if he participates in some manner in conduct or omission which caused injury. King v. Timber Structures, Inc. of Cal., 240 Cal.App.2d 178, 49 Cal.Rptr. 417.

Per se negligence. The unexcused violation of a statute which is applicable per se or automatic negligence in some states. See also Negligence per se.

Slight negligence. A failure to exercise great care. Slight negligence is defined to be only an absence of that degree of care and vigilance which persons of extraordinary prudence and foresight are accustomed to use. Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U.S. 132, 11 S.Ct. 924, 35 L.Ed. 662.

Wilful, wanton or reckless negligence. These terms are customarily treated as meaning essentially the same thing. The usual meaning assigned to "wilful," "wanton" or "reckless," according to taste as to the word used, is that the actor has intentionally done an act of an unreasonable character in disregard of a risk known to him or so obvious that he must be taken to have been aware of it, and so great as to make it highly probable that harm would follow. It usually is accompanied by a conscious indifference to the consequences, amounting almost to willingness that they shall follow; and it has been said that this is indispensable. See for example Tyn dall v. Rippon, 5 Del.Super. 458, 61 A.2d 422; Wolters v. Venhaus, 350 Ill.App. 322, 112 N.E.2d 747; Clarke v. Storchak, 384 Ill. 564, 52 N.E.2d 229, appeal dismissed 322 U.S. 713, 64 S.Ct. 1270, 88 L.Ed. 1555; Tige v. Diamond, 149
Ohio St. 520, 80 N.E.2d 122, 37 O.O. 243. The result is that "wilful," "wanton" or "reckless" conduct tends to take on the aspect of highly unreasonable conduct, or an extreme departure from ordinary care, in a situation where a high degree of danger is apparent. As a result there is often no clear distinction at all between such conduct and "gross" negligence, and the two have tended to merge and take on the same meaning, of an aggravated form of negligence, differing in quality rather than in degree from ordinary lack of care. It is at least clear, however, that such aggravated negligence must be more than any mere mistake resulting from inexperience, excitement, or confusion, and more than mere thoughtlessness or inadvertence, or simple inattention.

"Wantonness" constituting gross and wanton negligence within automobile guest statute indicates a realization of imminence of danger and a reckless disregard, complete indifference, and unconcern of probable consequences of the wrongful act. Mann v. Good, 202 Kan. 631, 451 P.2d 233, 236.

Negligence, estoppel by. An estoppel which occurs when one who is under a legal duty, either to the person injured or to the public, to act with due care, fails to do so, and such failure is the natural and proximate cause of misleading that person to alter his position. An estoppel arises when one by acts, representations, intentionally or negligently, induces another to change his position for the worse. Smith v. Vara, 136 Misc. 500, 241 N.Y.S. 202, 209.

An estoppel arises when one by acts, representations, or admissions, or by silence when he ought to speak, intentionally or through culpable negligence, induces another to believe certain facts to exist and such other rightfully relies and acts on such belief so that he will be prejudiced if the former is permitted to deny the existence of such facts.

Estoppel may exist where a party has led another into the belief of a certain state of facts by conduct of culpable negligence, calculated to have that result, and the other party has acted upon such belief to his prejudice. Scott v. First Nat. Bank, 343 Mo. 77, 119 S.W.2d 929, 938.

Negligence in law. "Actionable negligence" or "negligence in law" grows out of nonobservance of a duty prescribed by law. See also Negligence per se.

Negligence per se. Conduct, whether of action or omission, which may be declared and treated as negligence without any argument or proof as to the particular surrounding circumstances, either because it is in violation of a statute or valid municipal ordinance, or because it is so palpably opposed to the dictates of common prudence that it can be said without hesitation or doubt that no careful person would have been guilty of it. As a general rule, the violation of a public duty, enjoined by law for the protection of person or property, so constitutes. See also Strict liability.

Negligent. See Negligence.

Negligent homicide. The criminal offense committed by one whose negligence is the direct and proximate cause of another's death. The crime of negligent homicide consists of three component elements: (1) death of human being (2) by instrumentality of motor vehicle (3) operated on highway in negligent manner. State v. Colombo, 4 Conn.Cir. 671, 238 A.2d 806, 808. See also Homicide (Vehicular homicide).

Negligentia /néglájéns(í)yá/. Lat. In the civil law, carelessness; inattention; the omission of proper care or foresight. The term is not exactly equivalent to our "negligence," inasmuch as it was not any negligentia, but only a high or gross degree of it, that amounted to culpa (actionable or punishable fault).

Negligentia semper habet infortunium comitem /néglájéns(í)yá sempér hēybd inforchúwn(i)yam kóméldan/. Negligence always has misfortune for a companion.

Negligently. A person acts negligently with respect to a material element of an offense when he should be aware of a substantial and unjustifiable risk that the material element exists or will result from his conduct. The risk must of such a nature and degree that the actor's failure to perceive it, constitutes of the nature and purpose of his conduct and the circumstances known to him, involves a gross deviation from the standard of care that a reasonable person would observe in the actor's situation. Model Penal Code, § 2.02. See also Negligence.

Negligently done. The doing of an act where ordinary care required that it should not have been done at all, or that it should have been done in some other way, and where the doing of the act was not consistent with the exercise of ordinary care under the circumstances. See Negligence.

Negligent manslaughter. A statutory crime in some jurisdictions consisting of an unlawful and unjustified killing of a person by negligence but without malice.

Negligent offense. One which ensues from a defective discharge of a duty, which defect could have been avoided by the exercise of that care which is usual, under similar circumstances, with prudent persons of the same class. People v. Gaydica, 122 Misc. 31, 203 N.Y.S. 243, 258.

Negligent violation of statute. One occasioned by or accompanied with negligent conduct.

Negoce /nágów/. Fr. Business; trade; management of affairs.

Negotiability /nágówwsh(í)yábldý/. Legal character of being negotiable (q.v.).

Negotiable /nágówwsh(í)yáb/. Legally capable of being transferred by endorsement or delivery. Usually said of checks and notes and sometimes of stocks and bearer bonds. See Commercial paper; Negotiable instruments; Non-negotiable.

Negotiable bond. Type of bond which may be transferred by negotiation from original holder to another.

Negotiable document of title. A document is negotiable if by its terms the goods are to be delivered to "bearer", or to the order of a named party, or, where recognized in overseas trade, to a named person "or assigns". U.C.C. § 7–104(1).

Negotiable instruments. To be negotiable within the meaning of U.C.C. Article 3, an instrument must meet the requirements set out in Section 3–104: (1) it must be a writing signed by the maker or drawer; it must contain an (2) unconditional (3) promise (example: note) or order (example: check) (4) to pay a sum certain in money; (5) it must be payable on demand or at a definite time; (6) it must be payable to the bearer or to order (examples of instruments payable to order are (a) "Pay to the order of Daniel Dealer," and (b) "Pay Daniel Dealer or order"); and (7) it must not contain any other promise, order, obligation, or power given by the maker or drawer except as authorized by Article 3. See also Commercial paper; Negotiation.

Negotiable words. Words and phrases which impart the character of negotiability to bills, notes, checks, etc., in which they are inserted; for instance, a direction to pay to A, "or order" or "bearer." See Negotiable instruments.

Negotiate /nágóws(h)iyéyânt/. To transact business; to bargain with another respecting a purchase and sale; to conduct communications or conferences with a view to reaching a settlement or agreement. It is that which passes between parties or their agents in the course of or incident to the making of a contract and is also conversation in arranging terms of contract.

To communicate or confer with another so as to arrive at the settlement of some matter. To meet with another so as to arrive through discussion at some kind of agreement or compromise about something. Al Herd, Inc. v. Isaac, 271 Cal.App.2d 749, 76 Cal.Rptr. 697, 699. To discuss or arrange a sale of bargain; to arrange the preliminaries of a business transaction. Also to sell or discount negotiable paper, or assign or transfer it by indorsement and delivery. To conclude by bargain, treaty, or agreement.

See also Negotiation.

Negotiated plea. The effect of plea bargaining in which the criminal defendant agrees to plead guilty to the charge or to a reduced charge in return for a recommendation from the prosecutor of a disposition less severe than possible under the particular statute. See Plea bargaining.

Negotiation /nágóws(h)iyéyâshân/. The transfer of an instrument in such form that the transferee becomes a holder. If the instrument is payable to order it is negotiated by delivery with any necessary indorsement; if payable to bearer it is negotiated by delivery. U.C.C. § 3–202(1). The act by which a check or promissory note is put into circulation by being passed by one of the original parties to another person.

Negotiation is process of submission and consideration of offers until acceptable offer is made and accepted. Gainey v. Brotherhood of Ry. and S. Clerks, Freight Handlers, Exp. & Station Emp., D.C. Pa., 275 F.Supp. 292, 300. The deliberation, discussion, or conference upon the terms of a proposed agreement; the act of settling or arranging the terms and conditions of a bargain, sale, or other business transaction.

See also Negotiate.

Negotiorum gestio /nágóws(h)yóram jés(h)ch(i)yów/. Lat. In the civil law, literally, a doing of business or businesses. A species of spontaneous agency, or an interference by one in the affairs of another, in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority.

Negotiorum gestor /nágóws(h)yóram jéstôr/. Lat. In the civil law, a transactor or manager of business; a person voluntarily constituting himself agent for another; one who, without any mandate or authority, assumes to take charge of an affair or concern for another person, in the latter's absence, but for his interest.

One who spontaneously, and without the knowledge or consent of the owner, intermeddles with his property, as to do work on it, or to carry it to another place, etc.

N.E.I. An abbreviation for "non est inventus," he is not found.

Nelffe, naif, nativus /niyf/nâiyf/nâtâyâs/. In old English law, a woman who was born a villein, or a bond-woman.

Neighborhood. One who lives in close proximity to another.

Neighborhood. A place near; an adjoining or surrounding district; a more immediate vicinity; vicinage. Connolly v. General Const. Co., 269 U.S. 385, 46 S.Ct. 126, 129, 70 L.Ed. 322.

It is not synonymous with territory or district, but is a collective noun, with the suggestion of proximity, and refers to the units which make up its whole, as well as to the region which comprehends those units. A district or locality, especially when considered with relation to its inhabitants or their interests. In ordinary and common usage "locality" is synonymous in meaning with "neighborhood," and neither connotes large geographical areas with widely diverse interests. Lukens Steel Co. v. Perkins, 70 App.D.C. 354, 107 F.2d 627, 631.

As used with reference to a person's reputation, "neighborhood" means in general any community or society where person is well known and has established a reputation.

Ne inuste vexes /niy ânjâsti vyksîyâ/. In old English practice, a prohibitory writ, commanding a lord not to demand from the tenant more services than were justly due by the tenure under which his ancestors held.

Neither party. An abbreviated form of docket entry, meaning that, by agreement, neither of the parties will further appear in court in that suit used as a form of judgment in some states where a case has been settled.

Ne luminibus officiatur /niy l(y)uwimínâbas afish-îyéyâr/. In the civil law, the name of a servitude which restrains the owner of a house from making such erections as obstruct the light of the adjoining house.

Nemine contradicente /nêmanî yônôtrâs-sântîyâ/. Lat. No one dissenting; no one voting in the negative. A phrase used to indicate the unanimous consent of a court or legislative body to a judgment, resolution, vote, or motion. Commonly abbreviated "nem. con."

Nemo plus juris ad allum transferre potest quam ipsum habet. /Nymow plās jūras ād ēlyim transāfāri pōwdst kvām īpsi hēbyät./ No one can transfer more right to another than he has himself.

Nemo potest contra recordum verificare per patrimon /nymow pōwdst kontra rākārdam vēhrāfākērī par pētriyam./ No one can verify by the country against a record. The issue upon matter of record cannot be to the jury. A maxim of old practice.

Nemo potest esse dominus et hares /nymow pōwdst ēsī domānas ē hīrīyts./ No man can be both owner and heir.

Nemo potest esse simul actor et judex /nymow pōwdst ēsī sāyml ākṭak ē tūwdēks./ No one can be at once suitor and judge.

Nemo potest esse tenens et dominus /nymow pōwdst ēsī tēnēn(d)z ē tē domānas./ No man can be both tenant and lord [of the same tenement].

Nemo potest exuere patriam /nymow pōwdst āgs(y)ūwarī pētriyam./ No man can renounce his own country.

Nemo potest facere per aliquam quod se non potest /nymow pōwdst fāsrārī pā āliām kvōd pēr sī yōn pōwdst./ No one can do that by another which he cannot do of himself. A rule said to hold in original grants, but not in descents; as where an office descended to a woman, in which case, though she could not exercise the office in person, she might by deputy.

Nemo potest facere per obliquum quod non potest fa- cere per directum /nymow pōwdst fāsrārī pā āliāykwām kvōd nōn pōwdst fāsrārī pār dārēktam./ No man can do that indirectly which he cannot do directly.

Nemo potest mutare consilium suum in alterius injuriam /nymow pōwdst myuwtērī kansīl(y)am s(y)ūwam in oltirīyas anjūryām./ No man can change his purpose to another’s injury.

Nemo potest nisi quod de jure potest /nymow pōwdst nāsay kvōd diy jūrīy pōwdst./ No one is able to do a thing, unless he can do it lawfully.

Nemo potest plus juris ad allum transferre quam ipsum habet /nymow pōwdst plās jūras ād ēlyim transāfāri kvām īpsi hēbyät./ No one can transfer a greater right to another than he himself has.

Nemo potest sibi debere /nymow pōwdst sībā dābīrī./ No one can owe to himself.

Nemo praesens nisi intelligat /nymow priyān(d)z nās- say antēlāgat./ One is not present unless he understands.

Nemo praesumitur alienam posteriatem sue praetulisse /nymow prāz(y)ūwmand āliāyim pastērātēyam s(y)ūwiy priyālasīy./ No man is presumed to have preferred another’s posterity to his own.

Nemo praesumitur donare /nymow prāz(y)ūwmand danērīy./ No one is presumed to give.

Nemo praesumitur esse immemor sue eternae salutis, et maxime in articulo mortis /nymow prāz(y)ūwmand the Roman law, adhered to in criminal prosecutions, but departed from in civil questions.

Nemo tenetur informare quia nescit, sed qualscumque scire quod ignorant. /nǐymow taniýdar informāri kwaří kwaří nēst, sēd kwaskwist sāryi kwāt informat./. No one is bound to give information about things he is ignorant of, but every one is bound to know that which he gives information about.

Nemo tenetur jurare in suam turptudinem /nǐymow taniýdar jurēri i sy(y)ūwam tarpat(y)ūwdanam/. No one is bound to swear to the fact of his own criminality: no one can be forced to give his own oath in evidence of his guilt.

Nemo tenetur prodere selpsum /nǐymow taniýdar selypsum prōwariy sākiyazeryi/. No one is bound to betray himself. In other words, no one can be compelled to criminate himself.

Nemo tenetur selpsum accusare /nǐymow taniýdar selypsum sākiyazeryi/. No one is bound to accuse himself.

Nemo tenetur selpsum infortunis et perculis exponere /nǐymow taniýdar selypsum inforšiwniyas ēt pāriyās ešpōnary/. No one is bound to expose himself to misfortunes and dangers.

Nemo tenetur selpsum prodere /nǐymow taniýdar selypsum prōwardariy/. No one is bound to betray himself.

Nemo unquam judicet in se /nǐymow āŋkwam jūwardat in siy/. No one can ever be a judge in his own cause.

Nemo unquam vir magnus fuit, sine aliquo divino afflatu /nǐymow āŋkwam vir māŋnas f(y)ūwat, sāniy šākwom dāwānony afley(t)yuw/. No one was ever a great man without some divine inspiration.

Nemo videtur fraudare eos qui sciunt et consentiunt /nǐymow vādíydar fōrdīyīr iōwos kwaří sāyant ēt kānšēnyant/. No one seems [as supposed] to defraud those who know and assent [to his acts].

Nephew. The son of one's brother or sister, or one's brother-in-law or sister-in-law.

Nepos /nēpos/nīpōw/. Lat. A grandson.

Nepotism /nēpōdisam/. Bestowal of patronage by public officials in appointing others to positions by reason of blood or marital relationship to appointing authority.

Neptis /nēptis/. Lat. A granddaughter; sometimes great-granddaughter.

Neque leges neque senatus consulta ita scribi possunt ut omnis casus quis quandoque in sediuntur comprehendatur; sed satis ea quae praeternumque accident contineri /nēkwiy liyiijy nēkwiy sanfēdas kānšāya āyda skrābyay pōsant ēt ōmnas kēyasya kwař kwařdōkkiw kwař in sādīrīyant kōmprehendēyārd; sēd sāfas sāyi kwař plārminkwi ēkāndern kōntānīrāy/. Means that neither laws nor acts of a parliament can be so written as to include all actual or possible cases; it is sufficient if they provide for those things which frequently or ordinarily may happen.
Ne quid in loco publico vel litanere fiat /nǐ kwíːd in lówkwɔ̃ pɔ̃blɔ̃kɔ̃ vɛ̃ aytˈnɑːriː fávɑ̃/; Lat. That nothing shall be done (put or erected) in a public place or way. The title of an interdict in the Roman law.

Net receiplatur /nǐ rɑ̃sɪpiɻɪˈɛydɔr/. Lat. That it be not received. A caveat or warning given to a law officer, by a party in a cause, not to receive the next proceedings of his opponent.

Ne reæssa pas /nɛ rɛlɛsə pɑː/. L. Fr. Did not release. Where the defendant had pleaded a release, this was the proper replication by way of traverse.

Net. That which remains after all allowable deductions, such as charges, expenses, discounts, commissions, taxes, etc., are made.

Net asset value. Term used in evaluating stock of investment company and arrived at by deducting total liabilities from total market value of all assets of company. Net asset value of corporation, for stock appraisal purpose, is share which stock represents in value of net assets of corporation, including every kind of property and value, whether realty or personalty, tangible or intangible, good will, and corporation’s value as going concern. In re Watt & Shand, 452 Pa. 287, 304 A.2d 694, 698.

Net balance. The proceeds of sale, after deducting expenses.

Net cost. The actual cost of an item after deductions of all income and financial gain from the gross cost. As used in insurance, it represents the total premiums paid less the dividends paid and cash surrender value.

Net earnings. See Earnings.

Net estate. Under estate tax statute the term means that which is left of the gross estate after the deduction of proper and lawful items in the course of settlement. United States Tust Co. of New York v. Sears, D.C.Conn., 29 F.Supp. 643, 649. In general, the net estate is the gross estate less the following allowable deductions: (a) funeral expenses; (b) claims against the estate; and (c) unpaid mortgages or indebtedness on property which is included in the gross estate.

Net house of Parliament. A name given to the English house of commons in the time of Henry VIII.

Net income. Income subject to taxation after allowable deductions and exemptions have been subtracted from gross or total income. The excess of all revenues and gains for a period over all expenses and losses of the period.

Net income for income tax purposes is what remains out of gross income after subtracting ordinary and necessary expenses incurred in efforts to obtain or to keep it. Walling’s Estate v. C. I. R., C.A.Pa., 373 F.2d 190, 193. See also Distributable net income.

Net Interest. Pure interest which is theoretical and excludes overhead and risks from cost of capital.

Net lease. Lease in which provision is made for the lessee to pay, in addition to rent, the taxes, insurance and maintenance charges. See also Escalator clause; Net rent.

Net level annual premium. An amount which, if exacted from a group of policyholders and increased by interest, will yield a sum sufficient to satisfy all death claims. The result is generally referred to as the "net" or "net level premium" of the policy. Fox v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 107 F.2d 715, 718.

Net listing. A type of listing contract whereby the broker is only entitled to a commission to the extent that sales price exceeds the given amount. For example, a net listing of $15,000 where the property sold for $18,000 would result in a $3,000 commission. See also Listing; Multiple listing; Net sale contract.

Net national product. In a given period of time, the gross national product less allowance for capital consumption. See also Gross National Product.

Net operating assets. The assets, net of depreciation and bad debts, employed in the ordinary course of business. Hence excludes investments in stocks and bonds owned by a manufacturing company, for example.

Net operating income. Income before interest and income taxes but after depreciation produced by operating assets.

Net operating loss. Loss before interest and income taxes but after depreciation produced by operating assets. In income taxation term means the excess of the deductions allowed over the gross income. I.R.C. § 172(c).

Net position. In securities and commodity trading, the difference between contracts long and contracts short held by a trader.

Net premium. In life insurance, this term is used to designate that portion of the premium which is intended to meet the cost of the insurance, both current and future. Its amount is calculated upon the basis of the mortality tables and upon the assumption that the company will receive a certain rate of interest upon all its assets; it does not include the entire premium paid by the assured, but does include a certain sum for expenses.

Net price. The lowest price, after deducting all deductions, discounts, etc.

Net profits. Profits after deduction of all expenses; may be classified as net before or after taxes. Deducting the cost of goods sold from sales gives the gross profit. Deducting the operating expenses (overhead) from gross profit gives the operating profit. Deducting income taxes from operating profits gives the net profit. See also Net income.

Net rent. Basic rent charge plus additional monthly charges for taxes, utilities and maintenance. See also Net lease.

Net return. See Net income; Net profits.

Net revenues. See Net income; Net profits.

Net sale contract. One in which the principal agrees to accept a specified net price for property to be sold, and the agent’s compensation for negotiating a sale is to be any amount received in excess of the specified figure. Loughlin v. Idora Realty Co., 259 Cal.App.2d 619, 66 Cal.Rptr. 747, 751, 752. See also Net listing.

Net sales. Gross sales minus returns, allowances, rebates, and discounts.

Premium which, if exacted from a group of policyholders and immediately invested at the assumed rate of interest, will yield in the aggregate a sum exactly sufficient to pay all death claims as they mature providing the mortality rate is in accord with the table used. Fox v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A. Mo., 107 F.2d 715, 718.

Net tonnage. The cubic contents of the interior of a vessel, when the spaces occupied by the crew and by propelling machinery are deducted, numbered in tons. Kiessig v. San Diego County, 51 Cal.App.2d 47, 124 P.2d 163, 165.

Net weight. The weight of an article or collection of articles, after deducting from the gross weight the weight of the boxes, coverings, casks, etc., containing the same. The weight of an animal dressed for sale, after rejecting hide, offal, etc.

The total assets of a person or business less the total liabilities (amounts due to creditors). In the case of a corporation net worth includes both capital stock and surplus; in the case of a partnership or single proprietorship it is the original investment plus accumulated and reinvested profits.

Net worth of corporation may be determined by subtracting liabilities from assets or by adding the capital account and surplus account as reflected in general ledger of corporation. Eastern Capital Corp. v. Freeman, 10 Misc.2d 412, 168 N.Y.S.2d 834, 838.

Net worth method. An approach used by the Internal Revenue Service to reconstruct the income of a taxpayer who fails to maintain adequate records. Under this approach, the gross income for the year is the increase in net worth of the taxpayer (i.e., assets in excess of liabilities) with appropriate adjustment for nontaxable receipts and nondeductible expenditures. The net worth method often is used when tax fraud is suspected.

Net yield. The return on an investment after deducting all costs, losses and charges for management.

Ne unques accouple /niyąŋkwiyz skąpil/. L. Fr. Never married. More fully, ne unques accouple en loiall matrimonie, never joined in lawful marriage. The name of a plea in the action of dower unde nihil habet, by which the tenant denied that the dowress was ever lawfully married to the decedent.

Ne unques executor /niyąŋkwiyz ągzękyad/. L. Fr. Never executor. The name of a plea by which the defendant denies that he is an executor, as he is alleged to be; or that the plaintiff is an executor, as he claims to be.

Ne unques selse que dower /niyąŋkwiyz siyįįžį ko dąwar/. L. Fr. (Never seised of a dowerable estate.) In pleading, the general issue in the action of dower unde nil habet, by which the tenant denies that the demandant's husband was ever seised of an estate of which dower might be had.

Ne unques son receiver /niyąŋkwiyz sön rąsłyvar/. L. Fr. In old pleading, the name of a plea in an action of account-render, by which the defendant denies that he ever was receiver of the plaintiff.

Neurasthenia /n(y)uręstäyniya/. Neuosis manifested chiefly by exhaustion, mental and physical fatigue, irritability and poorly localized symptoms without any underlying physical disorder.

Neurology. Branch of medicine dealing with nervous system and its disorders.

Neutral. Indifferent; unbiased; impartial; not engaged on either side; not taking an active part with either of the contending sides. In an international war, the principal hostile powers are called "belligerents;" those actively co-operating with and assisting them, their "allies;" and those taking no part whatever, " neutrals."

Neutrality. The state of a nation which takes no part between two or more other nations at war. U. S. v. The Three Friends, 166 U.S. 1, 17 S.Ct. 495, 41 L.Ed. 897.

Neutrality laws. Acts of Congress which forbid the fitting out and equipping of armed vessels, or the enlisting of troops, for the aid of either of two belligerent powers with which the United States is at peace.

Neutrality proclamation. A proclamation by the President of the United States, issued on the outbreak of a war between two powers with both of which the
NEUTRALITY PROCLAMATION

United States is at peace, announcing the neutrality of the United States and warning all citizens to refrain from any breach of the neutrality laws.

Neutralization. Erasure or cancellation of unexpected harmful testimony by showing either by cross-examination or other witnesses that the witness has made a statement in conflict with his testimony. State v. Gallicchio, 44 N.J. 540, 210 A.2d 409, 412. See also Impeachment.

Neutral property. Property which belongs to citizens of neutral powers, and is used, treated, and accompanied by proper insignia as such.

Ne varletur /ni vərliˈjʌrd/. Lat. It must not be altered. A phrase sometimes written by a notary upon a bill or note, for the purpose of establishing its identity, which, however, does not affect its negotiability.

Never indebted, plea of. In common law pleading, a species of traverse which occurs in actions of debt on simple contract, and is resorted to when the defendant means to deny in point of fact the existence of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, or to deny the matters of fact from which such contract would by law be implied.

New. As an element in numerous compound terms and phrases of the law, this word may denote novelty, or the condition of being previously unknown or of recent or fresh origin, but ordinarily it is a purely relative term and is employed in contrasting the date, origin, or character of one thing with the corresponding attributes of another thing of the same kind or class.

In order to be "new", as that word is used in the patent laws, the achievement must be either one that produces an unusual or improved or advanced result, which was unknown to the same prior art at the time of the claimed invention; or the achievement must be one that produces an old result in an unusual and substantially more efficient, or more economical way.

New acquisition. An estate derived from any source other than descent, devise, or gift from father or mother or any relative in the paternal or maternal line. Webb v. Caldwell, 198 Ark. 331, 128 S.W.2d 691, 694.

New and useful. The phrase used in the patent laws to describe the two qualities of an invention or discovery which are essential to make it patentable, viz., novelty, or the condition of having been previously unknown, and practical utility. To accomplish a new and useful result it is not necessary that result before unknown should be brought about, but it is sufficient if an old result is accomplished in a new and more effective way. Hirschy v. Wisconsin-Minnesota Gas & Electric Household Appliances Co., D.C.Minn., 18 F.2d 347, 354. An invention achieves a new result, where a function which had been performed by other means was performed to an efficient degree by an association of means never before combined, though all of them were old, and some of the changes seemed to be only in degree.

New assets. In the law governing the administration of estates, this term denotes assets coming into the hands of an executor or administrator after the expiration of the time when, by statute, claims against the estate are barred so far as regards recourse against the assets with which he was originally charged.

New assignment. Under common law practice, where the declaration in an action is ambiguous, and the defendant pleads facts which are literally an answer to it, but not to the real claim set up by the plaintiff, the plaintiff's course is to reply by way of new assignment; i.e., allege that he brought his action not for the cause supposed by the defendant, but for some other cause to which the plea has no application.

New cause of action. With reference to the amendment of pleadings, this term may refer to a new state of facts out of which liability is claimed to arise, or it may refer to parties who are alleged to be entitled under the same state of facts, or it may embrace both features. Amended and supplemental pleadings are permitted under Fed.R.Civ.P. 15.

New for old. In making an adjustment of a partial loss under a policy of marine insurance, the rule is to apply the old materials towards the payment of the new, by deducting the value of them from the gross amount of the expenses for repairs, and to allow the deduction of one-third new for old upon the balance.

Newly-discovered evidence. Evidence of a new and material fact, or new evidence in relation to a fact in issue, discovered by a party to a cause after the rendition of a verdict or judgment therein. Testimony discovered after trial, not discoverable before trial by exercise of due diligence. Kash N'Karry Wholesale Supermarkets, Inc. v. Garcia, Fla.App., 221 So.2d 786, 788.

Newly discovered evidence such as will support motion for new trial or to reopen for amended findings refers to evidence of facts existing at the time of trial of which the aggrieved party was excusably ignorant. Chromalloy Am. Corp. v. Alloy Surfaces Co., D.C.Del., 55 F.R.D. 406, 409. To constitute newly discovered evidence for which new trial may be granted, evidence must pertain to facts in existence at time of trial, and not to facts that have occurred subsequently. U. S. v. DePugh, D.C.Mo., 266 F.Supp. 417, 434.

Motions for new trial based on newly discovered evidence must generally be made within a specified time period; see e.g., Fed.R.Crim.P. 33.

New matter. In pleading, matter of fact not previously alleged by either party in the pleadings. Amended and supplemental pleadings are permitted under Fed. R.Civ.P. 15.

New promise. See Promise.

Newsman's privilege. The alleged constitutional right (freedom of speech and press) of a newsman to refuse to disclose the sources of his information. See Shield law.

Newspaper. A publication, usually in sheet form, intended for general circulation, and published regularly at short intervals, containing information and editorials on current events and news of general interest.
Official newspaper. One designated by a state or municipal legislative body, or agents empowered by them, in which the public acts, resolves, advertisements, and notices are required to be published. See also Legal newspaper.

New trial. See Motion for new trial; Plain error rule; Trial.

New York Interest. System of computing interest by using the exact number of days in a month and not 30 days uniformly.

New York Stock Exchange. An unincorporated association of member firms which handle the purchase and sale of securities for themselves and customers. It is the largest stock exchange in the country.

New York Times v. Sullivan. Landmark case in which the U.S. Supreme Court held that the constitutional guarantee of a free press and free speech require a public official who sues for defamation to prove malicious utterance in the course of the defamation and the publication of the matter. Malice in this context is the publishing of the material knowing it to be false or with a reckless disregard of its falsity. 376 U.S. 254, 279-280, 84 S.Ct. 710-726, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. See also Libel.

Next /néksát/. Lat. In Roman law, bound; bound persons. A term applied to such insolvent debtors as were delivered up to their creditors, by whom they might be held in bondage until their debts were discharged.

Next. Nearest; closest; immediately following.

Next devisee /nékst dávályzi/"džályzi/ Person to whom remainder is given by will.

Next eventual estate. Estate taking effect upon happening of the event terminating accumulation. In re Shupack's Estate, 156 Misc. 873, 256 N.Y.S. 184, 196.

Next friend. One acting for benefit of infant, married woman, or other person not sui juris, without being regularly appointed guardian. In re Boulware's Will, 144 Misc. 235, 238 N.Y.S. 522. A "next friend" is not a party to an action, but is an officer of the court, especially appearing to look after the interests of the minor whom he represents. Youngblood v. Taylor, Fla., 89 So.2d 503, 505. See also PARENT PATRIAE.

"Next friend" or "prochein ami" is one admitted to court to prosecute for infant. Crawford v. Amusement Syndicate Co., Mo., 37 S.W.2d 581, 584.

Next of kin. In the law of descent and distribution, this term properly denotes the persons nearest of kin to the decedent, that is, those who are most nearly related to him by blood; but it is sometimes construed to mean only those who are entitled to take under the statute of distributions, and sometimes to include other persons. The term "next of kin" is used with two meanings: (1) nearest blood relations according to law of consanguinity and (2) those entitled to take under statutory distribution of intestate's estates, and term is not necessarily confined to relatives by blood, but may include a relationship existing by reason of marriage, and may well embrace persons, who in natural sense of word, and in contemplation of Roman law, bear no relation of kinship at all. In re Kyle's Autopsy, Okl., 309 P.2d 1070, 1073.

Next presentation. In the law of advowsons, the right of next presentation is the right to present to the first vacancy of a benefice.

Nexum /néksát/. Lat. In Roman law, in ancient times the nexum seems to have been a species of formal contract, involving a loan of money, and attended with peculiar consequences, solemnized with the "copper and balance." Later, it appears to have been used as a general term for any contract struck with those ceremonies, and hence to have included the special form of conveyance called "mancipatio." In a general sense it means the obligation or bond between contracting parties.

In Roman law, this word expressed the tie or obligation involved in the old conveyance by mancipatio; and came latterly to be used interchangeably with (but less frequently than) the word "obligatio" itself.

Nicholls /nìkloz/. In old English practice, debts due to the exchequer which the sheriff could not levy, and as to which he returned nil. These sums were transcribed once a year by the clerk of the nicholls, and sent to the treasurer's remembrancer's office, whence process was issued to recover the "nicholl" debts. Both of these offices were abolished in 1833.

Nickname. A short name; one nicked or cut off for the sake of brevity, without conveying an idea of approbrium, and frequently evincing the strongest affection or the most perfect familiarity.

Niece. The daughter of one's brother or sister, or of one's brother-in-law or sister-in-law.

Nief /niyf/. In old English law, a woman born in vassalage; a bondwoman.

Nient /niy(é)nt/. L. Fr. Nothing; not.

Nient comprise /niy(é)nt kàmpriy/. Not comprised; not included. An exception taken to a petition because the thing desired is not contained in that deed or proceeding whereon the petition is founded.

Nient culpable /niy(é)nt kàłbpsal/. Not guilty. The name in French law of the general issue in tort or in a criminal action.

Nient dedire /niy(é)nt dàdir/. To say nothing; to deny nothing; to suffer judgment by default.

Nient le fait /niy(é)nt lafèy(t)l/. In pleading, not the deed; not his deed. The same as the plea of non est factum.

Nient seisi /niy(é)nt sjèzy/. In old pleading, not seised. The general plea in the writ of annuity.

NIFO. "Next-in, first-out" inventory valuation. See also Last-In, First-Out (LIFO), and First-In, First-Out (FIFO).

Nighttime. At common-law, that period between sunset and sunrise during which there is not daylight enough to discern a man's face. State v. Perkins, 342
Mo. 560, 116 S.W.2d 80, 81, 82. The rule is often followed that "nighttime" begins thirty minutes after sunset and ends thirty minutes before sunrise, Model Penal Code, § 221.01(2); State v. Perkins, 342 Mo. 560, 116 S.W.2d 80, 82; or, that period of time from one hour after sunset to one hour before sunrise, Com. v. Lavery, 255 Mass. 327, 333–334, 151 N.E. 466, 468.

The common-law definition is still adhered to in some states, but in others "night" has been defined by statute (see e.g. Model Penal Code definition above).

Night walkers. Described in the statute 5 Edw. III, c. 14, as persons who sleep by day and walk by night. Persons who prowl about at night, and are of a suspicious appearance and behavior. Persons whose habit is to be abroad at night for the purpose of committing some crime or nuisance or mischief or disturbing the peace; not now generally subject to the criminal laws except in respect to misdemeanors actually committed, or in the character of vagrants or suspicious persons. In a narrower sense, or a defendant or more popular sense, a night walker is a prostitute who walks the streets at night for the purpose of soliciting men for lewd purposes.

Nigrum nunquam excedere debet rubrum /nányɡram nákkwam ạskịyàri ọdịt rụgwamb/ The black should never go beyond the red [i.e., the text of a statute should never be read in a sense more comprehensive than the rubric, or title].

Nilh /nány(h)al/. Lat. Nothing. Often contracted to "nīl." The word standing alone is the name of an abbreviated form of return to a writ made by a sheriff or constable, the fuller form of which would be "nilh est" or "nilh habet," according to circumstances.

Nilh alud potest rex quam quod de jure potest /nány(h)al ụl(i)ya pọgwaụt rẹk kwẹm kwọd ọdị nụrụ pọgwaụt/. The king can do nothing except what he can do by law do.

Nilh capiat per breve /nány(h)al kẹpịYa pàr bịaYị/. In practice, that he take nothing by his writ. The form of judgment against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar or in abatement. When the plaintiff has commenced his proceedings by bill, the judgment is nilh capiat per billam.

Nilh consensui tam contrarium est quam vis atque metus /nány(h)al kansiənshuwà ṣàm kàntàryìam ësì kwẹm vis ëtìkwịli miyọs/. Nothing is so opposed to consent as force and fear.

Nilh dat qui non habet /nány(h)al dàt kwọd nọn hēbyət/. He gives nothing who has nothing.

Nilh de re accrescit ei quí nihil in re quando jús accresceret habet /nány(h)al dii ụl(i)ya ọkàssàad ụl(i)ya kwẹm(h)al in ụl(i)ya kwọdòw jàs akàssàad hēbyət/. Nothing of a matter accrues to him who, when the right accrues, has nothing in that matter.

Nilh dicit /nány(h)al dìsàt/dày/. He says nothing. The name of the judgment which may be taken as of course against a defendant who omits to plead or answer the plaintiff's declaration or complaint within the time limited. In some jurisdictions it is otherwise known as judgment "for want of a plea."

Judgment taken against party who withdraws his answer is judgment nihil dicit, which amounts to confession of cause of action stated, and carries with it, more strongly than judgment by default, admission of justice of plaintiff's case. See also Nil dicit judgment.

Nilh dictum quod non dictum prius /nány(h)al diiktàm kwọd nọn diiktàm pǎráyas/. Nothing is said which was not said before. Said of a case where former arguments were repeated.

Nilh est /nány(h)al ëst/. There is nothing. A form of return made by a sheriff when he has been unable to serve the writ.

Nilh est enim liberale quod non idem justum /nány(h)al ëst lỳm nìllàryìli kwọd nọn ụyàm jàstàm/. For there is nothing generous which is not at the same time just.

Nilh est magis ratiioni consentaneum quam eodem modo quoque dissolvere quo conflatum est /nány(h)al ëst míeỳjà ràshìliównym kònstantèniyìam kwẹm iyòwdm mìwòdòkwì kwàdàllà ma kwàdòkwì kwàdàlli kwàdnìlàyìam ëst/. Nothing is more consonant to reason than that a thing should be dissolved or discharged in the same way in which it was created.

Nilh facti error nominis cum de corpore constat /nány(h)al fìsìsà ẹhìr nòmànà kàm dìyi kòporì yìnk(w)stìk/. An error as to a name is nothing when there is certainty as to the person.

Nilh habet /nány(h)al hēbyət/. He has nothing. The name of a return made by a sheriff to a scire facias or other writ which he has been unable to serve on the defendant.

Nilh habet forum ex scena /nány(h)al hēbyət fòrəm èks sìfən/. The court has nothing to do with what is not before it.

Nilh infra regnum subditos magis conservat in tranquillitate et concordia quam debita legum administratione /nány(h)al infra règànì mòdbòdòw míeỳjà kànsàràd in tənkwìlətətìtì yì tənkòródí(i)ya kwẹm òdàbà dìgàm adìnìmàràỳìsh(ì)yòw/òw/. Nothing preserves in tranquillity and concord those who are subjected to the same government better than a due administration of the laws.

Nilh injurii quam sequitatem nimitis intendere /nány(h)al iŋkjùrìi ëst kwẹm ịkàwàtèdyàm nìmìs ìntòndìrì/. Nothing is more unjust than to extend equity too far.

Nilh in lege intollerabilius est [quam] tandem rem diverso jure censori /nány(h)al in lìiyì jìntòlərəbìlìyìam ëst kwẹm iyàndàm ràm dàwàsò kwàrụ ụn(t)ìsìrài/. Nothing is more intolerable in law than that the same matter, thing, or case should be subject to different views of law. Applied to the difference of opinion entertained by different courts, as to the law of a particular case.

Nilhlist /nány(h)al stìk/nány*/. One advocating doctrine of nihilism. One devoted to the destruction of the present political, religious, and social institutions.

Nilh magis justum est quam quod necessarium est /nány(h)al míeỳjà jàstàm ëst kwẹm kwọd nèssàsèriyìam ëst/. Nothing is more just than that which is necessary.
Nil nihil quam est praesumendum /nāy(h)al nékwam ëst priyā(y)amēndam/. Nothing wicked is to be presumed.

Nil nihil perfectum est dum aliquid restat agendum /nāy(h)al perēktam ëst dām āšākwid rēstād ajēndam/. Nothing is perfect while anything remains to be done.

Nil nihil petīt ānte id tempus quo per rerum naturam persolvī possit /nāy(h)al pēday pōward āntiy id tēmpas kwōw pār rīmām nākhārum persōlīvā pōsāt/. Nothing can be demanded before the time when, by the nature of things, it can be paid.

Nil nihil possimus contra veritatem /nāy(h)al pōsāmas kōntā vēhrētāydm/. We can do nothing against truth.

Nil nihil præscribitur nīl quod possidetur /nāy(h)al prāskībdār nāyags kwōd pōsādēydr/. There is no prescription for that which is not possessed.

Nil nihil quod est contra rationem est ilectum /nāy(h)al kwōd ëst kōntā rāshīyōwnam īst līsādm/. Nothing that is against reason is lawful.

Nil nihil quod est inconveniens est ilectum /nāy(h)al kwōd ëst inkānviy(l)yān(d)z īst līsādm/. Nothing that is inconvenient is lawful. A maxim very frequently quoted by Lord Coke, but to be taken in modern law with some qualification.

Nil nihil sīmul iuventum est et perfectum /nāy(h)al sāymlāl ańvēntam ëst ët pērēktam/. Nothing is invented and perfected at the same moment.

Nil nihil tam conveniens est naturalis aqūtalāt quam unumquodque dissolvi eo ligamine quo ligatum est /nāy(h)al tām kānviy(l)yān(d)z ëst nākhārēlay ēkāyētāyday kwām yūwnamkwōdōkwiw dōzōlāy iyōw lāgēyāmān kwōd lāgēyādm īst/. Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as that a thing should be dissolved by the same means by which it was bound.

Nil nihil tam conveniens est naturalis aqūtalāt quam voluntatem domini rem suam in aliem transfere ratam habere /nāy(h)al tām kānviy(l)yān(d)z ëst nātūrēlēy ēkāyētāyday kwām vōlāntēydm dōmanay rēm s(y)ūwnam ī ēy(l)yām ēntrāfyī ērēydm hēbīrī/. Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as to regard the intention of the owner in transferring his own property to another.

Nil nihil tam naturale est, quam eo generë quidquē dissolvēre, quo colligatum est; ideō verborum obligatio verbīs tollitur; nudi consensus obligatio contrario consensus dissolvitur /nāy(h)al tām nātūrēlīy īst, kwām iyōw jēnārī kwīdīwī dzōlīvārī, kwōd kōlāgēyādm īst; idiyōw verborōm oblāgēshī(l)yōw vārōbā tōlāwar; n(y)ūwāy ēn(k)(ē)n(s)ēn ṭsēs oblāgēshī(l)yōw kōn trāntrīyōw kōn(s)ēn(s)ēn(s)ēn(y)ōw dzōlāvād/. Nothing is so natural as to dissolve anything in the way in which it was bound together; therefore the obligation of words is taken away by words; the obligation of mere consent is dissolved by the contrary consent.

Nil nihil tam proprium imperio quam legibus vivere /nāy(h)al tām prōswprīyām ṭmpūrīyōw kwām līyābas vāyvārī/. Nothing is so becoming to authority as to live in accordance with the laws.

Nil nihil. Lat. Nothing. A contracted form of "nihil," which see.

Nil nihil agit exemplum litem quod lite resolvit /nīl ēyjad āgūmēyam lāydm kwōd lāyīdī rōzdāv/. An example does no good which settles one question by another.

Nil nihil consentul tam contrarium est quam vis atque metus /nīl kānśēnshuway tām kāntrēryam ëst kwām vīs ātkwīy miyās/. Nothing is so opposed to consent as force and fear.

Nil nihil debet /nīl dēbēt/. He owes nothing. The form of the general issue in all actions of debt on simple contract.

Nil nihil dicit judgment. Judgment entered against defendant, in proceeding in which he is in court but has not filed an answer, is a "nil dicit judgment"; all error of pleading being waived, court examines petition only to determine if it attempts to state cause of action within court's jurisdiction. Gonzalez v. Regalado, Tex.Civ.App., 542 S.W.2d 668, 691. See also nihil dicit.

Nil nihil fact error nominis cum de corpore vel persona constat /nīl fēysōd ēhrār nōmān kām dī kōrprēy vēl parsōwā kōnśtēt/. A mistake in the name does not matter when the body or person is manifest.

Nil nihil habuit in tenementis /nīl hābywōd an tēnēṃmētās/. He had nothing [no interest] in the tenements. A plea in debt on a lease indented, by which the defendant sets up that the person claiming to be landlord had no title or interest.

Nil nihil ligatum /nīl lāgēydm/. Nothing bound; that is, no obligation has been incurred.

Nil nihil sine prudenti feclt ratione vetustas /nīl sāyni prūwendēntay fēysat rasshīyōwnīvī vētātās/. Antiquity did nothing without a good reason.

Nil nihil temere novandum /nīl tēmārī νnāvēndam/. Nothing should be rashly changed.

Nil nihil certitudo certitudinem ipsam destruit /nīmīya sārd(y)sūwōd sārdē(y)sūwōn sīpam dāsrūwāt/. Too great certainty destroys certainty itself.

Nil nihil sublītās in jure reprobatur /nīmīya sā(b)tīlātās in jūryī rēprēbāydr/. Too much subtility in law is discountenanced.

Nil nihil Nimium alterando veritas amīttitur /nīmīya óltārō ko dōvērās amīdār/. By too much alteration truth is lost.

Nil nihil Nimmer /nīmār/. A thief; a pillerer.

Nil Nineteenth Amendment. Known as the women's suffrage amendment to the U.S. Const., it provides that the right of citizens of the U.S. to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the U.S. or by any state on account of sex. The 19th Amendment was ratified in 1920.

Nil Nineteenth Amendment day letter. Statutory notice sent by I.R.S. to taxpayer of tax deficiency. During the 90 day period after the mailing of such notice the taxpayer may either pay the tax and seek a refund or not pay the tax and challenge such alleged deficiency on peti-

Ninth Amendment. This amendment to the U.S. Const. provides that the enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Nisi /ˈnɪsə/. Lat. Unless. The word is often affixed, as a kind of elliptical expression, to the words “rule,” “order,” “decree,” “judgment,” or “confirmation,” to indicate that the adjudication spoken of is one which is to stand as valid and operative unless the party affected by it shall appear and show cause against it, or take some other appropriate step to avoid it or procure its revocation. Thus a “decree nisi” is one which will definitely conclude the defendant’s rights unless, within the prescribed time, he shows cause to set it aside or successfully appeals. The word, in this sense, is opposed to “absolute.” And when a rule nisi is finally confirmed, for the defendant’s failure to show cause against it, it is said to be “made absolute.” See also Show cause order.

Nisi decree. An interim decree or order which will ripen into a final decree unless something changes, or some event takes place. See also Nisi.

Nisi feceris /ˈnɪsəs ˈfɪsərɪs/. The name of a clause commonly occurring in the old manorial writs, commanding that, if the lords failed to do justice, the king’s court or officer should do it. By virtue of this clause, the king’s court usurped the jurisdiction of the private, manorial, or local courts.

Nisi prius /ˈnɪsɪ ˈpriʊs/. The nisi prius courts are such as are held for the trial of issues of fact before a jury and one presiding judge. In America the phrase was formerly used to denote the forum (whatever may be its statutory name) in which the cause was tried to a jury, as distinguished from the appellate court.

Nisi prius clause /ˈnɪsɪ ˈprɪəs ˈkləʊz/. In practice, a clause entered on the record in an action at law, authorizing the trial of the cause at nisi prius in the particular county designated. It was first used by way of continuance.

Nisi prius roll /ˈnɪsɪ ˈprɪəs ˈrɒlw/. In practice, the roll or record containing the pleadings, issue, and jury process of an action, made up for use in the nisi prius court.

NKA. Now known as.

N.L. An abbreviation of “non liquet” (which see).

N.L.R.B. National Labor Relations Board.

No-action clause. Provision commonly found in liability insurance policies to the effect that the insurer is not liable to the insured and that no action may be brought against the insurer by the insured until an action has been brought and the insured has either paid the amount to the third person or until a judgment has been rendered fixing the amount due or until an agreement has been reached.

No-action letter. Letter written by attorney for governmental agency (e.g. S.E.C.) to effect that, if facts are as represented in request for ruling, he will advise agency not to take action because the facts do not warrant prosecution.

No arrival, no sale. Provision in sales contract that if goods do not arrive at destination buyer acquires no property therein and does not become liable for price.

No award. The name of a plea in an action on an award, by which the defendant traverses the allegation that an award was made.

Nobles magis plectuntur pecunia; plebes vero in corpore /ˈnɔbəlɪz ˈmægɪs ˈplɛktəntər ˈpɛkʊnɪə; ˈplɛbɪz ˈvɛrə ɪn ˈkɔrpərə/. The higher classes are more punished in money; but the lower in person.

Nobles sunt, qui arma gentilibia antecessorum suorum proferre possunt /ˈnɔbəlɪs ˈsʊnt, kwɪ ˈɑrma ˈʒɛntɪlɪbɪə ˈæntɛsɛsɔrʊm ˈsuːrərʊm ˈprɔfərə ˈpɒsənt/. The gentry are those who are able to produce armorial bearings derived by descent from their own ancestors.

Nobiliores et beneigniores presumptiones in dubibus sunt praferenda /ˈnɔbɪlɪˈɔrɪəs ət ˈbɛnɪˈɪgnɪərɪəs ˈprɛsəmptʃənɪəz ɪn ˈdʌbɪbəs sʊnt ˈprɑːfərəndə/. In cases of doubt, the more generous and more benign presumptions are to be preferred. A civil-law maxim.

Nobilitas est duplex, superior et inferior /ˈnɔbɪlɪˌtəs ɪst ˈdʌplɪk sʊpəˈrɪər ət ɪnˈfɪərɪər/. There are two sorts of nobility, the higher and the lower.

Nobility. In English law, a division of the people, comprehending dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons. These had anciently duties annexed to their respective honors. They are created either by writ, i.e., by royal summons to attend the house of peers, or by letters patent, i.e., by royal grant of any dignity and degree of peerage; and they enjoy many privileges, exclusive of their senatorial capacity.

No bill. This phrase, endorsed by a grand jury on the indictment, is equivalent to “not found”, “no indictment”, or “not a true bill”. It means that, in the opinion of the jury, evidence was insufficient to warrant the return of a formal charge. See Indictment.

No bonus clause. In states where applicable, a clause under the eminent domain section of a lease, giving the lessee the right to recover only the value of his physical improvements in the event of a taking, and not the value of his leasehold interest (the difference between the fixed rent of the lease and current market rental value).

No contest clause. Provision in a will to the effect that the legacy or devise is given on condition that no action is taken to contest the will; and if such action is initiated, the legacy or devise is forfeited.
Noctanter /nöktántar/. By night; an abolished writ which issued out of chancery, and returned to the queen’s bench, for the prostration of inclosures, etc.

Noctes and noctem de firma /nöktiz dyi firma /nöktam?/. Entertainment of meat and drink for so many nights.

Nocumentum /nököyaméntum/. Lat. In old English law, a nuisance. Nocumentum damnosum, a nuisance occasioning loss or damage. Nocumentum injuriosum, an injurious nuisance. For the latter only a remedy was given.

No evidence. Under the rule that the court may render judgment non obstante veredicto if directed verdict would have been proper, the term “no evidence” does not mean literally no evidence at all; “no evidence” comprehends those situations wherein by the application of established principles of law the evidence is deemed legally insufficient to establish an asserted proposition of fact. Fields v. Burlison Packing Co., Tex.Civ.App., 405 S.W.2d 105, 106. “No evidence” points may be sustained only when (1) evidence of a vital fact is completely absent; (2) rules of law or evidence bar court from giving weight to only evidence offered to prove a vital fact; (3) no more than a mere scintilla of evidence is offered to prove a vital fact; and (4) the evidence conclusively establishes the opposite of the vital fact. State v. Vargas, Tex. Civ.App., 419 S.W.2d 926, 927.

No eyewitness rule. The “no eyewitness rule” is that where there is no obtainable direct evidence of what decedent did or failed to do immediately before injury, trier of facts may infer that decedent was in exercise of ordinary care for his own safety. Marean v. Petersen, 259 Iowa 587, 144 N.W.2d 906, 913.

No fault. A type of automobile insurance, in force in many states, in which each person’s own insurance company pays for injury or damage up to a certain limit regardless of whether its insured was actually at fault. See Insurance. Also, popular name for a type of divorce in which a marriage can be ended on a mere allegation that it has “irretrievably” broken down or because of “irreconcilable” differences between the spouses. Under such statutory ground for dissolution of marriage, fault on the part of either spouse need not be shown or proved.

No fault Insurance. See Insurance; No fault.

No funds. Endorsement marked on check when a check is drawn on bank in which the drawer has no funds with which to cover check. See also Fund.

No goods. This is the English equivalent of the Latin term “nulla bona,” being the form of the return made by a sheriff or constable, charged with an execution, when he has found no property of the debtor on which to levy.

Nolens volens /növölen(d)s yövölen(d)s/. Lat. Whether willing or unwilling; consenting or not.

No limit order. An order to buy or sell securities in which there is no stipulation as to price.

Nolissement /nölässmön/. Fr. In French marine law, affrightment.

Nolle prosequi /nöly prössékwi/. Lat. A formal entry upon the record, by the plaintiff in a civil suit, or, more commonly, by the prosecuting officer in a criminal action, by which he declares that he “will not further prosecute” the case, either as to some of the defendants, or altogether. A nolle prosequi is a formal entry on the record by the prosecuting officer by which he declares that he will not prosecute the case further. State v. Gaskins, 263 S.C. 343, 210 S.E.2d 590, 592. Commonly called “nol pros”.

No-load fund. A type of mutual fund which charges little or nothing for administrative and selling expenses in the sale of its shares. See Mutual Fund.

Nolo contendere /nöölo wöntändéri/. Latin phrase meaning “I will not contest it”; a plea in a criminal case which has a similar legal effect as pleading guilty. Hudson v. U. S., 272 U.S. 451, 455, 47 S.Ct. 127, 129, 71 L.Ed. 347. Type of plea which may be entered with leave of court to a criminal complaint or indictment by which the defendant does not admit or deny the charges, though a fine or sentence may be imposed pursuant to it. The principal difference between a plea of guilty and a plea of nolo contendere is that the latter may not be used against the defendant in a civil action based upon the same acts. As such, this plea is particularly popular in antitrust actions (e.g. price fixing) where the likelihood of civil actions following in the wake of a successful antitrust prosecution is very great.

A defendant may plead nolo contendere only with the consent of the court. Such a plea shall be accepted by the court only after due consideration of the views of the parties and the interest of the public in the effective administration of justice. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(b).

Nomen /nömän/. Lat. In the civil law, a name; the name, style, or designation of a person. Properly, the name showing to what genus or tribe he belonged, as distinguished from his own individual name (the praenomen), from his surname or family name (cognomen), and from any name added by way of a descriptive title (agnomen). The name or style of a class or genus of persons or objects. A debt or a debtor.

Nomen collectivum /nömän köläktätýynam/. A collective name or term; a term expressive of a class; a term including several of the same kind; a term expressive of the plural, as well as singular, number.

Nomen est quasi rei notamen /nömän ést kwéysay ryiay nowt'éyamän/. A name is, as it were, the note of a thing.

Nomen generale /nömän jänérátyliy/. A general name; the name of a genus.

Nomen generalissimum /nömän jänérálissýmän/. A name of the most general kind; a name or term of the most general meaning. By the name of “land,” which is nomen generalissimum, everything terrestrial will pass.
Nomen juris /nówmən júrəs/. A name of the law; a technical legal term.

Nomen non sufficit, si res non sit de jure aut de facto /nówmən nɔn safisət sə riː nsit dɪ jʊəri ət dɪ fæktə/. A name is not sufficient if there be not a thing [or subject for it] de jure or de facto.

Nomen transcriptitum /nówmən ˌtriːnə skeptɪˈʃɪəm/. See Nomina transcriptitā.

Nominal. Titular; existing in name only; not real or substantial; connected with the transaction or proceeding in name only, not in interest. Park Amusement Co. v. McCaughrn, D.C.Pa., 14 F.2d 553, 556. Not real or actual; merely named, stated, or given, without reference to actual conditions; often with the implication that the thing named is so small, slight, or the like, in comparison to what might properly be expected, as scarcely to be entitled to the name; e.g., a nominal price. Lehman v. Tait, C.C.A.Md., 58 F.2d 20, 23.

Nominal account. In accounting, a ledger account of expenses and income, closed into surplus when the books are balanced.

Nominal capital. Very small or negligible capital, whose use in particular business is incidental. Strayer’s Business College v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Md., 35 F.2d 426, 429. Capital in name only and which is not substantial; not real or actual; merely named, stated, or given, without reference to actual conditions. Feeder’s Supply Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.Mo., 31 F.2d 274, 276.

Nominal consideration. See Consideration.

Nominal damages. See Damages.

Nominal defendant. A person who is joined as defendant in an action, not because he is immediately liable in damages or because any specific relief is demanded as against him, but because his connection with the subject-matter is such that the plaintiff’s action would be defective, under the technical rules of practice, if he were not joined. See also Parties.

Nominal interest rate. The rate of interest stated in a security as opposed to the actual interest yield that is based upon the price at which the interest-bearing property is purchased and the length of time to maturity of the obligation.

Nominal partner. A person who appears to be a partner in a firm, or is so represented to persons dealing with the firm, or who allows his name to appear in the style of the firm or to be used in its business, in the character of a partner, but who has no actual interest in the firm or business.

Nominal party. See Nominal defendant; Parties.

Nominal trust. A dry or passive trust in which the duties of the trustee are minimal and in which the beneficiary has virtual control.

Nomina mutabilia sunt, res autem immobiles /nómana mjuːˈdæbɪliːz(ə) sənt, rɪs əʊt əmˈəʊmbəlɪziːz/. Names are mutable, but things are immovable [immutable]. A name may be true or false, or may change, but the thing itself always maintains its identity.

Nomina si nescis perit cognitio rerum; et nomina si perdidas, certe distinctio rerum perditur /nómana səɪ ˈnɛsəs pərɪt ˈkɒŋɡɪʃ(ɪ)əʊ ˈrɪrm ə t nómana səɪ pərdɪdəs sərˈdiːə ˈdɑːstɪŋkiʃ(ɪ)əʊ ˈrɪrm ə pərdɪdər/. If you know not the names of things, the knowledge of things themselves perishes; and, if you lose the names, the distinction of the things is certainly lost.

Nomina sunt notae rerum /nómana sənt ˈnɔtə riːrm/. Names are the notes of things.

Nomina sunt symbola rerum /nómana sənt sɪmbəla riːrm/. Names are the symbols of things.

Nominate. To name, designate by name, appoint, or propose for election or appointment.

Nominate contracts. In the civil law, contracts having a proper or peculiar name and form, and which were divided into four kinds, expressive of the ways in which they were formed, viz.: (1) Real, which arose ex re, from something done; (2) verbal, ex verbis, from something said; (3) literal, ex litteris, from something written; and (4) consensual, ex consensus, from something agreed to.

Nomination. An appointment or designation of a person to fill an office or discharge a duty. The act of suggesting or proposing a person by name as a candidate for an office.

Nomination paper. A paper used for selection of candidates by a political body which is not a political party and is not entitled to use a “nomination petition”. Commonwealth v. Antico, 146 Pa.Super. 293, 22 A.2d 204, 209.

Nomination to a living. In English ecclesiastical law, the rights of nominating and of presenting to a living are distinct, and may reside in different persons. Presentation is the offering a clerk to the bishop. Nomination is the offering a clerk to the person who has the right of presentation.

Nomina transcriptitā /nómana ˌtriːnə skeptɪˈʃɪə/. In Roman law, obligations contracted by litterae (i.e., litteris obligationes) were so called because they arose from a peculiar transfer (transcriptio) from the creditor’s day-book (adversaria) into his ledger (codex).
Nomina villarum /nómaiv valɛɾɪm/. In English law, an account of the names of all the villages and the possessors thereof, in each county, drawn up by several sheriffs (9 Edw. II), and returned by them into the exchequer, where it is still preserved.

Nomine /nómanı/. Lat. By name; by the name of; under the name or designation of.

Nominee /nómanıy/. One who has been nominated or proposed for an office. One designated to act for another in his or her place.

One designated to act for another as his representative in a rather limited sense. It is used sometimes to signify an agent or trustee. It has no connotation, however, other than that of acting for another, in representation of another, or as the grantee of another. Schuh Trading Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A.III., 95 F.2d 404, 411.

Nominee trust. An arrangement for holding title to real property under which one or more persons or corporations, pursuant to a written declaration of trust, declare that they will hold any property that they acquire as trustees for the benefit of one or more undisclosed beneficiaries.

Nomine pene /nómanı pıɲıy/. In the name of a penalty.

In the civil law, a legacy was said to be left nomine pene where it was left for the purpose of coercing the heir to do or not to do something.

The term has also been applied, in English law, to some kinds of covenants, such as a covenant inserted in a lease that the lessee shall forfeit a certain sum on non-payment of rent, or on doing certain things, as plowing up ancient meadow, and the like.

Nomocanon /nówmoʊkənæn/. (1) A collection of canons and imperial laws relative or conformable there-to. The first nomocanon was made by Johannes Scholasticus in 554. Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, in 883, compiled another nomocanon, or collection of the civil laws with the canons; this is the most celebrated. Balsamon wrote a commentary upon it in 1180. (2) A collection of the ancient canons of the apostles, councils, and fathers, without regard to imperial constitutions.

Nomographer /nɛməɡrəfar/. One who writes on the subject of laws.

Nomography /nɛməɡrəfi/. A treatise or description of laws.

Nomotheta /nɔməθɛθə/. A lawgiver; such as Solon and Lycurgus among the Greeks, and Cæsar, Pompey, and Sylla among the Romans.

Non. Lat. Not. The common prefix of negation.

Non-ability. Want of ability to do an act in law, as to sue. A plea founded upon such cause.

Non-acceptance. A buyer’s right under a contract of sale to reject the goods because of non-conformance with the contract. U.C.C. § 3-601(a). Failure or refusal of a drawee to accept a draft or bill. The refusal to accept anything.

Non acceptavit /nɒn əksepˈtɛvət/. In common law pleading, the name of a plea to an action of assumpsit brought against the drawee of a bill of exchange by which he denies that he accepted the same.

Non-access. Absence of opportunities for sexual intercourse between husband and wife; or the absence of such intercourse. Defense interposed by alleged father in paternity cases.

Non accepti debent verba in demonstrationem falsam, que competent in limitationem veram /nɒn əksɛpsɛi dɛbɛnt vɛrba in dɛmənstrɛʃiɔnɛm fɔl(ɛ)tsɛm, kwɪli kɔmpɛntɪn ilɛmɪʃiɔnɛm fɪrɛm/. Words ought not to be taken to import a false demonstration which may have effect by way of true limitation.

Non accretit infra sex annos /nɒn əkrɛtɪt ɪnfrə sæks ænɛws/. It did not accrue within six years. The term of a plea by which the defendant sets up the statute of limitations against a cause of action which is barred after six years.

Nonacquiescence. Disagreement by the I.R.S. on the result reached by the U.S. Tax Court in a regular decision. Sometimes abbreviated as non-acqu. or NA.

Non-admission. The refusal of admission.

None et decline /nɒnɛn ɛt dɛsɛnɛ/. In old European law, payments made to the church, by those who were tenants of churchfarms. The first was a rent or duty for things belonging to husbandry; the second was claimed in right of the church.

Non-age. Lack of requisite legal age. A minor. In general, the legal status of a person who is under eighteen years of age.

Nonagium or nonage /nɔnɛməj(ɪ)ʃam/nəʊnæj/ In old European law, a ninth part of movables which was paid to the clergy on the death of persons in their parish, and claimed on pretense of being distributed to pious uses.

Non allo modo puniatur aliquis quam secundum quod se habet condamnatione /nɒn əliˈmoʊdu puniˈtʊər alɪˈkwɪs kæm ˈsekəndʊm kwɑt sɛ hæbɛt kəndəmneɪʃ(ɪ)ʃə/. A person may not be punished differently than according to what the sentence enjoins.

Non alter a significatione verborum recedit oportet quam cum manifestum est, aliud sensisse testatorem /nɒn ələrdər ɛliˈdɪst sɛnsɪsɨ tɛstəˈtɔrəm/ We must never depart from the signification of words, unless it is evident that they are not conformable to the will of the testator.

Non-ancestral estate. Realty coming to deceased in any way other than by descent or devise from a now dead ancestor, or by deed of actual gift from a living one, there being no other consideration than that of blood. One acquired by purchase or by act or agreement of the parties, as distinguished from one acquired by descent or by operation of law.

Non-apparent easement. A non-continuous or discontinuous easement. See Easement.
Non-appearance. A failure of appearance; the omission of the defendant to appear within the time limited.

Non-assessable. This word, placed upon a certificate of stock, does not cancel or impair the obligation to pay the amount due upon the shares created by the acceptance and holding of such certificate. At most its legal effect is a stipulation against liability from further assessment or taxation after the entire subscription of one hundred per cent. shall have been paid. Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U.S. 45, 23 L.Ed. 203.

Non assumpsit /nón ādām(̓)pàs̓at̓/. The general issue in the action of assumpsit; being a plea by which the defendant avers that "he did not undertake" or promise as alleged.

Non assumpsit infra sex annos /nón ādām(̓)pàs̓at̓ sùk̓s̓ ənəwəs̓/ He did not undertake within six years. The name of the plea of the statute of limitations, in the action of assumpsit.

Non auditur perire volens /nón əd̓əd̓ər pək̓ər̓ɛl̓əv wəvl̓ən(̓)dz̓/. He who is desirous to perish is not heard. He who confesses himself guilty of a crime, with the view of meeting death, will not be heard. A maxim of the foreign law of evidence.

Non-bailable. Not admitting of bail; not requiring bail.

Non bis in idem /nón əs̓i d̓əm/. Not twice for the same; that is, a man shall not be twice tried for the same crime. This maxim of the civil law expresses the same principle as the familiar rule of our law that a man shall not be twice "put in jeopardy" for the same offense.

Non-cancellable /nón ək̓ən(t̓)sələbəl/. Such provision in insurance policy precludes insurer from cancelling policy after an illness or accident, so long as the premium has been paid. Dudgeon v. Mutual Ben. Health & Accident Ass'n, C.C.A.W.Va., 70 F.2d 49, 52.

Non cept /nón səl̓əpət̓/. He did not take. The general issue in replevin, where the action is for the wrongful taking of the property, putting in issue not only the taking, but the place in which the taking is stated to have been made.

Non-claim. The omission or neglect of person who ought to claim his right within the time limited by law.

Covenant of non-claim. See Covenant.

Non-combatant. A person connected with an army or navy, but for purposes other than fighting; such as the surgeons and chaplains or conscientious objectors. Also a neutral.

Non-commissioned. A non-commissioned officer of the armed services is an officer who holds his rank, not by commission from the executive authority, but by appointment by a superior officer.

Non compos mentis /nón kəmpəs məntəs/. Lat. Not sound of mind; insane. This is a very general term, embracing all varieties of mental derangement. See Insanity.

Non concedantur citationes prulsquam exprimatur su-per qua re fleti debet citatio /nón kənədəntər stətəshiyəwənīyz prəyəskəkəm səkəprəmədər s(y)əwpər kəwə ɾi ʃəfərə ɾədbə saytəsh(y)əwə/. Summons should not be granted before it is expressed on what matter the summons ought to be made.

Non concessit /nón kənəsət/. Lat. He did not grant. The name of a common law plea denying a grant, which could be made only by a stranger.

Nonconforming lot. A lot the area, dimension or location of which was lawful prior to the adoption, revision or amendment of a zoning ordinance, but now fails to conform to the requirements of the zoning district in which it is located by reason of such adoption, revision, or amendment.

Nonconforming use. A structure the size, dimension or location of which was lawful prior to the adoption, revision or amendment of a zoning ordinance, but which fails to conform to the requirements of the zoning district in which it is located by reasons of such adoption, revision or amendment. A use which does not comply with present zoning provisions but which existed lawfully and was created in good faith prior to the enactment of the zoning provision. Camaron Apartments, Inc. v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment of City of Philadelphia, 14 Pa.Cmwlth. 571, 324 A.2d 805, 807.

Uses permitted by zoning statutes or ordinances to continue notwithstanding that similar uses are not permitted in area in which they are located. Beyer v. Mayor and Council of Baltimore City, 182 Md. 444, 34 A.2d 765, 766.

See also Variance.

Non-conformist. One who refuses to comply with others; one who refuses to join in the established forms of custom, belief, styles, usages, rules, etc.

Non consentit quē errat /nón kənəsəntət kwə ərət/. He who mistakes does not consent.

Non constat /nón kənəstət/. Lat. It does not appear; it is not clear or evident. A phrase used in general to state some conclusion as not necessarily following although it may appear on its face to follow.

Non-contestable clause. A non-contestable clause secures to insured indemnity by way of short limitations by contract against belated charges of fraud and mistake and rescission therefor, when he has acted thereon to his detriment by payment of premiums and foregoing other insurance.

Non-continuous easement. "Continuous easement" is one which may be enjoyed without any act by party claiming it, while "noncontinuous easement," such as right of way, is one to enjoyment of which party's act is essential. A non-apparent or discontinuous easement. See Easement.

Noncontribution clause. In fire insurance policies, a provision that only the interests of the owner and first mortgagee are protected under the policy.

Non culpabilis /nón kələpəbələs/. Lat. In pleading, not guilty. It is usually abbreviated "non cul."

Non-endorser /nón əndərmər/. A person who does not endorse a negotiable instrument.
Noncumulative dividends. Commonly incident to preferred stock if a dividend is "passed" (not paid) in a particular year or period; such passed dividends are gone forever and there is no obligation to pay such when the next dividend is paid.

A common law plea in an action of debt on an indemnity bond, or bond conditioned "to keep the plaintiff harmless and indemnified," etc. It is in the nature of a plea of performance, being used where the defendant means to allege that the plaintiff has been kept harmless and indemnified, according to the tenor of the condition.

Non dat qui non habet /nón dáét kwyá nón hýbat/. He who has not does not give.

Non debeat melioris conditionis esse, quam auctor meus a quo jus in me transit /nón débat méjóris kóndishiónwáns éesí kwóm ókta míyas éy kwók jás in míy térón(d)zat/. I ought not to be in better condition than he to whose rights I succeed.

That which seems necessary for the king and the state ought not to be said to tend to the prejudice of spiritual liberty.

Non decret homines dedere causa non cognita /nón dësat hómaníy du dádáry kóza nón kógnada/. It is unacceptable to surrender men when no cause is shown.

Non decimando /nón dësamándow/. See De non decimando.

Non decipitur qui scit se decipi /nón dáspárdar kwyá sit síy désáspá/. He is not deceived who knows himself to be deceived.

Non dedit /nón diydzat/. Lat. In old pleading, he did not grant. The general issue in formedon.

Non definitur in jure quid sit conatus /nón dáfinadarár in júrí kwí sit kanéydzat/. What an attempt is, is not defined in law. See Attempt.

Non-delivery. Neglect, failure, or refusal to deliver goods, on the part of a carrier, vendor, bailee, etc.

Non demisit /nón dámyázat/. Lat. He did not demisce.

Non detinet /nón dêtanzt/. Lat. He does not detain.

The name of the general issue in the action of detinue. The general issue in the action of replevin, where the action is for the wrongful detention only.

Non differunt que concordant re, tametsi non in verbis ìsdem /nón dífáront kwyá kándórdánt ríy, tamestíy nón in váríbas íyáysdám/. Those things do not differ which agree in substance, though not in the same words.

Non dimisit /nón dámyázat/. L. Lat. He did not demisce. A common law plea resorted to where a plaintiff declared upon a demise without stating the indenure in an action of debt for rent. Also, a plea in bar, in replevin, to an avowry for arrears of rent, that the avowant did not demisce.

Non-direction. Omission on the part of a judge to properly instruct the jury upon a necessary conclusion of law.

Non-disclosure. A failure to reveal facts, which may exist when there is no "concealment." State v. Watson, 145 Kan. 792, 67 P.2d 515, 517. See Fraud; Material fact; Misrepresentation.

Non distinguendo /nón distriýérdow/. A writ not to restrain.

It is certain that, although the vendor has not given a special guaranty, an action ex emplo lies against him, if the purchaser is evicted.

Non efficit affectus nisi sequatur effectus /nón efásad aféktas náyasay sakwéydar aféktas/. The intention amounts to nothing unless the effect follow.

Non erit alia lex Rome, alia Athénias; alia nunc, alia posthac; sed et omnes gentes, et omni tempore, una lex, et semipeterna, et immortals continuebit /nón éhrát élýía léks rówmíy, élýía sélýnas, élýía nádp, élýía pówst hák; séd ét ómniy jéntíy éd ómna rpémóri tíyúwá léks, ét sémítárná ét imórtélýas, kóntány ýbat/. There will not be one law at Rome, another at Athens; one law now, another hereafter; but one eternal and immortal law shall bind together all nations throughout all time.
Non est arctius vinculum inter homines quam jusjurandum /nón ést ārkšiās víŋk(ŷ)lām īntā hômiānyōz kwām jāsārāndām/. There is no closer [or firmer] bond between men than an oath.

Non est certandum de regulis juris /nón ést sartōndām dī ľyɡēlas jūrās/. There is no disputing about rules of law.

Non est conssonum rationi, quod cognitio accessori in curia christianitatis imperiatur, ubi cognitio causa principalis ad forum ecclesiasticum nosciatur pertinent /nón ést kwńsān rāshīyōwnān kwōd kognīsh(ŷ)yōw ęskāsāřīyāy in kyūrīya kriš(h)chīyānātēyāds īmplī-dīyēyād, yūwamba kognīsh(ŷ)yōw kōzyī prīn(t)seşpēlyās ēd fōram ākliyīyēstākam nōsēd bōrdānī/. It is unreasonable that the cognizance of an accessory matter should be impeded in an ecclesiastical court, when the cognizance of the principal cause is adjusted to appeal to an ecclesiastical court.

Non est disputandum contra principia negantem /nón ést dispīyāndām kōntrā prīnšīpīya nāgāntām/. We cannot dispute against a man who denies first principles.

Non est Inventus /nón ést ĭnvēntās/. Lat. He is not found. The sheriff’s return to process requiring him to arrest the body of the defendant, when the latter is not found within his jurisdiction. It is often abbreviated, “n. e. t.,” or written, in English, “not found.”

Non est justum aliquem antenatum post mortem facere bastardum qui tota tempore vita sua pro legitimo habebatur /nón ést jāstām ālakwām āntīnēyēdām pōwst mōrdām fēşōryī bestārdām kwāy tōwdōk tempōryī vādīyī sū(yū)wīy prōw lājādām hēbbōbēyēdr/. It is not just to make an elderborn a bastard after his death, when during his lifetime was accounted legitimate.

Non est novum ut priores leges ad posteriores trahatur /nón ést nówvm āt prāyōryī lyījyāz ād pastīlīrīryī trāhānt/. It is no new thing that prior statutes should give place to later ones.

Non est recedendum a communis observantia /nón ést rēsāndām ēy kamyūwnān ōbdārīnsh(ŷ)yā/. There should be no departure from a common observance.

Non est regula quin fallat /nón ést rēgyālā kwīn fōlā/. There is no rule but what may fail.

Non est reus nisi mens sit rea /nón ést ūyās nāyāsay mēn(ŷ)z sit ūyā/. One is not guilty unless his intention is guilty. This maxim is much criticized and is only applicable when the absence of intent reduces the seriousness of the crime. See Actus non facti reum, etc.; Mens rea.

Non est singulis concedendum, quod per magistratum publice possit fieri, ne occasio sit majoris tumultus faciendi /nón ést sīŋɡyālas kōn(t)sādāndām kwōd pār mājāstrēydām pābīssī yōw pōsēt fāsyār, nīy ałēzšy(ŷ)yōw sit mājōrās tāmālās fāšyīyēndāy/. That is not to be conceded to private persons which can be publicly done by the magistrate, lest it be the occasion of greater tumults.

Non exemplis sed legibus judicandum est /nón āgāmēplās sēd ľyjābos jūwākāndām ēst/. Not by the facts of the case, but by the law must judgment be made.

Non ex opinionibus singularum, sed ex communl usl, nomina exaudiri debent /nón Ėks sīnīyōnābas sīŋgylōrām sēd Ėks kamyūwnān yōwś(ŷ)yōw nōmān Ėksōdōyēyāy débān/. The names of things ought to be understood, not according to the opinions of individuals, but according to common usage.

Non facias malum, ut índē flat bonum /nón fēşy(ŷ)yōs mālām ēd índi ľyşōt bōwām/. You are not to do evil, that good may be or result therefrom.

Nonfeasance /nónfēzīyan(t)ō/. Nonperformance of any act which ought to be performed, omission to perform a required duty at all, or total neglect of duty. Desmarais v. Wachusett Regional School Dist., 360 Mass. 591, 276 N.E.2d 691, 693.

There is a distinction between “nonfeasance” and “misfeasance” or “malfeasance”; and this distinction is often of great importance in determining an agent’s liability to third persons. “Nonfeasance” means the total omission or failure of an agent to enter upon the performance of some distinct duty or undertaking which he has agreed with his principal to do; “misfeasance” means the improper doing of an act which the agent might lawfully do, or, in other words, it is the performing of his duty to his principal in such a manner as to infringe upon the rights and privileges of third persons; and “malfeasance” is a doing of an act which he ought not to do at all.

See also Malfeasance.

Non feclt /nón fīysīt/. Lat. He did not make it. A plea in an action of assumptis on a promissory note.

Non factum vastum contra prohibitionem /nón fīysāt wāstām kōntra prōw(h)bīshīyōwnām/. He did not commit waste against the prohibition. A plea to an action founded on a writ of estrempement for waste.

Non-freehold estates. All estates in real property without seisin; hence, all estates except the fee simple, fee tail and life estates are non-freehold.

Non hae in feegra veni /nón hīyk in fēdār vīyūnāy/. I did not agree to these terms.
Non impedit clausula derogatoria quo minus ad eadem potestate res dissolvantur a qua constituntur. Non impiebyat klózya daragôtaryya kwów máynas ádd iyéydam pówistsédyi riy dzásôlvántar éy kWéy kanstit(y)uántar. A derogatory clause does not impede things from being dissolved by the same power by which they are created.

Non impedivit /nón impádáyvat/. Lat. He did not impede. The plea of the general issue in quare impedit. The Latin form of the law French “ne disturbas pass.”

Non implacando aliquem de libero tenemento sine brevi /nón implátséándow élakwem díy líbròw tênáméntow sǎnyík bryiway/. A writ to prohibit bailiffs, etc., from distraining or impounding any man touching his freehold without the king’s writ.

Non infriget conventionem /nón infriyít kórvén’shiyównom/. Lat. He did not break the contract. The name of a plea sometimes pleaded in the action of covenant, and intended as a general issue, but held to be a bad plea; there being, properly speaking, no general issue in that action.

Non in legendo sed in intelligendo legis consistunt /nón in lajéndow sèd in int’éndow lyéyij kónsistant/. The laws consist not in being read, but in being understood.

Noninsurable risk. A hazard or risk for which insurance will not be written because not subject to evaluation by actuarial computations; such risk being too uncertain.

Non-intercourse. The refusal of one state or nation to have commercial dealings with another; similar to an embargo (q.v.).

The absence of access, communication, or sexual relations between husband and wife. See Non-access.

Non interflu /nón intárlyuwyá/. I was not present. A reporter’s note.

Non-intervention will. A term sometimes applied to a will which authorizes the executor to settle and distribute the estate without the intervention of the court and without giving bond.

Non intromissum clause /nón intrámidant klózy/. In English law, a clause of a charter of a municipal borough, whereby the borough is exempted from the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace for the county.

Non intromittendo, quando breve praecipe in capite subdole imperatur /nón intrámátêndow kwóndôw bryiwyí prässiyi in képôdiy sâbdâly impätrireýdaw/. In old English law, a writ addressed to the justices of the bench, or in eyre, commanding them not to give one, who, under color of entitling the king to land, etc., as holding of him in capite, had deceitfully obtained the writ called “praecipe in capite,” any benefit thereof, but to put him to his writ of right.

Non-Issuable pleas. Those upon which a decision would not determine the action upon the merits, as a plea in abatement.

Non-joinder. See Joinder.

Non-judicial day. Day on which process cannot ordinarly issue or be executed or returned, and on which courts do not usually sit. Vidal v. Backs, 218 Cal. 99, 21 P. 2d 952.

Non juridicus /nón jàridák/. Not judicial; not legal. Dies non juridicus is a day on which legal proceedings cannot be had.

Non-jurors. In English law, persons who refuse to take the oaths, required by law, to support the government.

Non jus ex regula, sed regula ex jure /nón jás ék’s régyála séd régyála ék’s júrving/. The law does not arise from the rule (or maxim), but the rule from the law.

Non jus, sed seisina, facit stipitem /nón jás sèd siyáza fëysát stipádam/. Not right, but seisin, makes a stock. It is not a mere right to enter on lands, but actual seisin, which makes a person the root or stock from which all future inheritance by right of blood must be derived.

Non-leviable /nón léviyábal/. Not subject to be levied upon. Property exempt from seizure, forfeiture or sale in bankruptcy, attachment, garnishment, etc. Non-leviable assets are assets upon which an execution cannot be levied. See also Exemption; Homestead.

Non licet quod dispenso licet /nón lisat kwód dispéndyow lisat/. That which may be [done only] at a loss is not allowed [to be done]. The law does not permit or require the doing of an act which will result only in loss. The law forbids such recoveries whose ends are vain, changeable, and unprofitable.

Non liquet /nón líkwát/*líykwat/. Lat. It is not clear.

In the Roman courts, when any of the judges, after the hearing of a cause, were not satisfied that the case was made clear enough for them to pronounce a verdict, they were privileged to signify this opinion by casting a ballot inscribed with the letters “N. L.,” the abbreviated form of the phrase “non liquet.”

Non-mailable. A term applied to all letters and parcels which are by law excluded from transportation in the United States mails, whether on account of the size of the package, the nature of its contents, its obscene character, or for other reasons.

Non merchandizanda victualia /nón márchandázánda víchúwéy(l)y/a/. An ancient writ addressed to justices of assize, to inquire whether the magistrates of a town sold victuals in gross or by retail during the time of their being in office, which was contrary to an obsolete statute; and to punish them if they did.

Non-merchantable title. The title to realty need not be bad in fact to render it “non-merchantable”, but it is sufficient, if an ordinarily prudent man with knowledge of facts and aware of legal questions involved would not accept it in ordinary course of business. Ghormley v. Kleeden, 155 Kan. 319, 124 P.2d 467, 470. See Merchantable title.
NON MOLESTANDO

Non molestando /nón mòwlastándow/. A writ that lay for a person who was molested contrary to the king's protection granted to him.

Non nasci, et natum mori, parla sunt /nón násay ét néydam móray pàrìya sànt/. Not to be born, and to be dead-born, are the same.

Non-navigable. At common law, streams or bodies of water not affected by tide were "non-navigable". Lüscher v. Reynolds, 153 Or. 625, 56 P.2d 1158, 1162. Bodies of water other than navigable waters (q.v.).

Non-negotiable. Not negotiable; not capable of passing title or property by indorsement and delivery. An instrument which may not be transferred by indorsement and delivery or by delivery alone, though it may be assigned. The transferee does not become a holder unless it is negotiated.

Non obligat lex nisi promulgata /nón oblagat léks násay pròmágàyda/. A law is not obligatory unless it be promulgated.

Non obstante /nón òbástènt/. Lat. Notwithstanding.

Words ancieantly used in public and private instruments, intended to preclude, in advance, any interpretation contrary to certain declared objects or purposes.

A clause frequent in old English statutes and letters patent (so termed from its initial words), importing a license from the crown to do a thing which otherwise a person would be restrained by act of parliament from doing. A power in the crown to dispense with the laws in any particular case. This was abolished by the bill of rights at the Revolution.

Non obstante veredicto /nón òbástènt vyèrèdiktow/. Notwithstanding the verdict. A judgment entered by order of court for the plaintiff (or defendant) although there has been a verdict for the defendant (or plaintiff). Judgment non obstante veredicto in its broadest sense is a judgment rendered in favor of one party notwithstanding the finding of a verdict in favor of the other party. A motion for a directed verdict is a prerequisite to a subsequent grant of judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Fed.R. Civil P. 50.

Judgment non obstante veredicto originally, at common law, was a judgment entered for plaintiff "notwithstanding the verdict" for defendant; which could be done only, after verdict and before judgment, where it appeared that defendant's plea confessed the cause of action and set up matters in avoidance which, although verified by the verdict, were insufficient to constitute a defense or bar to the action. But either by statutory enactment or because of relaxation of the early common-law rule, the generally prevailing rule now is that either plaintiff or defendant may have a judgment non obstante veredicto in proper cases.

Non officit conatus nisi sequatur effectus /nón òfàst kànéydas násay sàkwàydar sèfèktos/. An attempt does not harm unless a consequence follow.

Non omittas /nón ámídas/. A clause usually inserted in writs of execution, in England, directing the sheriff "not to omit" to execute the writ by reason of any liberty, because there are many liberties or districts in which the sheriff has no power to execute process unless he has special authority.

Non omne damnum inducet injuriam /nón ómni dàmmmàn a(n)yúswàd a(n)jùrìyàm/. It is not every loss that produces an injury.

Non omne quod illet honestum est /nón ómni kwòd lìsad (h)ànèstám ést/. It is not everything which is permitted that is honorable.

Non omnium que a majoribus nostris constituta sunt ratio reddi potest /nón ómniyyàm kwìly èy màjòràbbus nóstrà kònßàst(y)úwàd sànt ràsh(l)yòw rèdày pòw-dàst/. There cannot be a reason for all the things which have been established by our ancestors.

Nonpayment. The neglect, failure, or refusal of payment of a debt or evidence of debt when due.

Non-performance. Neglect, failure, or refusal to do or perform an act stipulated to be done. Failure to keep the terms of a contract or covenant, in respect to acts or doings agreed upon. The failure or neglect to render performance called for in a contract, rendering the non-performer liable in damages or subject to a decree or judgment of specific performance.

Non pertinet ad judicem secularem cognoscere de libere qua sunt mere spiritualia annexa /nón pèrtinent àd jùdíèmm èkèlebràm kà(s)nèssàlìy ëës ëxìs kwìly sànt mírìyì sprìà(t)(y)úwél(l)ìyà ënèksà/. It belongs not to the secular judge to take cognizance of things which are merely spiritual.

Non plevin /nón plèvìn/. In old English law, default in not repleving land in due time, when the same was taken by the king upon a default. The consequence thereof (loss of seisin) was abrogated by St. 9 Edw. III, c. 2.

Non ponendis in assis et juratis /nón pònèndàs èn sàsìyìs èt jùréyìs/. A writ formerly granted for freeing and discharging persons from serving on assizes and juries.

Non possessori incumbit necessitas probandi possessiones ad se pertinere /nón pò wzàsàrìy inkàmbòt nasèstàs pràbèndày pàzèshìyòwnìyì ëës sìyì pàrdànìrìyì/. A person in possession is not bound to prove that the possessions belong to him.

Non postet adducit exceptio ejus rel cujus petitur disso-lutio /nón pó wòd åd(y)úwwsì akéshìyìw(y)òw yìsà yìsà kyúwìjì péddàr disàl(y)úwìsì(y)òw/. An exception of the same thing whose avoidance is sought cannot be made.

Non postet probati quod probatum non relevat /nón pó wòd pràbèyàkwòd pràbèyàd nón ròlèvà/. That cannot be proved which, if proved, is immaterial.

Non postet quis sine brevi ager /nón pó wòd kwìs sàynìyì bìryìyì ajìyì/. No one can sue without a writ. A fundamental rule of old practice.
Non potest rex gratiam facere cum injuria et damno allorum /nón pówdst réks gréýsh(y)am féyasury kám injúriya ét dámnow élylíóra/. The king cannot confer a favor on one subject which occasions injury and loss to others.

Non potest rex subdittum renitentem onerare impositionibus /nón pówdst réks sóbódam rëntëntam ównaréry impázishyównabas/. The king cannot load a subject with imposition against his consent.

Non potest videri desisse habere qui nunquam habuit /nón pówdst vaidarý dasázyílí hóbirí kwáy nágkwaw hábyuywuta/. He cannot be considered as having ceased to have a thing who never had it.

Non præstat impedimentum quo de jure non sortitur effectum /nón priýstat ampedáméntam kwó diý júriý nón sórdádam afékta/. A thing which has no effect in law is not an impediment.

Non procedendo ad assissam rege inconsulto /nón prówysdédëm ad ásyaým riýiy inkánštow/. A writ to put a stop to the trial of a cause appertaining unto one who is in the king’s service, etc., until the king’s pleasure respecting the same be known.

Non-profit association. A group organized for purposes other than generating profit, such as a charitable, scientific, or literary organization. See also Non-profit corporation.

Non-profit corporation. A corporation no part of the income of which is distributable to its members, directors or officers. Corporations may be organized under the Model Non-Profit Corporation Act “for any lawful purpose or purposes, including, without being limited to, any one or more of the following purposes: charitable; benevolent; eleemosynary; educational; civic; patriotic; political; religious; social; fraternal; literary; cultural; athletic; scientific; agricultural; horticultural; animal husbandry, and professional, commercial, industrial or trade association; but labor unions, cooperative organizations, and organizations subject to any of the provisions of the insurance laws of this State may not be organized under this Act.” Id. § 4. For purposes of federal income taxation, an organization may be exempt as an “exempt organization” if it is organized and operated exclusively for one or more of the following purposes: (a) religious, (b) charitable, (c) scientific, (d) testing for public safety, (e) literary, (f) educational, (g) prevention of cruelty to children or animals, or (h) to foster national or international sports. See I.R.C. § 501(c) for a list of exempt organizations.

Non pros /nón próts/. Abbreviation of non prosequitur (q.v.).

Non prosequitur /nón prósèkwwad/. Lat. He does not follow up, or pursue. If, in the proceedings in an action at law, the plaintiff neglects to take any of those steps which he ought to take within the time prescribed by the practice of the court for that purpose, the defendant may enter judgment of non pros against him, whereby it is adjudged that the plaintiff does not follow up (non prosequitur) his suit as he ought to do, and therefore the defendant ought to have judgment against him. Under current rules practice, such failure would result in a dismissal of the action or in a default judgment for defendant. Fed.R. Civil P. 41, 55.

Non quæta movere /nón kwályýda mávirí/. Lat. Not to disturb what is settled. A rule expressing the same principle as that of stare decisis (q.v.).

Non quod dictum est, sed quod factum est inspicitur /nón kwó diktam ést séd kwó fákta ét inspísíadr/. Not what is said, but what is done, is regarded.

Nonrecourse. Status of person who holds an instrument which gives him no legal right against prior endorsers or the drawer to compel payment if the instrument is dishonored.

Nonrecourse loan. Type of security loan which bars the lender from action against the borrower if the security value falls below the amount required to repay the loan. It is used by the U.S. in loans to farmers on surplus crops.

Non refert an quis assensum suum prefert verbis, aut rebus ipsis et factis /nón réfárt áén kwís asey(ées)u sm(y)uam priýfrart várbas ót rýbas ipás et fákta/. It matters not whether a man gives his assent by his words or by his acts and deeds.

Non-residence. Residence beyond the limits of the particular jurisdiction.

In ecclesiastical law, the absence of spiritual persons from their benefices.

Non-resident. One who does not reside within jurisdiction in question; not an inhabitant of the state of the forum. Special rules govern service of process on non-residents; e.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 4(e). See Long arm statutes.

For the distinction between “residence” and “domicile,” see Domicile.

Non-resident alien. One who is neither a resident nor a citizen of this country.

Non-resident decedent. Decedent domiciled in another jurisdiction at the time of his death. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(26).

Non-resident motorist statutes. State laws governing the liability and obligations of non-residents who use the state’s highways.

Non residenti pro clerico regis /nón rëzadéns(ées)yow prów kléhrkow ríýyas/. A writ, addressed to a bishop, charging him not to molest a clerk employed in the royal service, by reason of his nonresidence; in which case he is to be discharged.
Non respondebit minor nisi in causa dotis, et hoc pro favore doti /nón rospándyebat máynar náysay in közz dówdas êt hók prów favóiry dówday/. A minor shall not answer unless in a case of dower, and this in favor of dower.

Non sane mentis /nón sénny menttás/. Lat. Of unsound mind.

Non-sane. As “sane,” when applied to the mind, means whole, sound, in a healthful state; “non-sane” means not whole, not sound, not in a healthful state; that is, broken, impaired, shattered, infirm, weak, diseased, unable, either from nature or accident, to perform the rational functions common to man upon the objects presented to it. See also Insanity.

Non sequitur /nón sékwadar/. Lat. It does not follow.

Non solent que abundant vitiare scripturas /nón sórvlavt kwiáb abändar vishiyéry skript(y)úras/. Superfluities [things which abound] do not usually vitiate writings.

Non solum quid licet, sed quid est conveniens, est considerandum; quia nihil quod est inconveniens est lictum /nón sóvlam kwíd láyast séd kwíd íst kánvlyn(y)án(d)í, íst kán(s)ísdarándam, kwéyá náy(h)al kwód íst ínkánvlyn(y)án(d)í íst lísdám/. Not only what is lawful, but what is proper or convenient, is to be considered; because nothing that is inconvenient is lawful.

Non solvendo pecuniam ad quam clericus mulctatur pro non-residentia /nón solvéndow pškúyn(y)ám séd kwámr kléhrarák málkéydar prów nónrenzádén-shiy(y)ás/. A writ prohibiting an ordinary to take a pecuniary mulct imposed on a clerk of the sovereign for nonresidence.

Non-stock corporation. Species of non-profit corporation in which the members hold no shares of stock as in the cases of religious and charitable corporations.

Non submissit /nón súbmissát/. Lat. He did not submit. A plea to an action of debt, on a bond to perform an award, to the effect that the defendant did not submit to the arbitration.

Non sui juris /nón sú(y)úwaw júras/. Lat. Not his own master. The opposite of sui juris (q.v.). Lacking legal capacity to act for oneself as in the case of a minor or mentally incompetent person.

Nonsuit. A term broadly applied to a variety of terminations of an action which do not adjudicate issues on the merits. McCollan v. Jones, Hubbard & Donnell, 11 Cal.2d 243, 78 P.2d 1010, 1011. Name of a judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove a case, or when he refuses or neglects to proceed to trial and leaves the issue undetermined. Generally speaking, “nonsuit” is name of judgment rendered against party in legal proceeding on his inability to maintain his cause in court, or when he is in default in prosecuting his suit or in complying with orders of court. Jaquith v. Revson, 159 Conn. 427, 270 A.2d 559, 561.

Action in form of a judgment taken against a plaintiff who has failed to appear to prosecute his action or failed to prove his case. Under rules practice, the applicable term is “dismissal”, not nonsuit. Fed.R. Civil P. 41.

See also Default-judgment; Directed verdict.

Judgment of nonsuit (i.e. “dismissal”) is of two kinds.—voluntary and involuntary. When plaintiff abandons his case, and consents that judgment go against him for costs, it is voluntary. Fed.R. Civil P. 41(a). But when he, being called, neglects to appear, or when he has given no evidence on which a jury could find a verdict, or when his case is put out of court by some adverse ruling precluding a recovery, it is involuntary. Rule 41(b).

A peremptory nonsuit is a compulsory or involuntary nonsuit, ordered by the court upon a total failure of the plaintiff to substantiate his claim by evidence.

Non sum informatus /nón sám infirméydas/. Lat. I am not informed; I have not been instructed.

Non-summons, wager of law of. In common law pleading, the mode in which a tenant or defendant in a real action pleaded, when the summons which followed the original was not served within the proper time.

Non sunt longa ubi nihil est quod demere possis /nón sánt lóoga yúwbañ náy(h)al íst kwód demaríy pósas/. There is no proximity where there is nothing that can be omitted.

Non-support. The failure or neglect unreasonably to support those to whom an obligation of support is due; e.g. duty of parents to support children; duty to support spouse. Such failure to support is a criminal offense in most states.

Nonsupport of a child is a parent’s failure, neglect or refusal without lawful excuse to provide for the support and maintenance of his or her child in necessitous circumstances. Nonsupport of a spouse is an individual’s failure without just cause to provide for the support of his or her spouse in necessitous circumstances.

See also Necessitous circumstances; Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act; Support.

Non temere credere est nervus sapientiae /nón témariy krédárti íst nárvas sápipréshiy(y)áy/. Not to believe rashly is the nerve of wisdom.

Norman French. The tongue in which several formal proceedings of state in England are still carried on.
The language, having remained the same since the date of the Conquest, at which it was introduced into England, is very different from the French of this day, retaining all the peculiarities which at that time distinguished every province from the rest. A peculiar mode of pronunciation (considered authentic) is handed down and preserved by the officials who have, on particular occasions, to speak the tongue.
Norman French was the language of English legal procedure till the 36 Edw. III (A.D. 1362).

Norris-La Guardia Act. Federal statute restricting the use of injunctions by federal courts in labor disputes.

Norroy. In English law, the title of the third of the three kings-at-arms, or provincial heralds.

territory northwest of the Ohio river.

Nosicitur a sociis /nōsādār ēy sōwsiyəs/. It is known from its associates. The meaning of a word is or may be known from the accompanying words. Under the discipline of “nosicitur a sociis”, the meaning of questionable words or phrases in a statute may be ascertained by reference to the meaning of words or phrases associated with it. Wong Kam Wo v. Dullies, C.A.Hawaii, 236 F.2d 622, 626.

Nosicitur ex socio, qui non cognoscitur ex se /nōsādār ēks sōwsh(i)yow kwāy nōn kāgōsādār ēks sīyə/. He who cannot be known from himself may be known from his associate.

Nosocomi /nōskōwmə/. In the civil law, persons who have the management and care of hospitals for paupers.

No-strike clause. Provision commonly found in public service labor-management agreements to the effect that the employees will not strike for any reason.

Nota /nówda/. Lat. In the civil law, a mark or brand put upon a person by the law.

Note /nówdiy/. In civil and old European law, shorthand characters or marks of contraction, in which the emperors’ secretaries took down what they dictated.

Notarial /nōtwērîyəl/. Taken by a notary; performed by a notary in his official capacity; belonging to a notary and evidencing his official character, as, a notarial seal.

Notarial acts. Official acts of notary public (q.v.).

Notarial will. A will executed by the testator in the presence of a Notary Public and two witnesses.

Notarius /nōtwērîyəs/. Lat. In old English law, a scribe or scrivener who made short draughts of writings and other instruments; a notary.

In Roman law, a draughtsman; an amanuensis; a shorthand writer; one who took notes of the proceedings in the senate or a court, or of what was dictated to him by another; one who prepared draughts of wills, conveyances, etc.

Notary public. A public officer whose function it is to administer oaths; to attest and certify, by his hand and official seal, certain classes of documents, in order to give them credit and authenticity in foreign jurisdictions; to take acknowledgments of deeds and other conveyances, and certify the same; and to perform certain official acts, chiefly in commercial matters, such as the protesting of notes and bills, the noting of foreign drafts, and marine protests in cases of loss or damage. One who is authorized by the state or federal government to administer oaths, and to attest to the authenticity of signatures.

Notation credit. A credit which specifies that any person purchasing or paying drafts drawn or demands for payment made under it must note the amount of the draft or demand on the letter or advise of credit.
U.C.C. § 5–108(1).

Note, v. To make a brief written statement; to enter a memorandum, as to note an exception.

Note, n. An instrument containing an express and absolute promise of signer (i.e. maker) to pay to a specified person or order, or bearer, a definite sum of money at a specified time. Two party instrument made by the maker and payable to payee which is negotiable if signed by the maker and contains an unconditional promise to pay sum certain in money, on demand or at a definite time, to order or bearer.
U.C.C. § 3–104(1). A note not meeting these requirements may be assignable but not negotiable.

An abstract; a memorandum; an informal statement in writing.

See also Balloon note; Coal note; Judgment note;
Promissory note; Sold note; Treasury note.

Circular note. See Letter of credit.

Collateral note. Two party instrument containing promise to pay and secured by pledge of property such as securities, real estate, etc.

Demand note. Note payable on demand as contrasted with a time note which is payable at a definite time in the future.

Installment note. One of a series of notes payable at regular intervals or a single note calling for payment in installments at fixed periods of time.

Joint and several note. A note signed by persons as makers who agree to be bound both jointly and severally; i.e. they may be joined in a suit or they may be sued separately.

Joint note. Note evidencing an indebtedness in which two or more persons agree to be liable jointly and for payment of which all such persons must be joined in an action to recover.

Mortgage note. A note evidencing a loan for which real estate has been offered as security.

Negotiable note. To qualify as negotiable, the note must be signed by the maker, contain an unconditional promise to pay a sum certain in money and be payable on demand or at a definite time to order or bearer. U.C.C. § 3-104(1).

Secured note. A note for which security in the form of either real or personal property has been pledged or mortgaged. See also Collateral note, supra.

Time note. Note payable at a definite future time as contrasted with a demand note.

Unsecured note. Note evidencing an indebtedness for which no security has been pledged or mortgaged.

Note of a fine. In old English conveyancing, one of the parts of a fine of lands, being an abstract of the writ of covenant, and the concord; naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the agreement.

Note of allowance. In English practice, a note delivered by a master to a party to a cause, who alleged that there was error in law in the record and proceedings, allowing him to bring error.

Note of hand. A popular name (now obsolete) for a promissory note.

Note of protest. A memorandum of the fact of protest, indorsed by the notary upon the bill, at the time, to be afterwards written out at length.

Note or memorandum. Under statute of frauds, an informal minute or memorandum made on the spot. It must contain all the essential elements and substantial parts of the contract. Stanley v. A. Levy & J. Zentner Co., 60 Nev. 432, 112 P.2d 1047, 1053.

Notes payable. In bookkeeping, an account reflecting the aggregate indebtedness evidenced by promissory notes; the notes themselves are liabilities.

Notes receivable. In bookkeeping, an account containing evidence of indebtedness for which promissory notes have been given to the account of the party making the entry; the notes themselves are assets.

Not found. These words, indorsed on a bill of indictment by a grand jury, have the same effect as the indorsement "Not a true bill", "No bill," or "Ignoramus." See also Non est inventus.

Not guilty. A plea of the general issue in the actions of trespass and case. Plea entered by the accused to criminal charge. See e.g. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11. The form of the verdict in criminal cases, where the jury acquits the defendant; i.e. finds him "not guilty".

Not guilty by statute. In old English practice, a plea of the general issue by a defendant in a civil action, when he intends to give special matter in evidence by virtue of some act or acts of parliament, in which case he must add the reference to such act or acts, and state whether such acts are public or otherwise. But, if a defendant so plead, he will not be allowed to plead any other defense, without the leave of the court or a judge.

Nothus /nōtəs/. Lat. In Roman law, a natural child or a person of spurious birth.

Notice. Information; the result of observation, whether by the senses or the mind; knowledge of the existence of a fact or state of affairs; the means of knowledge. Intelligence by whatever means communicated. Koenh v. Central Nat. Ins. Co. of Omaha, Neb., 187 Kan. 192, 354 P.2d 352, 358.

Notice is knowledge of facts which would naturally lead an honest and prudent person to make inquiry, and does not necessarily mean knowledge of all the facts. Wayne Bldg. & Loan Co. of Wooster v. Yarborough, 11 Ohio St.2d 195, 228 N.E.2d 841, 847, 40 O.O.2d 182. In another sense, "notice" means information, an advice, or written warning, in more or less formal shape, intended to apprise a person of some proceeding in which his interests are involved, or informing him of some fact which it is his right to know and the duty of the notifying party to communicate.

Fed.R. Civil P. 5(a) requires that every written notice be served upon each of the parties.

A person has notice of a fact if he knows the fact, has reason to know it, should know it, or has been given notification of it. Restatement, Second, Agency § 9.

Notice may be either (1) statutory, i.e., made so by legislative enactment; (2) actual, which brings the knowledge of a fact directly home to the party; or (3) constructive. Constructive notice may be subdivided into: (a) Where there exists actual notice of matter, to which equity has added constructive notice of facts, which an inquiry after such matter would have elicited; and (b) where there has been a designed abstinence from inquiry for the very purpose of escaping notice.

See also Adequate notice; Charged; Due notice; Immediate notice; Imputed notice; Judicial notice; Knowledge; Legal notice; Reasonable notice.

Actual notice. Actual notice has been defined as notice expressly and actually given, and brought home to the party directly. The term "actual notice," however, is generally given a wider meaning as embracing two classes, express and implied; the former includes all knowledge of a degree above that which depends upon collateral inference, or which imposes upon the party the further duty of inquiry; the latter imputes knowledge to the party because he is shown to be conscious of having the means of knowledge. In this sense actual notice is such notice as is positively proved to have been given to a party directly and personally, or such as he is presumed to have received personally because the evidence within his knowledge was sufficient to put him upon inquiry. Averment of notice. The statement in a pleading that notice has been given.

Commercial law. A person has "notice" of a fact when: (a) he has actual knowledge of it; or (b) he has received a notice or notification of it; or (c) from all the facts and circumstances known to him at the time in question he has reason to know that it exists. A person "knows" or has "knowledge" of a fact when he has actual knowledge of it. "Discover" or "learn" or a word or phrase of similar import refers to knowledge rather than to reason to know. The time and circumstances under which a notice or notification may cease to be effective are not determined by this Act. U.C.C. § 1-201(25).
A person "notifies" or "gives" a notice or notification to another by taking such steps as may be reasonably required to inform the other in ordinary course whether or not such other actually comes to know of it. A person "receives" a notice or notification when: (a) it comes to his attention; or (b) it is duly delivered at the place of business through which the contract was made or at any other place held out by him as the place for receipt of such communications. U.C.C. § 1-201(26).

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, the law on "notice," actual or inferable, is precisely the same whether the instrument is issued to a holder or negotiated to a holder. Eldon's Super Fresh Stores, Inc. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 296 Minn. 130, 207 N.W.2d 282, 287.

Constructive notice. Constructive notice is information or knowledge of a fact imputed by law to a person (although he may not actually have it), because he could have discovered the fact by proper diligence, and his situation was such as to cast upon him the duty of inquiring into it. Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which, by prosecuting such inquiry, he might have learned such fact.

Express notice. Express notice embraces not only knowledge, but also that which is communicated by direct information, either written or oral, from those who are cognizant of the fact communicated. See also Actual notice.

Implied notice. Implied notice is one of the varieties of actual notice (not constructive) and is distinguished from "express" actual notice. It is notice inferred or imputed to a party by reason of his knowledge of facts or circumstances collateral to the main fact, of such a character as to put him upon inquiry, and which, if the inquiry were followed up with due diligence, would lead him definitely to the knowledge of the main fact. "Implied notice" is a presumption of fact, relating to what one can learn by reasonable inquiry, and arises from actual notice of circumstances, and not from constructive notice. Or as otherwise defined, implied notice may be said to exist where the fact in question lies open to the knowledge of the party, so that the exercise of reasonable observation and watchfulness would not fall to apprise him of it, although no one has told him of it in so many words.

Personal notice. Communication of notice orally or in writing (according to the circumstances) directly to the person affected or to be charged, as distinguished from constructive or implied notice, and also from notice imputed to him because given to his agent or representative. See Actual notice; Express notice, supra.

Public notice. Notice given to the public generally, or to the entire community, or to all whom it may concern. Such must commonly be published in a newspaper of general circulation.

Reasonable notice. Such notice or information of a fact as may fairly and properly be expected or required in the particular circumstances.

Notice of action. See Lis pendens.

Notice of appearance. See Appearance.

Notice of dishonor. Notice of dishonor may be given to any person who may be liable on the instrument by or on behalf of the holder or any party who has himself received notice, or any other party who can be compelled to pay the instrument. In addition an agent or bank in whose hands the instrument is dishonored may give notice to his principal or customer or to another agent or bank from which the instrument was received. U.C.C. § 3-508(1). See also Dishonor.

Notice of issue. See Notice of trial.

Notice of lis pendens /nówdás ãív péndènd(d)z/. See Lis pendens.

Notice of motion. A notice in writing, entitled in a cause, stating that on a certain day designated, a motion will be made to the court for the purpose or object stated. Such notice is required to be served upon all parties. Fed.R. Civil P. 5(a).

Notice of orders or judgments. Immediately upon the entry of an order or judgment the clerk shall serve notice of the entry by mail upon each party who is not in default for failure to appear, and shall make a note in the docket of the mailing. Fed.R. Civil P. 77(d).

Notice of protest. See Protest.

Notice of trial. A notice given by one of the parties in an action to the other, after an issue has been reached, that he intends to bring the cause forward for trial at the next term of the court.

Notice race statutes. In some jurisdictions, in recording of documents of title to real estate, the first grantee or mortgagee to record in the chain of title without actual notice of a prior unrecorded deed or mortgage prevails. Also known as Race-Notice Statute. See also Notice recording statutes; Recording acts.

Notice recording statutes. An unrecorded conveyance or other instrument is invalid as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser (creditor or mortgagee if the statute so provides) for value and without notice. Under this type of statute the subsequent bona fide purchaser prevails over the prior interest whether the subsequent purchaser records or not. Insofar as the subsequent purchaser is concerned, there is no premium on his race to the recorder's office. His priority is determined upon his status at the time he acquires his deed or mortgage. See also Recording acts.

Notice to appear. Shorthand expression for the form of summons or order of notice in which the defendant is ordered to appear and show cause why judgment should not be entered against him. Fed.R. Civil P. 4(b). See also Show cause order; Summons.

Notice to creditors. Formal notification in bankruptcy proceeding to creditors of the bankrupt that a meeting will be held, or that proof of claims must be filed on or before a certain date, or that an order for relief has been granted. See Bankruptcy Act, § 342.
Notice to plead. A notice which, in the practice of the federal courts, and most state courts, is prerequisite to the taking judgment by default. It proceeds from the plaintiff, and warns the defendant that he must plead to the declaration or complaint within a prescribed time. Such notice is required in the summons. Fed.R. Civil P. 4(b).

Notice to quit. A written notice given by a landlord to his tenant, stating that the former desires to repossess himself of the demised premises, and that the latter is required to quit and remove from the same at a time designated, either at the expiration of the term, if the tenant is in under a lease, or immediately, if the tenancy is at will or by sufferance. The term is also sometimes applied to a written notice given by the tenant to the landlord, to the effect that he intends to quit the demised premises and deliver possession of the same on a day named.

Notification. See Notice.

Notify. To give notice to; to inform by words or writing, in person or by message, or by any signs which are understood; to make known. To "notify" one of a fact is to make it known to him; to inform him by notice. Fast v. Scruggs, 164 Okl. 196, 23 P.2d 383. See Notice.

Novo /nówsh(í)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, the power of hearing and trying a matter of fact; the power or authority of a judex; the power of hearing causes and of pronouncing sentence, without any degree of jurisdiction.

Novitia /nótish(i)yá/. Lat. Knowledge; information; intelligence; notice.

Novitia dictur a nescendo; et notitia non debet claudi care /nówtish(i)yá disádár éy nóshándow ét nów tish(i)yá nó débát kóshákériy/. Notice is named from a knowledge being had; and notice ought not to halt (i.e., be imperfect).

Not later than. "Within" or "not beyond" time specified.

Not less than. The words "not less than" signify in the smallest or lowest degree, at the lowest estimate; at least.

Notoriety /nówdaráyádiy/. The state of being notorious or universally well known.

Notorious /nówtóríyá/. Generally known and talked of; well or widely known; forming a part of common knowledge, or universally recognized. Mathis v. State, 60 Okl.Cr. 58, 61 P.2d 261, 267. Open; generally or commonly known and spoken of.

Notorious cohabitation. The statutory offense in some jurisdictions committed by two persons who live together openly while not being married to each other. Such laws are seldom enforced.

Notorious insolvency. A condition of insolvency which is generally known throughout the community or known to the general class of persons with whom the insolvent has business relations.

Notorious possession. As a requisite of adverse possession, such possession that is so conspicuous that it is generally known and talked of by the public or the people in the neighborhood. Possession or character of holding in its nature having such elements of notoriety that the owner may be presumed to have notice of it and of its extent. See also Adverse possession.

Not possessed. A special traverse used in an action of trover, alleging that defendant was not possessed, at the time of action brought, of the chattels alleged to have been converted by him.

Not satisfied. A return sometimes made by sheriffs or constables to a writ of execution; but it is not a technical formula, and has been criticised by the courts as ambiguous and insufficient. See Nulla bona.

Not to be performed within one year. The clause "not to be performed within one year" includes any agreement which by a reasonable interpretation in view of all the circumstances does not admit of its performance, according to its language and intention, within one year from the time of its making.

N.O.V. See Non obstante veredicto.

Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet non präteritis /nówva kónsást(i)yó wsh(i)yów fíwuýtúras fórmam impóñmany débét nón práterdas/. A new state of the law ought to affect the future, not the past.

Nova custuma /nówva kástama/. The name of an imposition or duty. See Antiqua custuma.

Novae narrationes /nówviy náréyshiyónwiyz/. New counts. The collection called "Novae Narrationes" contains pleadings in actions during the reign of Edward III. It consists principally of declarations, as the title imports; but there are sometimes pleas and subsequent pleadings. The Articuli ad Novas Narrationes is usually subjoined to this little book, and is a small treatise on the method of pleading. It first treats of actions and courts, and then goes through each particular writ, and the declaration upon it, accompanied with directions, and illustrated by precedents.

Nova statuta /nówva stat(i)yówdá/. New statutes. An appellation sometimes given to the statutes which have been passed since the beginning of the reign of Edward III.

Novation. Substitution of a new contract, debt, or obligation for an existing one, between the same or different parties. The substitution by mutual agreement of one debtor for another or of one creditor for another, whereby the old debt is extinguished. The requisites of a novation are a previous valid obligation, an agreement of all the parties to a new contract, the extinguishment of the old obligation, and the validity of the new one. Blythe v. Pentagon Federal Credit Union, D.C.Mun.App., 182 A.2d 892, 894.

A novation substitutes a new party and discharges one of the original parties to a contract by agreement of all three parties. A new contract is created with the same terms as the original one but only the parties are changed. Restatement of Contracts, §§ 423, 430.
In the civil law, there are three kinds of novation: where the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new debt takes the place of the old one; where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted; where the debt and debtor remain, but a new creditor is substituted. Wheeler v. Wardell, 173 Va. 168, 3 S.E.2d 377, 380.

Novatio non presumitur /nowvéysh(y)ow nón pre(z(y)u)mádár/. Novation is not presumed.

Novel assignment. See New assignment.

Novell dissesin. See Assise (Assise of novel dissesin).

Novelle (or novellae constitutiones) /nowvély (könsta(t(y)u)shlyówniýyz)/. New constitutions; generally translated in English, “Novels.” The Latin name of those constitutions which were issued by Justinian after the publication of his Code: most of them being originally written in Greek. After his death, a collection of 168 Novels was made, 154 of which had been issued by Justinian, and the rest by his successors. These were afterwards included in the Corpus Juris Cividis (q.v.), and now constitute one of its four principal divisions.

Novelle leonis /nowvély liyównas/. The ordinances of the Emperor Leo, which were made from the year 887 till the year 893, are so called. These Novels changed many rules of the Justinian law. This collection contains 113 Novels, written originally in Greek, and afterwards, in 1560, translated into Latin by Agilaeus.

Novels /nóvalz/. The title given in English to the New Constitutions (Novellae Constitutiones) of Justinian and his successors, now forming a part of the Corpus Juris Cividis. See Novelle.

Novelty. In order that there may be “novelty” so as to sustain a patent, the thing must not have been known to any one before, mere novelty of form being insufficient. Seaver v. Wm. Filene’s Sons Co., D.C.Mass., 37 F.Supp. 762, 763. An objection to a patent or claim for a patent on the ground that the invention is not new or original is called an objection “for want of novelty.”

Noverca /nóvárca/. Lat. In the civil law, a stepmother.

Noverint universi per presentes /nóvaránt yůwna-várás pár prázéntiýyz/. Know all men by these presents. Formal words used at the commencement of deeds of release in the Latin forms.

Novigild /nówigild/. In Saxon law, a pecuniary satisfaction for an injury, amounting to nine times the value of the thing for which it was paid.

Novi operis nunciatio /nówvay ęparás nánshiyéysh(y)ow/. Lat. Denunciation of, or protest against, a new work. This was a species of remedy in the civil law, available to a person who thought his rights or his property were threatened with injury by the act of his neighbor in erecting or demolishing any structure, which was called a “new work.” In such case, he might go upon the ground, while the work was in progress, and publicly protest against or forbid its completion, in the presence of the workmen or of the owner or his representative.

Noviter perventa, or noviter ad notitiam perventa /nówvadár (iéd nówtish(y)am) parvéná/. In ecclesiastical procedure, facts “newly come” to the knowledge of a party to a cause. Leave to plead facts noviter perventa is generally given, in a proper case, even after the pleadings are closed.

Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum; quia judicium est juris dictum et per judicium jus est noviter revelatum quod diu futurum velatum /nówvam juwdish(y)am nón diét nówvam jás, séd dákiřadánt yúshkwam, kwáy juwdish(y)am ét júrís diktam ét pár juwdish(y)am jás ét nówvadár révalyadám kwód dáyuw f(y)úwet valýdám/. A new adjudication does not make a new law, but declares the old; because adjudication is the utterance of the law, and by adjudication the law is newly revealed which was for a long time hidden.

Novus homo /nówvás hówmów/. Lat. A new man. This term is applied to a man who has been pardoned of a crime, and so made, as it were, a “new man.”

Now. At this time, or at the present moment; or at a time contemporaneous with something done. At the present time.

“Now” as used in a statute ordinarily refers to the date of its taking effect, but the word is sometimes used, not with reference to the moment of speaking but to a time contemporaneous with something done, and may mean at the time spoken of or referred to as well as at the time of speaking.

Word “now” used in will normally refers to time of testator’s death; but, in light of context, may apply to date of will.

N.O.W. Negotiable Order of Withdrawal. Form of interest bearing checking account; permitted only in certain states.

Noxa /nóksa/. Lat. In the civil law, any damage or injury done to persons or property by an unlawful act committed by a man’s slave or animal. An action for damages lay against the master or owner, who, however, might escape further responsibility by delivering up the offending agent to the party injured. “Noxa” was also used as the designation of the offense committed, and of its punishment, and sometimes of the slave or animal doing the damage.

Noxalis actio /noksésysh((y)y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, an action which lay against the master of a slave, for some offense (as theft or robbery) committed or damage or injury done by the slave, which was called “noxa.” Usually translated “noxal action.”

Noxia /nóks(í)yá/. Lat. In the civil law, an offense committed or damage done by a slave.

Noxious. Hurtful; offensive; offensive to the smell. The word “noxious” includes the complex idea both of insalubrity and offensiveness. That which causes or tends to cause injury, especially to health or morals.

N.P. An abbreviation for “notary public.”

N.R. An abbreviation for “New Reports;” also for “not reported,” and for “nonresident.”

N.S. An abbreviation for “New Series;” also for “New Style.”
N. T. S. B. National Traffic Safety Board.

Nubilis /n(y)juwbales/. Lat. In the civil law, marriageable; one who is of a proper age to be married.

Nuda pacto obligationem non parit /n(y)juwds pëksht(y)ow obbägyshiyöväm nôn përrat/. A naked agreement [i.e., without consideration] does not beget an obligation.

Nuda patientia /n(y)juwds pëšhijënh(y)ow/. Lat. Mere sufferance.

Nuda possessio /n(y)juwds pësh(y)ow/. Lat. Bare or mere possession.

Nuda ratio et nuda pacto non ligant aliquem debitorem /n(y)juwds rësh(y)ow et n(y)juwds pëksht(y)ow nôn ligant akniak wëndëbôram/. Naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor.

Nude. Naked. This word is applied metaphorically to a variety of subjects to indicate that they are lacking in some essential legal requisite.

Nude contract. One made without any consideration; upon which no action will lie, in conformity with the maxim "ex nudo pacto non oritur actio." 2 Bl. Comm. 445.

Nude matter. A bare allegation of a thing done, unsupported by evidence.

Nude pact. One without consideration; an executory contract without a consideration; a naked promise.

Nudum pactum /n(y)juwds pëktam/. A voluntary promise, without any other consideration than mere goodwill, or natural affection.

A naked pact; a bare agreement; a promise or undertaking made without any consideration for it.

Roman law. Informal agreements not coming within any of the privileged classes. They could not be sued on. The term was sometimes used with a special and rather different meaning to express the rule that a contract without delivery will not pass property.

Nudum pactum est ubi nulla subest causa praeter conventionem; sed ubi subest causa, fit obligatio, et parit actionem /n(y)juwds pëktam est yëwbay nälä sëbëst këza pëyjdr kanënshiyöväm, sëd yëwbay sëbëst këza fit obbägysh(y)ow et përrat akshiyöväm/. A naked contract is where there is no consideration except the agreement; but, where there is a consideration, it becomes an obligation and gives a right of action.

Nudum pactum ex quo non oritur actio /n(y)juwds pëktam êsk kwôw nôn ërdør aksh(y)ow/. Nudum pactum is that upon which no action arises.

Nugatory /n(y)u włosary/. Futiile; ineffectual; invalid; destitute of constraining force or vitality. A legislative act may be "nugatory" because unconstitutional. Avery & Co. v. Sorrell, 157 Ga. 476, 121 S. E. 828, 829.

Nuisance. Nuisance is that activity which arises from unreasonable, unwarranted or unlawful use by a person of his own property, working obstruction or injury to right of another, or to the public, and producing such material annoyance, inconvenience and discomfort that law will presume resulting damage. State ex rel. Herman v. Cardon, 23 Ariz. App. 78, 530 P.2d 1115, 1118. That which annoys and disturbs one in possession of his property, rendering its ordinary use or occupation physically uncomfortable to him. Patton v. Westwood Country Club Co., 16 Ohio App.2d 137, 247 N.E.2d 761, 763, 47 O.O.2d 212. Everything that endangers life or health, gives offense to senses, violates the laws of decency, or obstructs reasonable and comfortable use of property. Annoyance; anything which essentially interferes with enjoyment of life or property. That class of wrongs that arise from the unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use by a person of his own property, either real or personal, or from his own improper, indecent, or unlawful personal conduct, working an obstruction of or injury to the right of another or of the public, and producing such material annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or hurt, that the law will presume resulting damage. City of Phoenix v. Johnson, 51 Ariz. 115, 75 P.2d 30. An offensive, annoying, unpleasant, or obnoxious thing or practice; a cause or source of annoyance, especially a continuing or repeated invasion or disturbance of another's right, or anything that works a hurt, inconvenience or damage. Renken v. Harvey Aluminum (Inc.), D.C.Or., 226 F.Sup. 169, 175.

Nuisance comprehends interference with an owner's reasonable use and enjoyment of his property by means of smoke, odors, noise, or vibration, obstruction of private easements and rights of support, interference with public rights, such as free passage along stream beds and highways, enjoyment of public parks and places of recreation, and, in addition, activities and structures prohibited as statutory nuisances. Awad v. McColgan, 357 Mich. 386, 98 N.W.2d 571, 573.

Nuisances are commonly classed as public, private, and mixed. A public nuisance is one which affects an indefinite number of persons, or all the residents of a particular locality, or all people coming within the extent of its range or operation, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted upon individuals may be unequal. Maintaining a public nuisance is by act, or by failure to perform a legal duty, intentionally causing or permitting a condition to exist which injures or endangers the health, safety or welfare. An invasion of a person's interest in the private use and enjoyment of land by any type of liability-forming conduct is termed a private nuisance. It is a tort against a private person, and actionable by him as such. As distinguished from public nuisance, a private nuisance includes any wrongful act which destroys or deteriorates the property of an individual or of a few persons or interferes with their lawful use or enjoyment thereof, or any act which unlawfully hinders them in the enjoyment of a common or public right and causes them a special injury different from that sustained by the general public. Therefore, although the ground of distinction between public and private nuisances is still the injury to the community at large or, on the other hand, to a single individual, it is evident that the same thing or act may constitute a public nuisance and at the same time a private nuisance. A mixed nuisance is of the kind last described; that is, it is one which is both public and private in its effects,—public because it injures many persons or all the community, and private in that it also produces special injuries to private
NUISANCE

See also Attractive nuisance; Common nuisance; Legalized nuisance; Offensive; Private nuisance; Public nuisance.

Abatement of a nuisance. The removal, stoppage, prostration, or destruction of that which causes a nuisance, whether by breaking or pulling it down, or otherwise removing, destroying, or effacing it. See also Abatable nuisance.

Actionable nuisance. See Actionable.

Assize of nuisance. In old English practice, this was a judicial writ directed to the sheriff of the county in which a nuisance existed, in which it was stated that the party injured complained of some particular fact done ad nocumementum liberti tenementi sui (to the nuisance of his freehold), and commanding the sheriff to summon an assize (that is, a jury) to view the premises, and have them at the next commission of assizes, that justice might be done, etc. 3 Bl.Comm. 221.

Common nuisance. One which affects the public in general, and not merely some particular person; a public nuisance.

Continuing nuisance. An uninterrupted or periodically recurring nuisance; not necessarily a constant or unceasing injury, but a nuisance which occurs so often and is so necessarily an incident of the use of property complained of that it can fairly be said to be continuous.

Permanent nuisance. A nuisance of such a character that its continuance is necessarily an injury which will continue without change. One that cannot be readily abated at small expense.

Nuisance at law. See Nuisance per se (q.v.).

Nuisance in fact. Acts, occupations or structures which are not nuisances per se but may become nuisances by reason of the circumstances of the location and surroundings or manner in which it is performed or operated. Robichaux v. Happunbauer, 258 La. 139, 245 So. 2d 385, 389.

Nuisance per accidens /n(y)ůwsan(t)s pər əksədən(t)s/. See Nuisance in fact (q.v.).

Nuisance per se /n(y)ůwsan(t)s pər sə/. An act, occupation, or structure which is a nuisance at all times and under all circumstances, regardless of location or surroundings, Buehner v. Saginaw Central Oil & Gas Service, Inc., 356 Mich. 399, 97 N.W.2d 90, 96; Koeber v. Apex-Albuq Phoenix Exp., 72 N.M. 4, 380 P.2d 14, 15, 16; as, things prejudicial to public morals or dangerous to life or injurious to public rights; distinguished from things declared to be nuisances by statute, and also from things which constitute nuisances only when considered with reference to their particular location or other individual circumstances. The difference between a “nuisance per se” and a “nuisance per accidens” is that in the former, injury in some form is certain to be inflicted, while in the latter, the injury is uncertain or contingent until it actually occurs. State ex rel. Cunningham v. Feezell, 218 Tenn. 17, 400 S.W.2d 716, 719.

Nul. No; none. A law French negative particle commencing many phrases.

Nul agard /nul ágard/. No award. The name of a plea in an action on an arbitration bond, by which the defendant traverses the making of any legal award.

Nul charter, nul vente, ne nul done vault perpetually, si le donor n’est seise al temps de contracts de deux droits, sc. del droit de possession et del droit de properite. No grant, no sale, no gift, is valid forever unless the donor, at the time of the contract, is seised of two rights, namely, the right of possession, and the right of property.

Nul disseizin /nul dasyzan/. In pleading, means no disseizin. A plea of the general issue in a real action, by which the defendant denies that there was any disseizin.

Null. Naught; of no validity or effect. Usually coupled with the word “void,” as “null and void.” The words “null and void,” when used in a contract or statute are often construed as meaning “voidable.” Burns Mortg. Co. v. Schwartz, C.C.A.N.J., 72 F.2d 991, 992; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Hall, 191 Ga. 294, 12 S.E.2d 53, 61. “Null and void” means that which binds no one or is incapable of giving rise to any rights or obligations under any circumstances, or that which is of no effect. Zogby v. State, 53 Misc.2d 740, 279 N.Y.S.2d 665, 668. See also Void; Voidable.

Nulla bona /nula bôvna/. Lat. No goods. The name of the return made by the sheriff to a writ of execution, when he has not found any goods of the defendant within his jurisdiction on which he could levy. Walter J. Klein Co. v. Kneece, 239 S.C. 478, 123 S.E.2d 870, 874.

Nulla curia que recordum non habet; potest imponere finem neque aliquem mandare carceri; quia ista speciamentum a curialibus de recordum /nula kyūriya kwiy rakōrde mən həhyat pōwdašt impōnərəi fānyam nēkwiy˘ ālkwam məndəri kärsiray, kwāya īsta spēktənt təntəməwədəw əd kyūriya dyi rakōrdəw/. No court which has not a record can impose a fine or commit any person to prison; because those powers belong only to courts of record.

Nulla emptio sine pretio esse potest /nulə impəʃ(i)ow sæni prəʃ(i)ow ēsi pōwdəšt/. There can be no sale without a price.

Nulla impossibilita aut inhonesta sunt præsumenda; vera autem et honesta et possibilia /nula ɪmpəsəbi(l)iə ođ in(h)onēsta sənt priyz(ə)mənda, virə oدام əd (h)onēsta ət pəsəbi(l)iə/. No things that are impossible or dishonorable are to be presumed; but things that are true and honorable and possible.

Nulla pactione officii potest ut долus præstetur /nula pəkshiyəwini əfəsəy pōwdašt åt dōwəs prəstidayə/. By no agreement can it be effected that a fraud shall be practiced. Fraud will not be upheld, though it may seem to be authorized by express agreement.

Nulla virtus, nulla sclectia, locum suum et dignitatem conservare potest sine modestia. Without modesty, no virtue, no knowledge, can preserve its place and dignity.

Nulle règle sans faute /nulə rəŋɡlə sɔ̃n fəft/. There is no rule without a fault.
Nulle terre sans seigneur /nyǔl tér són sényńuya/. No land without a lord. A maxim of feudal law.

Nullum exemplum est idem omnibus /nālum agzēmplam ēst āydam ōmnibus/. No example is the same for all purposes. No one precedent is adapted to all cases. A maxim in conveyancing.

Nullum fecerunt arbitrium /nālum fāširant ārbitriyam/. L. Lat. The name of a plea to an action of debt upon an obligation for the performance of an award, by which the defendant denies that he submitted to arbitration, etc.

Nullum iniquum est præsumendum in jure /nālum ānīkwam ēst priytyámēndam ānīrīy/. No iniquity is to be presumed in law.

Nullum similis est idem nisi quattuor pedibus currit /nālum sīmily ēst āydam nāsyay kwōduwar pēdābas kāhrāt/. No like is identical, unless it runs on all fours.

Nullum similis quattuor pedibus currit /nālum sīmily kwōduwar pēdābas kāhrāt/. No simile runs upon four feet (or all fours, as it is otherwise expressed). No simile holds in everything.

Nullum Tempus Act /nālum tēmpās ākt/. A name given to the statute 3 Geo. III, c. 16, because that act, in contravention of the maxim "Nullum tempus occurrit regi" (no lapse of time bars the king), limited the crown's right to sue, etc., to the period of sixty years.

Nullum tempus aut locus occurrit regi /nālum tēmpās ŏt lōwkas akhārat riyjav/. No time or place affects the king.

Nullum tempus occurrit regi /nālum tēmpās akhārat riyjav/. Time does not run against the king. The rule refers to the king in his official capacity as representing the sovereignty of the nation and not to the king as an individual. City of Biabbe v. Cochise County, 52 Ariz. 1, 78 P.2d 982, 984.

Nullum tempus occurrit repullice /nālum tēmpās akhārat riyaypābsiy/. No time runs [time does not run] against the commonwealth or state. State v. Mudd, 273 Ala. 579, 143 So.2d 171, 174.

Nullus allius quam rex possit episcopo demandare inquisitionem faciendam /nālās ēlyiyas kwārm ēk pōsəd āpiskapos diymandēri inkwazishiyōwam fāshiēyēndam/. No other than the king can command the bishop to make an inquisition.

Nullus commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria /nālās kōmādam kāsāriy dīy ānīrūy s(y)ūwa prōwprīya/. No one can obtain an advantage by his own wrong. De Zottel v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 60 S.D. 532, 245 N.W. 58, 59.

Nullus debet agere de dolo, ubi alla actio subest /nālās dēbad sājariy dīy dōwlow, ūyubay ēlyiyas aksh(ly)ow sābēst/. Where another form of action is given, no one ought to sue in the action de dolo.

Nullus dictur accessorius post feloniam, sed ille qui novit principalem feloniam fecisse, et illum receptavit et confortavit /nālās dēsād ēkṣōsērya ḫōwst faōwniyam, səd īly kwāy nōyrw prīn(t)asperyam faōwniyam fasīśiy, ēd ilam rēsētyēvāt ēt Numbers game. "Numbers" or the numbers game is that game wherein the player wagers or plays that on a certain day a certain series of digits will appear or "come out" in a series such as the United States Treasury balance or parimutuel payoff totals of particular races at a certain racetrack for the day used as a reference, and though number of digits is fixed, usually at three, any player is free to select any number or quantity of numbers within the ranges of those digits, and designate amount of his wager upon each, and in such game neither number of players nor amount of money wagered nor total amount of payoffs can be predicted in any one day. U. S. v. Baker, C.A.Pa., 364 F.2d 107, 111. See also Lottery.

Numerata pecunia /n(y)wmarëyda pakywëm(i)/ya/. Lat. In the civil law, money told or counted; money paid by tale.

Numerical lottery. See Genoese lottery.

Nummata /namëyda/. The price of anything in money, as denariata is a price by a thing of computing by pence, and librata of pounds.

Nummata terre /namëyda têhri/. An acre of land.

Nuncatio /nãshiyësh(i)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, a solemn declaration, usually in prohibition of a thing; a protest.

Nunclo /nãsh(i)yow/. The permanent official representative of the Pope at a foreign court or seat of government. They are called "ordinary" or "extraordinary," according as they are sent for general purposes or on a special mission.

Nuncius /nãsh(i)yos/. In international law, a messenger; a minister; the pope's legate, commonly called a "nuncio."

Nunc pro tunc /nãnk prôw tânk/. Lat. Now for then. In re Peter's Estate, 175 Okl. 90, 51 P.2d 272, 274. A phrase applied to acts allowed to be done after the time when they should be done, with a retroactive effect, i.e., with the same effect as if regularly done. Nunc pro tunc 'entry is an entry made now of something actually previously done to have effect of former date; office being not to supply omitted action, but to supply omission in record of action really had but omitted through inadvertence or mistake. Seabolt v. State, Okt.Cr., 357 P.2d 1014.

Nunc pro tunc merely describes inherent power of court to make its records speak the truth, i.e., to record that which is actually but is not recorded. Simmons v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., D.C.S.C., 235 F.Supp. 325, 330. Nunc pro tunc signifies now for then, or, in other words, a thing is done now, which shall have same legal force and effect as if done at time when it ought to have been done. State v. Hatley, 72 N.M. 377, 384 P.2d 252, 254.

Nuncupare /nãŋk(y)apëry/. Lat. In the civil law, to name; to pronounce orally or in words without writing.

Nuncupate /nãŋk(y)pëyt/. To declare publicly and solemnly.

Nuncupative will. An oral will declared or dictated by the testator in his last sickness before a sufficient number of witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing. A will made by the verbal declaration of the testator, and usually dependent merely on oral testimony for proof. Such wills are invalid in certain states, and in others are valid only under certain circumstances.

Nundinae /nándaniy/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, a fair. In nundinis et mercatis /in nándanay ét markéydás/, in fairs and markets.

Nundination /nándanéyshàn/. Traffic at fairs and markets; any buying and selling.

Nunquam crescit ex post facto præterit dælleti æstimatio /náŋkwem krésod éks pówst faktow préstéráday dálktay éstaméysh(i)yow/. The character of a past offense is never aggravated by a subsequent act or matter.

Nunquam decurritur ad extraordinium sed ubi deficit ordinarium /náŋkwem dákihrádar séd éks ékskrésod órdanériyam/. We are never to resort to what is extraordinary, but [until] what is ordinary fails.

Nunquam fictio sine lege /náŋkwem fiksh(i)yow sániy liyiy/. There is no fiction without law.

Nunquam indebatus /náŋkwem indébátydá/. Lat. Never indebted. The name of a plea in an action of indebitatus assumpta, by which the defendant alleges that he is not indebted to the plaintiff.

Nunquam nimiris dictur quod nunquam satis dictur /náŋkwem nímir sásiy disádar kwód náŋkwem sáydis disádar/. What is never sufficiently said is never said too much.

Nunquam res humanae prospere succedunt ubi negliguntur divinae /náŋkwem riýz hyuwméyniy prósporiy saksiydant yůwbay nélglántar dávániy/. Human things never prosper where divine things are neglected.

Nuntius /náŋshiyas/. In old English practice, a messenger. One who was sent to make an excuse for a party summoned, or one who explained as for a friend the reason of a party’s absence. An officer of a court; a summoner, apparitor, or beadle.

Nuper oblit /n(y)yówpar óblyz/. Lat. In practice, the name of a writ (now abolished) which, in the English law, lay for a sister coheiress dispossessed by her coparcener of lands and tenements whereof their father, brother, or any common ancestor died seised of an estate in fee-simple.

Nuptiae secundae /náŋshiyi sakándiy/. Lat. A second marriage. In the canon law, this term included any marriage subsequent to the first.

Nuptial /náŋshal/. Pertaining to marriage; constituting marriage; used or done in marriage.

Nuptias non concubitus sed consensus facti /náŋshiyas nón kanyakwébdas séd kan(t)sén(t)sas feyits/. Not cohabitation but consent makes the marriage.

Nurture. To give nourishment to, to feed; to bring up, or train; to educate. The act of taking care of children, bringing them up, and educating them.

Nurus /n(y)yúras/. Lat. In the civil law, a son’s wife; a daughter-in-law.

Nycthemeron /níktómerón/. The whole natural day, or day and night, consisting of twenty-four hours.

Nymphomania /nimfaméyn(i)ya/. See Insanity.

Oath. Any form of attestation by which a person signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform an act faithfully and truthfully, e.g. President’s oath on entering office, Art. II, Sec. 1, U.S.Const. Vaughn v. State, 146 Tex.Cr.R. 586, 177 S.W.2d 59, 60. An affirmation of truth of a statement, which renders one willfully asserting untrue statements punishable for perjury. An outward pledge by the person taking it that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of responsibility to God. A solemn appeal to the Supreme Being in attestation of the truth of some statement. An external pledge or assurance, made in verification of statements made, or to be made, coupled with an appeal to a sacred or venerated object, in evidence of the serious and reverent state of mind of the party, or with an invocation to a supreme being to witness the words of the party, and to visit him with punishment if they be false. In its broadest sense, the term is used to include all forms of attestation by which a party signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform the act faithfully and truly. In a more restricted sense, it excludes all those forms of attestation or promise which are not accompanied by an imprecation.

See also Affirmation; Attestation; False swearing; Jurat; Loyalty oath; Pauper’s oath; Verification.

Affirmation in lieu of oath. Fed.R.Civil P. 43 provides that whenever an oath is required under the rules, a solemn affirmation may be accepted in lieu thereof. See also Art. II, Sec. 1, and Art. VI, U.S. Const.

Assertory oath. One relating to a past or present fact or state of facts, as distinguished from a “promissory” oath which relates to future conduct; particularly, any oath required by law other than in judicial proceedings and upon induction to office, such, for example, as an oath to be made at the custom-house relative to goods imported.

Corporal oath. See Corporal oath.

Decisive or decisory oath. In the civil law, where one of the parties to a suit, not being able to prove his charge, offered to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary, which the adversary was bound to accept, to tender the same proposal back again, otherwise the whole was taken as confessed by him.

Extrajudicial oath. One not taken in any judicial proceeding, or without any authority or requirement of law, though taken formally before a proper person.

False oath. See False swearing; Perjury.

Judicial oath. One taken in some judicial proceeding or in relation to some matter connected with judicial proceedings. One taken before an officer in open court, as distinguished from a “non-judicial” oath, which is taken before an officer ex parte or out of court. See also Witnesses, below.

Loyalty oath. An oath requiring one to swear his loyalty to the state and country generally as a condition of public employment. Such oaths which are not overbroad have been upheld. Elfrondt v. Russell, 384 U.S. 11, 86 S.Ct. 1238, 16 L.Ed.2d 321; Cole v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 676, 92 S.Ct. 1332, 31 L.Ed.2d 593. See also Oath of allegiance.

Official oath. One taken by an officer when he assumes charge of his office, whereby he declares that he will faithfully discharge the duties of the same, or whatever else may be required by statute in the particular case. See Art. VI, U.S. Const.

Poor debtor’s oath. See Pauper’s oath.

Promissory oaths. Oaths which bind the party to observe a certain course of conduct, or to fulfill certain duties, in the future, or to demean himself thereafter in a stated manner with reference to specified objects or obligations; such, for example, as the oath taken by a high executive officer, a legislator, a judge, a person seeking naturalization, an attorney at law. A solemn appeal to God, or, in a wider sense, to some superior sanction or a sacred or revered person in witness of the inviolability of a promise or undertaking.

Purgatory oath. An oath by which a person purges or clears himself from presumptions, charges or suspicions standing against him, or from a contempt.

Solemn oath. A corporal oath.

Suppletory oath. In the civil and ecclesiastical law, the testimony of a single witness to a fact is called “half-proof,” on which no sentence can be founded; in order to supply the other half of proof, the party himself (plaintiff or defendant) is admitted to be examined in his own behalf, and the oath administered to him for that purpose is called the “suppletory oath,” because it supplies the necessary quantum of proof on which to found the sentence. This term, although without application in American law in its original sense, is sometimes used as a designation of a party's oath required to be taken in authentication or support of some piece of documentary evidence which he offers, for example, his books of account.

Voluntary oath. Such as a person may take in extra-judicial matters, and not regularly in a court of justice, or before an officer invested with authority to administer the same.

Witnesses. Before testifying, every witness shall be required to declare that he will testify, truthfully, by oath or affirmation administered in a form calculated to awaken his conscience and impress his mind with his duty to do so. Fed.Evid.R. 603. See also Affirmation in lieu of oath, above.

Oath against bribery. In England, one which could have been administered to a voter at an election for members of parliament. Abolished in 1854.

Oath ex officio /ōvəθ eks əfsikh(y)ow/. In old English law, the oath by which a clergyman charged with a criminal offense was formerly allowed to swear himself to be innocent; also the oath by which the compromurgators swore that they believed in his innocence.

Oath in litem /ōvəθ in lāydəm/. In the civil law, an oath permitted to be taken by the plaintiff, for the purpose of proving the value of the subject-matter in controversy, when there was no other evidence on that point, or when the defendant fraudulently suppressed evidence which might have been available.

Oath of allegiance. An oath by which a person promises and binds himself to bear true allegiance to a particular sovereign or government (e.g., the United States), administered generally to high public officers and to soldiers and sailors, also to aliens applying for naturalization, and, occasionally, to citizens generally as a prerequisite to their suing in the courts or prosecuting claims before government bureaus. 31 U.S.C. § 204. As to oath of allegiance to Constitution, see Art. II, Sec. 1, and Art. VI, U.S. Const. See also Oath (Loyalty oath).

Oath of calumny /ōvəθ əv kələmnəni/. In the civil law, an oath which a plaintiff was obliged to take that he was not prompted by malice or trickery in commencing his action, but that he had bona fide a good cause of action.

Oath-rite. The form used at the taking of an oath.

Ob. Lat. On account of; for. Several Latin phrases and maxims, commencing with this word, are more commonly introduced by "in" (q.v.).

Oberatus /ōbərətəs/. Lat. In Roman law, a debtor who was obliged to serve his creditor until his debt was discharged.

Ob continentiam delleti /ōb kōntəntənesh(ly)əm dələktətəj/. On account of contiguity to the offense, i.e., being contaminated by conjunction with something illegal.

Ob contingentiam /ōb kōntənjənesh(ly)əm/. On account of connection; by reason of similarity.

Obedience. Compliance with a command, prohibition, or known law and rule of duty prescribed. The performance of what is required or enjoined by authority, or the abstaining from what is prohibited, in compliance with the command or prohibition.

Obedientia /əbıdıdıənəsh(ly)ə/. An office, or the administration of it; a kind of rent; submission; obedience.

Obedientia est legis essentia /əbıdıdıənəsh(ly)ə ɛst lɪjıəs səsentsəsh(ly)ə/. Obedience is the essence of the law.

Obediential obligation /əbıdıdıənshal əблəɡəʃən/. See Obligation.

Obedientiarius; obedientiary /əbıdıdıənshəriətəs; əbıdıdıənshəriətə/. A monastic officer.

Ob favorem mercatorum /ōb favərəm mərkətərm/. In favor of merchants.

Ob infamiam non solet juxta legem terre aliquis per legem apparentem se purgare, nisl prius convictus fuerit vel confessus in curia /ōb infəˈfiːəm(t)ɪˈnuːm nɒn səˌwɔlt ˈdʒʌksta lɪˈɡɛm tɜːrə əˈlɪkws pər ˈlɪjɪm ˈɛpərəntənm sɪˈpɜːrɡətɨɾi, nɨˈsaɪ seɪˈkənvɪktəs vɛl kənˈfɛsəs ɪn kjuəri/. On account of evil report, it is not usual, according to the law of the land, for any person to purge himself, unless he have been previously convicted, or confessed in court.

Obit /ōbɪt/. A funeral solemnity, or office for the dead. The anniversary of a person's death; the anniversary office.

Obiter /əbɪˈtər/. Lat. By the way; in passing; incidentally; collaterally.

Obiter dictum /əbɪˈtər ˈdɪktəm/. Words of an opinion entirely unnecessary for the decision of the case. Noel v. Olds, 78 U.S.App.D.C. 155, 138 F.2d 581, 586. A remark made, or opinion expressed, by a judge, in his decision upon a cause, "by the way," that is, incidentally or collaterally, and not directly upon the question before him, or upon a point not necessarily involved in the determination of the cause, or introduced by way of illustration, or analogy or argument. Such are not binding as precedent. See Dicta; Dictum.

Obit sine prole /ōbɪt səˈnə prəʊli/. Lat. [He] died without issue.

Object, v. In legal proceedings, to object (e.g., to the admission of evidence) is to interpose a declaration to the effect that the particular matter or thing under consideration is not done or admitted with the consent of the party objecting, but is by him considered improper or illegal, and referring the question of its propriety or legality to the court. See also Objection.

Object, n. End aimed at, the thing sought to be accomplished; the aim or purpose, the thing sought to be attained.

Anything which comes within the cognizance or scrutiny of the senses, especially anything tangible or visible. Moore v. Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 112 Vt. 218, 22 A.2d 503, 505. That which is perceived, known, thought of, or signified; that toward which a cognitive act is directed. The term includes whatever may be presented to the mind as well as to the senses; whatever, also, is acted upon or operated upon affirmatively, or intentionally influenced by anything done, moved, or applied thereto. It may be used as having the sense of effect.

See also Intent; Motive.

Objection. Act of objecting; that which is, or may be, presented in opposition; an adverse reason or argument; a reason for objecting or opposing; a feeling of disapproval.

The act of a party who objects to some matter or proceeding in the course of a trial, or an argument or reason urged by him in support of his contention that the matter or proceeding objected to is improper or illegal. Used to call the court's attention to improper evidence or procedure. Such objections in open court are important so that such will appear on the record for purposes of appeal. See Fed.Evid.R. 103(a)(1); Fed.R.Civil P. 46, and Fed.R.Crim.P. 51. See also Object (v).

Objection to jury. See Challenge.

Objective symptom. Those which a surgeon or physician discovers from an examination of his patient; "subjective symptoms" being those which he learns from what his patient tells him. Schroeder v. Western Union Telegraph Co., Mo.App., 129 S.W.2d 917, 922.

Object of an action. Legal relief to prevent or redress the wrong. The thing sought to be obtained by the action; the remedy demanded or the relief or recovery sought or prayed for, not the same thing as the cause of action or the subject of the action.

Object of a statute. Aim, intent or purpose of its enactment. End or design which it is meant to accomplish, while the "subject" is the matter to which it relates and with which it deals. Matter or thing forming groundwork of statute.

Objects of a power. Those among whom donee is given power to appoint.

Objurgatrix /əbjɜːrɡətrɛks/. In old English law, scolds or unquiet women were referred to as objurgatrices and were punished with the cucking-stool (q.v.).

Obliqua /əblɪˈɡwə/. Gifts or offerings made to the king by any of his subjects; old debts, brought, as it were, together from preceding years, and put on the present sheriff's charge.

Obliata terre /əˈblɪˌdə tɛhrɪ/. Half an acre, or, as some say, half a perch, of land.

Oblate. See Oblati.

Oblate Rolls. Chancery Rolls (1199–1641), called also Fine Rolls, containing records of payments to the king by way of oblate or fine for the grant of privileges, or by way of amercement for breach of duty.

Oblati /əˈblɪdɛɪ oʊ/ /əˈblɪˌdɛɪ oʊ/ /əˈblɪˌdɛɪ oʊ/. In old European law, voluntary slaves of churches or monasteries.

Oblati actio /əˈblɪˌdɛɪ ˈæktʃəʊ/ /əˈblɪˌdɛɪ ˈæktʃəʊ/ /əˈblɪˌdɛɪ ˈæktʃəʊ/. In the civil law, an action given to a party against another who had offered to him a stolen thing, which was found in his possession.

Oblatio /əˈblɪˌəʃəʊ/ /əˈblɪˌəʃəʊ/ /əˈblɪˌəʃəʊ/. Lat. In the civil law, a tender of money in payment of a debt made by debtor to creditor. Whatever is offered to the church by the pious.

Oblation. Oblations, or obventions, are offerings or customary payments made, in England, to the minister of a church, including fees on marriages, burials, mortuaries, etc. (q.v.), and Easter offerings. They may be commuted by agreement.

Oblationes dicuntur quecumque a pilis fidelibusque christianis offeruntur deo et ecclesie, sive res solidas sive mobiles /əblɪˈʃiːʃənɪz ˈdɪkʌntər kwiːli ˈfɪdəˌblɪs ˈkriːʃəniəs ˈɔfərʌntər diːwʊ ˈæˌkɔrliːz ˌsɪvəriˈdʒiːz ˌsɪvəriˈdʒiːz ˌməʊˈkwɜːlɪz/. Those things are called "oblations" which are offered to God and to the Church by pious and faithful Christians, whether they are movable or immovable.

Obligate. To bind or constrain; to bind to the observance or performance of a duty; to place under an obligation. To bind one's self by an obligation or promise; to assume a duty; to execute a written promise or covenant; to make a writing obligatory.

Obligatio /əˈblɪɡəʃəʊ(i)təʊ/. Lat. In Roman law, a legal bond which obliges the performance of something in accordance with the law of the land. It corresponded nearly to our word contract. The legal relation existing between two certain persons whereby one (the creditor) is authorized to demand of the other (the debtor) a certain performance which has a money value. In this sense obligatio signifies not only the duty of the debtor, but also the right of the creditor. The fact establishing such claim and debt, as also the instrument evidencing it, is termed "obligation."

Obligatio civilis /əˈblɪɡəʃəʊ(i)lɪs ˌsɪvɪlɪs/. An obligation enforceable by action, whether it derives its origin from the jus civile, as the obligation engendered by formal contracts or the obligation enforceable by bilaterally penal suits, or from such portion of the jus gentium as had been completely naturalized in the civil law and protected by all its remedies, such as the obligation engendered by formless contracts.

Obligatio ex contractu /əˈblɪɡəʃəʊ(i)ˈtəʊ əks ˌkɒntrəktju/. An obligation arising from contract, or an antecedent jus in personam. In this there are two stages,—first, a primary or sanctioned personal right antecedent to wrong, and, afterwards, a secondary or sanctioning personal right consequent on a wrong.

Obligatio ex delicto, or obligatio ex maleficio /əˈblɪɡəʃəʊ(i)ˈtəʊ əks ˈdælɪktʊˌ ˌmeɪlɪʃəʊ(i)ˈtəʊ/. An obligation founded on wrong or tort, or arising from the invasion of a jus in rem. In this there is the second stage, a secondary or sanctioning personal right consequent on a wrong, but the first stage is not a personal right (jus in personam), but a real right (jus in rem), whether a primordial right, right of status, or of property.

Obligation. A generic word, derived from the Latin substantive "obligatio," having many, wide, and varied meanings, according to the context in which it is used. That which a person is bound to do or forbear; any duty imposed by law, promise, contract, relations of society, courtesy, kindness, etc. Rucks-Brandt Const. Co. v. Price, 165 Okl. 178, 52 F.2d 690; Helving v. British-American Tobacco Co., C.C.A., 69 F.2d 528, 530. Law or duty binding parties to perform their agreement. An undertaking to perform. That which constitutes a legal or moral duty and which renders a person liable to coercion and punishment for neglecting it; a word of broad meaning, and the particular meaning intended is to be gained by consideration of its context. An obligation or debt may exist by reason of a judgment as well as an express contract, in either case there being a legal duty on the part of the one bound to comply with the promise. Schwartz v. California Claim Service, 52 Cal.App.2d 47, 125 P.2d 883, 888. Liabilities created by contract or law (i.e. judgments). Rose v. W. B. Worthen Co., 186 Ark. 205, 53 S.W.2d 15, 16. As legal term word originally meant a sealed bond, but it now extends to any certain written promise to pay money or do a specific thing. Lee v. Kenan, C.C.A.Fla., 78 F.2d 425. A formal and binding agreement or acknowledgment of a liability to pay a certain sum or do a certain thing. United States v. One Zumstein Briefmarken Katalog 1938, D.C.Pa., 24 F.Supp. 516, 519. The binding power of a vow, promise, oath, or contract, or of law, civil, political, or moral, independent of a promise; that which constitutes legal or moral duty. See also Contract; Duty; Liability.

Absolute obligation. One which gives no alternative to the obligor, but requires fulfillment according to the engagement.

Conjunctive or alternative obligation. The former is one in which the several objects in it are connected by a copulative, or in any other manner which shows that all of them are severally comprised in the contract. This contract creates as many different obligations as there are different objects; and the debtor, when he wishes to discharge himself, may force the creditor to receive them separately. But where the things which form the object of the contract are separated by a disjunctive, then the obligation is alternative, and the performance of either of such things will discharge the obligor. The choice of performing one of the obligations belongs to the obligor, unless it is expressly agreed that it shall belong to the creditor. A promise to deliver a certain thing or to pay a specified sum of money is an example of an alternative obligation. Civ.Code La. arts. 2063, 2066, 2067.

Contractual obligation. One which arises from a contract or agreement. See Contract.

Current obligation. See Current obligations.

Determinate or indeterminate obligation. A determinate obligation is one which has for its object a certain thing: as, an obligation to deliver a certain horse named Bucephalus, in which case the obligation can be discharged only by delivering the identical horse. An indeterminate obligation is one where the obligor binds himself to deliver one of a certain species: as, to deliver a horse, where the delivery of any horse will discharge the obligation.

Divisible or indivisible obligation. A divisible obligation is one which, being a unit, may nevertheless be lawfully divided, with or without the consent of the parties. An indivisible obligation is one which is not susceptible of division: as, for example, if I promise to pay you one hundred dollars, you cannot assign one-half of this to another, so as to give him a right of action against me for his share.

Express or implied obligation. Express or conventional obligations are those by which the obligor binds himself in express terms to perform his obligation, while implied obligations are such as are raised by the implication or inference of the law from the nature of the transaction.

Failure to meet obligations. See Failure to meet obligations.

Joint or several obligation. A joint obligation is one by which two or more obligors bind themselves jointly for the performance of the obligation. A several obligation is one where the obligors promise, each for himself, to fulfill the engagement.

Moral obligation. A duty which is valid and binding in conscience and according to natural justice, but is not recognized by the law as adequate to set in motion the machinery of justice; that is, one which rests upon ethical considerations alone, and is not imposed or enforced by positive law. A duty which would be enforceable by law, were it not for some positive rule, which, with a view to general benefit, exempts the party in that particular instance from legal liability. See also Love and affection.

Natural or civil obligation. A natural obligation is one which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and according to natural justice. As, for instance, when the action is barred by the act of limitation, a natural obligation still subsists, although the civil obligation is extinguished. Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U.S. 213, 337, (12 Wheat.) 6 L.Ed. 606. A civil obligation is a legal tie, which gives the party with whom it is contracted the right of enforcing its performance by law.

Obediential obligation. One incumbent on parties in consequence of the situation or relationship in which they are placed.

Perfect or imperfect obligation. A perfect obligation is one recognized and sanctioned by positive law; one of which the fulfillment can be enforced by the aid of the law. But if the duty created by the obligation operates only on the moral sense, without being enforced by any positive law, it is called an "imperfect obligation," and creates no right of action, nor has it any legal operation. The duty of exercising gratitude, charity, and the other merely moral duties are examples of this kind of obligation. Edwards v. Kearsey, 96 U.S. 595, 600, 24 L.Ed. 793.

Personal or heritable obligation. An obligation is heritable when the heirs and assigns of one party may enforce the performance against the heirs of the other. It is personal when the obligor binds himself only, not his heirs or representatives. An obligation is strictly personal when none but the obligee can enforce the performance, or when it can be enforced only against the obligor. An obligation may be personal as to the obligee, and heritable as to the obligor, and it may in like manner be heritable as to the obligee, and personal as to the obligor. For the term personal obligation, as used in a different sense, see the next paragraph.

Personal or real obligation. A personal obligation is one by which the obligor binds himself to perform an act, without directly binding his property for its performance. A real obligation is one by which real estate, and not the person, is liable to the obligee for the performance.
OBLIGATION

Primary or secondary obligation. An obligation which is the principal object of the contract. For example, the primary obligation of the seller is to deliver the thing sold, and to transfer the title to it. It is distinguished from the accessory or secondary obligation to pay damages for not doing so. The words "primary" and "direct," contrasted with "secondary," when spoken with reference to an obligation, refer to the remedy provided by law for enforcing the obligation, rather than to the character and limits of the obligation itself.

A primary obligation, which in one sense may also be called a principal obligation, is one which is contracted with a design that it should itself be the first fulfilled. A secondary obligation is one which is contracted and is to be performed in case the primitive cannot be. For example, if one sells his house, he binds himself to give a title; but if he finds he cannot as when the title is in another, then his secondary obligation is to pay damages for nonperformance of the obligation.

Principal or accessory obligation. A principal obligation is one which arises from the principal object of the engagement of the contracting parties; while an accessory obligation depends upon or is collateral to the principal. For example, in the case of the sale of a house and lot of ground, the principal obligation on the part of the vendor is to make title for it; the accessory obligation is to deliver all the title-papers which the vendor has relating to it, to take care of the estate until it is delivered, and the like. See, further, the title Accessory obligation.

Pure obligation. One which is not suspended by any condition, whether it has been contracted without any condition, or, when thus contracted, the condition has been accomplished. See Simple or conditional obligation.

Simple or conditional obligation. Simple obligations are such as are not dependent for their execution on any event provided for by the parties, and which are not agreed to become void on the happening of any such event. Conditional obligations are such as are made to depend on an uncertain event. If the obligation is not to take effect until the event happens, it is a suspensive condition; if the obligation takes effect immediately, but is liable to be defeated when the event happens, it is then a resolutory condition. A simple obligation is also defined as one which is not suspended by any condition, either because it has been contracted without condition, or, having been contracted with one, the condition has been fulfilled; and a conditional obligation is also defined as one the execution of which is suspended by a condition which has not been accomplished, and subject to which it has been contracted.

Single or penal obligation. A penal obligation is one to which is attached a penal clause, which is to be enforced if the principal obligation be not performed. A single obligation is one without any penalty, as where one simply promises to pay another one hundred dollars. This is called a single bill, when it is under seal.

Solidary obligation. In the law of Louisiana, one which binds each of the obligors for the whole debt, as distinguished from a "joint" obligation, which binds the parties each for his separate proportion of the debt. Groves v. Sentell, 153 U.S. 465, 14 S.Ct. 898, 38 L.Ed. 785. See Solidary.

Obligatio naturalis /oblagēš(y)owyw nēchartēyulas/. An obligation not immediately enforceable by action; one deriving its validity from the law of nature, or one imposed by that portion of the jus gentium which is only imperfectly recognized by civil law.

Obligationes ex delicto or ex maleficlo /oblagēš(y)owyw niyz ęks daliktow/*mēalafish(y)owyw/. Obligations arising from the commission of a wrongful injury to the person or property of another.

"Delictum" is not exactly synonymous with "tort," for, while it includes most of the wrongs known to the common law as torts, it is also wide enough to cover some offenses (such as theft and robbery) primarily injurious to the individual, but now only punished as crimes. Such acts gave rise to an obligatio, which consisted in the liability to pay damages.

Obligationes ex varlis causarum figuris /oblagēš(y)owyw niyz ęks vēriyās kozērām fagūras/. Although Justinian confined the divisions of obligations to four classes, namely obligationes ex contractu, quasi ex contractu, ex maleficlo and quasi ex maleficlo, there are many species of obligations which cannot properly be reduced within any of these classes. Some authorities, consequently, established a fifth class, to receive the odds and ends which belonged nowhere else, and gave to this class the above designation.

Obligationes quasi ex contractu /oblagēš(y)owyw niyz kwēzyaz ęks kontrākt(y)owyw/. Often persons who have not contracted with each other, under a certain state of facts, are regarded by the Roman law as if they had actually concluded a convention between themselves. The legal relation which then takes place between these persons, which has always a similarity to a contract obligation, is therefore termed obligatio quasi ex contractu. Obligations in the nature of a contract called quasi contract or implied in law contract. See Contract.

Such a relation arises from the conducting of affairs without authority (negotorium gestio) or unauthorized agency; from the management of property that is in common when the community arises there are many species of obligations which are called upon to take their place or position in the community (as in the division of property, the payment of what is due (solutio indebiti); from tutelage and curatorship (tutela and cura), resembling the relation of guardian and ward; from taking possession of an inheritance (additto hereditatis and agnito bonorum possessionis); and in many other cases.

Obligationes quasi ex delicto, or obligationes quasi ex maleficlo /oblagēš(y)owyw niyz kwēzyaz ęks daliktow/*mēalafish(y)owyw/. This class embraces all torts not coming under the denomination of delicta and not having a special form of action provided for them by law. They differed widely in character, and at common law would in some cases give rise to an action on the case, in others to an action on an implied contract.

Obligation of a contract. That which the law in force when contract is made obliges parties to do or not to do, and the remedy and legal means to carry it into effect. The "obligation of a contract" is the duty of performance. The term includes everything within the obligatory scope of the contract, and it includes the means of enforcement.

Obligation solidaire /oblazyón sólídár/. This, in French law, corresponds to joint and several liability in English law, but is applied also to the joint and several rights of the creditors and parties to the obligation.

Obligatio Pretoria /oblégyúsh(y)ow pratóríúy/. The Romans considered that obligations derived their va-idity solely from positive law. At first the only ones recognized were those established in special cases in accordance with the forms prescribed by the strict jus civile. In the course of time, however, the pretorian jurisdiction, in mitigation of the primitive rigor of the law, introduced new modes of contracting obligations and provided the means of enforcing them; hence the twofold division made by Justinian of obligationes civiles and obligationes pretoriae.

Obligatory pact. See Pact.

Obligatory rights. See Right.

Obligee /obléj/. A promisee. The person in favor of whom some obligation is contracted, whether such obligation be to pay money or to do or not to do something. The party to whom someone else is obligated under a contract. The party to whom a bond is given.

Obligor /oblágar/oblágór/. A promisor. The person who has engaged to perform some obligation. Person obligated under a contract or bond.

Oblivious /obléykwás/. Lat. In the old law of descents, oblique; cross; transverse; collateral. The opposite of rectus, right, or upright.

In the law of evidence, indirect; circumstantial.

Obliterated corner. See Corner.

Obliteration. To destroy; wipe or rub out; erase. Erasure or blotting out of written words. A method of revoking a will or a clause therein if accompanied by the required intent to revoke. See also Alteration; Deface; Spoliation.

Oblivion. Act of forgetting, or fact of having forgotten; forgetfulness. Official ignoring of offenses. Ames-ty, or general pardon, as, an act of oblivion. State or fact of being forgotten. See Amnesty; Pardon.

Obolivious. Evincing oblivion; forgetful; forgetting.
Where thing is extinguished from mind.

Obloquy /oblakwy/. Censure and reproach. Blame, reprehension, being under censure, a cause or object of reproach, a disgrace.

Obnoxious. "Obnoxious" and "offensive" in ordinary use are synonymous, and mean highly objectionable, disagreeable, displeasing, and distasteful.

Obreptio /óbrépsh(i)yow/. Lat. The obtaining a thing by fraud or surprise.

Obreption /óbrépshán/. Obtaining anything by fraud or surprise. Acquisition of escheats, etc., from the sovereign, by making false representations. See also Subreption.

Obrogare /óbrągéríy/. Lat. In the civil law, to pass a law contrary to a former law, or to some clause of it;
to change a former law in some part of it.

Obrogation. In the civil law, the annulling a law, in whole or in part, by passing a law contrary to it.
The alteration of a law. See also Abrogation.

Obscene. Objectible or offensive to accepted standards of decency. Basic guidelines for trier of fact in determining whether a work which depicts or describes sexual conduct is obscene is whether the average person, applying contemporary community standards would find that the work, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest, whether the work depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct specifically defined by the applicable state law, and whether the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific 2607, 2615, 37 L.Ed.2d 419. See also Censor; Censorship; Dominant theme; Lewd; Obscenity; Pornographic; Prurient interest.

Obscene libel. That type of defamation which holds up a person to ridicule, scorn or contempt to a considerable and respectable class in the community by printed words or configurations of a lewd and lascivinous nature.

Obscenity. The character or quality of being obscene; conduct tending to corrupt the public morals by its indecency or lewdness.

Material is obscene if, considered as a whole, its predominant appeal is to prurient interest, that is, a shameless or morbid interest, in nudity, sex or excre-tion, and if in addition it goes substantially beyond custodial limits of candor in describing or represent-such matters. Predominant appeal shall be judged with reference to ordinary adults unless it appears from the character of the material or the circumstances of its dissemination to be designed for children or other specially susceptible audience.
Undeveloped photographs, molds, printing plates, and the like, shall be deemed obscene notwithstanding that processing or other acts may be required to make the obscenity patent or to disseminate it. Model Penal Code, § 251.4.

Federal laws prohibit the mailing, transportation for sale or distribution, importation, and broadcasting of obscene matters. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1461 et seq.

See also Censor; Censorship; Lewd; Obscene;
Pander (Pandering of obscenity); Profanity.

Obscure. When applied to words, statements or meanings, it signifies not perspicuous, not clearly expressed, vague, hard to understand.

Observe. To perform that which has been prescribed by some law or usage. To adhere to or abide by.

Obses /óbsiyz/. Lat. In time of war, a hostage. Ob-sides, hostages.

Obsignare /óbsignéríy/. Lat. In the civil law, to seal up; as money that had been tendered and refused.
OBSIGNATORY

Obsignatory /øbsiɡnət(ə)ri/. Ratifying and confirming.

Obsolescence. Condition or process of falling into disuse. The diminution in value of property caused by changes in technology, public taste, and new inventions rendering the property less desirable on the market. A decline in market value of an asset caused by improved alternatives becoming available that will be more cost-effective; such decline in market value is unrelated to physical changes in the asset itself. See also Economic obsolescence; Functional obsolescence.

Obsolescent. Becoming obsolete; going out of use; not entirely disused, but gradually becoming so. See Obsolescence.

Obsolete. That which is no longer used. Becker v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., C.C.A.Mo., 120 F.2d 403, 416. Disused; neglected; not observed. See also Obsolescence.

The term is applied to statutes which have become inoperative by lapse of time, either because the reason for their enactment has passed away, or their subject-matter no longer exists, or they are not applicable to changed circumstances, or are tacitly disregarded by all men, yet without being expressly abrogated or repealed.

Obstante /øbstæntli/. Withstanding; hindering. See Non obstante.

Obstinate desertion. "Obstinate" as used of desertion, which is a ground for divorce, means determined, fixed, persistent. Persisted in against the willingness of the injured party to have it concluded.

Obstruction. Obligation; bond.

Obstruct. To hinder or prevent from progress, check, stop, also to retard the progress of, make accomplishment of difficult and slow. Conley v. United States, C.C.A.Minn., 59 F.2d 929, 936. To be or be come in the way of or to cut off the sight of an object. To block up; to interpose obstacles; to render impassable; to fill with barriers or impediments, as to obstruct a road or way. To impede; to interpose impediments to the hindrance or frustration of some act or service, as to obstruct an officer in the execution of his duty. As applied to navigable waters, to "obstruct" them is to interpose such impediments in the way of free and open navigation that vessels are thereby prevented from going where ordinarily they have a right to go or where they may find it necessary to go in their maneuvers.

Obstructing justice. Impeding or obstructing those who seek justice in a court, or those who have duties or powers of administering justice therein. The act by which one or more persons attempt to prevent or do prevent, the execution of lawful process. The term applies also to obstructing the administration of justice in any way—as by hindering witnesses from appearing, assaulting process server, influencing jurors, obstructing court orders or criminal investigations. Any act, conduct, or directing agency pertaining to pending proceedings, intended to play on human frailty and to deflect and deter court from performance of its duty and drive it into compromise with its own unfettered judgment by placing it, through medium of knowingly false assertion, in wrong position before public, constitutes an obstruction to administration of justice. Toledo Newspaper Co. v. U. S., 247 U.S. 402, 38 S.Ct. 560, 564, 62 L.Ed. 1186. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 1501 et seq. See also Withholding of evidence.

Obstructing mails. Federal offense consisting of interfering with the mails. 18 U.S.C.A. § 324.

Obstructing proceedings of legislature. The term embraces not only things done in the presence of the legislature, but those done in disobedience of a committee.

Obstructing process. In criminal law, the act by which one or more persons attempt to prevent or do prevent the execution of lawful process. Obstructing legal process or official duty is knowingly and willfully obstructing, resisting or opposing any person authorized by law to serve process or order of a court, or in the discharge of any official duty.

Obstruction. A hindrance, obstacle, or barrier. Delay, impeding or hindering. See also Obstruct.

Obstruction to navigation. Any unnecessary interference with the free movements of vessels.

Obtain. To get hold of by effort; to get possession of; to procure; to acquire, in any way. State v. Bowdry, 346 Mo. 1090, 145 S.W.2d 127, 129. See also False pretenses.

Obtaining money or property by false pretenses. See False pretenses.

Obstamperandum est consuetudini rationabili tantum legal /øbstæmpærdænəm ðət kɔnswætl(j)iʊdənɔi ræʃ(i)ænbəlæi tæŋkwæm lɪliæj/. A reasonable custom is to be obeyed as a law.

Obtest /øbtɛst/. To protest.

Obtulit se /øbʃuʃæt si/. Offered himself. In old English practice, the emphatic words of entry on the record where one party offered himself in court against the other, and the latter did not appear.

Ob turpem causam /øb tærpæm kɔzæm/. For an immoral consideration.

Obvienio /ɒbˈvɪnɪəʊ/ Lat. (From obvienire, to fall in.) In the civil law, rent; profits; income; the return from an investment or thing owned; as the earnings of a vessel. Generally used in the plural.

In old English law, the revenue of a spiritual living, so called. Also, in the plural, "offerings."

Obvension /ɒbˈvɪnʃən/. See Oblation; Obvienio.

Obvious. Easily discovered, seen, or understood; readily perceived by the eye or the intellect; plain; patent; apparent; evident; clear; manifest.

Obvious danger. Apparent in exercise of ordinary observation and disclosed by use of eyes and other senses. Plain and apparent to a reasonably observant person.
Obvious risk. One so plain that it would be instantly recognized by a person of ordinary intelligence. Within an accident policy, one which would be plain and apparent to a reasonably prudent and cautious person in the use of his faculties. It does not mean an unnecessary risk.

O.C. An abbreviation, in the civil law, for “ope consilio” (q.v.). In American law, these letters are used as an abbreviation for “Orphans’ Court.”

Occasion /ɔkəˈsɪʒən/. In Spanish law, event.

Occasio /əˈskəzɪʃ(ə)n/. In feudal law, a tribute which the lord imposed on his vassals or tenants for his necessity. Hindrance; trouble; vexation by suit.

Occasion, n. That which provides an opportunity for the causal agency to act. Meaning not only particular time but carrying of idea of opportunity, necessity, or need, or even cause in a limited sense. Condition of affairs; juncture entailing need; exigency; or juncture affording ground or reason for something.

Occasion, v. To cause or bring about by furnishing the condition or opportunity for the action of some other cause. Smart v. Raymond, Mo.App., 142 S.W.2d 100, 104. To give occasion to, produce, to cause incidentally or indirectly; bring about or the means of bringing about or producing.

Occasionarl /əˈskəzɪʃ(ə)nərəl/. To be charged or loaded with payments or occasional penalties.

Occupancy. Taking possession of property and use of the same; said e.g. of a tenant’s use of leased premises. Period during which person owns, rents, or otherwise occupies real property or premises. Occupancy is a mode of acquiring property by which a thing which belongs to nobody becomes the property of the person who took possession of it with the intention of acquiring a right of ownership in it. The taking possession of things which before belonged to nobody, with an intention of appropriating them to one’s own use. To constitute occupancy, there must be a taking of a thing corporeal, belonging to nobody, with an intention to becoming the owner of it. See also Occupant; Occupation; Possession.

Term also refers to the constitutional concept of “occupancy of the field” when the federal government has so claimed for its jurisdiction a particular sphere that state action is no longer allowed; e.g. sedition and espionage laws. See Pre-emption.

In International law, the taking possession of a newly discovered or conquered country with the intention of holding and ruling it.

See also Adverse possession; Certificate of occupancy; Occupant; Occupancy; Occup; Possession.

Occupant. Person in possession. Person having possessory rights, who can control what goes on on premises. One who has actual use, possession or control of a thing. Redevelopment Authority of Allegheny County v. Stepanik, 25 Pa.Cmwlth. 180, 360 A.2d 300, 302. One who takes the first possession of a thing of which there is no owner. One who occupies and takes possession. Person who acquires title by occupancy. See also Occupancy; Occupation; Possession.

Common occupant. See General occupant, below.

General occupant. At common law where a man was tenant pur autre vie, or had an estate granted to himself only (without mentioning his heirs) for the life of another man, and died without alienation during the life of cestui que vie, or him by whose life it was held, he that could first enter on the land might lawfully retain the possession, so long as cestui que vie lived, by right of occupancy, and was hence termed a "general" or common "occupant."

Special occupant. A person having a special right to enter upon and occupy lands granted pur autre vie, on the death of the tenant, and during the life of cestui que vie.

Occupantis flunt derelicta /ˌɔkəˈpəntıʃ(ə)ntıˈfleŋt dɛrɛˈliktə/. Things abandoned become the property of the (first) occupant.

Occupare /ˌɔkəˈpærər/. Lat. In the civil law, to seize or take possession of; to enter upon a vacant possession; to take possession before another.

Occupatīle /ˌɔkəˈpətələ/. That which has been left by the right owner, and is now possessed by another.

Occupation. Possession; control; tenure; use. The act or process by which real property is possessed and enjoyed. Where a person exercises physical control over land.

That which principally takes up one’s time, thought, and energies, especially, one’s regular business or employment; also, whatever one follows as the means of making a livelihood. Particular business, profession, trade, or calling which engages individual’s time and efforts; employment in which one regularly engages or vocation of his life.

Actual occupation. An open, visible occupancy as distinguished from the constructive one which follows the legal title. See also Adverse possession.

Occupational. Of or pertaining to an occupation, trade or work.

Occupational disease. A disease (as black lung disease incurred by miners) resulting from exposure during employment to conditions or substances detrimental to health. Compensation for such is provided by state worker’s compensation acts and such federal acts as the Black Lung Benefits Act. Impairment of health not caused by accident but by exposure to conditions arising out of or in the course of one’s employment.

A disease is compensable under worker’s compensation statute as being an “occupational” disease where: (1) the disease is contracted in the course of employment; (2) the disease is peculiar to the claimant’s employment by its causes and the characteristics of its manifestation or the conditions of employment result in a hazard which distinguishes the employment in character from employment generally; and (3) the employment creates a risk of contracting the disease in a greater degree and in a different manner than in the public generally. State ex rel. Ohio Bell Tel. Co. v. Krise, 42 Ohio St.2d 247, 327 N.E.2d 756, 758, 71 O.O.2d 226.

Occupational hazard. A risk of accident or disease which is peculiar to a particular calling or occupation.
Occupational Safety and Health Act. The federal law which is administered by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

Occupational Safety and Health Administration. The Occupational Safety and Health Administration, established pursuant to the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 (84 Stat. 1590), develops and promulgates occupational safety and health standards; develops and issues regulations; conducts investigations and inspections to determine the status of compliance with safety and health standards and regulations; and issues citations and proposes penalties for noncompliance with safety and health standards and regulations.

Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission. The Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission is an independent adjudicatory agency established by the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 (84 Stat. 1590; 29 U.S.C.A. § 651). The act, enforced by the Secretary of Labor, is an effort to reduce the incidence of personal injuries, illnesses, and deaths among working men and women in the United States which result from their employment. The Review Commission was created to adjudicate enforcement actions initiated under the act when they are contested by employers, employees, or representatives of employees.

Occupation tax. A tax imposed upon an occupation or the prosecution of a business, trade, or profession; not a tax on property, or even the capital employed in the business; but an excise tax on the business itself; to be distinguished from a “license tax,” which is a fee or exaction for the privilege of engaging in the business, not for its prosecution. An occupation tax is form of excise tax imposed upon persons for privilege of carrying on business, trade or occupation.

Occupative. Pertaining to or involving occupation or the right of occupation.

Occupavit /ókápyávat/. Lat. In old English law, a writ that lay for one who was ejected out of his land or tenement in time of war.

Occupier. An occupant; one who is in the enjoyment of a thing.

Occupy. To take or enter upon possession of; to hold possession of; to hold or keep for use; to possess; to tenant; to do business in; to take or hold possession. Actual use, possession, and cultivation. See Occupancy; Occupant; Occupation; Possession.

Occupying claimant. An occupant claiming right under statute to recover for improvements he has placed on the land subsequently found not to be his. See Occupying Claimant Acts.

Occupying Claimant Acts. Statutes providing for the reimbursement of a bona fide occupant and claimant of land, on its recovery by the true owner, to the extent to which lasting improvements made by him have increased the value of the land, and generally giving him a lien therefor.

Occur. To happen; to meet one’s eye; to be found or met with; to present itself; to appear; hence, to befall in due course; to take place; to arise.

Occurrence. A coming or happening. Any incident or event, especially one that happens without being designed or expected. Farmers & Merchants Nat. Bank v. Arrington, Tex.Civ.App., 98 S.W.2d 378, 382. See also Accident; Act of God; Event.

Ocean. The main or open sea; the high sea; that portion of the sea which does not lie within the body of any country and is not subject to the territorial jurisdiction or control of any country, but is open, free, and common to the use of all nations. U. S. v. Rodgers, 150 U.S. 249, 14 S.Ct. 109, 37 L.Ed. 1071. Body of salt water that covers over 70% of earth’s surface.

Ochlocracy /óklókraisy/. Government by the multitude. A form of government wherein the populace has the whole power and administration in its own hands. The abuse of a democracy.

Octo tales /óktow tél(y)x/. Lat. Eight such; eight such men; eight such jurors. The name of a writ, at common law, which issues when upon a trial at bar, eight more jurors are necessary to fill the panel, commanding the sheriff to summon the requisite number.

Octroi /óktroy/óktroî/. Fr. In French law, originally, a toll or duty, which, by the permission of the seigneur, any city was accustomed to collect on liquors and some other goods, brought within its precincts, for the consumption of the inhabitants. Afterwards appropriated to the use of the king.

Oculist /ókylast/. A duly licensed physician specializing in the diseases of the eyes. See Ophthalmologist.

Odal /ówdal/. Complete property, as opposed to feudal tenure. Blackstone notes the relation of this word to “alloidal”.

Odal right /ówdal ráyt/. An alodial right.

Odd lot. An amount of stock less than the established 100-share unit or 10-share unit of trading: from 1 to 99 shares for the great majority of issues, 1 to 9 for so-called inactive stocks.

Odd lot doctrine. Doctrine which permits finding of total disability where claimant is not altogether incapacitated for any kind of work but is nevertheless so handicapped that he will not be able to obtain regular employment in any well-known branch of the competitive labor market absent superhuman efforts, sympathetic friends or employers, a business boom, or temporary good luck. Vester v. Diamond Lumber Co., 21 Or.App. 587, 535 P.2d 1373, 1376. Under the “odd-lot doctrine”, worker’s compensation claimant will be considered to be totally disabled if it appears probable that claimant cannot sell his services in a competitive labor market. Hill v. U. S. Plywood-Champion Co., 12 Or.App. 1, 503 P.2d 728, 730.

Odd lot order. Order for less than 100 shares of stock.

Oderunt peccare boni, virtutis amore; oderunt peccare malum, formidline pene /owədɛrənt pɛkərɪ /vərt(ɪ)yǔdəs əmərɪ; əwədɛrənt pɛkərɪ /mæləm fɔrmɪd lynə piɲɪ/. Good men hate to sin through love of virtue; bad men, through fear of punishment.
Odio et atia /ówd(i)yow èd éysh(i)yà/. See De odio et atia.

Odlosa et inhonesta non sunt in lege præsumenda /ówdiýówsa èd in(h)ánestà nòn sànt in lìýjì prèz(y)áménda/. Odious and dishonest acts are not presumed in law.

Odlosa non præsumuntur /ówdiýówsa nòn prè-z(y)ámëntar/. Odious things are not presumed.

Odious /ówd(i)yàs/. Synonymous with infamous; hateful; repugnant.

Odium /ówdiýam/. Condition or fact of being subjected to hatred and dislike. In venue statute, it implies such a general ill-feeling toward a party to an action as will render it uncertain whether the cause can be tried by impartial triers, free from an atmosphere impregnated with malign or corrupting prejudices.

Economicus /íyknóýnàkas/. L. Lat. In old English law, the executor of a last will and testament.

Economus /íyknóýmàs/. Lat. In the civil law, a manager or administrator.

Of. A term denoting that from which anything proceeds; indicating origin, source, descent, and the like; as, he is of noble blood. Associated with or connected with, usually in some causal relation, efficient, material, formal, or final. The word has been held equivalent to after; at; or belonging to; in possession of; manufactured by; residing at; from.

Of age. See Legal age; Majority.

Of counsel. A phrase commonly applied in practice to the counsel employed by a party in a cause, and particularly to one employed to assist in the preparation or management of an action, or its presentation on appeal, but who is not the principal attorney of record for the party.

Of course. As a matter of right. Jones v. McGonigle, 327 Mo. 457, 37 S.W. 2d 892. Any action or step taken in the course of judicial proceedings which will be allowed by the court upon mere application, without any request or contest, or which may be effectually taken without having to apply to the court for leave to take such action; e.g. Fed.R. Civil P. 15(a) permits a party to amend his pleadings once as a matter of course at any time before a responsive pleading is served.

Off-board. This term may refer to transactions over-the-counter in unlisted securities, or to a transaction involving listed shares which was not executed on a national securities exchange.

Offender. Commonly used in statutes to indicate person implicated in the commission of a crime and includes person guilty of a misdemeanor or traffic offense. State ex rel. Smith v. Jameson, 70 S.D. 503, 19 N.W. 2d 505, 508.

Offense. A felony or misdemeanor; a breach of the criminal laws. The word "offense," while sometimes used in various senses, generally implies a felony or a misdemeanor infringing public as distinguished from mere private rights, and punishable under the criminal laws, though it may also include the violation of a criminal statute for which the remedy is merely a civil suit to recover the penalty.

Offenses may be classified into general categories as offenses against the person (e.g. murder, manslaughter), against habitation and occupancy (e.g. burglary, arson), against property (e.g. larceny), against morality and decency (e.g. adultery), against public peace, against government (e.g. treason).

See also Anticipatory offense; Civil offense; Continuing offense; Crime; Degrees of crime; Delict; Felony; Graded offense; Included offense; Index offenses; Joint offense; Lesser included offense; Misdemeanor; Multiple offenses; Petty offense; Same offense; Tort.

Continuing offense. A transaction or a series of acts set on foot by a single impulse, and operated by an intermittent force, no matter how long a time it may occupy. Conspiracy is an example of a continuing offense.

Criminal offense. Includes misdemeanors as well as felonies. It is an offense which subjects the offender to imprisonment, and/or fine. See Crime; Degrees of crime; Felony; Misdemeanor.

Joiner of offenses. See Joiner.

Same offense. As used in a provision against double jeopardy, the term means the same crime, not the same transaction, acts, circumstances, or situation.

Second offense. One committed after conviction for a first offense. It is the previous conviction, and not the indictment, which is the basis of the charge of a second offense. People v. Boardman, 172 App.Div. 733, 159 N.Y.S. 577.

Offensive. In the law relating to nuisances and similar matters, this term means noxious, causing annoyance, discomfort, or painful or disagreeable sensations. In ordinary use, the term is synonymous with "obnoxious" and means objectionable, disagreeable, displeasing and distasteful.

Offensive and defensive league. In international law, a league binding the contracting powers not only to aid each other in case of aggression upon either of them by a third power, but also to support and aid each other in active and aggressive measures against a power with which either of them may engage in war.

Offensive language. Language adapted to give offense; displeasing or annoying language. See Defamation; Libel; Slander.

Offensive weapon. As occasionally used in criminal law and statutes, a weapon primarily meant and adapted for attack and the infliction of injury, but practically the term includes anything that would come within the description of a "deadly" or "dangerous" weapon (q.v.).

Offer, v. To bring to or before; to present for acceptance or rejection; to hold out or proffer; to make a proposal to; to exhibit something that may be taken or received or not. To attempt or endeavor; to make an effort to effect some object, as, to offer to bribe; in this sense used principally in criminal law.

In trial practice, to "offer" evidence is to state its nature and purport, or to recite what is expected to be proved by a given witness or document, and demand its admission. See Offer of proof.
Offer, n. A proposal to do a thing or pay an amount, usually accompanied by an expected acceptance, counter-offer, return promise or act. A manifestation of willingness to enter into a bargain, so made as to justify another person in understanding that his assent to that bargain is invited and will conclude it. Restatement, Second, Contracts, § 24. A promise; a commitment to do or refrain from doing some specified thing in the future. The offer creates a power of acceptance permitting the offeree by accepting the offer to transform the offeror's promise into a contractual obligation. See also Offer and acceptance.

An attempt; endeavor.

With respect to securities, the price at which a person is ready to sell. Opposed to bid, the price at which one is ready to buy. See also Offering.

See also Bid; Counter offer; Firm offer; Issue; Offer and acceptance; Offer of proof; Promise; Proposal; Tender; Utter.

Irrevocable offer. One which may not be withdrawn after it has been communicated without the consent of the offeree.

Offer and acceptance. In a bilateral contract, the two elements which constitute mutual assent, a requirement of the contract. In a unilateral contract, the acceptance is generally the act or performance of the offeree, though, in most jurisdictions, a promise to perform is inferred if the offeree commences the undertaking and the offeror attempts to revoke before the offeree has had an opportunity to complete the act. See also Offer; Parol evidence rule.

Offeree. In contracts, the person to whom an offer is made by the offeror.

Offering. An issue of securities offered for sale to the public or private group. Securities offerings are generally of two types: primary (proceeds going to the company for some lawful purpose) and secondary (where the funds go to a person other than the company; i.e., selling stockholders). Primary offerings are also termed “new issues” as they involve the issuance of securities not previously offered and sold. See also Issue; Letter of comment; Prospectus; Red herring; Registration statement; Secondary distribution; Secondary offering; Tombstone ad; Underwrite.

Interstate offerings. A public securities offering made or which may be made to residents of more than one state. Such offerings are regulated by federal securities laws and regulations.

Intrastate offerings. A restricted public securities offering which is made by an issuer organized under the laws of a state, doing its principal business in such state, and offered solely to bona fide residents of such state with substantially all of the proceeds of the offering remaining in the state.

Private offerings. An offering made to a limited number of persons, who are so well-informed concerning the affairs of a company, through the possession of information which would be found in a registration statement, that they do not require the protection afforded by the disclosure provisions of the Securities Act of 1933. Sale of unregistered stock which is exempt from securities laws. U. S. v. Custer Channel Wing Corp., D.C.Md., 247 F.Supp. 481, 487.

Public offerings. The offering of securities at random and in general to anyone who will buy, and whether solicited or unsolicited. Sale of stock to the public in contrast to a “private” offering or placement. Public offerings are generally regulated by federal and state laws and regulations.

Offering circular. An offering circular is required to be filed with the S.E.C. and distributed with any securities offerings. The content of such is similar to the prospectus (q.v.) and is governed by S.E.C. rules and regulations.

Offerings. In English ecclesiastical law, personal tithes, payable by custom to the parson or vicar of a parish, either occasionally, as at sacraments, marriages, churching of women, burials, etc., or at constant times, as at Easter, Christmas, etc. See Oblation; Obviento.

Offering statement. See Offering circular.

Offer of compromise. An offer to settle a dispute or difference amicably for the purpose of avoiding a lawsuit and without admitting liability. A tender or offer to settle or compromise a claim. The fact that such offer has been made is generally not admissible at the trial of the action as an admission of liability, but any admissions made during the negotiations leading up to the offer and compromise are admissible. See Fed.Evid. Rule 103(a)(2).

Offer of judgment. See Judgment.

Offer of proof. At a trial or hearing, when an objection to a question has been sustained, the party aggrieved by the ruling may indicate for the record (out of the presence of the jury) the answer which would have been given if the question had not been excluded. The appellate court is then in a position to determine from the record the correctness of the ruling and the prejudice in its exclusion, if any. See Fed.Evid. Rule 103(a)(2).

Offeror. In contracts, the party who makes the offer and looks for acceptance from the offeree.

Offertorium /ˌɒfərˈtɔːriəm/. In English ecclesiastical law, the offerings of the faithful, or the place where they are made or kept; the service at the time of the Communion.

Office. A right, and correspondent duty, to exercise a public trust. A public charge or employment. An employment on behalf of the government in any station or public trust, not merely transient, occasional, or incidental. The most frequent occasions to use the word arise with reference to a duty and power conferred on an individual by the government; and, when this is the connection, “public office” is a usual and more discriminating expression. But a power and duty may exist without immediate grant from government, and may be properly called an “office” as the office of executor. Here the individual acts towards legatees in performance of a duty, and in exercise of a power not derived from their consent, but devolved on him by an authority which quo ad hoc is superior.

An “assigned duty” or “function.” Synonyms are “post”, “appointment”, “situation”, “place”, “position”, and “office” commonly suggests a position of (especially public) trust or authority. Also right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it. A public charge or employment, and he who performs the duties of the office is an officer. Although an office is an employment, it does not follow that every employment is an office. A man may be employed under a contract, express or implied, to do an act, or to perform a service, without becoming an officer. But, if the duty be a continuing one, which is defined by rule prescribed by the government, which an individual is appointed by the government to perform, who enters upon the duties appertain to his status, without any contract defining them, it seems very difficult to distinguish such a charge or employment from an office, or the person who performs the duty from an officer. In the constitutional sense, the term implies an authority to exercise some portion of the sovereign power, either in making, executing, or administering the laws.

A place for the regular transaction of business or performance of a particular service.

As to various particular offices, see Home office; Land offices; Public office, etc.

County office. Public office filled by the electorate of the entire county.

Judicial office. See Judicial.

Lucrative office. See Lucrative.

Ministerial office. One which gives the officer little or no discretion as to the matter to be done, and requires him to obey mandates of a superior. It is a general rule that a judicial office cannot be exercised by a deputy, while a ministerial office may. See Ministerial.

Office audit. An audit by the Internal Revenue Service of a taxpayer's return which is conducted in the agent's office. It may be distinguished from a correspondence audit or a field audit.

Office copy. A copy or transcript of a deed or record or any filed document, made by the officer having it in custody or under his sanction, and by him sealed or certified.

Office grant. A designation of a conveyance made by some officer of the law to effect certain purposes, where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass the title; such, for example, as a tax-deed.

Office hours. That portion of the day during which offices are usually open for the transaction of business.

Office of honor. See Honor.

Office of judge. In old English law, a criminal suit in an ecclesiastical court, not being directed to the reparation of a private injury, was regarded as a proceeding emanating from the office of the judge, and could be instituted by the mere motion of the judge. But, in practice, these suits were instituted by private individuals, with the permission of the judge or his surrogate; and the private prosecutor in any such case was, accordingly, said to "promote the office of the judge."

Principal office. The principal office of a corporation is its headquarters, or the place where the chief or principal affairs and business of the corporation are transacted. Usually it is the office where the company's books are kept, where its meetings of stockholders are held, and where the directors, trustees, or managers assemble to discuss and transact the important general business of the company; but no one of these circumstances is a controlling test. Synonymous with "principal place of business," being the place where the principal affairs of a corporation are transacted.

Public office. The right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law, by which for a given period, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, an individual is invested with some portion of the sovereign functions of government for the benefit of the public. An agency for the state, the duties of which involve in their performance the exercise of some portion of the sovereign power, either great or small.

State office. Public offices to be filled by the electorate of the entire state.

Office-block ballot. A form of ballot in which the names of candidates, with or without party designations, are grouped under the offices for which they are contesting; also called "Massachusetts" ballot.

Officer. Person holding office of trust, command or authority in corporation, government, armed services, or other institution or organization.

In corporations, a person charged with important functions of management such as president, vice president, treasurer, etc.

In determining whether one is an "officer" or "employee," important tests are the tenure by which a position is held, whether its duration is defined by the statute or ordinance creating it, or whether it is temporary or transient or for a time fixed only by agreement; whether it is created by an appointment or election, or merely by a contract of employment by which the rights of the parties are regulated; whether the compensation is by a salary or fees fixed by law, or by a sum agreed upon by the contract of hiring.

For definitions of the various classes and kinds of officers, see the titles Commissioned; Constitutional; Corporate; Executive; Fiscal; Judicial; Legislative; Ministerial; Municipal; Naval; Non-commissioned; Peace; Public; State; Subordinate.

Civil officer. The word "civil," as regards civil officers, is commonly used to distinguish those officers who are in public service but not of the military. Hence, any officer of the United States who holds his appointment under the national government, whether his duties are executive or judicial, in the highest or the lowest departments of the government, with the exception of officers of the armed services.

Military officer. Commissioned officer in armed services. Officer who has command in armed forces. Officer de facto. As distinguished from an officer de jure; this is the designation of one who is in the actual possession and administration of the office, under some colorable or apparent authority, although his title to the same, whether by election or appointment, is in reality invalid or at least formally questioned. Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 6 S.Ct. 1121, 30 L.Ed. 178. "Officer de facto" includes one whose duties of office are exercised under color of election or appointment by or pursuant to public, unconstitutional law, before same is adjudged to be such. Platte v. Dorch, 255 Ind. 157, 263 N.E.2d 286, 288.

Officer de jure. One who is in all respects legally appointed and qualified to exercise the office. One who is clothed with the full legal right and title to the office; he is one who has been legally elected or appointed to an office, and who has qualified himself to exercise the duties thereof according to the mode prescribed by law. Trost v. Tynatishon, 12 Ill.App.3d 406, 299 N.E.2d 14, 17.

Officer of justice. A general name applicable to all persons connected with the administration of the judicial department of government, but commonly used only of the class of officers whose duty is to serve the process of the courts, such as sheriffs, constables, bailiffs, marshals, sequestrators, etc.

Officer of the United States. An officer nominated by the President and confirmed by the senate or one who is appointed under an act of congress, by the President alone, a court of law, or a head of a department. U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U.S. 508, 25 L.Ed. 462; U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U.S. 303, 8 S.Ct. 505, 31 L.Ed. 463. See also United States officer.

Public officer. An officer of a public corporation; that is, one holding office under the government of a municipality, state, or nation. One occupying a public office created by law. One of necessary characteristics of "public officer" is that he performs public function for public benefit and in so doing he be vested with exercise of some sovereign power of state.

Warrant officer. Officer of armed forces, with rank between commissioned and non-commissioned officer, holding rank by virtue of warrant.

Officia judicialia non concedantur antequam vacent. /afish(y)ə jadishjéyil(y)ə nɔ̊n kɔ̊nsɛdɛntɪ æntækwam vɛysɛnt/. Judicial offices should not be granted before they are vacant.

Official, n. An officer; a person invested with the authority of an office. See also Officer.

In Canon law, a person to whom a bishop commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction.

In Civil law, the minister or apparitor of a magistrate or judge.

Official, adj. Pertaining to an office; invested with the character of an officer; proceeding from, sanctioned by, or done by, an officer. Authorized act.

As to official Bond; Liquidator; Log Book; Newspaper; Oath; Use, see those titles.

Demi-official. Partly official or authorized. Having color of official right.

Official act. One done by an officer in his official capacity under color and by virtue of his office. Authorized act.

Official misconduct. Any unlawful behavior by a public officer in relation to the duties of his office, willful in its character, including any willful or corrupt failure, refusal, or neglect of an officer to perform any duty enjoined on him by law. See Malafeasance; Misfeasance.

Official bond. Type of fidelity bond required to be posted by certain public officials to indemnify the government, municipality or court in the event of defalcation by the officer.

Official Gazette. Weekly publication of U.S. Patent and Trademark Office containing patent and trademark notices and applications, as well as mark registrations.

Official immunity doctrine. Doctrine of "official immunity" provides that government officials enjoy an absolute privilege from civil liability should the activity in question fall within the scope of their authority and if the action undertaken requires the exercise of discretion, and this rule of immunity is not limited to the highest executive officers of the government. Watson v. Barker, D.C.Pa., 428 F.Supp. 590, 592.

Official map. In zoning and land use, the authorized map for the determination of proper land use in the city or town, showing the zones and areas and their authorized uses.

Official record. Fed.Evid.R. 803(8) provides, without regard to availability of the declarant, a hearsay exception for: "Records, reports, statements, or data compilations, in any form, of public offices or agencies ...." Proof of official records at trial is governed by Fed.R.Civil P. 44. Admissibility of official records at administrative proceedings is governed by the Official Records Act (q.v.). Official records are those kept in the performance of duty by an officer even if not specifically required by statute. State v. Biscoe, 112 Ariz. 96, 537 P.2d 968, 969.

Official Records Act. Federal statute applicable to cases in which the Federal Rules of Evidence do not apply (i.e. administrative proceedings) providing that books and records of account and minutes of any department or agency of the U.S. shall be admissible to prove the act or transaction as a memorandum of which it was made or kept. Properly authenticated copies are equally admissible with the originals. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1733(a).

Official reports or reporters. Publication of court decisions as directed by statute; e.g. United States Supreme Court Reports. See Reports or reporters.

Officiality. The court or jurisdiction of which an official is head.

Officia magistratus non debent esse vennalla /afish(y)ə mɛjastrɛydəs nɔ̊n ˈdɛənt̪ ˈɛsɨ ˈvɛnɛl(ə)ˈya/. The offices of magistrates ought not to be sold.

Officiarius non facendis vel amovendis /afishiyɛrjəs nɔ̊n ˈfæs(h)iˈɛnðəs vɛl ˈɛmɔvɛnðəs/. A writ addressed to the magistrates of a corporation, requiring them not to make such a man an officer, or to put one out of the office he has, until inquiry is made of his manners, etc.

Officina justitiae /ˈofəsaɪmə jæstɪʃɪəjɪ/. The workshop or office of justice. The chancery was formerly so called. 3 Bl.Comm. 273.

Officio, ex, oath /ˈoʊθəʊ/ éks /afish(y)əˈoʊθəʊ/. An oath whereby a person may be obliged to make any presentment of any crime or offense, or to confess or accuse himself of any criminal matter or thing whereby he may be liable to any censure, penalty, or pune-ishment. 3 Bl.Comm. 447.

Officious will /ôfias will/. A testament by which a testator leaves his property to his family. Inofficious testament.

Officii conatus si effectus sequatur /ôfasat kanéydas sây sfektas sakwéydar/. The attempt becomes of consequence, if the effect follows.

Of force. In force; extant; not obsolete; existing as a binding or obligatory power.

Offset. A deduction; a counterclaim; a contrary claim or demand by which a given claim may be lessened or canceled. An 'offset' may be defined as a claim that serves to counterbalance or to compensate for another claim. Steinmeyer v. Warner Consolidated Corp., 42 Cal.App.3d 515, 116 Cal.Rptr. 57. See also Countterclaim; Recoupment; Set-off.

Type of entry in bookkeeping which counters the effect of a prior entry. See Offset account.

Offset account. In bookkeeping, a ledger account which has a corresponding account to be washed avgainst it when the books are closed.

Offspring. Children; issue.

Of grace. This phrase had its origin in an age when kings dispensed their royal favors at the hands of chancellors. A term applied to any permission or license granted to a party in the course of a judicial proceeding which is not reclaimable as a matter of course or of right, but is allowed by the favor or dulgence of the court. See Act of grace.

Of record. Recorded; entered on the records; existing and remaining in or upon the appropriate records;
e.g. a mortgage to be "of record" must normally be recorded in the county in which it is properly and legally recordable for purpose of constructive notice.
Riley v. Commonwealth, 275 Ky. 370, 121 S.W.2d
921. See also Attorney (Attorney of record); Court (Court of record); Record.

Of right. As a matter of course. See Of course; Right.

Of the blood. A technical legal phrase meaning to be descended from the person referred to or from the same common stock and from a common ancestor.
In re Easter's Estate, 24 Cal.2d 191, 148 P.2d 601.

Oil and gas lease. Grant of right to extract oil and/or gas from land.

O.K. A conventional symbol, of obscure origin much used in commercial practice and occasionally in indorsements on legal documents, signifying "correct, "approved," "accepted," "satisfactory," or "asserted to."

Okay. The colloquial expression means correct, all right, to approve, and is of such common usage that it immediately conveys to the mind of person to whom it is addressed that a proposition submitted is agreed to. Muegler v. Crossthwait, 239 Mo.App. 801, 179 S.W.2d 761, 763. See also O. K.

Old Age, Survivors' and Disability Insurance. A system established under the Federal Social Security Act providing for retirement, disability, widows', widowers', and dependent benefits. Such program is funded by employer, employee and self-employed contributions. See Social Security Administration.

Old natura brevium /ôwid náçúra brfívviyam/. The title of a treatise written in the reign of Edward III, containing the writs which were then most in use, annexing to each a short comment concerning their nature and the application of them, with their various properties and effects.

Old tenures. A treatise, so called to distinguish it from Littleton's book on the same subject, which gives an account of the various tenures by which land was helden, the nature of estates, and some other incidents to landed property in the reign of Edward III.
It is a very scanty tract, but has the merit of having led the way to Littleton's famous work.

Oleron, Laws of /ôdz ov ówldrôn/. A code of maritime laws published at the island of Oleron in the twelfth century by Eleanor of Guienne. They were adopted in intention of the doer.

Omne crimen ebreatas et incendit et detegit. Drunkenness both inflames (or aggravates) and reveals every crime.

Omne jus aut consensus fecit, aut necessitas constituit aut firmavit consuetudo. /ōmnīy jūs ōt kānsēn(t)sas fīsyd, ōd nāsēstās kānsītchuwat ōt fārmēyvat kōnskwat(y)ūwdow/. Every right is either made by consent, or is constituted by necessity, or is established by custom.

Omne magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum, quamvis minus dignum sit antiquus. /ōmnīy mējyjas dīgnam trēhād ēd sī ymānas dīgnam, kwāmnīs māynas dīgnam sīd sāntkīwiyas/. Every worthier thing draws to it the less worthy, though the less worthy is the more ancient.

Omne magnus exemplum habet aliquid ex iniquo, quod publica utilitatem compensatur. /ōmnīy mēgnum sgžěkplam hēyypad ēskakwīd ēsk ēskānykwow, kwōd pāblaka yuwultatēdīy kōmpōnsēyrd/. Every great example has some portion of evil, which is compensated by the public utility.

Omne majus continet in se minus /ōmnīy mējyjas kōntanad in sī ymānas/. Every greater contains in itself the less. The greater always contains the less.

Omne majus dignum continet in se minus /ōmnīy mējyjas dīgnam kōntanad in sī ymānas dīgnam/. The more worthy contains in itself the less worthy.

Omne majus minus in se complectitur /ōmnīy mējyjas māynas in sī kemplēktaddar/. Every greater embraces in itself the less.

Omne principale trahit ad se accessorium. /ōmnīy prīnt(t)saspēlly trēhād ēd sī yēksēsōriyam/. Every principal thing draws to itself the accessory.

Omne quod solo ineditificatur solo cedit. /ōmnīy kwōd sōlow inēkāsēkēydr sōlow sīydr/. Everything which is built upon the soil belongs to the soil.

Omne sacramentum debet esse de certa scientia. /ōmnīy sākramēntm dēbōd ēsī dī ymāna sāyēns(h)yā/. Every oath ought to be of certain knowledge.

Omnes actiones in mundo infra certa temporis habent limitationem. /ōmnīy ykshīōnūmīy ymāndōw infrā yrādād hēybanh līmātyshiyōwnam/. All actions in the world are limited within certain periods.

Omnes homines aut liberi sunt aut servi. /ōmnīy hōmanīy ōt lībrary sānt ōt sārvay/. All men are free or slaves.

Omnes licentiam habere his que pro se induita sunt, renuncilāre /ōmnīy lāsnēsh(h)yam habhīry hī kwīy prōw sī ymāntā sānt rānāshyēry/. [It is a rule of the ancient law that] all persons shall have liberty to renounce those privileges which have been conferred for their benefit.

Omnes prudentes illa admittere solent que probantur lis qui arte sua bene versati sunt. /ōmnīy pruwdēntiūs illa sāmīdārty sōwlant kwīy prēbantār āys kwīy ārōdy sγ(y)ūwī θīrmīy vārsēyday Sānt/. All prudent men are accustomed to admit those things which are approved by those who are well versed in the art.

Omnes sorores sunt quasi unus haeres de una hereditate /ōmnīy sōrōris sānt kwēsāy ywūnmā hīrizy diy ywūna hārēdatēdy/. All sisters are, as it were, one heir to one inheritance.

Omne testamentum morte consummatum est /ōmnīy tēstāmēntum mōrdīy kōn(t)samēydam ēst/. Every will is completed by death.

omnia delicta in aperto leviōra sunt /ōmnīa dēlikta in spārðow lēviyōra sānt/. All crimes that are committed openly are lighter [or have a less odious appearance than those committed secretly].

omnia performavit /ōmnīa pērformēyat/. He has done all. In pleading. A good plea in bar where all the covenants are in the affirmative.

omnia praesuntur contra spollatorem /ōmnīa prīyz(y)amāntar kōntra spōwlt(i)yōtɔrm/. All things are presumed against a despoiler or wrongdoer.

omnia praesuntur legitime facta donec probetur in contrarium /ōmnīa prīyz(y)amāntar lājdamā fēksta dōmwnk prōbwldyar in kāntrēriyam/. All things are presumed to be lawfully done, until proof be made to the contrary.

omnia praesuntur rite et solemniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium /ōmnīa prīyz(y)amāntar rādiy ēt sālmēnndar ēsī yksta dōmwnk prōbwldyar in kāntrēriyam/. All things are presumed to have been rightly and duly performed until it is proved to the contrary.

omnia praesuntur solemniter esse acta /ōmnīa prīyz(y)amāntar sālmēnndar ēsī yksta/. All things are presumed to have been done rightly.

omnia praesuntur rite esse acta /ōmnīa prīyz(y)amāntar rādiy ēsī yksta/. A prima facie presumption of the regularity of the acts of public officers exists until the contrary appears.

omnia que jure contrahuntur contrario jure peruent /ōmnīy kwīy jūri kōnträhantā kāntrēriyow jūriy pēhrīyant/. All things which are contracted by law perish by a contrary law.

omnia que sunt uxoris sunt ipsius viri /ōmnīya kwīy sānt ōksōrs sānt ipsīyas vīry/. All things which are the wife's are the husband's.

omnia rite acta praesuntur /ōmnīya rādyly yksta prīyz(y)amāntar/. All things are presumed to have been rightly done.

omnibus /ōmnibas/. For all; containing two or more independent matters. Applied most commonly to a legislative bill which comprises more than one general subject. See Omnibus bill.

omnibus ad quos præsentes littere pervenerint, salutem /ōmnibas ēd kwōws prōzentīy līdāriy pōrənərnt sal(y)ūwdam/. To all to whom the present letters shall come, greeting. A form of address with which charters and deeds were anciently commenced.

omnibus bill /ōmnibas bīl/. A legislative bill including in one act various separate and distinct matters, and frequently one joining a number of different subjects in one measure in such a way as to compel the executive authority to accept provisions which he does not approve or else defeat the whole enactment.

In equity pleading, a bill embracing the whole of a complex subject-matter by uniting all parties in interest having adverse or conflicting claims, thereby avoiding multiplicity of action.

Omnibus clause. Clause in a will or decree of distribution passing all property not specifically mentioned or known of at the time.

"Omnibus clause" in automotive liability policy extends coverage thereunder to person using automobile owned by named insured with express or implied permission of the latter. Uber v. Ohio Cas. Ins. Co., 247 Cal.App.2d 611, 55 Cal.Rptr. 720, 724.

Omnibus hearing. Hearing at which there are many unrelated matters on the agenda for discussion and consideration.

Omnium exceptione majus /ómnas áksèshiyównay méýás/ Above all exception.

Omnis actio est loquela /ómnas ákskh(y)ow ést lowkwílyá/. Every action is a plain or complaint.

Omnis conclusio boni et veri judicii sequitur ex bonis et veris præmissis et dictis juratorum /ómnas kanklúwzh(y)ow bównay ét víráj jadíshiyaw sèkwadar èks bównas èt víras præmisas ét diktas júratórm/. Every conclusion of a good and true judgment follows from good and true premises, and is the verdicts of juries.

Omnis consensus tollit errorem /ómnas kansén(t)as tólad éhórarm/. Every consent removes error. Consent always removes the effect of error.

Omnis definitio in jure civilis periculo sa est, param est enim ut non subverti possit /ómnas défənsh(y)ow in júrí s溜alay parikyálówswá èst, párarm èst ènm èt nón sèwbuíday póisat/. Every definition in the civil law is dangerous, for there is very little that cannot be overthrown. (There is no rule in the civil law which is not liable to some exception; and the least difference in the facts of the case renders its application useless.)

Omnis definitio in lege periculo sa /ómnas défənsh(y)ow in iìjìy parikyálówswá/. All definition in law is hazardous.

Omnis exceptio est ipsa quoque regula /ómnas áksèsh(y)ow ét ípsa kwóówkwíwy régyiá/. Every exception is itself also a rule.

Omnis indemnitas pro innoxia legibus habetur /ómnas inndēnmiádás prów ánɔkswá liýjəbə hábýdiyá/. Every uncondemned person is held by the law as innocent.

Omnis innovatlo plus novitate perturbat quam utilisate prodest /ómnas invésh(y)ow plís nówkwádídy pertódbt kwárm ywutilóiédídy pówdést/. Every innovation occasions more harm by its novelty than benefit by its utility.

Omnis Interpretatio si fieri potest ita fienda est in instrumentis, ut omnes contrarietates amoveantur /ómnas ántárpártésh(y)ow, sáy fáyárřay pówdést áyda fáyënèd èst èn instrumentás, èd ómnílyz kántrériyátedídy ámówkwíyántar/. Every interpretation, if it can be done, is to be so made in instruments that all contradictions may be removed.

Omnis interpretatio vel declarat, vel extendit, vel restrictit /ómnas ántárpártésh(y)ow vél dákérdài, vél aksténdát, vél réstrinjá/. Every interpretation either declares, extends, or restricts.

Omnis nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non preteritis /ómnas nów kwósta(y)úsh(y)ow fysčúras fórma(y) impównarí débét, nón préstér- pods/. Every new statute ought to prescribe a form to future, not to past, acts.

Omnis persona est homo, sed non vicissim /ómnas pàsàowna èst hówmow sèd nón wissim/. Every person is a man, but not every man a person.

Omnis privato presuppone habitum /ómnas prvéy- sh(y)ow prýsyápōmnat hàbdóm/. Every privation presupposes a former enjoyment. A "rule of philosophy" quoted by Lord Coke, and applied to the discontinuance of an estate.

Omnis quære et omnis actio injuriatur limita est infra certa temporá /ómnas kwáriyá èd ómnas ákskh(y)ow anjúriyéram límádo èst ínfi rá sárdá témpra/. Every plaint and every action for injuries is limited within certain times.

Omnis ratification retrodefinitur et mandato priori sequatur /ómnas réḍəhəsh(y)ow rétəwtrésədax èt məndəyðow prəwəráj ékwəpəfəyérd/. Every ratification relates back and is equivalent to a prior authority.

Omnis regulus suas patitur exceptiones /ómnas régyiá s(y)úwəs pəcédr áksèshiyówñyzy/. Every rule is liable to its own exceptions.

Omnium /ómniiyam/. In mercantile law, a term used to express the aggregate value of the different stock in which a loan is usually funded.

Omnium contributione sarclatur quod pro omnibus datum est /ómniiyam kóntrebyúshyówñyñy sárshiy- éyörd kwów prów ómnabas dëydm èst/. That which is given for, all is recompensed by the contribution of all. A principle of the law of general average.

Omnium rerum quorum usus est, potest esse abusus, virtute solo excepta /ómniiyam rírm kwárm ywụwá èst, pówdést èsíy aberúwñas, vartyúwdíy sòwłow akşepsha/. There may be an abuse of everything of which there is a use, virtue only excepted.

On. Upon; as soon as; near to; along; along side of; adjacent to; contiguous to; at the time of; following upon; in; during; at or in contact with upper surface of a thing.

On account. In part payment; in partial satisfaction of an account. The phrase is usually contrasted with "in full."

On account of whom it may concern. When a policy of insurance expresses that the insurance is made "on account of whom it may concern," it will cover all persons having an insurable interest in the subject-matter at the date of the policy and who were then contemplated by the party procuring the insurance.
ON ALL FOURS

On all fours. A phrase used to express the idea that a case at bar is in all points similar to another. The one is said to be on all fours with the other when the facts are similar and the same questions of law are involved.

O.N.B. An abbreviation for "Old Natura Brevium."

On call. There is no legal difference between an obligation payable "when demanded" or "on demand" and one payable "on call" or "at any time called for." In each case the debt is payable on demand. See On demand.

Once a mortgage, always a mortgage. This rule or maxim signifies that an instrument originally intended as a mortgage, and not a deed, cannot be converted into anything else than a mortgage by any subsequent clause or agreement.

Once in jeopardy. A phrase used to express the condition of a person charged with crime, who has once already, by legal proceedings, been put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense. See also Jeopardy.

Ocuanne. L. Fr. Accused.

On default. In case of default: upon failure of stipulated action or performance; upon the occurrence of a failure, omission, or neglect of duty.

On demand. Note payable on request. If no due date is stated in note, such is payable on demand. Instruments payable "on demand" include those payable at sight or on presentation and those in which no time for payment is stated. U.C.C. § 3-108.

One person, one vote. State legislative districting which gives equal legislative representation to all citizens of all places. The rule was established in Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 568, 84 S.Ct. 1382, 1385, 12 L.Ed.2d 506, which required that the seats in both houses of a bicameral state legislature be apportioned on a population basis. Gray v. Sanders, 372 U.S. 368, 83 S.Ct. 801, 9 L.Ed.2d 821; Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 526, 11 L.Ed.2d 481; Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L.Ed.2d 663. See also Reapportionment.

Onerrando pro rata portionis /ownaréndow próów réyda pórsřiyîwns/. A writ that lay for a joint tenant or tenant in common who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land comes to.

Onerrari non /ownaréray nôn/. In pleading, the name of a plea, in an action of debt, by the defendant says that he ought not to be charged.

Onerratio /ownaréysh(y)ow/. Lat. A lading; a cargo.

Onerratur nisi /ownaréydar náysay/. See O. NL.

Onerris ferendai /ownaraś feréndai/. Lat. In the civil law, the servitude of support; a servitude by which the wall of a house is required to sustain the wall or beams of the adjoining house.

Onerrus /ownaraś/. A contract, lease, share, or other right is said to be "onerous" when the obligations attaching to it unreasonably counterbalance or exceed the advantage to be derived from it, either absolutely or with reference to the particular possessor. Unreasonably burdensome or one-sided. See Unconscionability.

As used in the civil law and in the systems derived from it (French, Scotch, Spanish, Mexican), the term also means based upon, supported by, or relating to a good and valuable consideration, i.e., one which imposes a burden or charge in return for the benefit conferred.

Onerrous contract. See Contract.

Onerrous gift. A gift made subject to certain charges imposed by the donor on the donee.

Onerrous title. A title acquired by the giving of a valuable consideration, as the payment of money or rendition of services or the performance of conditions or assumption or discharge of liens or charges.

One sided. See Unconscionability.

On file. Filed; entered or placed upon the files; existing and remaining upon or among the proper files.

O.N.L. In old English practice it was the course of the exchequer, as soon as the sheriff entered into and made up his account for issues, amercements, etc., to mark upon each head "O. N.L.," which denoted onerrer, nisi habeat sufficientem exoneracionem, and presently he became the king's debtor, and a debtor was set upon his head; whereupon the parties paravalle became debtors to the sheriff, and were discharged against the king, etc.

Only. Solely; merely; for no other purpose; at no other time; in no other way, etc.; of or by itself; without anything more; exclusive; nothing else or more.

Onomastic /onamastak/. A term applied to the signature of an instrument, the body of which is in a different handwriting from that of the signature.

On or about. A phrase used in reciting the date of an occurrence or conveyance, or the location of it to escape the necessity of being bound by the statement of an exact date, or place; approximately; about; without substantial variance from; near.

As used in statutes making it an offense to carry a weapon "on or about" the person, it is generally held that the word "on" means connected with or attached to, and that "about" is a comprehensive term having a broader meaning than "on," and conveying the idea of being nearby, in close proximity, within immediate reach, or conveniently accessible.

On or before. These words, inserted in a stipulation to do an act or pay money, entitle the party stipulating to perform at any time before the day; and upon performance, or tender and refusal, he is immediately vested with all the rights which would have attached if performance were made on the day.

Onset date. A term of art used by the Social Security Administration that marks the commencement of a

On the person. In common parlance, when it is said that someone has an article on his person, it means that it is either in contact with his person or is carried in his clothing. See also On or about.

Onus /ównas/. Lat. A burden or load; a weight. Burden of responsibility or proof. The lading, burden, or cargo of a vessel. A charge; an incumbrance. Cum onere (q.v.), with the incumbrance.

Onus episcopale /ównas apiskópoléy/. Ancient customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, of synodals, pentecostals, etc.

Onus probandi /ównas próbaánday/. Burden of proving; the burden of proof. The strict meaning of the term "onus probandi" is that, if no evidence is adduced by the party on whom the burden is cast, the issue must be found against him.

OPEC. Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Ope consilio /ówpyle (ét) kanslí(y)ow/. Lat. By aid and counsel. A civil law term applied to accessories, similar in import to the "aiding and abetting" of the common law. Often written "ope et consilio."

Open, v. To render accessible, visible, or available; to submit or subject to examination, inquiry, or review, by the removal of restrictions or impediments.

Open a case. In practice, to open a case is to begin it; to make an initiatory explanation (i.e. opening statement) of its features to the court, jury, referee, etc., by outlining the nature of the occurrence or transaction on which it is founded, the questions involved, and the character and general course of the evidence to be adduced. See also Opening statement of counsel.

Open a commission. To enter upon the duties under a commission, or commence to act under a commission. Thus, in England the judges of assize and nisi prius derived their authority to act under or by virtue of commissions directed to them for that purpose; and, when they commenced acting under the powers so committed to them, they were said to open the commissions; and the day on which they so commenced their proceedings was as such termed the "commission day of the assizes".

Open a court. To open a court is to make a formal announcement, usually by the crier or bailiff, that its session has now begun and that the business before the court will be proceeded with.

Open a judgment. To lift or relax the bar of finality and conclusiveness which it imposes so as to permit a re-examination of the merits of the action in which it was rendered. This is done at the instance of a party showing good cause why the execution of the judgment would be inequitable. It so far annuls the judgment as to prevent its enforcement until the final determination upon it. Fed.R.Civil P. 60 governs relief from judgment because of mistakes, inadvertence, excusable neglect, newly discovered evidence, fraud, etc.

Open a rule. To restore or recall a rule which has been made absolute to its conditional state, as a rule nisi, so as to readmit of cause being shown against the rule. Thus, when a rule to show cause has been made absolute under a mistaken impression that no counsel had been instructed to show cause against it, it is usual for the party at whose instance the rule was obtained to consent to have the rule opened, by which all the proceedings subsequent to the day when cause ought to have been shown against it are in effect nullified, and the rule is then argued in the ordinary way.

Open a street or highway. To establish it by law and make it passable and available for public travel.

Open the door. If one party to litigation puts in evidence part of document or correspondence or conversation which is detrimental to the opposing party, the latter may introduce balance of document, correspondence or conversation in order to explain or rebut adverse inferences, which might arise from fragmentary or incomplete character of evidence introduced by his adversary. This is known as Rule of Completeness. U. S. v. Corrigan, C.C.A.N.Y., 168 F.2d 641, 645. See also Fed.Evid. R. 106.

Open, adj. Patent; visible; apparent; notorious; not clandestine; not closed, settled, fixed, or terminated. As to open Corporation; Entry; Insolvency; Lewdness; Policy; Possession; Verdict, see those titles.

Open account. Type of credit extended by a seller to buyer which permits buyer to make purchases without a note or security and it is based on an evaluation of the buyer's credit. A contractual obligation which may be modified by subsequent agreement of the parties, either by expressed assent or implied from the conduct of the parties, provided the agreement changing the contractual obligation is based upon independent consideration. Bloch v. Fedak, 210 Kan. 63, 499 P.2d 1052, 1054. See also Open credit; Open-end credit.

Open and notorious. Acts on the land of another sufficient to alert the owner of a claim to his land which may ripen into title under adverse possession. See also Adverse possession.

Behavior which is "open and notorious" for purposes of statute prohibiting adultery is behavior which is prominent, conspicuous and generally known and recognized by the public. The prohibition of open and notorious adultery is meant to protect the public from conduct which disturbs the peace, tends to promote breaches of the peace, and openly flouts accepted standards of morality in the community. People v. Cessna, 1 Ill.Dep. 433, 42 Ill.App.3d 746, 356 N.E.2d 621, 623.

Open bid. An offer to perform a contract, generally of a construction nature, in which the bidder reserves the right to reduce his bid to compete with a lower bid.

Open bulk. In the mass; exposed to view; not tied or sealed up.

Open court. This term may mean either a court which has been formally convened and declared open for the transaction of its proper judicial business, or a court which is freely open to spectators.
Open credit. Line of credit extended up to a certain amount by a merchant, bank or supplier so as to permit borrowings or purchases to such amount without posting security or reestablishing credit limit. See also Open account; Open-end credit.

Open-end contract. Contract which permits buyer to make purchases over a period of time without change in the price or terms by the seller.

Open-end credit. Credit cards and "revolving charges" where one can pay a part of what he owes each month on several different purchases. For purposes of Truth in Lending Act, "open-end credit plan" is one in which credit terms are initially established with the opening of the account, but no fixed amount of debt is incurred at that time with purchases made from time to time instead being added to the outstanding balance in the account; each new purchase represents an additional extension of credit. Goldman v. First Nat. Bank of Chicago, C.A.Ill., 532 F.2d 10, 17.

Open-end investment company. A mutual fund which will buy back its shares at net asset value and which is continuously offering to sell new shares to the public. See Mutual fund.

Open-end investment trust. Type of trust in which the trustees are permitted to make on-going investments for its portfolio.

Open-end mortgage. A mortgage that allows the borrowing of additional sums, usually providing that at least the stated ratio of assets to the debt must be maintained. A mortgage which provides for future advances on the given mortgage and increases the amount of the existing mortgage.

Open-end transaction. Generic term to describe a loose transaction in which the parties may add to or amend the original bargain or agreement. It may include an open-end mortgage or open-end credit arrangement.

Opening statement of counsel. Outline or summary of nature of case and of anticipated proof presented by counsel to jury at start of trial. Speer v. Shipley, 149 Kan. 15, 85 P.2d 998, 1001. Its purpose is to advise the jury of facts relied upon and of issues involved, and to give jury a general picture of the facts and the situations so that jury will be able to understand the evidence. State v. Erwin, 101 Utah 365, 120 P.2d 285, 313.

Open letter of credit. An unrestricted letter of credit which will be paid on a simple draft without the need of documentary title. See also Letter of credit.

Open listing. A type of listing contract whereby any agent who has a right to participate in the open listing is entitled to a commission if he produces the sale.

Open mortgage clause. See Union mortgage clause.

Open order. An order to buy securities or commodities at or below or above a certain price and such order remains viable until canceled by the customer.

Open price term. The parties if they so intend can conclude a contract for sale even though the price is not settled. In such a case the price is a reasonable price at the time for delivery if: (a) nothing is said as to price; or (b) the price is left to be agreed by the parties and they fail to agree; or (c) the price is to be fixed in terms of some agreed market or other standard as set or recorded by a third person or agency and it is not so set or recorded. U.C.C. § 2–305.

Open sea. The expanse and mass of any great body of water, as distinguished from its margin or coast, its harbors, bays, creeks, inlets.

Open season. That portion of the year wherein the laws for the preservation of game and fish permit the killing of a particular species of game or the taking of a particular variety of fish.

Open shop. A business in which union and non-union workers are employed indiscriminately. Business in which union membership is not a condition of securing or maintaining employment. See Right-to-work laws.

Open space. Any parcel or area of land or water essentially unimproved and set aside, dedicated, designated or reserved for public or private use or enjoyment or for the use and enjoyment of owners and occupants of land adjoining or neighboring such open spaces.

Common open space. An open space area within or related to a site designated as a development and designed and intended for the use or enjoyment of residents and owners of the development. Common open space may contain such complementary structures and improvements as are necessary and appropriate for the use or enjoyment of residents and owners of the development.

Open union. A labor union without restrictive membership provisions. See also Open shop.

Operari /opərəri/ /y/. Such tenants, under feudal tenures, as held some little portions of land by the duty of performing bodily labor and servile works for their lord.

Operate. To perform a function, or operation, or produce an effect. See Operation.

Operating expenses. Those expenses required to keep the business running, e.g. rent, electricity, heat. Expenses incurred in the course of ordinary activities of an entity.

Operating margin. Net operating income divided by sales for the period.

Operating profit. Deducting the cost of goods sold from sales gives gross profit. Deducting the operating expense (overhead) from the gross profit gives the operating profit.

Operatio /əpəréʃ(ɪ)əʊ/. One day's work performed by a tenant for his lord.

Operation. Exertion of power; the process of operating or mode of action; an effect brought about in accordance with a definite plan; action; activity. In surgical practice, the term may be defined as an act or succession of acts performed upon the body of a patient, for his relief or restoration to normal conditions, by the use of surgical instruments as distinguished from therapeutic treatment by the administration of drugs or other remedial agencies.
Operation of law. This term expresses the manner in which rights, and sometimes liabilities, devolve upon a person by the mere application to the particular transaction of the established rules of law, without the act or co-operation of the party himself.

Operative. A workman; a laboring man; an artisan; particularly one employed in factories. Secret agent or detective.

Operative part. That part of a conveyance, or of any instrument intended for the creation or transference of rights, by which the main object of the instrument is carried into effect. It is distinguished from introductory matter, recitals, formal conclusion, etc.

Operative words. In a deed or lease, such are the words which effect the transaction intended to be consummated by the instrument.

Operis novi nuntiatio /őperis nővβav naŋshiyéšh(ly-)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, a protest or warning against [of] a new work.

Opetide /óvp Łayd/. The ancient time of marriage, from Epiphany to Ash-Wednesday.

Ophthalmologist /óftalmolójast/. One who is skilled in, or practices, ophthalmology. Practice of “oculist” and “ophthalmologist” has relation to practice of medicine and surgery in treatment of diseases of eye, while practice of “optometry” relates to measurement of powers of vision and adaptation of lenses for aid thereof. See Oculist.

Oplate. Any substance having an addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability similar to morphine or being capable of conversion into a drug having addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining liability.

OPIC. Overseas Private Investment Corporation.

Opinio est duplex, scilicet, opinio vulgaris, orta inter graves et discretos, et quae vultum veritatis habet; et opinio tantum orta est et vel vulgares homines, absque specie veritatis / opin(i)yow est (d)yůwpχeks silast opin(i)yow valγeras, órdα intar grēvyiyz et daskrjydow, et kwiy vàlam væhratęydas hēyba; ęd spin(i)yow tæntam, órdα intar liyiyz et valγeriy hömānɨiyz, ębskiwi splysšíy(l)y væhratęydas/. Opinion is of two kinds, namely, common opinion, which springs up among grave and discreet men, and which has the appearance of truth, and opinion which springs up only among light and foolish men, without the semblance of truth.

Opinion. A document prepared by an attorney for his client, embodying his understanding of the law as applicable to a state of facts submitted to him for that purpose; e.g. an opinion of an attorney as to the marketability of a land title as determined from a review of the abstract of title and other public records.

The statement by a judge or court of the decision reached in regard to a cause tried or argued before them, expounding the law as applied to the case, and detailing the reasons upon which the judgment is based.

An expression of the reasons why a certain decision (the judgment) was reached in a case. A majority opinion is usually written by one judge and represents the principles of law which a majority of his colleagues on the court deem operative in a given decision; it has more precedential value than any of the following. A separate opinion may be written by one or more judges in which he or they concur in or dissent from the majority opinion. A concurring opinion agrees with the result reached by the majority, but disagrees with the precise reasoning leading to that result. A dissenting or minority opinion disagrees with the result reached by the majority and thus disagrees with the reasoning and/or the principles of law used by the majority in deciding the case. A plurality opinion is agreed to by less than a majority as to the reasoning of the decision, but is agreed to by a majority as to the result. A per curiam opinion is an opinion “by the court” which expresses its decision in the case but whose author is not identified. A memorandum opinion is a holding of the whole court in which the opinion is very concise.

See also Advisory opinion; Letter ruling; Majority opinion; Plurality; Slip opinion.

Opinion evidence or testimony. Evidence of what the witness thinks, believes, or infers in regard to facts in dispute, as distinguished from his personal knowledge of the facts themselves. The rules of evidence ordinarily do not permit witnesses to testify as to opinions or conclusions. An exception to this rule exists as to “expert witnesses”. Witnesses who, by education and experience, have become expert in some art, science, profession, or calling, may state their opinions as to relevant and material matter, in which they profess to be expert, and may also state their reasons for the opinion.

By expert witness. If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trial of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise. Fed. Evid. Rule 702. See also Expert witness.

By lay witness. If the witness is not testifying as an expert, his testimony in the form of opinions or inferences is limited to those opinions or inferences which are (a) rationally based on the perception of the witness and (b) helpful to a clear understanding of his testimony or the determination of a fact in issue. Fed.Evid. Rule 701.

Opinio que favet testamento esto tenenda / opin(i)yow kwiy fęv̱at tēstamęntow ęst tanęd/. The opinion which favors a will is to be followed.

Opium /ówp Łyam/. Drug consisting of inspissated juice of opium poppy.

It is necessary that given persons, lands, and estates should be comprehended in a declaration of uses.

Oportet quod certa res deducatur in donationem / spöṟδat kw̱ọ̀rd sàrḏy ríy̱z diyḏ(y)aḵéḵy̱ḏar in däṉęshőy̱ówṉ. It is necessary that a certain thing be brought into the gift, or made the subject of the conveyance.
OPORTET QUOD CERTA

Oportet quod certa res deducatur in judicium /spórdat kwôd sârda ríy dìdy(y)aékéydar in jadish(y)am/. A thing certain must be brought to judgment.

Oportet quod certa sit res que venditur /spórdat kwôd sârda sit ríy kwí kwèndéydr/. It is necessary that there should be a certain thing which is sold. To make a valid sale, there must be certainty as to the thing which is sold.

Oppignerare /spígnéraríy/. Lat. In the civil law, to pledge.

Opposer /spówprzar/. An officer formerly belonging to the green-wax in the exchequer.

Opposite. An old word for “opponent.”

Opposite party. Within statutes providing that opposite party shall be incompetent to testify as to matters equally within knowledge of deceased is one whose personal and financial interests, either immediate or remote, are antagonistic to like interests of protected party.

Opposition. Act of opposing or resisting; antagonism; state of being opposite or opposed; antithesis. Also, a position confronting another or placing in contrast; that which is or furnishes an obstacle to some result. Political party opposed to ministry or administration; or might be construed to include peaceful and orderly opposition to government.

Oppression. The misdemeanour committed by a public officer, who under color of his office, wrongfully inflicts upon any person any bodily harm, imprisonment, or other injury. An act of cruelty, severity, unlawful exaction, or excessive use of authority. An act of subjecting to cruel and unjust hardship; an act of domination. See Coercion; Cruelty; Threat.

Oppressor. A public officer who unlawfully uses his authority by way of oppression (q.v.).

Opprobrium /sprówbríyam/. In the civil law, ignominy; infamy; shame.

Optimacy /óptamsísly/. Nobility; men of the highest rank.

Optima est leges interpres consuetudo /óptams èst líyjás antárpryz kónswat(y)wudow/. Custom is the best interpreter of the law.

Optima est lex que minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis; optimus judex qui minimum sibi /óptama èst lèks kwây mínamam râiqkwad abîriftiôw jùwdess; óptamas jùwdeks kwây mínamam sìbay/. That law is the best which leaves least to the discretion of the judge; that judge is the best who leaves least to his own. That system of law is best which confines as little as possible to the discretion of the judge; that judge the best who relies as little as possible on his own opinion.

Optimam esse legem, que minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis; id quod certudo ejus præstat /óptamam ésiy líyjam kwây mínamam râiqkwad abîriftiôw jùwdess; id kwôd sârda(y)wudow líyjás prèstêt/. That law is the best which leaves the least discretion to the judge; and this is an advantage which results from its certainty.

Optima statut interpretatrix est (omnia partículis ejusdem inspectis) Ipsum statutum /óptams statyôw- day intarprètxrales èst (ómmabs partûkylas lýyjám inspèkta) ipsam statyôwdam/. The best interpreter of a statute is (all its parts being considered) the statute itself.

Optimus interpres rerum usus /óptams antárpryz rírum yûwssas/. Use or usage is the best interpreter of things.

Optimus interpretandi modus est sic leges interpretori ut leges legibus concordant /óptams intarprètxdav mówdas èst sîk líyjíyj intarprètxray àt líyjíyj líyjábès kàgírdant/. The best mode of interpretation is so to interpret laws that they may accord with each other.

Optimus judex, qui minimum sibi /óptamas jùwdeks, kwây mínamam sìbay/. He is the best judge who relies as little as possible on his own discretion.

Optimus legum interpres consuetudo /óptamas líyjám antárpryz kónswat(y)wudow/. Custom is the best interpreter of the laws.

Option. A right, which acts as a continuing offer, given for consideration, to purchase or lease property at an agreed upon price and terms, within a specified time. An option is an agreement which gives the optionee the power to accept an offer for a limited time. Kelman v. Bohi, 27 Ariz.App. 24, 550 P.2d 671, 675.

An option to purchase or to sell is not a contract to purchase or sell, as optionee has the right to accept or to reject the offer, in accordance with its terms, and is not bound. Catmul v. Johnson, Utah, 541 P.2d 793, 795.

Right of election to exercise a privilege.

A privilege existing in one person, for which he has paid money, which gives him the right to buy certain commodities or certain specified securities from another person, if he chooses, at any time within an agreed period, at a fixed price, or to sell such commodities or securities to such other person at an agreed price and time. If the option gives the choice of buying or not buying, it is denominated a “call.” If it gives the choice of selling or not, it is called a “put.” If it is a combination of both these, and gives the privilege of either buying or selling or not, it is called a “straddle” or a “spread eagle.”

The sale or exchange of an option to buy or sell property results in capital gain or loss if the property is a capital asset.

See also Call; Cash value option; Local option; Put.

Commodity futures option. The right—but not the obligation—to buy or sell a futures contract at a specified price within a fixed period, say, three, six, nine months or longer. The option buyer pays a premium to the dealer for this right, plus the usual commission and nothing else. The option buyer does not have to be concerned about margin calls. All he can lose is the premium paid and commission.

Commodity option. The commodity option is, in theory, no different from the more familiar types of option contracts relating to real estate, securities or personal services. Essentially, an option is a right that is purchased by the option holder entitling him either to buy from or to sell to the grantor of the option the subject of the option at a stated price and within a stated time. In the case of a commodity option, the right pertains to an underlying physical commodity (such as a specific quantity of gold, a train carload of coffee, etc.) or to a commodity futures contract relating to that commodity. The price paid for the option right is referred to as the "premium," and the price at which the option purchaser is entitled to buy or sell the underlying commodity for futures contract is referred to as the "striking price." "Exercise" is the decision of an option holder to require performance by the grantor of his obligation with respect to the underlying commodity or futures contract. The period during which an option may be exercised is specified in the contract and may range from one day to as long as 18 months. The "exercise date" or "expiration date" is the final day on which the option holder may exercise the option.

Naked options. Options sold by investors granting others the right to buy stock from them even though they own no stock to back up those commitments.

Stock option. The right to buy stock in the future at a price fixed in advance. See also Stock.

Non-qualified stock option. Stock option which does not meet the qualifications of a restricted stock option. See Restricted stock option, below.

Restricted stock option. The right to buy stock in the future at a fixed price established in advance but restricted as to the percentage of market price, time within which it may be exercised, the amount of stock owned by the optionee, non-transferability and minimum holding time. I.R.C. § 424.

Optional writ. In old English practice, that species of original writ, otherwise called a "præcipe," which was framed in the alternative called the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason wherefore he had not done it.

Optionee. One who receives an option.

Option to purchase. A bilateral contract in which one party is given the right to buy the property within a period of time for a consideration paid to the seller. A right acquired by contract to accept or reject a present offer within a limited or reasonable time and is simply a contract by which the owner of property agrees with another person that he shall have the right to buy his property at a fixed price within a certain time. Crockett v. Lowther, Wyo., 549 P.2d 303, 308. See also Option.

Opus /ˈɒwpəs/. Lat. Work; labor; the product of work or labor.

Opus locatum /ˈɒwpəs lowkɛˈdæm/. The product of work let for use to another; or the hiring out of work or labor to be done upon a thing.

Opus maniflicum /ˈɒwpəs mænˈfɪʃ(ɪ)əm/. In old English law, labor done by the hands; manual labor; such as making a hedge, digging a ditch.

Opus novum /ˈɒwpəs naʊvəm/. In the civil law, a new work. By this term was meant something newly built upon land, or taken from a work already erected. He was said opus novum facere (to make a new work) who, either by building or by taking anything away, changed the former appearance of a work.

Or, n. A term used in heraldry, and signifying gold; called "sol" by some heralds when it occurs in the arms of princes, and "topaz" or "carbuncle" when borne by peers. Engravers represent it by an indefinite number of small points.

Or, conj. A disjunctive particle used to express an alternative or to give a choice of one among two or more things. It is also used to clarify what has already been said, and in such cases, means "in other words," "to-wit," or "that is to say." The word "or" is to be used as a function word to indicate an alternative between different or unlike things. City of Toledo v. Lucas County Budget Commission, 33 Ohio St.2d 62, 294 N.E.2d 661, 663. In some usages, the word "or" creates a multiple rather than an alternative obligation; where necessary in interpreting an instrument, "or" may be construed to mean "and." Atchison v. City of Englewood, Colo., 568 P.2d 13, 18.

Oraeculum /ɔrəˈkɪləm/. In the civil law, the name of a kind of response or sentence given by the Roman emperors.

Oral. Uttered by the mouth or in words; spoken, not written.

Oral argument. Presentation of reasons for affirmation, reversal, modification, etc. by appellee and appellant before appellate court; generally limited in time by court rule; e.g. Fed.R.App.P. 34.

Oral confession. Statement given orally by defendant in which he admits the commission of the crime. Its admissibility in evidence is dependent upon its voluntariness, the condition of the defendant at the time of the confession, the length of time during which the defendant was held by the police before being brought before a magistrate and other factors. Federal courts generally hold that the burden of establishing the constitutional admissibility of a confession rests upon the prosecution. Pea v. United States, 130 U.S.App.D.C. 66, 397 F.2d 627. See also Confession; Miranda Rule.

Oral contract. One which is partly in writing and partly depends on spoken words, or none of which is in writing; one which, so far as it has been reduced to writing, is incomplete or expresses only a part of what is intended, but is completed by spoken words; or one which, originally written, has afterwards been changed orally.

Oral evidence. Evidence given by word of mouth; the oral testimony of a witness. See Parol evidence.

Oral pleading. Pleading by word of mouth, in the actual presence of the court. This was the ancient mode of pleading in England, and continued to the reign of Edward III.

Oral trust. The transfer of property in trust informally through an oral declaration in contrast to a formal trust which is in writing. Real estate trusts may not be created orally.

Oral will. See Nuncupative will.

Orando pro rege et regno /ɔrəˈnɔdəʊ prɔː rɪˈdʒiː ɛt rɛɡnɔ/. An ancient writ which issued, while there was no standing collect for a sitting parliament, to pray for the peace and good government of the realm.
Orator. The plaintiff in a cause or matter in chancery, when addressing or petitioning the court, used to style himself "orator," and, when a woman, "oratrix." But these terms have long gone into disuse, and the customary phrases now are "plaintiff" or "petitioner."

In Roman law, the term denoted an advocate.

Oratrix /ɔrəˈtrɛkə/ A female petitioner; a female plaintiff in a bill of chancery was formerly so called. This term is obsolete.

Oration /ɔrəˈbeɪʃən/ Deprivation of one’s parents or children, or privation in general.

Orcinus libertas /ɔrˈsənəs ləˈbɜrdəs/ Lat. In Roman law, a freedman who obtained his liberty by the direct operation of the will or testament of his deceased master was so called, being the freedman of the deceased (orcinus), not of the hares.

Ordain. To institute or establish; to make an ordinance; to enact a constitution or law. To confer on a person the holy orders of priest or deacon.

Ordeal. The most ancient species of trial, in Saxon and old English law, being peculiarly distinguished by the appellation of "judicium Dei," or "judgment of God," it being supposed that supernatural intervention would rescue an innocent person from the danger of physical harm to which he was exposed in this species of trial. The ordeal was of two sorts,—either fire ordeal or water ordeal; the former being confined to persons of higher rank, the latter to the common people.

Fire ordeal. The ordeal by fire or red-hot iron, which was performed either by taking up in the hand a piece of red-hot iron, of one, two, or three pounds weight, or by walking barefoot and blindfolded over nine red-hot plowshares, laid lengthwise at unequal distances.

Water ordeal. In Saxon and old English law, the ordeal or trial by water. The hot-water ordeal was performed by plunging the bare arm up to the elbow in boiling water, and escaping unhurt thereby. The cold-water ordeal was performed by casting the person suspected into a river or pond of cold water, when, if he floated therein, without any action of swimming it was deemed an evidence of his guilt; but, if he sunk, he was acquitted. 4 Bl.Comm. 343.

Ordeffe, or ordele /ɔrdɛlf/ A liberty whereby a man claims the ore found in his own land; also, the ore lying under land.

Ordeiss /ɔrdɛlz/ In old English law, the right of administering oaths and adjudging trials by ordeal within a precinct or liberty.

Order. A mandate; precept; command or direction authoritatively given; rule or regulation. Brady v. Interstate Commerce Commission, D.C.W.Va., 43 F.2d 847, 850. Direction of a court or judge made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment. An application for an order is a motion.

A designation of the person to whom a bill of exchange or negotiable promissory note is to be paid. An "order" is a direction to pay and must be more than an authorization or request. It must identify the person to pay with reasonable certainty. It may be addressed to one or more such persons jointly or in the alternative but not in succession. U.C.C. § 3–102(b).

Term is also used to designate a rank, class, or division of men; as the order of nobles, order of knights, order of priests, etc.

See also Appealable order; Decree; Decision; Executive order; Intermediate order; Judgment; Limit order; Payable to order; Percentage order; Restraining order.

Agreed order. See Appeal.

Day order. Order from a customer to a broker to buy or sell a security on the particular day and such order is automatically cancelled at the end of that day.

Decretal order. In chancery practice, an order made by the court of chancery, in the nature of a decree, upon a motion or petition. An order in a chancery suit made on motion or otherwise not at the regular hearing of a cause, and yet not of an interlocutory nature, but finally disposing of the cause, so far as a decree could then have disposed of it.

Discretionary order. An order from a customer to a broker to sell a security at a price deemed acceptable by the broker.

Final order. One which either terminates the action itself, or finally decides some matter litigated by the parties, or operates to divest some right; or one which completely disposes of the subject-matter and the rights of the parties. See also Final decision rule.

General orders. Orders or rules of court, promulgated for the guidance of practitioners and the regulation of procedure in general, or in some general branch of its jurisdiction; as opposed to a rule or an order made in an individual case. General orders have generally been replaced by rules of court.

Interlocutory order. An order which decides not the cause, but only settles some intervening matter relating to it or affords some temporary relief (e.g. temporary restraining order).

Limit order. An order from a customer to a broker in which the customer places a lower limit on the price at which the security may be sold and a ceiling on the price at which the security may be bought.

Market order. An order from a customer to a broker to buy or to sell a security at the market price then prevailing and hence the order must be executed promptly.

Money order. See Money.

Open order. An order from a customer to a broker to buy or to sell a security and the order remains in force until it is either executed or cancelled by the customer.

Percentage order. See that title.

Restraining order. An order which may issue upon the filing of an application for an injunction forbidding the defendant to do the threatened act until a hearing on the application can be had. Though the term is sometimes used as a synonym of "injunction," a restraining order is properly distinguishable from an injunction, in that the former is intended only as a restraint upon the defendant until the pro-privy of granting an injunction, temporary or perpetual, can be determined, and it does no more than restrain the proceedings until such determination.

Speaking order. An order which contains matter which is explanatory or illustrative of the mere direction which is given by it is sometimes thus called.

Stop order. Order to stockbroker to wait until the market price of the particular security reaches a specified figure, and then to "stop" the transaction by either selling or buying, as the case may be, as well as possible.

Stop payment order. Order from the drawer of a check to the drawee bank to stop payment on a check which has been drawn and given to the payee or lost.

Order bill of lading. A negotiable bill of lading directing that the goods be delivered to the person named or his order upon indorsement.

Order nisi. A provisional or conditional order, allowing a certain time within which to do some required act, on failure of which the order will be made absolute.

Order of cofi. See Coff.

Order of filiation. An order made by a court or judge having jurisdiction, fixing the paternity of a bastard child upon a given man, and requiring him to provide for its support.

Orders. The directions as to the course and purpose of a voyage given by the owner of the vessel to the captain or master. For other meanings, see Order.

Order to show cause. See Show cause order.

Ordinance. A rule established by authority; a permanent rule of action; a law or statute. In its most common meaning, the term is used to designate the enactments of the legislative body of a municipal corporation. An ordinance is the equivalent of a municipal statute, passed by the city council, or equivalent body, and governing matters not already covered by federal or state law. Ordinances commonly govern zoning, building, safety, etc. matters of municipality.

The name has also been given to certain enactments, more general in their character than ordinary statutes, and serving as organic laws, yet not exactly to be called "constitutions." Such was the "Ordinance for the government of the North-West Territory," enacted by Congress in 1787.

See also Municipal ordinance.

Ordinance of 1647. A law passed by the Colony of Massachusetts, still in force, in a modified form, whereby the state owns the great ponds within its confines, which are held in trust for public uses. Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 147 Mass. 548, 18 N.E. 465.

Ordinance of 1787. A statute for the government of the Northwest Territory. Religious and legal freedom, encouragement of education, just treatment of the Indians, the future division into States, and the exclusion of slavery were ordained.

Ordinandi lex /ordanəndi lɪks/. Lat. The law of procedure, as distinguished from the substantial part of the law.

Ordinarium ista dictur quia habet ordinariam jurisdictionem, in jure proprio, et non propter deputationem /ɔrdnərɪriəs ˈɑːdər dɪstər ˈhæbət ɔrdnərɪriəm jʊərɪsdikʃiərɪəm ɪn dʒɜːri prəˈprɒpər et nɒn prəˈprɒptə dɪˈpɛtətʃiərɪəm/. The ordinary is so called because he has an ordinary jurisdiction in his own right, and not a deputed one.

Ordinary, n. At common law, one who had exempt and immediate jurisdiction in causes ecclesiastical. Also a bishop; and an archbishop is the ordinary of the whole province, to visit and receive appeals from inferior jurisdictions. Also a commissary or official of a bishop or other ecclesiastical judge having judicial power; an archdeacon; officer of the royal household.

In American law, a judicial officer, in several of the states, clothed by statute with powers in regard to wills, probate, administration, guardianship, etc. See also Court of Ordinary.

Former term for a public house where food and lodging were furnished to the traveler and his beast, at fixed rates, open to whoever may apply for accommodation, and where intoxicating liquor was sold at retail.

In the civil law, a judge who has authority to take cognizance of causes in his own right, and not by deputation.

Ordinary, adj. Regular; usual; normal; common; often recurring; according to established order; settled; customary; reasonable; not characterized by peculiar or unusual circumstances; belonging to, exercised by, or characteristic of, the normal or average individual.

As to ordinary Care; Diligence; Negligence, see those titles.

Ordinary calling. Those things which are repeated daily or weekly in the course of business.

Ordinary care. That degree of care which ordinarily prudent and competent person engaged in same line of business or endeavor should exercise under similar circumstances, and in law means same as "due care" and "reasonable care." Warner v. Kiowa County Hospital Authority, Okl.App., 551 P.2d 1179, 1188. That care which reasonably prudent persons exercise in the management of their own affairs, in order to avoid injury to themselves or their property, or the persons or property of others. Ordinary care is not an absolute term, but a relative one. That is to say, in deciding whether ordinary care was exercised in a given case, the conduct in question must be viewed in the light of all the surrounding circumstances, as shown by the evidence in the case. See also Care.

Ordinary course of business. The transaction of business according to the usages and customs of the commercial world generally or of the particular community or (in some cases) of the particular individual whose acts are under consideration. Term used in connection with sales made by a merchant as part of his regular business and in contrast with a sale in bulk which is regulated by statute, e.g. U.C.C. § 6-102(1). In general, any matter which transpires as a matter of daily custom in business.
Ordinary dangers incident to employment. Those commonly and usually pertaining to and incident to it, which a reasonably prudent person might anticipate, and do not include danger by acts of negligence, unless habitual and known to the servant.

Ordinary expenses. Common and accepted in the general industry or type of activity in which the taxpayer is engaged. It comprises one of the tests for the deductibility of expenses incurred or paid in connection with a trade or business; for the production or collection of income; for the management, conservation, or maintenance of property held for the production of income; or in connection with the determination, collection, or refund of any tax. I.R.C. §§ 162(a) and 212. See also Necessary.

Ordinary income. For income tax purposes, reportable income not qualifying as capital gains. Term used to describe income taxed at ordinary rates in contrast to income taxed at the more advantageous rates of capital gains. Term embraces income from regular sources such as wages, commissions, interest, dividends and the like.

Ordinary loss. In taxation, a loss which does not qualify as a capital loss.

Ordinary negligence. The failure to use that degree of care which the ordinary or reasonably prudent person would have used under the circumstances and for which the negligent person is liable. Term is used in contradistinction to gross negligence which is more serious and a more flagrant lack of care. See also Negligence, and Ordinary care, supra.

Ordinary persons. Men of ordinary care and diligence in relation to any particular thing.

Ordinary proceeding. Such a proceeding as was known to the common law and was formerly conducted in accordance with the proceedings of the common-law courts, and as is generally known under the current Rules of Civil Procedure and Codes to be such a proceeding as is started by the issuance of a summons, and results in a judgment enforceable by execution.

Ordinary repairs. Such as are necessary to make good the usual wear and tear or natural and unavoidable decay and keep the property in good condition. Compare Improvements.

Ordinary risks. Those incident to the business, and do not imply the result of the employer's negligence. The expression "extraordinary risks" is generally used to describe risks arising from the negligence of the employer, and they are generally held not to be assumed unless known or obvious.

Ordinary seaman. A sailor who is capable of performing the ordinary or routine duties of a seaman, but who is not yet so proficient in the knowledge and practice of all the various duties of a sailor at sea as to be rated as an "able" seaman.

Ordinary services of administrators include all the services incident to the closing and distribution of an estate, and not merely the receiving and disbursing of the funds and to justify an allowance of further compensation the administrator must have rendered services of an extraordinary character necessary to the protection of the estate, and, if he employs another to perform services which he is required to perform under the law, he cannot charge such services as an expense of administration.

Ordinary skill in an art. That degree of skill which men engaged in that particular art usually employ; not that which belongs to a few men only, of extraordinary endowments and capacities.

Ordinary written law. Law made, within constitutional restrictions, by the Legislature; i.e. statutes.

Ordination. Ceremony by which a bishop confers on a person the privileges and powers necessary for the execution of sacerdotal functions in the church.

Ordinatum est /òrdùnéydam èst/. In old practice, it is ordered. The initial words of rules of court when entered in Latin.

A package of such form and size as it is used by producers or shippers for the purpose of securing both convenience in handling and security in transportation of merchandise between dealers in the ordinary course of actual commerce. Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U.S. 343, 21 S.Ct. 132, 45 L.Ed. 224. See also Original package doctrine.

Original plat. The first plat of a town from the subsequent additions, and “original town” is employed in the same way.

Original process. See Process.

Original promise. An original promise, without the statute of frauds, is one in which the direct and leading object of the promisor is to further or promote some purpose or interest of his own, although the incidental effect may be the payment of the debt of another.

Original writ. See Writ.

Single original. An original instrument which is executed singly, and not in duplicate.

Original document rule. The best evidence of the contents of a document is the original of that document. The party bearing the burden of proving the contents of a document is required to introduce the original unless he is excused from its production because of its nonavailability and in this instance, secondary evidence is admissible. There are no degrees of secondary evidence. See also Best evidence.

Original grade doctrine. The “original-grade doctrine” relieves public body from any liability for property damaged in the reduction of the surface of the street to the grade line for the first time established. Dicken v. City of Pullman, 11 Wash.App. 813, 525 P.2d 839–841.

Originality /ɔrɪˈdʒɪnlɪti/ /ˈɔrɪɡɪnlɪti/. In old English law, transcripts sent to the remembrancer’s office in the exchequer out of the chancery, distinguished from records, which contain the judgments and pleadings in actions tried before the barons. The treasurer–remembrancer’s office was abolished in 1833.

Original issue. The first issue of stocks or bonds of a particular kind or series.
Original package doctrine. In Brown v. Maryland, 25 U.S. (12 Wheat.) 419, 6 L.Ed. 678, a landmark case under the commerce clause of the U.S.Const., the Supreme Court held that a state was free to levy a tax or license fee on imports only after the original package had been broken because at this juncture the goods no longer were in the flow of interstate commerce and therefore no longer subject to federal regulation.

Origine propria neminem posse voluntate sua eximil manifestum est /arijaniy prówipryá némonam pósíy vólantédyi dy wúwa mànséfàstam ēst/. It is evident that no one is able of his own pleasure, to do away with his proper origin.

Origo rel inspici debet /háragów riayay înspasay débat/. The origin of a thing ought to be regarded.

Ornest. In old English law, the trial by battle, which does not seem to have been usual in England before the time of the Conqueror, though originating in the kingdoms of the north, where it was practiced under the name of "holmgang," from the custom of fighting duels on a small island or holm.

ORP. Ordinary, reasonable and prudent (man). See "negligence". The standard of care on which negligence cases are based.

Ostendit vobis /óståndá vóvbás/. Lat. In old pleading, "shows to you." Formal words with which a demandant began his count.

Ostensible agency. An implied or presumptive agency, which exists where one, either intentionally or from want of ordinary care, induces another to believe that a third person is his agent, though he never in fact employed him. It is, strictly speaking, no agency at all, but is in reality based entirely upon estoppel.

Ostensible authority. Such authority as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe that the agent possesses. National Cash Register Co. v. Wichita Frozen Food Lockers, Tex.Civ.App., 172 S.W.2d 781, 787.

Ostensible ownership. Apparent ownership derived from conduct or words. Theory of "ostensible ownership" estops an owner of property who clothes another with apparent title from later asserting his title against an innocent third party who has been induced to deal with apparent owner. Domarad v. Fisher & Burke, Inc., 270 Cal.App.2d 543, 76 Cal.Rptr. 529, 535.

Ostensible partner. One whose name appears to the world as such, though he has no interest in the firm.

Ostensio /óstånsíó/. A tax anciently paid by merchants, etc., for leave to show or expose their goods for sale in markets.

Osteopath /óståiópas/. One who practices osteopathy.

Osteopathy /óståiópósi/. A system of complete medical practice based on the maintenance of proper relationships among the various parts of the body. Osteopathic physicians, licensed in all 50 states, employ manipulative therapy, drugs, surgery, x-ray, and all other accepted therapeutic methods in the treatment of disease and injury.

Osteopathic medicine focuses special attention on the biological mechanisms by which the musculoskeletal system, through the nervous and circulatory systems, interacts with all body organs and systems in both health and disease. D.O.S., or Doctors of Osteopathy, diagnose and treat disorders of the musculoskeletal system through palpation and appropriately applied manipulative procedures. See Holt v. College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons, 61 Cal.2d 750, 40 Cal.Rptr. 244, 384 P.2d 922; Falcone v. Middlesex County Medical Society, 34 N.J. 582, 170 A.2d 791.

Outcome test. In a diversity of citizenship action in the federal court, the result should be the same as if the action had been commenced in the state court. Guaranty Trust Co. of N. Y. v. York, 326 U.S. 99, 109, 65 S.Ct. 1464, 1470, 89 L.Ed. 2079.

Outer bar. In the English courts, barristers at law have been divided into two classes, viz., king's counsel, who are admitted within the bar of the courts, in seats specially reserved for themselves, and junior counsel, who sit without the bar; and the latter are thence frequently termed barristers of the "outer bar," or "utter bar," in contradistinction to the former class.

Outer continental shelf. All lands lying submerged seaward and not including lands beneath navigable waters. The subsoil and sea bed of such lands are subject to the jurisdiction and control of the United States. 43 U.S.C.A. § 1331.

Outer door. In connection with the rule, statutory or otherwise, forbidding an officer to break open the outer door to serve civil process, this term designates the door of each separate apartment, where there are different apartments having a common outer door.

Outfangerthef /ˈɔutfæŋɡərθəf/. A liberty or privilege in the ancient common law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor, and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment in his own court. See Infangenthef.

Outgo. Expenditures.

Outhouse. A building subservient to, yet distinct from, the principal dwelling, located either within or without the curtilage. A smaller or subordinate building connected with a dwelling, usually detached from it and standing at a little distance from it, not intended for persons to live in, but to serve some purpose of convenience or necessity: as a barn, outside privy, a dairy, a toolhouse, and the like. Under statutes, such a building may be subservient to and adjoin a business building as well as a dwelling house. See also Outbuilding.

Outland. The Saxon thanes divided their hereditary lands into inland, such as lay nearest their dwelling, which they kept to their own use, and outland, which lay beyond the demesnes, and was granted out to tenants, at the will of the lord, like copyhold estates. This outland they subdivided into two parts. One part they disposed among those who attended their persons, called "theodans," or lesser thanes; the other part they allotted to their husbandsmen, or churls.

Outlaw. In English law, one who is put out of the protection or aid of the law. 3 Bl.Comm. 283, 284. Popularly, a person violating the law; a fugitive.

Outlawry. In old English law, a process by which a defendant or person in contempt on a civil or criminal process was declared an outlaw. If for treason or felony, it amounted to conviction and attainer.

In the United States, the process of outlawry seems to be unknown, at least in civil cases. Hall v. Lanning, 91 U.S. 160, 23 L.Ed. 271.

Outline. The line which marks the outer limits of an object or figure; an exterior line or edge; contour.

Outlot. In early American land law (particularly in Missouri), a lot or parcel of land lying outside the corporate limits of a town or village but subject to its municipal jurisdiction or control. Term now generally refers to an area of land on a plat which is to be used for a purpose other than a building site.

Out of benefit. A term descriptive of insurance policyholders who have been suspended for nonpayment of premiums.

Out-of-court settlement. The phrase is used with reference to agreements and transactions in regard to a pending suit which are arranged or take place between parties or their counsel privately and without being referred to the judge or court for authorization or approval. Thus, a case which is compromised, settled, and withdrawn by private agreement of the parties, after its institution, is said to be settled "out of court."

Out-of-pocket loss. The difference between the value of what the purchaser parted with (i.e., the purchase price paid by him) and the value of what he has received (i.e., the actual market value of the goods). Otte v. Ron Tonkin Chevrolet Co., 264 Or. 265, 503 P.2d 716, 720.

Out-of-pocket rule. Determination for damages for fraudulent misrepresentations which permits recovery of difference between price paid and actual value of property acquired. Also called "out-of-pocket loss rule."

Out of term. At a time when no term of the court is being held; in the vacation or interval which elapses between terms of the court.
Out of the state. In reference to rights, liabilities, or jurisdictions arising out of the common law, this phrase is equivalent to "beyond sea" (q.v.). In other connections, it means physically beyond the territorial limits of the particular state in question, or constructively so, as in the case of a foreign corporation. But a foreign corporation maintaining an agent within the state is not deemed to be "out of the state," within various statutes dealing with jurisdiction over foreign corporations "doing business" within state.

Out of time. A mercantile phrase applied to a ship or vessel that has been so long at sea as to justify the belief of her total loss. In another sense, a vessel is said to be out of time when, computed from her known day of sailing, the time that has elapsed exceeds the average duration of similar voyages at the same season of the year. The phrase is identical with "missing ship."

Outfitters /ɔːtwɔːtərəz/. Stealers of cattle. A spurious form for "outfitters".

Output contract. See Contract; Entire output contract.

Outrage. A grave injury; injurious violence. In general, any species of serious wrong offered to the person, feelings, or rights of another. Synonyms are affront, insult, and abuse. State ex rel. and to Use of Done lon v. Deuser, 345 Mo. 628, 134 S.W.2d 132, 133.

Outriders. In old English law, bailiffs-errant employed by sheriffs or their deputies to ride to the extremities of their counties or hundreds to summon men to the county or hundred court.

Outright. Free from reserve or restraint; direct; positive; down-right; altogether; entirely; openly.

Outroper /ɔːtˈrɒpər/. A person to whom the business of selling by auction was confined by statute.

Outs. In banking parlance, are conditions or warranties, failure to comply with which, by the prospect given the banker a right to escape from a contract and to terminate negotiations. Cray, McFawn & Co. v. Hegarty, Conroy & Co., D.C.N.Y., 27 F.Supp. 93, 100.

Outside. To the exterior of; without; outward from.

Outside director. A member of a corporate board of directors who is not a company officer and does not participate in the corporation's day-to-day management.

Outside salesmen. An outside salesman is one who solicits business away from the employer's place of business on a full-time basis. If an employee qualifies as an outside salesman, all employment related expenses are deductible.

Outstanding. Remaining undischarged; unpaid; uncollected; as an outstanding debt. Constituting an effective obligation. When said of stock, the shares issued less treasury stock. When said of checks, it means a check issued that did not clear the drawer's bank prior to the bank statement date.

Existing as an adverse claim or pretension; not united with, or merged in, the title or claim of the party; as an outstanding title.

Outstanding and open account. In legal and commercial transactions it is an unsettled debt arising from items of work and labor, goods sold and delivered, and other open transactions, not reduced to writing, and subject to future settlement and adjustment and usually disclosed by account books of the owner of the demand and does not include express contracts or obligations which have been reduced to writing such as bonds, bills of exchange, or notes. Lee v. De Forest, 22 Cal.App.2d 351, 71 P.2d 285, 291; Checotah Hardware Co. v. House, 169 Okl. 112, 35 P.2d 966, 967.

Outstroke. To mine by outstroke is to take out mineral from adjoining property through the tunnels and shafts of the demised premises.

Ouverture des successions /uːvɑːtʁɛd ʃəsəˈsjeːn/ . In French law, the right of succession which arises to one upon the death, whether natural or civil, of another.

Ovell /ˈɒvɛl/. L. Fr. Equal.

Ovelty /ˈʌvɛlti/. In old English law, equality.

Over. Above; overhead; more than; in excess of.

Continued—sometimes written on one page or sheet to indicate a continuation of matter on a separate page or sheet.

In conveyancing, the word is used to denote a contingent limitation intended to take effect on the failure of a prior estate. Thus, in what is commonly called the "name and arms clause" in a will or settlement there is generally a proviso that if the devisee fails to comply with the condition the estate is to go to some one else. This is a limitation or gift over.

Overawe /ˈɔːvəwɔː/. To subjugate or restrain by awe, or profound reverence.

Overbreadth doctrine. Requirement that a statute be invalidated if it is fairly capable of being applied to punish people for constitutionally protected speech or conduct. A law is void on its face if it "does not aim specifically at evils within the allowable area of [government] control, but... sweeps within its ambit other activities that constitute an exercise of protected expressive or associational rights. Thomhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 97, 60 S.Ct. 296, 84 L.Ed. 460. A plausible challenge to a law asvoid for overbreadthcan be made only when (1) the protected activity is a significant part of the law's target, and (2) there exists no satisfactory way of severing the law's constitutional from its unconstitutional applications so as to excise the latter clearly in a single step from the law's reach.

Overcharge. With respect to public carriers or public utilities, a charge collected above a lawful tariff rate; a charge of more than is permitted by law. As regards interest rates, see Usury.

Overcome. As used in a statute providing that a presumption may be overcome by other evidence, this term is not synonymous with overbalance or outweigh, but requires merely that such evidence countervail the presumption, where the party relying on it has the burden of proof.

Overcited, or overcited. Proved guilty or convicted.

Overdraft. A check written on a checking account containing less funds than the amount of the check. Term may also refer to the condition which exists when vouchers or purchase orders are drawn in amounts in excess of budgeted or appropriated amount. See also Kiting.

Overdraw. To draw upon a person or a bank in an amount in excess of the funds remaining to the drawers.
er's credit with the drawee, or to an amount greater than what is due. See also Overdraft.

Overdue. Due and more than due; delayed or unpaid. Bixler v. California Co-op Producers, Cal.App., 156 P.2d 259, 260. A negotiable instrument or other evidence of debt is overdue when the day of its maturity is past and it remains unpaid.

A vessel is said to be overdue when she has not reached her destination at the time when she might ordinarily have been expected to arrive.

Overflowed lands. Those that are covered by nonnavigable waters (not including lands between high and low water mark of navigable streams or bodies of water, nor lands covered and uncovered by ordinary daily ebb and flow of normal tides of navigable waters).

Overhaul. To inquire into; to review; to disturb. To examine thoroughly, as machinery, with a view to repairs.

Overhead. All administrative or executive costs incident to the management, supervision, or conduct of the capital outlay, or business; distinguished from "operating charges," or those items that are inseparably connected with the productive end and make the service as the work progresses, and are the subject of knowledge from observation. Continuous expenses of a business; the expenses and obligations incurred in connection with operation; expenses necessarily incurred in organization, office expenses, engineering, inspection, supervision, and management during construction; and general expenditures in financial or industrial enterprise which cannot be attributed to any one department or product, excluding cost of materials, labor, and selling. Guillot v. State Highway Commission of Montana, 102 Mont. 149, 56 P.2d 1072, 1075.

Any cost not specifically or directly associated with the production of identifiable goods and services. Sometimes called "burden" or "indirect costs" and, in Britain, "oncosts." Frequently limited to manufacturing overhead.

Overhernissa /ôvvarhînissa/. In Saxon law, contumacy or contempt of court.

Over-insurance. See Double insurance.

Overissue. To issue in excessive quantity; to issue in excess of fixed legal limits. That "overissued stock," of a corporation is capital stock issued in excess of the amount limited and prescribed by the charter or certificate of incorporation. U.C.C. § 8-104(2). See also Oversubscription.

Overload. To cause to bear too heavy a burden; to load too heavily.

Overlying right. Right of owner of land to take water from ground underneath for use on his land within basin or watershed. Right is based on ownership of land and is appurtenant thereto. City of Pasadena v. City of Alhambra, 33 Cal.2d 908, 207 P.2d 17, 28.

Overplus. What is left beyond a certain amount; the residue; the surplus; the remainder of a thing.

Overtate. In its strictest signification, a rating by way of excess and not one which ought not to have been made at all.

Overreaching clause. In a resettlement, a clause which saves the powers of sale and leasing annexed to the estate for life created by the original settlement, when it is desired to give the tenant for life the same estate and powers under the resettlement. The clause is so called because it provides that the resettlement shall be overreached by the exercise of the old powers. If the resettlement were executed without a provision to this effect, the estate of the tenant for life and the annexed powers would be subject to any charges for portions, etc., created under the original settlement.

Override. An estate carved out of working interest under an oil or gas lease. Commissions paid to managers on sales made by subordinates. Provision in real estate brokers listing agreement giving him right to certain commission for a reasonable period of time after expiration of listing in event owner sells to purchaser with whom broker negotiated during term of listing.

Ovveriding royalty. As applied to an existing oil and gas lease is a given percentage of the gross production payable to some person other than the lessor or persons claiming under him. Royalty interest carved out of working interest created by oil and gas lease, and is interest in oil and gas produced at surface free of expense of production and its outstanding characteristic is that its duration is limited by duration of lease under which it is created. Cline v. Angle, 216 Kan. 328, 532 P.2d 1093, 1097.

Overrule. To supersede; annul; reverse; make void; reject by subsequent action or decision. A judicial decision is said to be overruled when a later decision, rendered by the same court or by a superior court in the same system, expresses a judgment upon the same question of law directly opposite to that which was before given, thereby depriving the earlier opinion of all authority as a precedent. The term is not properly applied to conflicting decisions on the same point by co-ordinate or independent tribunals. It also signifies that a majority of the judges of a court have decided against the opinion of the minority, in which case the minority judges are said to be overruled. See Reverse; Vacate.

To refuse to sustain, or recognize as sufficient, an objection made in the course of a trial, as to the introduction of particular evidence, etc.

Overs. In the meat packing business, the increase in the weight of meat resulting from salt put on it.

Oversamessa. In old English law, a forfeiture for contempt or neglect in not pursuing a malefactor.

Over sea. Beyond the sea; outside the limits of the state or country. See Beyond the seas.

Overser /ôvvarsî(y)r/ôvvarsîy(r). A superintendent or supervisor; a public officer whose duties involve general superintendence of routine affairs. Member of a University board. See also Regent.

Oversers of highways. The name given, in some of the states, to a board of officers of a city, township, or county, whose special function is the construction and repair of the public roads or highways.

Oversubscription. Condition which exists when there are more orders or subscriptions for corporate stock than can be issued. See also Overissue.

Ovet. Open; manifest; public; issuing in action, as distinguished from that which rests merely in intention or design.

Market overt. See Market.

Overt act. An open, manifest act from which criminality may be implied. An outward act done in pursuance and manifestation of an intent or design. An open act, which must be manifestly proved.
OVERT ACT

An overt act essential to establish an attempt to commit a crime is an act done to carry out the intention, and it must be such as would naturally effect that result unless prevented by some extraneous cause. It must be something done that directly moves toward the crime, and brings the accused nearer to its commission than mere acts of preparation or of planning, and will apparently result, in the usual and natural course of events, if not hindered by extraneous causes, in the commission of the crime itself.

In reference to the crime of treason, and the provision of the federal Constitution that a person shall not be convicted thereof unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same "overt act," the term means a step, motion, or action really taken in the execution of a treasonable purpose, as distinguished from mere words, and also from a treasonable sentiment, design, or purpose not issuing in action. It is an act in furtherance of the crime. One which manifests the intention of the traitor to commit treason.

An overt act which will justify the exercise of the right of self-defense is such as would manifest to the mind of a reasonable person a present intention to kill him or do him great bodily harm.

An overt act which completes crime of conspiracy to violate federal law is something apart from conspiracy and is an act to effect the object of the conspiracy, and need be neither a criminal act, nor crime that is object of conspiracy, but must accompany or follow agreement and must be done in furtherance of object of agreement. Marino v. United States, C.C.A.Cal., 91 F.2d 691, 694, 695.

Overtake. To come or catch up with in a course of motion. Ringwald v. Beene, 170 Tenn. 116, 92 S.W.2d 411, 413. To catch up with and pass.

Over-the-counter market. Purchases and sales of securities by brokers for themselves, between themselves, and for their customers rather than on an exchange. The over-the-counter market is the principal market for U.S. Government and municipal bonds.

Overtime. After regular working hours; beyond the regular fixed hours.

Overtime wage. Portion of wages paid employee for services rendered beyond regularly fixed working hours.

Overture. An opening; a proposal.

Overt word. An open, plain word, not to be misunderstood.

Owe. To be bound to do or omit something, especially to pay a debt. May also refer to a moral or social obligation.

Oweltty /ow·əl·tət//. Equality; an equalization charge. This word is used in law in several compound phrases, as follows:

Oweltty of exchange. A sum of money given, when two persons have exchanged lands, by the owner of the less valuable estate to the owner of the more valuable, to equalize the exchange.

Oweltty of partition. A sum of money paid by one of two coparceners or co-tenants to the other, when a partition has been effected between them, but, the land not being susceptible of division into exactly equal shares, such payment is required to make the parts, respectively assigned to them of equal value. The power to grant oweltty has been exercised by the courts of equity from time immemorial.

Oweltty of services. In the feudal law, the condition obtaining when there is lord, mesne, and tenant, and the tenant holds the mesne by the same service that the mesne holds over the lord above him.

Owing. Unpaid. A debt, for example, is owing while it is unpaid, and whether it be due or not.

Owling /ə·wəl·ing/. In English law, the offense of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom; so called from its being usually carried on in the night. 4 Bl.Comm. 154.

Own. To have a good legal title; to hold as property; to have a legal or rightful title to; to have; to possess.

Owner. The person in whom is vested the ownership, dominion, or title of property; proprietor. He who has dominion of a thing, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with as he pleases, even to spoil or destroy it, as far as the law permits, unless he be prevented by some agreement or covenant which restrains his right.

The term is, however, a nomen generalissimum, and its meaning is to be gathered from the connection in which it is used, and from the subject-matter to which it is applied. The primary meaning of the word as applied to land is one who owns the fee and who has the right to dispose of the property, but the term also includes one having a possessor right to land or the person occupying or cultivating it.

The term "owner" is used to indicate a person in whom one or more interests are vested for his own benefit. The person in whom the interests are vested has "title" to the interests whether he holds them for his own benefit or for the benefit of another. Thus the term "title," unlike "ownership," is a colorless word; to say without more that a person has title to certain property does not indicate whether he holds such property for his own benefit or as trustee. Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 2, Comment (d); Restatement of Property, § 10.

See also Ownership.

Beneficial owner. See Beneficial owner; also Equitable owner, below.

Equitable owner. One who is recognized in equity as the owner of property, because the real and beneficial use and title belong to him, although the bare legal title is vested in another, e.g., a trustee for his benefit. One who has a present title in land which will ripen into legal ownership upon the performance of conditions subsequent. There may therefore be two "owners" in respect of the same property, one the nominal or legal owner, the other the beneficial or equitable owner. See also Beneficial owner.

General and beneficial owner. The person whose interest is primarily one of possession and enjoyment in contemplation of an ultimate absolute ownership; not the person whose interest is primarily in the enforcement of a collateral pecuniary claim, and does not contemplate the use or enjoyment of the property as such. See also Beneficial owner.

General owner. He who has the primary or residuary title to it; as distinguished from a special owner, who has a special interest in the same thing, amounting to a qualified ownership, such, for example, as a bailee's lien. One who has both the right of property and of possession.

Joint owners. Two or more persons who jointly own and hold title to property, e.g., joint tenants, and also partners and tenants in common. In its most comprehensive sense, the term embraces all cases where the property in question is owned by two or more persons regardless of the special nature of their relationship or how it came into being. An estate by entirety is a “joint ownership” of a husband and wife as at common law notwithstanding legislative enactments touching joint tenancy. Cullum v. Rice, 236 Mo.App. 1113, 162 S.W.2d 342, 344. See also Joint estate; Tenancy.

Legal owner. One who is recognized and held responsible by the law as the owner of property. In a more particular sense, one in whom the legal title to real estate is vested, but who holds it in trust for the benefit of another, the latter being called the “equitable” owner.

Part owners. Joint owners; co-owners; those who have shares of ownership in the same thing. See Joint owners, supra.

Record owner. This term, particularly used in statutes requiring notice of tax delinquency or sale, means the owner of the record, not the owner described in the tax roll; the owner of the title at time of notice.

Reputed owner. One who has to all appearances the title to, and possession of, property; one who, from all appearances, or from supposition, is the owner of a thing. He who has the general credit or reputation of being the owner or proprietor of goods.

Riparian owner. See Riparian.

Sole and unconditional owner. An expression commonly used in fire insurance policies, in which the word “sole” means that no one else has any interest in the property as owner, and “unconditional” means that the quality of the estate is not limited or affected by any condition. To be “unconditional and sole,” the interest or ownership of the insured must be completely vested, not contingent or conditional, nor in common or jointly with others, but of such nature that the insured must alone sustain the entire loss if the property is destroyed; and this is so whether the title is legal or equitable. It is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of “sole and unconditional ownership” that the insured is the sole equitable owner and has the full equitable title. It is enough that the insured is equitably entitled to immediate and absolute legal ownership. The term contemplates beneficial and practical proprietorship and not necessarily technical title.

Special owner. One who has a special interest in an article of property, amounting to a qualified ownership of it, such, for example, as a bailee’s lien; as distinguished from the general owner, who has the primary or residuary title to the same thing. Some person holding property with the consent of, and as representative of, the actual owner.

Ownership. Collection of rights to use and enjoy property, including right to transmit it to others. Trustees of Phillips Exeter Academy v. Exeter, 92 N.H. 473, 33 A.2d 665, 673. The complete dominion, title, or proprietary right in a thing or claim. The entirety of the powers of use and disposal allowed by law.

The right of one or more persons to possess and use a thing to the exclusion of others. The right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular, to the exclusion of all other persons. The exclusive right of possession, enjoyment, and disposal; involving as an essential attribute the right to control, handle, and dispose.

Ownership of property is either absolute or qualified. The ownership of property is absolute when a single person has the absolute dominion over it, and may use it or dispose of it according to his pleasure, subject only to general laws. The ownership is qualified when it is shared with one or more persons, when the time of enjoyment is deferred or limited, or when the use is restricted. Calif.Civil Code, §§ 678—689.

There may be ownership of all inanimate things which are capable of appropriation or of manual delivery; of all domestic animals; of all obligations; of such products of labor or skill as the composition of an author, the goodwill of a business, trademarks and signs, and of rights created or granted by statute. Calif.Civil Code, § 655.

In the civil law, ownership is divided into perfect and imperfect. Ownership is perfect when it is perpetual, and when the thing is unincumbered with any real right towards any other person than the owner. On the contrary, ownership is imperfect when it is to terminate at a certain time or on a condition, or if the thing which is the object of it, being an immovable, is charged with any real right towards a third person; as a usufruct, use, or servitude. When an immovable is subject to a usufruct, the owner of it is said to possess the naked ownership. Civ_Code_La. art. 490.

In connection with burglary, “ownership” means any possession which is rightful as against the burglar.

See also Equitable ownership; Exclusive ownership; Hold; Incident of ownership; Interest; Interval ownership; Ostensible ownership; Owner; Possession; Title.

Oxifild /ˈoksɪfɪld/. In old English law, a restitution anciently made by a hundred or county for any wrong done by one that was within the same.

Oxgang. In old English law, as much land as an ox could till. A measure of land of uncertain quantity. In the north of England a division of a curative. According to some, fifteen acres.

Oyer /ˈɔɪər/. In old English practice, hearing; the hearing a deed read, which a party sued on a bond, etc., might pray or demand, and it was then read to him by the other party; the entry on the record being, “et el legitur in hac voce” (and it is read to him in these words). 3 Bl.Comm. 299.

A copy of a bond or specialty sued upon, given to the opposite party, in lieu of the old practice of reading it.

Oyer and terminer /ˈɔɪər ən tɜːrˈmɪnər/. A half French phrase applied in England to the assizes, which are so called from the commission of oyer and terminer directed to the judges, empowering them to “inquire, hear, and determine” all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors. This commission is now issued regularly, but was formerly used only on particular occasions, as upon sudden outrage or insurrection in any place. In the United States, certain higher criminal courts were called “courts of oyer and terminer.”

Oyer de record /ˈɔɪər də ˈrekərd/. A petition made in court that the judges, for better proof's sake, will hear or look upon any record.

Oyez /ˈɔɪəz/ /ˈɔɪɛz/. Hear ye. A word used in courts by the public crier to command attention when a proclamation is about to be made. Usually pronounced “O yes.” 4 Bl.Comm. 340.
P.A. Professional Association.

Passage /pɛˈeɪdʒ/ In old English law, a toll for passage through another's land. The same as "pedage."

Pacre /pəˈkɛriː/ L. Lat. To pay.

Pacatio /pəˈkɛʃən(ɪ)əʊ/ Payment.

Pace. A measure of length containing two feet and a half, being the ordinary length of a step. The geometrical pace is five feet long, being the length of two steps, or the whole space passed over by the same foot from one step to another.

Paceatur /pɛˈsɪtiːdər/ Lat. Let him be freed or discharged.

Pacification. The act of making peace between two hostile or belligerent states; reestablishment of public tranquillity.

Pacifist. One who seeks to maintain peace and to abolish war; one who refuses or is unwilling for any purpose to bear arms because of conscientious considerations, and who is disposed to encourage others in such refusal. U. S. v. Schwimmer, Ill., 279 U.S. 644, 49 S.Ct. 448, 451, 73 L.Ed. 889. A conscientious objector.

Paci sunt maxime contraria vis et injuria /pɛˈsai ʃɛɱ ˈkɛmɛntɛ kɛntrɛriːv ʃɪs ɛd ɪnˈdɪriːv/ Violence and injury are the things chiefly hostile to peace.

Pack. To decide by false appearances; to counterfeit; to delude; to put together in sorts with a fraudulent design. To pack a jury is to use unlawful, improper, or deceitful means to have the jury made up of persons favorably disposed to the party so contriving, or who have been or can be improperly influenced to give the verdict he seeks. The term imports the improper and corrupt selection of a jury sworn and impaneled for the trial of a cause.

Package. A bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling; a thing in form to become, as such, an article of merchandise or delivery from hand to hand. A parcel is a small package; "parcel" being the diminutive of "package." Each of the words denotes a thing in form suitable for transportation or handling, or sale from hand to hand. As ordinarily understood in the commercial world, it means a shipping package. See also Parcel.

Original package. See Original.

Packed parcels. The name for a consignment of goods, consisting of one large parcel made up of several small ones (each bearing a different address), collected from different persons by the immediate consignor (a carrier), who unites them into one for his own profit, at the expense of the railway by which they are sent, since the railway company would have been paid more for the carriage of the parcels singly than together.

Packing list. Document which contains the contents, weight and other information concerning the package to be shipped. It accompanies the package and is available for inspection.

Pact. A bargain; compact; agreement. An agreement between two or more nations or states usually less elaborate than a treaty but nearly equivalent thereto. See also Compact; Pactum; Treaty.

Nude pact. A translation of the Latin "nudum pactum," a bare or naked pact, that is, a promise or agreement made without any consideration on the other side, which is therefore not enforceable.

Obligatory pact. In civil law, an informal obligatory declaration of consensus, which the Roman law refused to acknowledge.

Pact de non alienando /pɛkt dɪn ɛnˈjɛltənəndə/. An agreement not to alienate incumbered (particularly mortgaged) property. This stipulation, sometimes found in mortgages made in Louisiana, and derived from the Spanish law, binds the mortgagor not to sell or incumber the mortgaged premises to the prejudice of the mortgagee; it does not avoid a sale made to a third person, but enables the mortgagee to proceed directly against the mortgaged property in a proceeding against the mortgagor alone and without notice to the purchaser.

Pacta conventa que neque contra leges neque dolò malò inīta sunt omnì modo observanda sunt /pɛktə kanvɛnˈtə kweː nɛkwɛti koŋtra lɪliˈɛlyɛz nɛkwɛti dɔˈlɔw ɪnədə sɛnt oʊmənəʊ ɔbɜrvənədə sɛnt/. Agreements which are not contrary to the laws nor entered into with a fraudulent design are in all respects to be observed.

Pacta dant legem contractul /pɛktə dænt lɪˈjəm kantrəkˈtʃuːwæɪ/. The stipulations of parties constitute the law of the contract. Agreements give the law to the contract.
Pactum de non alienando /pǽktam diy nón ǽli-vánándow/. A pact or agreement binding the owner of property not to alienate it, intended to protect the interests of another; particularly an agreement by the mortgagor of real estate that he will not transfer the title to a third person until after satisfaction of the mortgage. A clause inserted in mortgages in Louisiana to secure to the mortgage creditor the right to foreclose his mortgage by executory process directed solely against the mortgagor, and to give him the right to seize and sell the mortgaged property, regardless of any subsequent alienations. Shields v. Schiff, 124 U.S. 351, 355, 8 S.Ct. 510, 31 L.Ed. 445.

Pactum de non petendo /pǽktam diy nón paténdow/. In the civil law, an agreement not to sue. A simple convention whereby a creditor promises the debtor that he will not enforce his claim.

Pactum de quoita litis /pǽktam diy kwówa láydas/. In the civil law, an agreement by which a creditor promised to pay a portion of a debt difficult to recover to a person who undertook to recover it.

Padder. A robber; a foot highwayman; a foot-pad.

Pagarchus /págárkhas/. A petty magistrate of a pagus or little district in the country.

Pagoda /págówdá/. A gold or silver coin, of several kinds and values, formerly current in India. It was valued at the United States custom-house, at $1.94.

Pagus /pǽygas/. A county.

Paid-in-capital. Money or property paid to a corporation for its capital stock.

Paid-in-surplus. That portion of the surplus of a corporation not generated by profits but contributed by the stockholders. See also Capital (Capital surplus).

Paid-up Insurance. Insurance coverage for which no additional premiums are due.

Paid-up stock. Shares of stock for which full payment has been received by the corporation.

Pain and suffering. Term used to describe not only physical discomfort and distress but also mental and emotional trauma which are recoverable as elements of damage in torts.

Painforte et dure /pǽyn fórt ey dyúr/. See Pelne fort et dure.

Pains and penalties, bills of. The name given to acts of parliament to attain particular persons of treason or felony, or to inflict pains and penalties beyond or contrary to the common law, to serve a special purpose. They are in fact new laws, made pro re nata. See also Bill of pains and penalties.

Pairing-off. In the practice of legislative bodies, a species of negative proxies, by which two members, who belong to opposite parties or are on opposite sides with regard to a given question, mutually agree that they will both be absent from voting, either for a specified period or when a division is had on the particular question. By this mutual agreement a vote is neutralized on each side of the question, and the relative numbers on the division are precisely the same as if both members were present. It is said to have originated in the house of commons in Cromwell’s time.

País, pays /pey(s)/. Fr. The country; the neighborhood.

A trial per pais signifies a trial by the country; that is, by jury.

An assurance by matter in pais is an assurance transacted between two or more private persons “in the country;” that is, upon the very spot to be transferred.

Matter in pais signifies matter of fact, probably because matters of fact are triable by the country; i.e., by jury.

Estoppels in pais are estoppels by conduct, as distinguished from estoppels by deed or by record.

Conveyances in pais are ordinary conveyances between two or more persons in the country; i.e., upon the land to be transferred.

See also in pais; Matter in pais.

Palace court. See Court of the Steward and Marshal.

Palam /pəˈlæm/. Lat. In the civil law, openly; in the presence of many.

Palimony. Term has meaning similar to “alimony” except that award, settlement or agreement arises out of nonmarital relationship of parties (i.e. nonmarital partners). It has been held that courts should enforce express contracts between nonmarital partners except to the extent the contract is explicitly founded on the consideration of meretricious sexual services, despite contention that such contracts violate public policy; that in the absence of express contract, the court should inquire into the conduct of the parties to determine whether that conduct demonstrates implied contract, agreement of partnership or joint venture, or some other tacit understanding between the parties, and may also employ the doctrine of quantum meruit or equitable remedies such as constructive or resulting trust, when warranted by the facts of the case. Marvin v. Marvin, 557 P.2d 106, 18 Cal.3d 660, 134 Cal.Rptr. 815.

Paolo cooperire /pəˈlɔːlɔwˌkɔwɔð(ʊ)wɔrɔˈɔːriːr/. In old English law, an ancient custom, where children were born out of wedlock, and their parents afterwards intermarried. The children, together with the father and mother, stood under a cloth extended while the marriage was solemnized. It was in the nature of adoption. The children were legitimate by the civil, but not by the common, law. They were called “mantle children” in Germany, France, and Normandy. The custom also existed in Scotland.

Palmarium /pəˈlmɛrɪəjəm/. In civil law, a conditional fee for professional services in addition to the lawful charge.

Palmer Act. A name given to the English statute 19 & 20 Vict., c. 16, enabling a person accused of a crime committed out of the jurisdiction of the central criminal court, to be tried in that court.

Palming off doctrine. Rule of law itself by which it is determined whether a given state of facts constitutes “unfair competition.” Soft-Lite Lens Co. v. Ritholz, 301 Ill.App. 100, 21 N.E.2d 835, 838. See also Palm off.

Palmistry /ˈpæmlstrɪ/ . The practice of telling fortunes by a feigned interpretation of the lines and marks on the hand. Also, a trick with the hand.

Palm off. To impose by fraud; to put off by unfair means. “Palming off” is conduct, the nature and probable effect of which is to deceive public so as to pass off goods of one person as and for goods of another. Surgical Supply Service, Inc. v. Adler, D.C. Pa., 206 F.Supp. 564, 570.

Palm prints. The impression made by a person’s palm on a smooth surface. They may be used for purpose of identification in criminal cases.

Palpable. Easily perceptible, plain, obvious, readily visible, noticeable, patent, distinct, manifest. People v. Hughey, 382 Ill. 196, 47 N.E.2d 77, 80.

Palsgraf doctrine. The rule derived from the case of Palsgraf v. Long Island R. Co., 248 N.Y. 339, 162 N.E. 99, to the effect that one who is negligent is liable only for the harm or injury which is within the orbit of foreseeability and not for every injury which follows from his negligence.

Pandects /ˈpændɛktz/. A compilation of Roman law, consisting of selected passages from the writings of the most authoritative of the older jurists, methodically arranged, prepared by Tribonian with the assistance of sixteen associates, under a commission from the emperor Justinian. This work, which is otherwise called the “Digest,” because in his compilation the writings of the jurists were reduced to order and condensed quasi digestio, comprises fifty books, and is one of the four great works composing the Corpus Juris Civilis. It was first published in A.D. 533, when Justinian gave it to the force of law.

Pander, n. One who caters to the lust of others; a male bawd, a pimp, or procurer.

Pander, v. To pimp; to cater to the gratification of the lust of another. To entice or procure a female, by promises, threats, fraud, or artifice, to enter any place in which prostitution is practiced, for the purpose of prostitution. Pandering is established when evidence shows that accused has succeeded in inducing his victim to become an inmate of a house of prostitution. People v. Charles, 218 Cal.App.2d 812, 32 Cal. Rptr. 653, 658.

Pandering of obscenity. Business of purveying pictorial or graphic matter openly advertised to appeal to erotic interest of customers, or potential customers, by either blatant and explicit advertising or subtle and sophisticated advertising. State v. Albini, 29 Ohio App.2d 227, 281 N.E.2d 26, 31, 58 O.O.2d 416.

P & L. See Profit (Profit and loss); Profit and loss statement.

Panel. A list of jurors to serve in a particular court, or for the trial of a particular action. Group of judges (smaller than the entire court) which decides a case; e.g. a nine member appellate court might be divided into three, three member panels with each panel hearing and deciding cases.
Prepaid legal services. “Open panel” legal services is a plan in which legal services are paid for in advance (usually by a type of insurance) and members can choose their own lawyer. Under a “closed panel”, however, all legal services are performed by a group of attorneys previously selected by the insurer, union, etc. See Prepaid legal services.

See also Jury panel.

Pannellation /pənəlēʃən/. The act of impaneling a jury.

Papal supremacy. The supremacy which the Pope claimed not only over the Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, but over all other Christian princes. The theory was that they stood to the Pope as feudal vassals to a supreme lord; as such, the Pope claimed the right to enforce the duties due to him from his feudal subordinates through an ascending scale of penalties culminating in the absolution of the prince’s subjects from the bonds of allegiance, and in the disposition of the sovereign himself. The papal supremacy was overthrown in England by acts of the Parliament which met in 1529 and was dissolved in 1536, ending in the Act of Supremacy which substituted the King for the Pope.

Paper. A written or printed document or instrument. A document filed or introduced in evidence in a suit at law, as, in the phrase “papers in the case” and in “papers on appeal.” Any writing or printed document, including letters, memoranda, legal or business documents, and books of account, as in the constitutional provision which protects the people from unreasonable searches and seizures in respect to their “papers” as well as their houses and persons. A written or printed evidence of debt, particularly a promissory note or a bill of exchange, as in the phrases “accommodation paper” and “commercial paper” (q.v.). See also Document.

Paper money. Bills drawn by a government against its own credit, engaging to pay money, but which do not profess to be immediately convertible into specie, and which are put into compulsory circulation as a substitute for coined money. See Federal reserve notes; Legal tender.

Paper patent. Term used desirously to refer to a discovery or invention which has never been put to commercial use nor recognized in the trade. Coltman v. Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., C.C.A.Ind., 104 F.2d 508.

Paper profit. An unrealized profit on a security or other investment still held. Paper profits become realized profits only when the security or other investment is sold.

Paper standard. A money system based on pure paper which is not convertible into gold or other metal of intrinsic value.

Papian popæae law. See Lex Papia Popaea.

Par. In commercial law, equal; equality. An equality subsisting between the nominal or face value of a bill of exchange, share of stock, etc., and its actual selling value. When the values are thus equal, the instrument or share is said to be “at par;” if it can be sold for more than its nominal worth, it is “above par;” if for less, it is “below par.” See also Par of exchange; Par value.

Any standard or norm of conduct which is expected of people.

Parachronism /parəkronəzəm/. Error in the computation of time.

Paraculum /parəˈklʌm/. In old English law, the tenure between partners, viz., that which the youngest owes to the eldest without homage or service.

Parage /pəˈræg/ or paragulum /parəˈɡəl/. In old English law, an equality of blood or dignity, but more especially of land, in the partition of an inheritance between co-heirs. More properly, however, an equality of condition among nobles, or persons holding by a noble tenure. Thus, when a fief is divided among brothers, the younger hold their part of the elder by parage; i.e., without any homage or service. Also the portion which a woman may obtain on her marriage.

Paragraph. A distinct part of a discourse or writing; any section or subdivision of writing or chapter which relates to particular point, whether consisting of one or many sentences.

A part or section of a statute, pleading, affidavit, will, trust, etc., which contains one article, the sense of which is complete.

Fed.R.Civ. P. 10(a) provides that: “All averments of claim or defense shall be made in numbered paragraphs, the contents of each of which shall be limited as far as practicable to a statement of or of a single set of circumstances; and a paragraph may be referred to by number in all succeeding pleadings.”

Paralegal. A person with legal skills, but who is not an attorney, and who works under the supervision of a lawyer or who is otherwise authorized by law to use those legal skills. Paralegal courses leading to degrees in such specialty are now afforded by many schools.

Parallel citation. A citation reference to the same case printed in two or more different reports. See e.g. the case citation to the definition directly below.

Paramount. Above; upwards. Higher; superior; pre-eminent; of the highest rank or nature.

Paramount equity. An equitable right or claim which is prior, superior, or preferable to that with which it is compared.

Paramount title. In the law of real property, properly one which is superior to the title with which it is compared, in the sense that the former is the source or origin of the latter. It is, however, frequently used to denote a title which is simply better or stronger than another, or will prevail over it. But this use is scarcely correct, unless the superiority consists in the seniority of the title spoken of as “paramount.”

Paramour. In general, a lover; but term is used commonly in connection with a person of either sex in an adulterous alliance.

Paraöa /pəˈrɒənə/. See Insanity.

Paraph. A flourish at the end of a signature. In the Middle Ages this was a sort of rude safeguard against forgery. Also, in Louisiana, the signature itself, such as the official signature of a notary.
PARAPHERNA

Parapherna /pərəˈfɜːnə/. In the civil law, goods brought by wife to husband over and above her dowry (dos).

Paraphernalia /pərəˈfɜrnəliə/. The separate property of a married woman, other than that which is included in her dowry, or dos. Those goods which a woman is allowed to have, after the death of her husband, besides her dower, consisting of her apparel and ornaments, suitable to her rank and degree. Those goods which a wife could bequeath by her testament.

In the civil law, the separate property of the wife is divided into dotal and extradotal. Total property is that which the wife brings to the husband to assist him in bearing the expenses of the marriage establishment. Extradotal property, otherwise called "paraphernal property," is that which forms no part of the dowry. It is property brought to the marriage by one of the spouses.

Paraphernal property /pərəˈfɜrnəl pɹəˈpɔrdiə/. See Paraphernalia.

Paraprofessional. One who assists a professional person though not a member of the profession himself; e.g. a paralegal (q.v.) who assists a lawyer.

Parasynexis /pərəˈsɛnəksəs/. In the civil law, a conventicle, or unlawful meeting.

Paratīlā /pərəˈtɪljə/. In the civil law, notes or abstracts prefixed to titles of law, giving a summary of their contents. An abbreviated explanation of some titles or books of the Code or Digest.

Paraturum habeō /pərəˈtʊrum həˈbiːjə/. Lat. I have him in readiness. The return by the sheriff to a capias ad respondendum, signifying that he has the defendant in readiness to be brought into court. This was a fiction, where the defendant was at large. Afterwards he was required, by statute, to take bail from the defendant, and he returned cepi corpus and bail-bond. But still he might be ruled to bring in the body.

Paratus est verificare /pərəˈtʊs ɛst vərəˈfɪkərə/. Lat. He is ready to verify. The Latin form for concluding a pleading with a verification (q.v.).

Paravall /pərəˈvæl ˌpərəˈvæl/. Inferior; subordinate. In old English law, tenant paravall signified the lowest tenant of land, being the tenant of a mesne lord. He was so called because he was supposed to make "avail" or profit of the land for another.

Parcel, v. To divide an estate.

Parcel, n. A small package or bundle. See Package.

Parcelia terre /pərəˈlɪə tɛˈhriə/. A parcel of land.

Parcel makers /pərəˈsæl məˈkreɪz/. In old English law, two officers in the exchequer who formerly made the parcels or items of the escheators' accounts, wherein they charged them with everything they had levied for the king during the term of their office.

Parcells. A description of property, formally set forth in a conveyance, together with the boundaries thereof, in order to its easy identification.

Parcels, bill of. An account of the items composing a parcel or package of goods, transmitted with them to the purchaser. See, Bill of parcels under "Bill."

Parcenary /pərəˈnɛnərē/. The state or condition of holding title to lands jointly by partencers, before the common inheritance has been divided.

Parcener /pərəˈnɛnər/. A joint heir; one who, with others, holds an estate in co-parcenary (q.v.). Gibson v. Johnson, 331 Mo. 1198, 56 S.W.2d 783.

Parchment. Sheep-skins dressed for writing, so called from Pergamus, Asia Minor, where they were invented. Used for deeds, and used for writs of summons in England previous to the Judicature Act of 1875. The skin of a lamb, sheep, goat, young calf, or other animal, prepared for writing on; also, any of various papers made in imitation thereof.

Parco fractus /pərkoˈfrəktəs/. Pound-breath; also the name of an old English writ against one who violently breaks a pound and takes beasts which, for some trespass done, or some other just cause, were lawfully impounded.

Par deceit /pər dəˈsikt/. (In pari delicto.) Equal guilt.

Pardon. An act of grace, proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. An act of grace from governing power which mitigates the punishment the law demands for the offense and restores the rights and privileges forfeited on account of the offense. Vernoco, Inc. v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. of New York, 253 La. 721, 219 So.2d 508, 511.

The power to pardon for non-federal crimes is generally invested in state governors, while the President has the power to pardon for federal offenses (Art. II, Sec. 2, U.S.Const.).

See also Amnesty; Board of pardons; Clemency; Commutation; Condonation; Parole; Reprieve. Distinguished from amnesty. The distinction between amnesty and pardon is one rather of philological than of legal importance. Knote v. U.S., 255 U.S. 149, 153, 24 L.Ed. 442, 443. This is so as to their ultimate effect, but there are incidental differences of importance. They are of different character and have different purposes. The one overlooks offense; the other remits punishment. The first is usually addressed to crimes against the sovereignty of the state, to political offenses, forgiveness being deemed more expedient for the public welfare than prosecution and punishment. The second condones infractions of the peace of the state. Amnesty is usually general, addressed to classes or even communities—a legislative act, or under legislation, constitutional or statutory—the act of the supreme magistrate. There may or may not be distinct acts of acceptance. If other rights are dependent upon it and are asserted, there is affirmative evidence of acceptance. Burdick v. U. S., 236 U.S. 79, 271, 35 S.Ct. 267, 59 L.Ed. 476. “Pardon” applies only to the individual, releases him from the punishment fixed by law for his specific offense, but does not affect the criminality of the same or similar acts when performed by other persons or repeated by the same person.

Distinguished from commutation. A pardon, to be effective, must be accepted, Burdick v. U. S., 236 U.S. 79, 35 S.Ct. 267, 268, 59 L.Ed. 476; but a commutation is merely a cessation of the exercise of sovereign authority, and does not oblitrate guilt or restore civil rights, and need not be accepted by the convict to be operative. A commutation is simply a remission of a part of the punishment, a substitution of a less penalty for the one originally imposed; while a “pardon” avoids or terminates punishment for crime. U. S. v. Commissioner of Immigration at Port of New York, C.C.A.N.Y., 5 F.2d 162, 165.

Distinguished from parole. A “pardon” releases the offender from the entire punishment prescribed for the offense, and from all the disabilities consequent on his conviction, while by a “parole” a convict is merely released before the expiration of his term, to remain subject during the remainder thereof to supervision by the public authority, and to return to imprisonment on violation of the condition of the parole.

Types of Pardons

Absolute or unconditional pardon. One which frees the criminal without any condition whatever. That which reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender. It obliterates in legal contemplation the offense itself. It goes no further to restore the accused to his civil rights and remit the penalty imposed for the particular offense of which he was convicted in so far as it remains unremitted. State v. Cullen, 14 Wash.2d 165, 127 P.2d 257, 259.

Conditional pardon. One to which a condition is annexed, performance of which is necessary to the validity of the pardon. A pardon which does not become operative until the grantee has performed some specific act, or where it becomes void when some specific event transpires. One granted on the condition that it shall only endure until the voluntary doing of some act by the person pardoned, or that it shall be revoked by a subsequent act on his part, as that he shall leave the state and never return.

Executive pardon. See Executive pardon.

Full pardon. One freely and unconditionally absolving party from all legal consequences, direct and collateral, of crime and conviction. Warren v. State, 127 Tex.Cr.R. 71, 74 S.W.2d 1006, 1008.

General pardon. One granted to all the persons participating in a given criminal or treasonable offense (generally political), or to all offenders of a given class or against a certain statute or within certain limits of time. But “amnesty” is the more appropriate term for this. It may be express, as when a general declaration is made that all offenders of a certain class shall be pardoned, or implied, as in case of the repeal of a penal statute.

Partial pardon. That which remits only portion of punishment or absolves from only portion of legal consequences of crime. Warren v. State, 127 Tex. Cr.R. 71, 74 S.W.2d 1006, 1008.

Pardon attorney. Official of Justice Department who considers applications for federal pardons and makes recommendations for the exercise of Presidential clemency.

Pardoner /pår'dner/. In old English law, persons who carried about the pope's indulgences, and sold them to any who would buy them.

Pares /pær'enz/. Lat. In Roman law, a parent; originally and properly only the father or mother of the person spoken of; but also, by an extension of its meaning, any relative, male or female, in the line of direct ascent.

"Pares" est nomen generale ad omne genus cognitionis. Lat. Nomen jenērēihi ad ēmnī jynas kagēnēshīyohnas. "Pare'nt" is a name general for every kind of relationship.

Pares patriae originates from the English common law where the King had a royal prerogative to act as guardian to persons with legal disabilities such as infants, idiots and lunatics. In the United States, the parens patriae function belongs with the states.

State attorney generals have parens patriae authority to bring actions on behalf of state residents for anti-trust offenses and to recover on their behalf. 15 U.S.C.A. § 15c.

The use of this power to deprive a person of freedom has been limited by recent laws and decisions; e.g. Kent v. U. S., 383 U.S. 541, 554-555, 86 S.Ct. 1045, 1054, 16 L.Ed.2d 84.

See also Surrogate parent.

Parent. The lawful father or mother of a person. One who procreates, begets, or brings forth offspring.

By statute, "parent" has been defined to include (1) either the natural father or the natural mother of a child born of their valid marriage to each other, if no subsequent judicial decree has divested one or both of them of their statutory coguardianship as created by their marriage; (2) either the adoptive father or the adoptive mother of a child jointly adopted by them, if no subsequent judicial decree has divested one or both of them of their statutory coguardianship as created by the adoption; (3) the natural mother of an illegitimate child, if her position as sole guardian of such a child has not been divested by a subsequent judicial decree; (4) a child's putative blood parent who has expressly acknowledged paternity and contributed meaningfully to the child's support; (5) any individual or agency whose status as guardian of the person of the child has been established by judicial decree.

Includes any person entitled to take, or who would be entitled to take if the child died without a will, as a parent under the Uniform Probate Code by intestate succession from the child whose relationship is in question and excludes any person who is only a stepparent, foster parent, or grandparent. Uniform Probate Code, § 1–201(28).

See also Adoption; Loco parentis; Parens patriae; Surrogate parent.

Parentage. Kindred in the direct ascending line. The state or condition of being a parent.

Parental liability. By statute in certain states, the parents may be held liable up to a specified amount for damages caused to property of others by their children if such damage is found to have resulted from negligent control of parent over acts of child.

Parental rights. The sum total of the rights of the parent or parents in and to the child as well as the rights of the child in and to the parent or parents. Anguis v. Superior Court In and For Maricopa County, 6 Ariz.App. 68, 429 P.2d 702, 705. The following are "parental rights" protected to varying degrees by constitution: physical possession of child, which, in case of custodial parent, includes day-to-day care and companionship of child; right to discipline child, which includes right to inculcate in child parent's moral and ethical standards; right to control and manage minor child's earnings; right to control and manage minor child's property; right to be supported by adult child; right to have child bear parent's name; and right to prevent adoption of child without parents' consent. L. A. M. v. State, Alaska, 547 P.2d 827, 835.

Parent-child immunity. In some jurisdictions a parent is immune from liability for negligence in an action brought by his or her child, though the trend has been to abolish or restrict such immunity.

Parent company. Company owning more than 50 percent of the voting shares of another company, called the subsidiary. A "parent corporation" is one which has working control through stock ownership of its subsidiary corporations. Culcav Styloco, Inc. v. Vornado, Inc., 26 C.A.3d 879, 103 Cal.Rptr. 419, 421.

Parentela /pærəntɛɪlə/. The sum of those persons who trace descent from one ancestor.

In old English law, parentela, or de parentela se tollere, signified a renunciation of one's kindred and family. This was, according to ancient custom, done in open court, before the judge, and in the presence of twelve men, who made oath that they believed it was done for a just cause. After such abjuration, the person was incapable of inheriting anything from any of his relations, etc.

Parenticide /pærəntɪsɛd/. One who murders a parent; also the crime so committed.

Parentum est liberos alere etiam notbos /pærəntəm ɛst liberow alirɨ fyʃɨɨym nɔwɔwɔs/. It is the duty of parents to support their children even when illegitimate.

Pares /pærɨriz/ pərəz/. Lat. In old English law, a person's peers or equals; as the jury for the trial of causes, who were originally the vassals or tenants of the lord, being the equals or peers of the parties litigant; and, as the lord's vassals judged each other in the lord's courts, so the sovereign's vassals, or the lords themselves, judged each other in the sovereign's courts.

Pares curiae /pærɨriz kjuˈriːə/. In old English law, peers of the court. Vassals who were bound to attend the lord's court.

Paresis /pərɨliːs/ pərəsəs/. Progressive general paralysis, involving or leading to the form of insanity known as "dementia paralytica." Popularly, but not very correctly, called "softening of the brain." See Insanity.

Paria copulantur paribus /pərɨriɔ kəpʊləntɐ pərəbəs/. Like things unite with like.

Paribus sententiae reus absolvitur /pərəbəs sɛntɛntiəs rɪəs əbɔlvɪtʊr/. Where the opinions are equal [where the court is equally divided], the defendant is acquitted.

Pari causa /pərərɛ kəʊzə/. Lat. With equal right; upon an equal footing; equivalent in rights or claims.

Pari delicto /pərərɛ dəlɪktəʊ/. Lat. In equal fault; in a similar offense or crime; equal in guilt or in legal fault. "Pari delicto" doctrine rests on rule that courts will not enforce an invalid contract and that no party can recover in any action where it is necessary for him to prove an illegal contract in order to make out his case. Neal v. Pennslyvania Life Ins. Co., Okl., 480 P.2d 923, 925. See In pari delicto.

Pares communis /pərɨriiɪs kəmənuːnəs/. A common wall; a party-wall.

Pari materia /pərərɛ mətəriə/. Lat. Of the same matter; on the same subject; as, laws pari materia must be construed with reference to each other.

Pari mutuel betting /pərɪrɪ muːtjuːl bɛtɪŋ/. A mutual stake or wager; a betting pool. A form of betting on horses or dogs in which those who bet on winner share total stakes less a small percent to the management. Donovan v. Eastern Racing Ass'n, 324 Mass. 393, 86 N.E.2d 903, 906. Such betting is illegal in a number of states.

Par in parem imperium non habet /pær i pærəm əmpɪrɪəm nɔn hɛbɛt/. An equal has no dominion over an equal.

Pari passu /pərɨrɛ pəs(ʊ)juː/ pərərɛ pɛs(ʊ)juː/. Lat. By an equal progress; equably; ratably; without preference. Used especially of creditors who, in marshalling assets, are entitled to receive out of the same fund without any precedence over each other.
Parli  rations /pərə ˈreshəˌwʌnli/. Lat. For the like reason; by like mode of reasoning.

Parl, declaration of /ˌdɪkəˈrɛʃən əv pərəs/. See Declaration.

Parl. In English ecclesiastical law a circuit of ground, committed to the charge of one parson or vicar, or other minister having care of souls therein. 1 Bl.Com. 111. The precinct of a parish church, and the particular charge of a secular priest. An ecclesiastical division of a town, city or district, subject to the ministry of one pastor.

In Louisiana, a territorial governmental division of the state corresponding to what is elsewhere called a "county."

Parish apprentice. In old English law, the children of parents unable to maintain them could, by law, be apprenticed, by the guardians or overseers of their parish, to such persons as may be willing to receive them as apprentices. Such children were called "parish apprentices."

Parish church. This expression has various significations. It is applied sometimes to a select body of Christians, forming a local spiritual association, and sometimes to the building in which the public worship of the inhabitants of a parish is celebrated; but the true legal notion of a parochial church is a consecrated place, having attached to it the rights of burial and the administration of the sacraments.

Parish court. The name of a court established in each parish in Louisiana, and corresponding to the county courts or common pleas courts in the other states. It has as a limited civil jurisdiction, besides general probate powers.

Parishioners. Members of a parish. In England, for many purposes they form a body politic.

Par items. Items which a drawee bank will remit to another bank without charge.

Parler. Equality in amount or value. Equivalence of prices of farm products in relation to those existing at some former date (base period) or to the general cost of living. Equivalence of prices of goods or services in two different markets.

The relationship between two currencies such that they are exchangeable for each other at the par or official rate of exchange. See Exchange rate.

Parity ratio. A relationship developed between the index of prices received by farmers for their crops and the index of costs of the farmers for the items which they buy.

Parlum eadem est ratio, idem jus /pərɪˈrɪəm ɪˈeɪdɛm əst rəˈʃiːθ(ɪ)ˈwɔʊ, ˈɔɪdɔm ɻəz/. Of things equal, the reason is the same, and the same is the law.

Parlum judicium /pərɪˈrɪəm ɟəˈdiʃiəm/. The judgment of peers; trial by a jury of one’s peers or equals.

Park, n. An inclosed pleasure-ground in or near a city, set apart for the recreation of the public.

Park, v. Term “park” as used in statutes or ordinances regulating parking, does not comprehend or include merely temporary or momentary stoppage but rather connotes a stoppage with intent of permitting vehicle to remain standing for an appreciable length of time. Ford v. Stevens, 280 Minn. 16, 157 N.W.2d 510, 513.

Parlament. The supreme legislative assembly of Great Britain and Ireland, consisting of the king or queen and the three estates of the realm, viz., the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons.

High Court of Parliament. In English law, the English parliament, as composed of the house of peers and house of commons; or the house of lords sitting in its judicial capacity.

Parliamentary. Relating or belonging to, connected with, enacted by or proceeding from, or characteristic of, the English parliament in particular, or any legislative body in general.

Parliamentary agents. Persons who act as solicitors in promoting and carrying private bills through parliament. They are usually attorneys or solicitors, but they do not usually confine their practice to this particular department.

Parliamentary committee. A committee of members of the house of peers or of the house of commons, appointed by either house for the purpose of making inquiries, by the examination of witnesses or otherwise, into matters which could not be conveniently inquired into by the whole house.

Parliamentary law. The general body of enacted rules (e.g. Roberts Rules of Order) and recognized usages which governs the procedure of legislative assemblies and other deliberative bodies such as meetings of stockholders and directors of corporations, town meetings, boards, clubs, and the like.

Parliamentary taxes. See Tax.

Parlamentum /ˈpɑrəˌliəmənt/. L. A legislative body in general or the English parliament in particular.

Parlamentum religiosorum /pərəˈliəmənt ˈrɛliˌʒiəˌsɔrəm/. In most convents there has been a common room into which the brethren withdrew for conversation; conferences there being termed “parliament.” Likewise, the societies of the two temples, or ins of court, call that assembly of the benchers or governors wherein they confer upon the common affairs of their several houses a “parliament.”

Parochial. Relating or belonging to a parish.

Par of exchange. The precise equality or equivalency of any given sum or quantity of money of one country, and the like sum or quantity of money of any other foreign country into which it is to be exchanged. The par of the currencies of any two countries means the equivalence of a certain amount of the currency of the one in the currency of the other. See Exchange rate.

Parol. A word; speech; hence, oral or verbal. Expressed or evidenced by speech only; as opposed to by writing or by sealed instrument.

As to parol Agreement; Arrest; Demurrer; Lease; and Promise; see those titles.

Parol contract. An oral contract as distinguished from a written or formal contract.
Parole /paraʊl/. Release from jail, prison or other confinement after actually serving part of sentence. State v. Ludwig, 218 Or. 483, 344 P.2d 764, 766. A conditional release of prisoner, generally under supervision of a parole officer, who has served part of the term for which he was sentenced to prison. Such may be revoked if he fails to observe the conditions provided in parole order.

"Parolee" gains his conditional freedom as result of exercise of discretion by parole board which may grant parole when it is of opinion there is reasonable probability that prisoner will live and remain at liberty without violating laws. Birch v. Anderson, C.A. D.C., 358 F.2d 520, 524, 123 U.S.App.D.C. 153.

The granting, denying, revocation, and supervision of parole for federal prisoners rests in the U.S. Parole Commission. Most states have similar boards or commissions. See Parole board.

In military law, a promise given by a prisoner of war, when he has leave to depart from custody, that he will return at the time appointed, unless discharged. An engagement by a prisoner of war, upon being set at liberty, that he will not again take up arms against the government by whose forces he was captured, either for a limited period or while hostilities continue.

See also Amnesty; Pardon.

Probation distinguished. "Probation" relates to judicial action taken before the prison door is closed, whereas "parole" relates to executive action taken after the door has closed on a convict. State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476, 479.

Revocation hearing. Parole revocation hearing is in the nature of an administrative proceeding for the purpose of determining whether a parolee has violated the conditions of his parole. State ex rel. McNeil v. New York State Bd. of Parole, 87 Misc.2d 497, 385 N.Y.S.2d 731, 734.

Parole board. The state and federal administrative bodies empowered to decide whether inmates shall be conditionally released from prison before completion of their sentences. Called "Correctional Boards" in some states.

The federal Board of Parole consists of eight members, appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It has sole authority to grant, modify, or revoke paroles of all U.S. prisoners. It is responsible for the supervision of parolees and prisoners released upon the expiration of their sentences with allowances for statutory good time. U.S. probation officers supervise parolees and mandatory releases.

Parolee. Ex-prisoner who has been placed on parole.

Parole officers. Parole system is administered by parole officers whose duties include supervision of parolees. Normally, parolees must periodically report to such officers.

Parole evidence. Oral or verbal evidence; that which is given by word of mouth; the ordinary kind of evidence given by witnesses in court. In a particular sense, and with reference to contracts, deeds, wills, and other writings, parole evidence is the same as extraneous evidence or evidence aliunde. See also Aliunde; Extraneous evidence; Oral evidence.

Parol evidence rule. This evidence rule seeks to preserve integrity of written agreements by refusing to permit contracting parties to attempt to alter import of their contract through use of contemporaneous oral declarations. Rose v. Food Fair Stores, Inc., 437 Pa. 117, 262 A.2d 851. Under this rule, when parties put their agreement in writing, all previous oral agreements merge in the writing and a contract as written cannot be modified or changed by parol evidence, in the absence of a plea of mistake or fraud in the preparation of the writing. Russell v. Halteman's Adm'n, 287 Ky. 404, 153 S.W.2d 899, 904. But rule does not forbid a resort to parol evidence not inconsistent with the matters stated in the writing. Elkins v. Super-Cold Southwest Co., Tex.Civ.App., 157 S.W.2d 946, 947. Also, as regards sales of goods, such written agreement may be explained or supplemented by course of dealing or usage of trade or by course of conduct, and by evidence of consistent additional terms unless the court finds the writing to have been intended also as a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement. U.C.C. § 2-202.

This rule is also applicable to wills and trusts.

Paroles de ley /paroˈvlis da leˈ/. L. Fr. Words of law; technical words.

Paroles font plea /paroˈvlis fɔ̃t ply/. Words make the plea.

Parricide /paˈrɛsəd/. The crime of killing one's father; also a person guilty of killing his father.

Parricidium /paˈrɛsɪdɪə(j)um/. Lat. In the civil law, parricide; the murder of a parent.

Pars /parz/. Lat. A part; a party to a deed, action, or legal proceeding.

Pars enitita /paˈɾzx eˈnɪtɪtə/. In old English law, the privilege or portion of the eldest child in the partition of lands by lot.

Pars gravata /paˈrɔz ɡrɐˈvətə/. A party aggrieved; the party aggrieved.

Parson. The rector of a church; one that has full possession of all the rights of a parochial church.

Parson mortal. In old English law, a rector instituted and inducted for his own life. But any collegiate or conventional body, to whom a church was forever appropriated, was termed "persona immortalis."

Pars rationalibus /paˈrɔz ɾəˈʃælnɛˈbəls/. That part of a man's goods which the law gave to his widow and children.

Pars rea /paˈɾzx ɾeə/. A party defendant.

Pars viscerum matris /paˈɾɔs vɪˈsəɹəm məˈtrɪs/. Part of the bowels of the mother; i.e., an unborn child.

Part. An integral portion, something essentially belonging to a larger whole; that which together with another or others makes up a whole. First-Mechanics Nat. Bank of Trenton v. Norris, 134 N.J.Eq. 229, 34 A.2d 746, 749. A portion, share, or purport. One of two duplicate originals of a conveyance or covenant, the other being called "counterpart." Also, in composition, partial or incomplete; as part payment, part performance.
Partage /pârtaZH/. In French law, a division made between co-proprietors of a particular estate held by them in common. It is the operation by means of which the goods of a succession are divided among the co-heirs; while lication (q.v.) is an adjudication to the highest bidder of objects which are not divisible.

Parte inaudita /pârdi inôda/. Lat. One side being unheard. Spoken of any action which is taken ex parte.

Partem aliquam recte intelligere nemo potest, antequam totum, iterum atque iterum, perierget /pârdam âlokwam réktli intéléjâri nîymow pôwdast ântâkwâm tôwdâm îdâraâm âktïwî îdâraâm parîlyjåâ/. No one can rightly understand any part until he has read the whole again and again.

Parte non comparente /pârdi nôn kômpârentî/. Lat. The party not having appeared. The condition of a cause called "default."

Parte quacumque integrante sublata, tolitur totum /pârdy kwakâmkiwî intigrântî sublîyda tôldôd tôwdâm/. An integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away.

Partes finis nihil habuerunt /pârdyûz fâyñas nây(h)aî hêbyûûwûrant/. In old pleading, the parties to the fine had nothing; that is, had no estate which could be conveyed by it. A plea to a fine which had been levied by a stranger.

Partial. Relating to or constituting a part; not complete; not entire or universal; not general or total. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Baker, Tex. Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 344, 346.

Partial account. An account of an executor, administrator, guardian, etc., not exhibiting his entire dealings with the estate or fund from his appointment to final settlement, but covering only a portion of the time or of the estate.

Partial average. Another name for particular average. See Average.

Partial dependency. Test as to existence of such dependency for purpose of worker's compensation is whether contributions were relied on by claimants to aid and maintain them in present position in life and whether they were to substantial degree depending on support or aid of employee at time of death. Federal Underwriters Exchange v. Hinkle, Tex.Civ. App., 187 S.W.2d 122, 124.

Partial eviction. That which takes place when the possessor is deprived of only a portion of his rights in the premises. Such may result in constructive eviction.

Partial evidence. That which goes to establish a detached fact, in a series tending to the fact in dispute. It may be received, subject to be rejected as incompetent, unless connected with the fact in dispute by proof of other facts; for example, on an issue of title to real property, evidence of the continued possession of a remote occupant is partial, for it is of a detached fact, which may or may not be afterwards connected with the fact in dispute.

Partial incapacity. Such occurs when injury disables a workman to perform part of the usual tasks of his job, though such disablement does not prevent him from procuring and retaining employment reasonably suitable to his physical condition and ability to work, or when because of his injury he is only able to perform labor of a less remunerative class than he performed before the injury, and as a consequence he suffers a depression or reduction in his earning capacity. Commercial Ins. Co. of Newark, New Jersey v. Puente, Tex.Civ.App., 535 S.W.2d 948, 957.

Partial limitation. Provision found in some insurance policies in which the insurer agrees to pay a total loss if the actual loss exceeds a certain amount.

Partial loss. A loss of a part of a thing or of its value, or any damage not amounting (actually or constructively) to its entire destruction; as contrasted with total loss. Partial loss is one in which the damage done to the thing insured is not so complete as to amount to a total loss, either actual or constructive. In every such case the underwriter is liable to pay such proportion of the sum which would be payable on total loss as the damage sustained by the subject of insurance bears to the whole value at the time of insurance. Partial loss implies a damage sustained by the ship or cargo, which falls upon the respective owners of the property so damaged; and, when happening from any peril insured against by the policy, the owners are to be indemnified by the underwriters, unless in cases excepted by the express terms of the policy.

Partial payment. See Payment.

Partial release. Clause in blanket mortgage directing mortgagee to release specified parcels from lien upon payment of certain sum.

Partial taking. See Eminent domain.

Partial verdict. See Verdict.

Partiarium /pârshiyeëriyâs/. Lat. In Roman law, a legatee who was entitled, by the directions of the will, to receive a share or portion of the inheritance left to the heir.

Partible lands. Lands which might be divided; lands held in gavelkind.

Particeps /pârdseôs/. Lat. A participant; a sharer; anciently, a part owner, or parccener.

Particeps criminis /pârdseôs krîmînas/. A participant in a crime; an accomplice. One who shares or co-operates in a criminal offense, tort or fraud.

Participate /partisâpëyt/. To receive or have a part or share of; to partake of; experience in common with others; to have or enjoy a part or share in common with others. To partake, as to "participate" in a discussion, or in a pension or profit sharing plan. To take equal shares and proportions; to share or divide, as to participate in an estate. To take as tenants in common.

Participation. Provision in insurance policies by which the insured shares or participates in each loss incurred and covered by the policy on a specified percentage basis. Sometimes loosely referred to as coinsurance but latter term is not strictly applicable.
PARTICIPATION LOAN

Participation loan. Because of statutory and regulatory limitations on the amount which a bank may lend to a single borrower, in some large loan arrangements two or more banks join in a loan with each bank lending a portion of the amount to the borrower.

Participation mortgage. Type of mortgage where lender participates in profits of venture beyond or in addition to normal interest rate.

Participes plures sunt quasi unum corpus in eo quod unum jus habent, et oportet quod corpus sit integrum, et quod in nulla parte sit defectus. /participio plūtryz sānt kwėūzay yūnwam kôrpas in ūyow kwôd yūwnam jās hēybat, ᣪ apōrtat kwôd kôrpes sid ĭntragam ēt kwôd in nāsā pârdiy sīt dafēkta/. Many partners are as one body, inasmuch as they have one right, and it is necessary that the body be perfect, and that there be a defect in no part.

Particula /partīčula/. A small piece of land.

Particular. Relating to a part or portion of anything; separate; sole; single; individual; specific; local; comprising a part only; partial in extent; not universal. Opposed to general. State v. Patterson, 60 Idaho 67, 88 P.2d 493, 497. Of, or pertaining to, a single person, class or thing. Albin v. Hughes, Tex.Civ. App., 304 S.W.2d 371, 372.

As to particular Average; Customs; Estate; Malice; and Partnership; see those titles.

Particularity. In a pleading, affidavit, or the like, is the detailed statement of particulars.

Particular lien. A particular lien is a right to retain a thing for some charge or claim growing out of, or connected with, the identical thing. Right to retain property of another on account of labor employed or money expended on that specific property, and such lien may arise by implication of law, usages of a trade, or by express contract.

Particulars. The details of a claim, or the separate items of an account. When these are stated in an orderly form, for the information of a defendant, the statement is called a "bill of particulars". See Particulars of criminal charges.

Particulars, bill of. See Particulars of criminal charges.

Particulars of breaches and objections. In an action brought, in England, for the infringement of letters patent, the plaintiff is bound to deliver with his declaration (now with his statement of claim) particulars (i.e., details) of the breaches which he complains of.

Particulars of criminal charges. A prosecutor, when a charge is general, is frequently ordered to give the defendant a statement of the specific acts charged (bill of particulars). Fed.R.Crim.P. 7. See Bill.

Particulars of sale. When property such as land, houses, shares, reversions, etc., is to be sold by auction, it is usually described in a document called the "particulars," copies of which are distributed among intending bidders. They should fairly and accurately describe the property.

Particular tenant. The tenant of a particular estate. See Estate.

Parties. The persons who take part in the performance of any act, or who are directly interested in any affair, contract, or conveyance, or who are actively concerned in the prosecution and defense of any legal proceeding. Green v. Bogue, 158 U.S. 478, 15 S.Ct. 975, 39 L.Ed. 1061. See also Party.

In the Roman civil law, the parties were designated as "actor" and "reus". In civil actions they are called "plaintiff" and "defendant"; in equity, "complainant", or "plaintiff", and "defendant"; in admiralty practice, "libelant" and "respondent" or "libelle"; in appeals, "appellant" and "respondent" or "appellee", or sometimes, "plaintiff in error" and "defendant in error"; in criminal proceedings, "State of ——" or "United States of America", and "defendant".

Indispensable parties. See Joiner.

Joiner of parties. See Joiner.

Necessary parties. See Joiner.

Parties to crime. See Accessory; Accomplice; Principal.

Proper parties. See Joiner.

Real party in interest. See Party.

Parties and privies. Parties to a deed or contract are those with whom the deed or contract is actually made or entered into. By the term "privies," as applied to contracts, is frequently meant those between whom the contract is mutually binding, although not literally parties to such contract. Thus, in the case of a lease, the lessor and lessee are both parties and privies, the contract being literally made between the two, and also being mutually binding; but, if the lessee assign his interest to a third party, then a privity arises between the assignee and the original lessor, although such assignee is not literally a party to the original lease.

Parties in interest. See Party (Real party in interest).

Partisan. An adherent to a particular party or cause as opposed to the public interest at large.

Partitio /parţish(y)ŏw/. Lat. In the civil law, partition; division. This word did not always signify dimidium, a dividing into halves.

Partitio legata /parţish(y)ŏw lājēydə/. In the civil law, a testamentary partition. This took place where the testator, in his will, directed the heir to divide the inheritance and deliver a designated portion thereof to a named legatee.

Partition. The dividing of lands held by joint tenants, coparceners, or tenants in common, into distinct portions, so that they may hold them in severalty. And, in a less technical sense, any division of real or personal property between co-owners, resulting in individual ownership of the interests of each. Division between several persons of property which belongs to them as co-owners; it may be compulsory (judicial) or voluntary. O'Brien v. O'Brien, 89 Misc.2d 433, 391 N.Y.S.2d 502, 503.
Commonly, the court will order the property sold and the proceeds divided instead of ordering a physical partition of the property.

_Oweity of partition_. See Oweity.

_Partition, deed of_. In conveyancing, a species of primary or original conveyance between two or more joint tenants, coparceners, or tenants in common, by which they divide the lands so held among them in severalty, each taking a distinct part.

_Partition of a succession_. The partition of a succession is the division of the effects of which the succession is composed, among all the co-heirs, according to their respective rights. Partition is voluntary or judicial. It is voluntary when it is made among all the co-heirs present and of age, and by their mutual consent. It is judicial when it is made by the authority of the court, and according to the formalities prescribed by law. Every partition is either definitive or provisional. Definitive partition is that which is made in a permanent and irrevocable manner. Provisional partition is that which is made provisionally, either of certain things before the rest can be divided, or even of everything that is to be divided, when the parties are not in a situation to make an irrevocable partition.

_Partner_. A member of partnership or firm; one who has united with others to form a partnership in business. See also _General partner_; _Partnership_.

_Dormant partners_. Those whose names are not known or do not appear as partners, but who nevertheless are silent partners, and partake of the profits, and thereby become partners, either absolutely to all intents and purposes, or at all events in respect to third parties. Dormant partners, in strictness of language, mean those who are merely passive in the firm, whether known or unknown, in contradistinction to those who are active and conduct the business of the firm, as principals. See also _Silent partner_.

_Full or general partner_. A partner who participates fully in the profits, losses and management of the partnership and who is personally liable for its debts.

_Junior partner_. A partner whose participation in the firm is limited as to both profits and management. See also _Limited partner, infra_.

_Limited partner_. A partner whose participation in the profits is limited by the agreement and who is not liable for the debts of the partnership beyond his capital contribution. See also _Partnership (Limited partnership)_.

_Liquidating partner_. The partner who, upon the dissolution or insolvency of the firm, is appointed to settle its accounts, collect assets, adjust claims, and pay debts.

_Nominal partner_. One whose name appears in connection with the business as a member of the firm, but who has no real interest in it.

_Ostensible partner_. One whose name appears to the world as such, or who is held out to all persons having dealings with the firm in the character of a partner, whether or not he has any real interest in the firm.

_Quasi partner_. One who has joined with others in a business which appears to be a partnership but who is not actually a partner, e.g. joint adventurer.

_Secret partner_. See _Dormant partners, supra_.

_Silent partner_. See _Dormant partners, supra_.

_Special partner_. A member of a limited partnership, who furnishes certain funds, and whose liability extends no further than the fund furnished. A partner whose responsibility is restricted to the amount of his investment.

_Surviving partner_. The partner who, on the dissolution of the firm by the death of his copartner, occupies the position of a trustee to settle up its affairs.

_Partnership_. A voluntary contract between two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor, and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, with the understanding that there shall as a partnership sharing of the profits and losses between them. _Burr v. Greenland, Tex.Civ.App._, 356 S.W.2d 370, 376; _Preston v. State Industrial Accident Commission_, 174 Or. 553, 149 P.2d 957, 961, 962. An association of two or more persons to carry on, as co-owners, a business for profit. Uniform Partnership Act, § 6(1). A synallagmatic and commutative contract made between two or more persons for the mutual participation in the profits which may accrue from property, credit, skill, or industry, furnished in determined proportions by the parties. Nearly all states have adopted the Uniform Partnership Act.

Partnerships are treated as a conduit and are, therefore, not subject to taxation. The various items of partnership income, gains and losses, etc. flow through to the individual partners and are reported on their personal income tax returns.

_Collapsible partnership_. See that title.

_Commercial partnership_. See _Trading partnership_.

_Family partnership_. One which family members control by being partners. Children may be partners but for tax purposes they should be given complete control over their interests; otherwise, the entire profits will be considered income of the active adult partners. See also _Family partnership_.

_General partnership_. A partnership in which the parties carry on all their trade and business, whatever it may be, for the joint benefit and profit of all the parties concerned, whether the capital stock be limited or not, or the contributions thereto be equal or unequal. One in which all the partners share the profits and losses as well as the management equally, though their capital contributions may vary.

_Implied partnership_. One which is not a real partnership but which is recognized by the court as such because of the conduct of the parties; in effect, the parties are estopped from denying the existence of a partnership.

_Limited partnership_. A partnership consisting of one or more general partners, jointly and severally responsible as ordinary partners, and by whom the business is conducted, and one or more special partners, contributing in cash payments a specific sum as capital to the common stock, and who are not liable for the debts of the partnership beyond the fund so contributed. See also Limited partnership.

Mining partnership. See that title.

Particular partnership. One existing where the parties have united to share the benefits of a single individual transaction or enterprise.

Partnership assets. Property of any kind belonging to the firm as such (not the separate property of the individual partners) and available to the recourse of the creditors of the firm in the first instance.

Partnership at will. One designed to continue for no fixed period of time, but only during the pleasure of the parties, and which may be dissolved by any partner without previous notice.

Partnership debt. One due from the partnership or firm as such and not (primarily) from one of the individual partners.

Partnership in commendam. A partnership formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished and no more.

Secret partnership. One where the existence of certain persons as partners is not avowed to the public by any of the partners. See Partner (Dormant partners).

Special partnership. At common law, one formed for the prosecution of a special branch of business, as distinguished from the general business of the parties, or for one particular venture or subject. A joint adventure under state statutes; such are usually considered "limited partnerships".

Subpartnership. One formed where one partner in a firm makes a stranger a partner with him in his share of the profits of that firm. It is not a partnership but an arrangement in which the subpartner shares in the profits and losses of a partner.

Statutory partnership association. A statutory creation in some states (e.g., Michigan, New Jersey, Ohio) which resembles a corporation more than a partnership, but which has many attributes of the limited partnership.

Trading partnership. See that title.

Universal partnership. One in which the partners jointly agree to contribute to the common fund of the partnership the whole of their property, of whatever character, and future, as well as present.

Partnership agreement. The document embodying the terms and conditions of a partnership and sometimes referred to as the articles of partnership.

Partnership articles. See Articles of partnership.

Partnership association. Type of business association which resembles in part a partnership and a joint stock company. Its salient feature is the limited liability of the members and is seldom used today.

Partnership certificate. A document evidencing the participation of the partners in a partnership and commonly furnished to financial institutions when the partnership borrows money.

Partnership insurance. See Insurance.

Part performance. A plaintiff who renders partial performance of a contract relying on the promised performance of the other party may successfully resist the defense of the statute of frauds under certain conditions. In order to establish part performance taking an oral contract for the sale of realty out of the statute of frauds, the acts relied upon as part performance must be of such a character that they can reasonably be naturally accounted for in no other way than that they were performed in pursuance of the contract, and they must be in conformity with its provisions. Camerota v. Wisniewski, 21 Conn.Sup. 88, 145 A.2d 138, 141. See U.C.C. § 2-201(3). See also Performance.

Partus /párds/. Lat. Child; offspring; the child just before it is born, or immediately after its birth.

Partus ex legitimo thoro non certius matrem quam genitorem suum /párds éks lajdámów ðórow nón sársh(í)yás nóst métryram kwám jéntórém s(y)jéswm/. The offspring of a legitimate bed knows not his mother more certainly than his father.

Partus sequitur ventrem /párds sékíwóat véntram/. The offspring follows the mother; the brood of an animal belongs to the owner of the dam; the offspring of a slave belongs to the owner of the mother, or follows the condition of the mother. A maxim of the civil law, which has been adopted in the law of England in regard to animals, though never allowed in the case of human beings.

Party, n. A person concerned or having or taking part in any affair, matter, transaction, or proceeding, considered individually. A "party" to an action is a person whose name is designated on record as plaintiff or defendant. M & A Elec. Power Co-op. v. True, Mo.App., 480 S.W.2d 310, 314. Term, in general, means one having right to control proceedings, to make defense, to adduce and cross-examine witnesses, and to appeal from judgment. City of Chattanooga v. Swift, 223 Tenn. 46, 444 S.W.2d 257, 258.

"Party" is a technical word having a precise meaning in legal parlance; it refers to those by or against whom a legal suit is brought, whether in law or in equity, the party plaintiff or defendant, whether composed of one or more individuals and whether natural or legal persons; all others who may be affected by the suit, indirectly or consequently, are persons interested but not parties. Gottle v. Mathews, D.C.Ala., 394 F.Supp. 1203, 1207.

See also Nominal defendant; Parties; Prevailing party.

Party aggrieved. Under statutes permitting any party aggrieved to appeal, one whose right has been directly and injuriously affected by action of court. Freeman v. Thompson, 216 N.C. 484, 5 S.E.2d 434, 436; Singer v. Allied Factors, 216 Minn. 443, 13 N.W.2d 376, 380. Any person having an interest recognized by law in the subject matter of the judgment, which interest is injuriously affected by the judgment, is a "party aggrieved" and entitled to be heard on appeal. Mize v. Crael, 29 C.A.3d 797, 106 Cal.Rptr. 34, 38. To be “party aggrieved” by judgment, appellant’s interest must be immediate, pecuniary and substantial and not nominal or remote consequence of judgment. Leoke v. San Bernardino County, 249 C.A.2d 787, 57 Cal.Rptr. 770, 772, 773. See also Aggrieved party.

Party to be charged. A phrase used in the statute of frauds, meaning the party against whom the contract is sought to be enforced. The party to be charged in the action—that is, the defendant.

Political party. A body of voters organized for the purpose of influencing or controlling the policies and conduct of government through the nomination and election of its candidates to office.

Real party in interest. Fed.R. Civ.P. 17(a) provides that every action shall be prosecuted by the “real party in interest.” The adoption of this rule was intended to change the common law rule which permitted suit to be brought only in the name of the person having the legal title to the right of action, and thus precluded suit by persons who had only equitable or beneficial interests. Under the rule the “real party in interest” is the party who, by the substantive law, possesses the right sought to be enforced, and not necessarily the person who will ultimately benefit from the recovery. This is illustrated by the further language of the rule stating that executors, administrators, and other named representatives may sue in their own name without joining with them the party for whose benefit the action is brought.

Third parties. A term used to include all persons who are not parties to the contract, agreement, or instrument of writing by which their interest in the thing conveyed is sought to be affected. See also Beneficiary.

In civil actions, a defendant, as a third-party plaintiff, may cause a summons and complaint to be served upon a person not a party to the action who is or may be liable to him for all or part of the plaintiffs’ claim against him. A similar right is afforded to the plaintiff when a counterclaim is asserted against him. Fed.R. Civ.P. 14. See Third party complaint; Third-party practice.

Party wall. A wall erected on a property boundary as a common support to structures on both sides, which are under different ownerships. A wall built partly on the land of one owner, and partly on the land of another, for the common benefit of both in supporting the construction of contiguous buildings. A division wall between two adjacent properties belonging to different persons and used for mutual benefit of both parties, but it is not necessary that the wall should stand part upon each of two adjoining lots, and it may stand wholly upon one lot. Soma Realty Co. v. Romeo, 31 Misc.2d 20, 220 N.Y.S.2d 752, 755.

In the primary and most ordinary meaning of the term, a party-wall is (1) a wall of which the two adjoining owners are tenants in common. But it may also mean (2) a wall divided longitudinally into two strips, one belonging to each of the neighboring owners; (3) a wall which belongs entirely to one of the adjoining owners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing wall between the two tenements (the term is so used in some of the English building acts); or (4) a wall divided longitudinally into two moieties, each moiety being subject to a cross easement in favor of the owner of the other moiety.

Parum /päram/. Lat. Little; but little.

Parum cavisse videtur /päram kawsial vadijdar/. Lat. Roman law. He seems to have taken too little care; he seems to have been incautious, or not sufficiently upon his guard. A form of expression used by the judge or magistrate in pronouncing sentence of death upon a criminal.

Parum differunt que re concordant /päram differant kwiy riy kankörland/. Things which agree in substance differ but little.

Parum est latam esse sententiam nisi mandetur executionem /päram est léydam esy sánténsh(y)am nássay mændéydar éksákuywiwshiyôwnay/. It is little [for little purpose] that judgment be given unless it be committed to execution.

Parum proficit scire quid fieri debet, si non cognoscas quomodo sit facturum /päram prôfisst sáíryi kwid fékyi yô debot, sáy nón kagnóskas kwôwmdaw sók fekt(y)ôram/. It profits little to know what ought to be done, if you do not know how it is to be done.

Par value. As regards stock, the face value of a share of stock. With reference to mortgages or trust deeds, the value of the mortgage based on the balance owing, without discount.

In the case of a common share, par means a dollar amount assigned to the share by the company’s charter. Par value may also be used to compute the dollar amount of the common shares on the balance sheet. Par value has little significance so far as market value of common stock is concerned. Many companies today issue no-par stock but give a stated per share value on the balance sheet. In the case of preferred shares and bonds, however, par is important. It often signifies the dollar value upon which dividends on preferred stocks, and interest on bonds, are figured. In the case of bonds and stock, the face value appearing on the certificate is the par value. Those stocks not containing such a statement have no par value.

Parva serjeantia /pärva særjyáéntsh(y)y)/. Petty serjeanty (q.v.).

Parvum cape /pärväm kéyp(ly)/. See Petit cape.

Pas /pâ/. In French. Precedence; right of going foremost.

Pass, v. To utter or pronounce, as when the court passes sentence upon a prisoner. Also to proceed; to be rendered or given, as when judgment is said to pass for the plaintiff in a suit.

In legislative parliance, a bill or resolution is said to pass when it is agreed to or enacted by the house, or when the body has sanctioned its adoption by the requisite majority of votes; in the same circumstances, the body is said to pass the bill or motion. See also Passage.

When an auditor appointed to examine into any accounts certifies to their correctness, he is said to pass them; i.e., they pass through the examination without being detained or sent back for inaccuracy or imperfection.

The term also means to examine into anything and then authoritatively determine the disputed questions which it involves. In this sense a jury is said to pass upon the rights or issues in litigation before them.

In the language of conveyancing, the term means to move from one person to another; i.e. to be transferred or conveyed from one owner to another.

To publish; utter; transfer; circulate; impose fraudulently. This is the meaning of the word when the offense of passing counterfeit money or a forged paper is spoken of.

"Pass," "utter," "publish," and "sell" are in some respects convertible terms, and, in a given case, "pass" may include utter, publish, and sell. The words "uttering" and "passing," used of notes, do not necessarily import that they are transferred as genuine. The words include any delivery of a note to another for value, with intent that it shall be put into circulation as money. Word "pass" when used in connection with negotiable instrument means to deliver, to circulate, to hand from one person to another. State v. Beaver, 266 N.C. 115, 145 S.E.2d 330, 331. See Delivery; Negotiation; Transfer; Utter.

Pass, n. Permission to pass; a license to go or come; a certificate, emanating from authority, wherein it is declared that a designated person is permitted to go beyond certain boundaries which, without such authority, he could not lawfully pass. Also a ticket issued by a railroad or other transportation company, authorizing a designated person to travel free on its lines, between certain points or for a limited time.

Passage. Act of passing; transit; transition. A way over water or land or through the air. An easement giving the right to pass over a piece of private water. Travel by sea; a voyage over water; the carriage of passengers by water; price paid for such carriage.

Enactment; the act of carrying a bill or resolution through a legislative or deliberative body in accordance with the prescribed forms and requisites. The emergence of the bill in the form of a law, or the motion in the form of a resolution. Passage may mean when bill has passed either or both houses of legislature or when it is signed by President or Governor.

Passagio /pæsɪˈdʒi.oʊ/-. An ancient writ addressed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man who had the king's leave to pass over sea.

Passator /pæsɪˈdoʊrər/. In old English law, he who has the interest or command of the passage of a river; or a lord to whom a duty is paid for passage.

Passbook. Document issued by a bank in which the customer's transactions (i.e. savings deposits and withdrawals) are recorded.

Passenger. In general, a passenger is one who gives compensation for a ride. Shapiro v. Booksplan, 155 Cal.App.2d 353, 318 P.2d 123, 126. The word passenger has various meanings, depending upon the circumstances under which and the context in which the word is used; sometimes it is construed in a restricted legal sense as referring to one who is being carried by another for hire; on other occasions, the word is interpreted as meaning any occupant of a vehicle other than the person operating it. American Mercury Ins. Co. v. Bifulco, 74 N.J.Super. 191, 181 A.2d 20, 22.

The essential elements of "passenger" as opposed to "guest" under guest statute are that driver must receive some benefit sufficiently real, tangible, and substantial to serve as the inducing cause of the transportation so as to completely overshadow mere hospitality or friendship; it may be easier to find compensation where the trip has commercial or business flavor. Friedhoff v. Engberg, 82 S.D. 522, 149 N.W.2d 759, 761, 762, 763.

A person whom a common carrier has contracted to carry from one place to another, and has, in the course of the performance of that contract, received under his care either upon the means of conveyance, or at the point of departure of that means of conveyance.

Passenger mile. In statistics of transportation, a unit of measure equal to the transport of one passenger over one mile of route.

Passim /ˈpæsɪm/. Lat. Everywhere. Often used to indicate a very general reference to a book or legal authority.

Passion. In the definition of manslaughter as homicide committed without premeditation but under the influence of sudden "passion" or "heat of passion", this term means any of the emotions of the mind known as rage, anger, hatred, furious resentment, or terror, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection.

Passive. As used in law, this term means inactive; permissive; consisting in endurance or submission, rather than action; and in some connections it carries the implication of being subjected to a burden or charge.

As to passive Debt; Negligence; Title; Trust; and Use; see those titles.

Passport. A document identifying a citizen, in effect requesting foreign powers to allow the bearer to enter and to pass freely and safely, recognizing the right of the bearer to the protection and good offices of American diplomatic and consular offices. U. S. v. Laub, U.S.N.Y., 385 U.S. 475, 87 S.Ct. 574, 578, 17 L.Ed.2d 526. A passport is evidence of permission from sovereign to its citizen to travel to foreign countries and to return to land of his allegiance, as well as request to foreign powers that such citizen be allowed to pass freely and safely. Worthy v. U. S., C.A.Fla., 326 F.2d 366, 391.

In international law. A license or safe-conduct, issued during the progress of a war, authorizing a person to remove himself or his effects from the territory of one of the belligerent nations to another country, or to travel from country to country without arrest or detention on account of the war.

Maritime. A document issued to a neutral merchant vessel, by her own government, during the progress of a war, to be carried on the voyage, to evidence her nationality and protect her against the cruisers of the belligerent powers. This paper is otherwise called a "pass," "sea-pass," "sea-letter," "sea-brief." It usually contains the captain’s or master’s name and residence, the name, property, description, tonnage, and destination of the ship, the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes, and its destination, with such other matters as the practice of the place requires.

Past consideration. In contracts, a detriment suffered by a contracting party at a time antecedent to the formation of a contract and hence, except in unusual cases, is not legally sufficient consideration to support a contract. In law of negotiable instruments, past consideration is sufficient to support a note or other negotiable instrument.

Past recollection recorded. A memorandum or record concerning a matter about which a witness once had knowledge but now has insufficient recollection to enable him to testify fully and accurately, shown to have been made or adopted by the witness when the matter was fresh in his memory and to reflect that knowledge correctly, is not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness. If admitted, the memorandum or record may be read into evidence but may not itself be received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party. Fed.Evid.R. 803(5).

Under the “past recollection recorded” doctrine, written report is properly admissible into evidence if witness has testified that on examination of the report he had no independent recollection of the matters contained therein. Lawson v. Belt Ry. Co. of Chicago, 34 Ill.App.3d 7, 339 N.E.2d 381, 394. Past recollection recorded is where a witness, who is either devoid of a present recollection or possessed of an imperfect present recollection, desires to use a past recollection by employing some record of such recollection. Askins v. State, 13 Md.App. 702, 284 A.2d 626, 630.

Patas /pâstas/. In feudal law, the procurement or provision which tenants were bound to make for their lords at certain times, or as often as they made a progress to their lands. It was often converted into money.

Patent universis per presentes /pâdiyst yûwnsvisras pêr praz-enterjî/. Know all men by these presents. Words with which letters of attorney anciently commenced.

Patent, adj. Open; manifest; evident; unsealed. Used in this sense in such phrases as “patent ambiguity,” “patent writ,” “letters patent.”

Letters patent. Open letters, as distinguished from letters close. An instrument proceeding from the government, and conveying a right, authority, or grant to an individual, as a patent for a tract of land, or for the exclusive right to make and sell a new invention. See Letters patent; Patent and Trademark Office.

Patent ambiguity. See Ambiguity.

Patent defect. In sales of personal property, one which is plainly visible or which can be discovered by such an inspection as would be made in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence. U.C.C. § 2–605(1).

A patent defect in a legal description is one which cannot be corrected on its face, and a new description must be used. Compare Latent defect.

Patent, n. A grant of some privilege, property, or authority, made by the government or sovereign of a country to one or more individuals.

The instrument by which a state or government grants public lands to an individual. A grant made by the government to an inventor, conveying and securing to him the exclusive right to make, use and sell his invention for a term of years. See Patent and Trademark Office.

See also Combination patent; File wrapper estoppel; Identity; Invent; Invention; Lapse patent; Letter patent; License; Official Gazette; Paper patent; Patent license; Process patent; Public use; Scope of patent; Shop right rule.

Land patent. A muniment of title issued by a government or state for the conveyance of some portion of the public domain.

Patent ambiguity. A patent ambiguity is an ambiguity which appears on the face of an instrument and arises from defective, obscure or insensible language used. Paliotto v. Town of Islip, 31 Misc.2d 447, 224 N.Y.S.2d 466, 474.

Patent-right. A right secured by patent; usually meaning a right to the exclusive manufacture and sale of an invention or patented article.

Patent-right dealer. Any one whose business it is to sell, or offer for sale, patent-rights.

Pioneer patent. A patent for an invention covering a function never before performed, or a wholly novel device, or one of such novelty and importance as to mark a distinct step in the progress of the art, as distinguished from a mere improvement or perfecting of what has gone before. Westinghouse v. Boyd Power-Brake Co., 170 U.S. 537, 18 S.Ct. 707, 42 L.Ed. 1136.

Plant patent. Granted to person who invents or discovers and asexually reproduces a distinct and new variety of plant; word “plant” being used in the popular sense. Kim Bros. v. Hagler, D.C.Cal., 167 F.Supp. 665, 667; 35 U.S.C.A. § 161 et seq.

Reissued patent. A patent securing rights of an inventor more definitely in some particular wherein the original patent was defective.

Tax treatment. A patent is an identifiable intangible asset which may be amortized over the remaining life of the patent. The sale of a patent usually results in favorable long-term capital gain treatment. I.R.C. § 1235. If developed internally by a company, the development costs are expenses when incurred under generally accepted accounting principles.

Patentable. Suitable to be patented; entitled by law to be protected by the issuance of a patent. And to be patentable, a device must embody some new idea or principle not before known, and it must be a dis-

Patent and copyright clause. Art. I, Sec. 8, cl. 8, U.S. Constitution, which provides for promoting the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

Patent and Trademark Office. Federal agency in the Department of Commerce headed by the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks. In addition to the examination of patent and trademark applications, issuance of patents, and registration of trademarks, the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) sells printed copies of issued documents; records and indexes documents transferring ownership; maintains a scientific library and search files containing over 20 million documents, including U.S. and foreign patents and U.S. trademarks; provides search rooms for the public to research their applications; hears and decides appeals from prospective inventors and trademark applicants; participates in legal proceedings involving the issue of patents or trademark registrations; helps represent the United States in international efforts to cooperate on patent and trademark policy; compiles the Official Gazettes—a weekly list of all patents and trademarks issued by the PTO; and maintains a roster of agents and attorneys qualified to practice before the PTO.

Patentee. He to whom a patent has been granted. The term is usually applied to one who has obtained letters patent for a new invention.

Patent infringement. The act of using or selling any patented invention without authority during the term of the patent and this includes one who induces the infringement. 35 U.S.C.A. § 271. See also Infringement.

Patent pooling. An arrangement in which a number of manufacturers agree to an interchange of patent licenses among the members of the pooling group.

Pater /pëydr/. Lat. A father; the father. In the civil law, this word sometimes included avus (grandfather).

Paterfamilias /pëydrfamili(ly)as/. The father of a family.

In Roman law, the head or master of a family.

This word is sometimes employed, in a wide sense, as equivalent to sui juris. A person sui juris is called “paterfamilias” even when under the age of puberty. In the narrower and more common use, a paterfamilias is any one invested with potestas over any person. It is thus as applicable to a grandfather as to a father.

Pater is est quem nuptiae demonstrant /pëydr is est kwêm napshiyi damonstrant/. The father is he whom the marriage points out.

Paternal. That which belongs to the father or comes from him.

Paternal line. A line of descent or relationship between two persons which is traced through the father.

Paternal power. The authority lawfully exercised by parents over their children. This phrase is also used to translate the Latin “patris potestas” (q.v.).

Paternal property. That which descends or comes to one from his father, grandfather, or other ascendant or collateral on the paternal side of the house.

Paternity. The state or condition of a father; the relationship of a father.

Paternity suit. A court action to prove that a person is the father of an illegitimate child and to enforce support obligations. See also Multiple access.

Pater patriae /pëydr pâtriyâ/. Father of the country. See Parens patriae.

Pathologist. One trained in the scientific study of disease, its causes, development and consequences.

Pathology. The science or doctrine of diseases. That part of medicine which explains the nature of diseases, their causes, and their symptoms.

Patiens /pëshiyen(d)z/. Lat. One who suffers or permits; one to whom an act is done; the passive party in a transaction.

Patient. Person under medical or psychiatric treatment and care.

Patient-physician privilege. The right of one who is a patient to refuse to divulge, or have divulged by his physician, the communications made between he and his physician. This privilege is provided for by statute in most states, and, where recognized, it belongs to the patient and not to the physician and hence, it may be waived by the patient.

Patric /pëtriya/pëtriya/. Lat. The country, neighborhood, or vicinage; the men of the neighborhood; a jury of the vicinage. Synonymous, in this sense, with “pais.”

Patria laboribus et expensis non debet futigari /pëtriya labôrâbas êd âskpënsas nôn débêt fätigâray/. A jury ought not to be harassed by labors and expenses.

Patria potestas /pëtriya potëtâs/. Lat. In Roman law, paternal authority; the paternal power. This term denotes the aggregate of those peculiar powers and rights which, by the civil law of Rome, belonged to the head of a family in respect to his wife, children (natural or adopted), and any more remote descendants who sprang from him through males only. Anci- ently, it was of very extensive reach, embracing even the power of life and death, but was gradually curtailed, until finally it amounted to little more than a right in the paterfamilias to hold as his own any property or acquisitions of one under his power.

Patria potestas in pleitate debet, non in atrociata, consisterre /pëtriya potëtâs èn pâlyatêdiy débêt, nôn in strôsâtêdiy kônsis térê/. Paternal power should consist [or be exercised] in affection, not in atrocity.
Patricia /páttrásýəd/. One who has killed his father.

The act of killing one’s father.

Patrimonial /páttrómnəl/yl/. Pertaining to a patri- mony; inherited from ancestors, but strictly from the direct male ancestors.

Patrimonium /páttrómnəm/yun/. In civil law, that which is capable of being inherited. The private and exclusive ownership or dominion of an individual. Things capable of being possessed by a single person to the exclusion of all others (or which are actually so possessed) are said to be in patrimonio; if not capa- ble of being so possessed (or not actually so pos- sessed), they are said to be extra patrimonium.

Patrimony /páttrəməni/. Such estate as has descendent in the same family. Estates which have descended or been devised in a direct line from the father, and, by extension, from the mother or other ancestor. It has been held that the word is not necessarily restricted to property inherited directly from the father.

Patrimony is the total mass of existing or potential rights and liabilities attached to a person for the satisfaction of his economic needs and patrimony is always attached to a natural or juridical person. Credeen v. Capitol Mack, Inc., La., 287 So.2d 497, 503.

Patrimony of a debtor is totality of assets and liabilities susceptible of pecuniary evaluation; as practical matter, debtor’s patrimony consists of assets which are subject to execution for benefit of creditor. Hastings v. Diming, La.App., 314 So.2d 744, 746.

Patrocinium /pətrəsínəm/um/. In Roman law, patronage; protection; defense. The business or duty of a patron or advocate.

Patrolman. A policeman assigned to duty in patrolling a certain beat or district; also the designation of a grade or rank in the organized police force of large cities, a patrolman being generally a private in the ranks, as distinguished from sergeants, lieutenants, etc.

Patron. In ordinary usage one who protects, countenances, or supports some person or thing; one who habitually extends material assistance; a regular customer; a protector or benefactor.

Patronage /pətrənəj/pətrənəj/. Collective term to describe the customers of a business. Also, the practice of a public official in making appointments to public (non-civil service) offices and to confer honors. The right of appointing to office, considered as a perquisite, or personal right; not in the aspect of a public trust.

Patronize /pətrənəz/pətrənəz/. To act as a patron, extend patronage, countenance, encourage, favor.

Patronum faciunt dos, edificatio, fundus /pətrəwnəm feʃis(j)ənt dowəs, iˈdifikəʃis(j)əw, fəndus/. Endowment, building, and land make a patron.

Patricius /pətrəwɪłəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a cousin-german by the father’s side; the son or daughter of a father’s brother.

Patruus /pətrəwəs/. Lat. An uncle by the father’s side; a father’s brother.

Patruus magnus /pətrəwəs máŋnas/. A grandfather’s brother; granduncle.

Patruus major /pətrəwəs májər/. A great-grandfa- ther’s brother.

Patruus maximus /pətrəwəs máksəmus/. A great-grandfather’s father’s brother.

Pattern. A reliable sample of traits, acts or other observables that characterizes an individual. Rich- erson v. Superior Court In and For Sacramento County, App., 70 Cal.Rptr. 350, 352.

The words “pattern or practice” within the Civil Rights Act provision which permits the Attorney General to seek relief when there is a pattern or practice of resistance to the Act is more than isolated or accidental instance of conduct in violation of the Act; it means an intentional, regular or repeated violation of the right granted by the Act. U. S. v. Hunter, C.A.Md., 459 F.2d 205, 217.

Pauper /pəˈpər/. A person so poor that he must be supported at public expense. A suitor who, on account of poverty, is allowed to sue or defend without being chargeable with costs; also, an indigent criminal defendant who has a right to assigned defense counsel. Fed.R.Crim.P. 44; Fed.R.App.P. 24. See Counsel, right to; Indigent; Pauper’s oath.

Dispauper. To deprive one of the status of a pauper and of any benefits incidental thereto: particularly, to take away the right to sue in forma pauperis because the person so suing, during the progress of the suit, has acquired money or property which would enable him to sustain the costs of the action.

Pauperies /pəˈpərəz/. Lat. In Roman law, damage or injury done by an irrational animal, without active fault on the part of the owner, but for which the latter was bound to make compensation.

Pauper’s oath. Affidavit, verification, or oath by person seeking public assistance, appointment of counsel, waiver of court fees, or other free services or benefits, that he or she is in fact impoverished and as such unable to pay for such. See also Poverty affida- vit.

Pawn, v. To deliver personal property to another in pledge, or as security for a debt or sum borrowed.

Pawn, n. A bailment of goods to a creditor, as security for some debt or engagement; a pledge. In common usage pawn means a pledge of chattels as distin- guished from pledges of choses in action, and in more limited sense means a deposit of personal property made to a pawnbroker as security for a loan; that sort of bailment when goods or chattels are delivered to another as security to him for money borrowed of him by the bailor.

Also the specific chattel delivered to the creditor as a pledge.

See Bailment; Pledge.

Pawnbroker. A person whose business is to lend mon- ey, usually in small sums, on security of personal property deposited with him or left in pawn.

Pawnee. The person receiving a pawn, or to whom a pawn is made; the person to whom goods are deliv- ered by another in pledge.
PAWNOR

Pay, n. Compensation; wages; salary; commissions; fees. The act or fact of paying or being paid. See Discharge; Payment.

Pay, v. To discharge a debt by tender of payment due; to deliver to a creditor the value of a debt, either in money or in goods, for his acceptance. U.C.C. §§ 2-511, 3-604. To compensate for goods, services or labor. See also Discharge; Payment.

Payable. Capable of being paid; suitable to be paid; admitting or demanding payment; justly due; legally enforceable. A sum of money is said to be payable when a person is under an obligation to pay it. Payable may therefore signify an obligation to pay at a future time, but, when used without qualification, term normally means that the debt is payable at once, as opposed to “owing.”

Payable after sight. Payable after acceptance of bill or protest for nonacceptance.

Payable on demand. Instruments payable on demand include those payable at sight or on presentation and those in which no time for payment is stated. U.C.C. § 3-108.

Payable to bearer. A negotiable instrument is payable to bearer when by its terms it is payable to (a) bearer or the order of bearer; or (b) a specified person or bearer; or (c) “cash” or the order of “cash”, or any other indication which does not purport to designate a specific payee. U.C.C. § 3-111. See also Negotiation.

Payable to order. A negotiable instrument is payable to order when by its terms it is payable to the order of or assigns of any person therein specified with reasonable certainty, or to him or his order, or when it is conspicuously designated on its face as “exchange” or the like and names a payee. U.C.C. § 3-110. See also Negotiation.

Pay any bank. After an item has been indorsed with the words “pay any bank” or the like, only a bank may acquire the rights of a holder: (a) until the item has been returned to the customer initiating collection; or (b) until the item has been specially indorsed by a bank to a person who is not a bank. U.C.C. § 4-201(2).

Payee. The person in whose favor a bill of exchange, promissory note, or check is made or drawn; the person to whom or to whose order a bill, note, or check is made payable. The entity to whom a cash payment is made or who will receive the stated amount of money on a check. One to whom money is paid or is to be paid. See Draft; Fictitious payee.

Payer, or payor. One who pays, or who is to make a payment; particularly the person who is to make payment of a check, bill or note. Correlative to “payee.”

Payling quantities. This phrase, as used in oil and gas leases, when applied to the production of oil, means such a quantity as will pay a profit on the cost of operating the well. Sufficient quantities to pay a reasonable profit on the whole sum required to be expended, including the cost of drilling, equipping, and operating the well. If the well pays a profit, even small, over operating expenses, it produces in paying quantities, though it may never repay its cost, and the operation as a whole may prove unprofitable.

Payment. The fulfilment of a promise, or the performance of an agreement. A discharge of an obligation or debt, and part payment, if accepted, is a discharge pro tanto.

In a more restricted legal sense payment is the performance of a duty, promise, or obligation, or discharge of a debt or liability, by the delivery of money or other value by a debtor to a creditor, where the money or other valuable thing is tendered and accepted as extinguishing debt or obligation in whole or in part. Also the money or other thing so delivered. U.C.C. §§ 2-511, 3-604.

Payment is a delivery of money or its equivalent in either specific property or services by one person from whom it is due to another person to whom it is due. Sizemore v. E. T. Barwick Industries, Inc., 225 Tenn. 226, 465 S.W.2d 873, 875. A discharge in money or its equivalent of an obligation or debt owing by one person to another, and is made by debtor’s delivery to creditor of money or some other valuable thing, and creditor’s receipt thereof, for purpose of extinguishing debt. Allmon v. Allmon, Mo. App., 306 S.W.2d 651, 655.

Under Internal Revenue Code provision allowing deduction for charitable contribution of which payment is made within taxable year, “payment” need not be in money, but subject matter must have been placed beyond dominion and control of donor. Paulley v. U. S., C.A.Cal., 459 F.2d 624, 626.

The execution and delivery of negotiable papers is not payment unless it is accepted by the parties in that sense. U.C.C. § 3-410.

See also Compulsory payment; Conditional payment; Constructive payment; Down payment; Installment credit; Installment loan; Installment sale; Involuntary payment; Liquidation; Lump-sum payment; Pay.

Affirmative defense. Payment is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded under Fed.R. Civil P. 8(c).

Balloon payment. See Balloon payment.
Part payment. The reduction of any debt or demand by the payment of a sum less than the whole amount originally due.

The rule of partial payments is to apply the payment, in the first place, to the discharge of the interest then due. If the payment exceeds the interest, the surplus goes toward discharging the principal, and the subsequent interest is to be computed on the balance of principal remaining due. If the payment be less than the interest, the surplus of the interest must not be taken to augment the principal; but interest continues on the former principal until the period of time when the payments, taken together, exceed the interest then due, to discharge which they are applied, and the surplus, if any, is to be applied towards the discharge of the principal, and the interest is to be computed on the balance as aforesaid, and this process continues until final settlement.

Payment into court. The act of a defendant in depositing the amount which he admits to be due, with the proper officer of the court, for the benefit of the plaintiff and in answer to his claim. Fed.R. Civ.P. 67.

Voluntary payment. A payment made by a debtor of his own will and choice, as distinguished from one exacted from him by process of execution or other compulsion.

Payment guaranteed. "Payment guaranteed" or equivalent words added to a signature mean that the signer engages that if the instrument is not paid when due he will pay it according to its tenor without resort by the holder to any other party. U.C.C. § 4-416.

Payor. The person by whom a bill or note has been or should have been paid.

Payroll tax. Tax based on and deducted from payroll. A "payroll tax" is a government or state tax on employers as a percentage of wages and salaries paid to employees. City of Richmond v. Fary, 210 Va. 338, 171 S.E.2d 257, 260.

PBGC. Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

Peace. For purposes of breach of the peace statute, peace is that state and sense of safety which is necessary to the comfort and happiness of every citizen, and which government is instituted to secure. State v. Boles, 5 Conn.Cir. 22, 240 A.2d 920, 927. Term, within law of breach of the peace, means tranquility enjoyed by citizens of the municipality or community where good order reigns among its members. State v. Edwards, 239 S.C. 339, 123 S.E.2d 247, 249.

The tranquility enjoyed by a political society internally, by the good order which reigns among its members, and externally by the good understanding it has with all other nations. Applied to the internal regulations of a nation, peace imports, in a technical sense, not merely a state of repose and security as opposed to one of violence or warfare, but likewise a state of public order and decorum. Catlette v. U. S., C.C.A.W.Va., 132 F.2d 902, 906.

Articles of the peace. See Articles.

Bill of peace. See Bill.

Breach of peace. See Breach.

Conservator of the peace. See Conservator.

Justice of the peace. See that title.

Peace and quietude. Public tranquility and obedience to law, and that public order and security which is commanded by the laws of a particular sovereign.

Peace officers. This term is variously defined by statute in the different states; but generally it includes sheriffs and their deputies, constables, marshals, members of the police force of cities, and other officers whose duty is to enforce and preserve the public peace. In general, any person who has been given general authority to make arrests. Generally a "peace officer" is a person designated by public authority to keep the peace and arrest persons guilty or suspected of crime and he is a conservator of the peace, which term is synonymous with the term "peace officer." Vandiver v. Manning, 215 Ga. 874, 114 S.E.2d 121, 124.

Peace of God and the church. In old English law, that rest and cessation which the king's subjects had from trouble and suit of law between the terms and on Sundays and holidays.

Public peace. The peace or tranquility of the community in general; the good order and repose of the people composing a state or municipality. That invisible sense of security which every man feels so necessary to his comfort, and for which all governments are instituted.

Public peace and quiet. Peace, tranquility, and order and freedom from agitation or disturbance; the security, good order, and decorum guaranteed by civil society and by the law.

Peaceable. Free from the character of force, violence, or trespass; as, a "peaceable entry" on lands. "Peaceable possession" of real estate is such as is acquired in by all other persons, including rival claimants, and not disturbed by any forcible attempt at ouster nor by adverse suits to recover the possession or the estate. Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U.S. 508, 13 S.Ct. 418, 37 L.Ed. 259.

Peace bond. Type of surety bond required by a judge or magistrate of one who has threatened to breach the peace.

Pecat contra naturam sunt gravissima /pokêyda kóntra nat(y)ūrum sânt gravisâma/. Crimes against nature are the most heinous.

Pecatum pecetto addit (ut alve quam facit patrocinia defenseonis adjungunt /pokêyda pokêyda wēdat kwây kalpi/kwây fēysat pātrosin(i)ka dâfešniyōrnas ajanjâjt/. He adds fault to fault who sets up a defense of a wrong committed by him.

Peck. A measure of two gallons; a dry measure.

Peculation. The unlawful appropriation, by a depositary of public funds, of the property of the government intrusted to his care, to his own use, or that of others. The fraudulent misappropriation by one to his own use of money or goods intrusted to his care.

Peculatus /pekylëysas/. Lat. In the civil law, the offense of stealing or embezzling the public money.

Peculiar, adj. /pekylëyiysar/. Particular or special. Wolf v. Mallinckrodt Chemical Works, 336 Mo. 746, 81 S.W.2d 323, 330.

Pecullum /pekylëyiysam/. Lat. In Roman law, such private property as might be held by a slave, wife, or son who was under the patria potestas, separate from the property of the father or master, and in the personal disposal of the owner.

Pecunia /pekylëyn(i)ya/. In old English law, goods and chattels.

In the civil law, property in general, real or personal; anything that is actually the subject of private property. In a narrower sense, personal property; fungible things. In the strictest sense, money. This has become the prevalent, and almost the exclusive, meaning of the word.

Pecunia constituta /pekylëyn(i)ya konsstat(y)yüwda/. In Roman law, money owing (even upon a moral obligation) upon a day being fixed (constituta) for its payment, became recoverable upon the implied promise to pay on that day, in an action called "de pecunia constituta," the implied promise not amounting (of course) to a stipulatio.

Pecunia non numerata /pekylëyn(i)ya nön n(y)yüwmarëyda/. In the civil law, money not paid. The subject of an exception or plea in certain cases.

Pecunia numerata /pekylëyn(i)ya n(y)yüwmarëyda/. Money numbered or counted out; i.e., given in payment of a debt.

Pecunary /pekylëyiysariy/. Monetary; relating to money; financial; consisting of money or that which can be valued in money.

As to pecunary Consideration; Damages; and Legacy; see those titles.

Pecunary benefits. Benefits that can be valued in money. Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Moore, Tex.Civ.App., 52 S.W.2d 104. Pecuniary benefits available to parents by reason of death of an adult child encompass those benefits, including money, that can be reasonably estimated in money, such as labor, services, kindness and attention of child to parents. Borak v. Bridge, Tex.Civ.App., 524 S.W.2d 773, 776.

Pecunary bequest. A bequest of money to a legatee by a testator. Also known as a monetary bequest. See Bequest.

Pecunary causes. In English ecclesiastical practice, causes arising from the withholding of ecclesiastical dues, or the doing or neglecting some act relating to the church whereby some damage accrues to the plaintiff. 3 Bl.Comm. 88.

Pecunary condition. Within statute relative to obtaining goods by false pretenses, comprehends, not only money in hand, but property and all other assets of value constituting an existing fact that go to make up financial responsibility as a basis of credit.

Pecuniary consideration. See Consideration.

Pecuniary damages. See Damages; Pecuniary loss.

Pecuniary formulas. In federal estate taxation, a gift to a surviving spouse of an amount equal to the maximum marital deduction to which the estate is entitled, less the value of any other interests passing to the surviving spouse that qualify for the marital deduction. See also Marital deduction.

Pecuniary injury. The words "pecuniary injuries" within wrongful death statute mean the deprivation of a reasonable expectation of pecuniary advantages, which would have resulted by continuance of life of deceased. Gluckauf v. Pine Lake Beach Club, Inc., 78 N.J.Super. 8, 187 A.2d 357, 363. Such compensation includes damages for deprivation of support, of companionship, guidance, advice, love and affection of deceased. Hall v. Gillins, 13 Ill.2d 26, 147 N.E.2d 352, 355. See also Consortium; Damages (Pecuniary damages); Loss; Pecuniary loss.

Pecuniary interest. A direct interest related to money in an action or case as would, for example, require a judge to disqualify himself from sitting on a case if he owned stock in corporate party.

Pecuniary legacy. See Legacy.

Pecuniary loss. A loss of money, or of something by which money or something of money value may be acquired. As applied to a dependent's loss from death pecuniary loss means the reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continued life of the deceased: such includes loss of services, training, nurture, education, guidance, and society. Sea Land Services, Inc. v. Gaudet, 414 U.S. 573, 94 S.Ct. 806, 39 L.Ed.2d 9.

See also Pecuniary injury.

Pecunia sepulchrall /pekylëyn(i)ya sepolkreylas/. Money anciently paid to the priest at the opening of a grave for the good of the deceased's soul.

Pecunia trajectilla /pekylëyn(i)ya trajectitish(y)ya/. In the civil law, a loan in money, or in wares which the debtor purchases with the money to be sent by sea, and whereby the creditor, according to the contract, assumes the risk of the loss from the day of the departure of the vessel until the day of her arrival at her port of destination. Interest does not necessarily arise from this loan, but when it is stipulated for, it is termed "nauticum fanes" (maritime interest), and, because of the risk which the creditor assumes, he is permitted to receive a higher interest than usual.

Pedage /pëdaj/. In old English law, a toll or tax paid by travelers for the privilege of passing, on foot or mounted, through a forest or other protected place.

Pedagium /podëyi(y)am/. L. Lat. Pedage (q.v.).

Pedaus /podólis/. (Lat. Pes foot). In civil law, a judge who sat at the foot of the tribunal, i.e. on the lowest seats, ready to try matters of little moment at command of the prætor.
Peddler. An itinerant trader; a person who sells small wares which he carries with him in traveling about from place to place, and whose activities generally require that he be licensed by the city or town within which he peddles. Distinguished from “trader” who has goods for sale and sells them in a fixed place of business. Commonwealth v. Bergeron, 296 Mass. 60, 5 N.E.2d 31, 32. See also Hawkcr.

Pederasty /pédəræstɪə/. In criminal law, the unnatural carnal copulation of male with male, particularly of a man with a boy; a form of sodomy (q.v.).

Pedestrian. A person traveling on foot. The statutory definition of "pedestrian" is broad enough to include persons standing upon the highway as well as those traversing it. See v. Willett, 58 Wash.2d 39, 360 P.2d 592, 593. Person on foot does not cease to be “pedestrian” within policy covering injuries sustained while a pedestrian merely because he is not in motion. Peterson v. Continental Cas. Co., 25 Utah 2d 408, 483 P.2d 445, 446.

Pedigree /pədɪgrɪ/. Lineage, descent, and succession of families; line of ancestors from which a person descends; genealogy. An account or register of a line of ancestors. Family relationship.

Evidence. Statements of fact concerning genealogy are not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness. Fed.Evid.R. 803.

Pedis abscessio /pɪdɪs ˈæbˌsɛʃɪə(ɪ)ˈəʊw/ . Lat. In old feudal criminal law, the cutting off a foot; a punishment anciently inflicted instead of death.

Pedis positio /pɪdɪs ˈpɒzɪʃɪə(ɪ)ˈəʊw/ . Lat. In the civil and old English law, a putting or placing of the foot. A term used to denote the possession of lands by actual corporeal entry upon them.

Pedis possessio /pɪdɪs ˈpɒzɪʃɪə(ɪ)ˈəʊw/ . Lat. A foot-hold; an actual possession. To constitute adverse possession there must be pedis possessio, or a substantial inclosure.

Peeping tom. A person who makes it a habit of sneaking up to windows and peeping in, for the purpose generally of seeing the women of the household in the nude. Browder v. Cook, D.C.Idaho, 59 F.Supp. 225, 231.

Peerage /ˈpɪrɪdʒ/. The rank or dignity of a peer or nobleman. Also the body of nobles taken collectively.

Peeress /ˈpɪrəs/. A woman who belongs to the nobility, which may be either in her own right or by right of marriage.

Peers /ˈpɜːrs/. In feudal law, the vassals of a lord who sat in his court as judges of their co-vassals, and were called “peers,” as being each other’s equals, or of the same condition. The nobility of Great Britain, being the lords temporal having seats in parliament, and including dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons.

Equals; those who are a man’s equals in rank and station; thus “trial by a jury of his peers” means trial by jury of citizens. For “judgment of his peers,” see Judgment.

Peers of fees. Vassals or tenants of the same lord, who were obliged to serve and attend him in his courts, being equal in function. These were termed “peers of fees,” because holding fees of the lord, or because their business in court was to sit and judge, under their lords, of disputes arising upon fees; but, if there were too many in one lordship, the lord usually chose twelve, who had the title of peers, by way of distinction; whence, it is said, we derive our common juries and other peers.

Peg. To fix the price of something, as the government may stabilize the price of gold by offering to buy all the gold offered at a stated price. Speculators in stocks may peg the price of securities by frequent buying and selling at the pegged price, though today such manipulation is illegal.

Peine fort et dure /ˈpɛːn ˈfɔːrt əˈduːr/ . L. Fr. In old English law, a special form of punishment for those who, being arraigned for felony, obstinately “stood mute,” that is, refused to plead or to put themselves upon trial. It is described as a combination of solitary confinement, slow starvation, and crushing the naked body with a great load of iron. This atrocity punishment was vulgarly called "pressing to death."

Peles /ˈpɪlz/. Issues arising from or out of a thing.

Pelfe, or pelfre /ˈpɛlfr(ə)r/ . Booty; also the personal effects of a felon convict.

Pellage /ˈpɛləj/. The custom or duty paid for skins of leather.

Pellex /ˈpɛləks/. Lat. In Roman law, a concubine.

Pells, clerk (or master) of the /ˈklɛr kər əl ˈəl/ pɛlz/ˈmæstər/ . Formerly, an officer in the English exchequer, who entered every teller's bill on the parchment rolls, i.e., "pells," commonly two in number, one being the pell or roll of receipts, and the other the pell or roll of disbursements.

Penal. Punishable; inflicting a punishment; containing a penalty, or relating to a penalty.

Penal action. In its broadest context, it refers to criminal prosecution. More particularly, it refers to a civil action in which a wrongdoer is subject to a fine or penalty payable to the aggrieved party.

The word “penal” is inherently a much broader term than “criminal” since it pertains to any punishment or penalty and relates to acts which are not necessarily delineated as criminal. State v. Lowry, 95 N.J.Super. 307, 230 A.2d 907, 913. Action is essentially “penal” if amount sought to be recovered is arbitrarily exacted for some act or omission of the defendant. Tasner v. U. S. Industries, Inc., D.C.III., 379 F.Supp. 803, 806.

An action upon a penal statute; an action for the recovery of a penalty given by statute. Smith Engineering Works v. Custer, 194 Okl. 318, 151 P.2d 404, 407, 408. In a broad sense, the term has been made to include all actions in which there may be a recovery of exemplary or vindictive damages, as suits for libel and slander, or in which special, double, or treble damages are given by statute, such as actions to recover money paid as usury or for violation of antitrust laws. But in a more particular sense it means (1) an action on a statute which gives a certain penalty to be recovered by any person who will sue for it, or (2) an action in which the judgment against the defendant is in the nature of a fine or is intended as a punishment, actions in which the recovery is to be compensatory in its purpose and effect not being penal actions but civil suits, though they may carry special damages by statute.

Penal bill. An instrument formerly in use, by which a party bound himself to pay a certain sum or sums of money, or to do certain acts, or, in default thereof, to pay a certain specified sum by way of penalty; thence termed a "penal sum." These instruments have been superseded by the use of a bond in a penal sum, with conditions.

Penal bond. A promise to pay a named sum of money, the penalty, in the event of nonperformance, with a condition underwritten that, if a stipulated collateral thing, other than the payment of money, be done or forborne, the obligation shall be void. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Kansas City, Mo., C.C.A.Mo., 128 F.2d 956, 1004. Bond conditioned upon forfeiture of penalty for its breach. See Penalty.

Penal clause. A secondary obligation entered into for purpose of enforcing performance of a primary obligation, and nature of penalty is by way of compensation for damages and not as punishment for failure to perform obligation. Also a clause in a statute declaring a penalty for a violation of the preceding clauses.

Penal code. Bringing together and codification of substantive criminal laws of state or federal government; e.g. California Penal Code; Title 18 of U.S. Code. Several state Penal or Criminal Codes are patterned on the A.I.L. Model Penal Code.

Penal institutions. Generic term to describe all places of confinement for those convicted of crime such as jails, prisons, and houses of correction.

Penal laws. Term, in general, refers to state and federal statutes that define criminal offenses and specify corresponding fines and punishment. Statutes imposing a penalty, fine, or punishment for certain offenses of a public nature or wrongs committed against the state.

Strictly speaking, statutes giving a private action against a wrongdoer are not penal in their nature, neither the liability imposed nor the remedy given being penal. If the wrong done is to the individual, the law giving him a right of action is remedial, rather than penal, though the sum to be recovered may be called a "penalty" or may consist in double or treble damages. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U.S. 657, 13 S.Ct. 224, 36 L.Ed. 1123.

Where a statute is both penal and remedial, as where it is penal in one part and remedial in the other, it should be considered as a "penal statute" when it is sought to enforce the penalty, and as a "remedial statute" when it is sought to enforce the remedy. Collins v. Kidd, D.C.Tex., 38 F.Supp. 634, 637.

See also Penal code.

Penal servitude. In English criminal law, a punishment which consists in keeping an offender in confinement, and compelling him to labor.

Penal statutes. See Penal code; Penal laws.

Penal sum. A sum agreed upon in a bond, to be forfeited if the condition of the bond is not fulfilled. See also Penal bond; Penalty.

Penalty. An elastic term with many different shades of meaning: it involves idea of punishment, corporeal or pecuniary, or civil or criminal, although its meaning is generally confined to pecuniary punishment. Allied v. Graves, 261 N.C. 31, 134 S.E.2d 186, 192.

The sum of money which the obligor of a bond undertakes to pay in the event of his omitting to perform or carry out the terms imposed upon him by the conditions of the bond. A penalty is a sum inserted in a contract, not as a measure of compensation for its breach, but rather as punishment for default, or by way of security for actual damages which might be sustained by reason of nonperformance. Stein v. Bruce, Mo.App., 366 S.W.2d 732, 735. The sum a party agrees to pay in the event of a contract breach, but which is fixed, not as a pre-estimate of probable actual damages, but as a punishment, the threat of which is designed to prevent the breach. Westmount Country Club v. Kameny, 82 N.J.Super. 200, 197 A.2d 379, 382.

A penalty provision operates to compel performance of act and usually becomes effective only in event of default on which a forfeiture is compelled without regard to actual damages sustained by party aggrieved by breach. Garrett v. Coast and Southern Federal Sav. and Loan Ass'n, 9 C.3d 731, 108 Cal. Rptr. 845, 850.

A penalty is a sum of money which the law exacts payment of by way of punishment for doing some act which is prohibited or for not doing some act which is required to be done. Hidden Hollow Ranch v. Collins, 146 Mont. 321, 406 P.2d 365, 368. A penalty imposed by statute as a consequence of the commission of an offense. Also money recoverable by virtue of a statute imposing a payment by way of punishment.

See also Fine; Forfeiture; Penal action; Statutory penalty.

Penalty clause. Any provision in a contract or a law which calls for the exaction of a penalty instead of actual damages; e.g. in a mortgage, a clause requiring the mortgagor to pay a flat sum or a percentage of the mortgage debt if he exercises his right to pay off the mortgage before the due date or within a short time after the mortgage has been given.

Penance. An ecclesiastical punishment inflicted by an ecclesiastical court for some spiritual offense.

Pendency. Suspense; the state of being pendent or undecided; the state of an action, etc., after it has been begun, and before the final disposition of it.

Pendens /pəndɛn(d)z/. Lat. Pending; as lis pendens, a pending suit.

Pendentie lite /pədɛntɪə lɪt/. Lat. Pending the suit; during the actual progress of a suit; during litigation.

Pendentie lite nihil innovetur /pədɛntɪə lɪdɪə ˈnɪhɪl ɪnˈvɪnvətə/. During a litigation nothing new should be introduced.
Pendent jurisdiction. Pendent jurisdiction is discretionary matter whereby court may allow assertion of nonfederal claim for which no independent jurisdictional ground exists along with recognized federal claim between same parties who are properly before the court, provided relationship between federal claim and state claim permits conclusion that entire action before court comprises but one constitutional case. Schwab v. Erie Lackawanna R. Co., D.C.Pa., 303 F.Supp. 1398, 1399. Original jurisdiction resting under federal claim extends to any nonfederal claim against same defendant if the federal question is substantial and the federal and nonfederal claims constitute a single cause of action. Fullerton v. Monongahela Connecting R. Co., D.C.Pa., 242 F.Supp. 622, 626. Such jurisdiction exists, even though it is determined that no cause of action is made out under federal grounds. Tausig v. Wellington Fund, Inc., D.C.Del., 187 F.Supp. 179, 191. The test is whether substantially the same evidence will prove both the federal and nonfederal claims. Wagner v. World Wide Automobiles Corp., D.C.N.Y., 201 F.Supp. 22, 24.

Pendent jurisdiction pertains to the concept whereby a federal district court, in the exercise of jurisdiction over a federal law claim properly before it, may also, in its discretion, proceed to extend jurisdiction over a related state law claim where both claims arise from a common nucleus of operative facts. Barnes v. Childs, D.C.Miss., 63 F.R.D. 628, 630.

Pending. Begun, but not yet completed; during; before the conclusion of; prior to the completion of; unsettled; undetermined; in process of settlement or adjustment. Thus, an action or suit is "pending" from its inception until the rendition of final judgment.

See also Pendentive lice.

Penetration. A term used in criminal law, and denoting (in cases of alleged rape) the insertion of the male part into the female parts to however slight an extent; and by which insertion the offense is complete without proof of emission.

Penitentiary. A prison or place of confinement where convicted felons are sent to serve out the term of their sentence.

Pennoyer Rule. A rule to the effect that a court which has no personal jurisdiction over a defendant may not issue an in personam judgment or decree against him. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565.

Pennsylvania Rule. Under the "Pennsylvania Rule," when one party has committed a statutory violation that is claimed to have caused a collision, the rule requires the alleged violator to show, if he is to be freed from fault, that the violation could not have been a cause of the collision. Crown, Zellerbach Corp. v. Willamette-Western Corp., C.A.Or., 519 F.2d 1327, 1329.

Penny stocks. Low-priced issues often highly speculative, selling at less than $1 a share.

Pennyweight. A Troy weight, equal to twenty-four grains, or one-twentieth part of an ounce.

Penology. The science of prison management and rehabilitation of criminals.

Pen register. A pen register is a mechanical device that records the numbers dialed on a telephone by monitoring the electrical impulses caused when the dial on the telephone is released. It does not overhear oral communications and does not indicate whether calls are actually completed.

Pensam /pénsam/. The full weight of twenty ounces.

Pensio /pénsh(ī)yow/. Lat. In the civil law, a payment, properly, for the use of a thing. A rent; a payment for the use and occupation of another's house.

Pension. Retirement benefit paid regularly (normally, monthly), with the amount of such based generally on length of employment and amount of wages or salary of pensioner. Deferred compensation for services rendered. State ex rel. Bolen v. City of Seattle, Wash., 377 P.2d 454; Waite v. Waite, 6 C.3d 461, 99 Cal.Rptr. 325, 330, 492 P.2d 13. See also Pension plan; Vested pension.

Pensioner. Recipient or beneficiary of a pension plan.

Pension plan. A plan established and maintained by an employer primarily to provide systematically for the payment of definitely determinable benefits to its employees, or their beneficiaries, over a period of years (usually for life) after retirement. Retirement benefits are measured by, and based on, such factors as years of service and compensation received by the employees. The Employees Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) governs plan qualification, operation, and administration, and specifically such matters as participation requirements, funding, vesting and filing and reporting with the Internal Revenue Service and Labor Department. Pension benefits under qualified plans are guaranteed by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

A stated allowance out of the public treasury granted by government to an individual, or to his representatives, for his valuable services to the country, or in compensation for loss or damage sustained by him in the public service. Frisbie v. U. S., 157 U.S. 160, 15 S.Ct. 586, 39 L.Ed. 657.

See also Individual retirement account; Keogh Plan; Money-purchase plan; Pension trust.

Defined pension plan. A pension plan where the employer promises specific benefits to each employee. The employer's cash contributions and pension expense are adjusted in relation to investment performance of the pension fund. Sometimes called a "fixed-benefit" pension plan.
PENSION PLAN

Funded pension plan. See Funded.

Noncontributory plan. A pension plan where only the employer makes payments to a pension fund.

Qualified pension plan. An employer-sponsored plan that meets the requirements of I.R.C. § 401. If these requirements are met, none of the employer's contributions to the plan will be taxed to the employee until distributed to him or her [§ 402]. The employer will be allowed a deduction in the year the contributions are made [§ 404].

Pension trust. Type of funded pension plan in which the employer transfers to trustees an amount sufficient to cover cost of pensions to employees who are the beneficiaries of the trust.

Penumbra doctrine. The implied powers of the federal government predicated on the Necessary and Proper Clause of the U.S.Const., Art. I, Sec. 8(18), permits one implied power to be engrafted on another implied power. Kohl v. U. S., 91 U.S. 367, 23 L.Ed. 449.

Peonage /piˈeɪndʒ/. A condition of servitude (prohibited by 13th Amendment) compelling persons to perform labor in order to pay off a debt.

People. A state; as the people of the state of New York. A nation in its collective and political capacity. The aggregate or mass of the individuals who constitute the state. Loi Hoa v. Nagle, C.C.A.Cal., 13 F.2d 80, 81. In a more restricted sense, and as generally used in constitutional law, the entire body of those citizens of a state or nation who are invested with political power for political purposes. See also Citizen; Person.

Peppercorn. A dried berry of the black pepper. In English law, the reservation of a merely nominal rent, on a lease, was sometimes expressed by a stipulation for the payment of a peppercorn.

Per /pɜɹ/. Lat. By, through, or by means of.

Perambulation /pərəˈmɛbləˌʃən/. The act or custom of walking over the boundaries of a district or piece of land, either for the purpose of determining them or of preserving evidence of them. Thus, in many parishes in England, it is the custom for the parishioners to perambulate the boundaries of the parish in rotation week in every year. Such a custom entitles them to enter any man's land and abate nuisances in their way. The custom has now largely fallen into disuse.

Perambulatione facienda, writ de /rɪt diˈrɛ parəˌmɛbələˈʃiːənɛə/ . In old English law, the name of a writ which was sued by consent of both parties when they were in doubt as to the bounds of their respective estates. It was directed to the sheriff to make perambulation, and to set the bounds and limits between them in certainty.

Per and post /pɜɹ ənd pəʊst/. In old English law, to come in in the per is to claim by or through the person last entitled to an estate; as the heirs or assigns of the grantee. To come in in the post is to claim by a paramount and prior title; as the lord by escheat.

Per annum /pɜɹ əˈnʌm/. By the year; annually; yearly.

Per autre vie /pɜɹ ˈɔwtrə ˈviː/ *ˈvai/. L. Fr. For or during another's life; for such period as another person shall live.

Per aversionem /pɜɹ əˈvɜːrʃənəm/. Lat. In the civil law, by turning away. A term applied to that kind of sale where the goods are taken in bulk, and not by weight or measure, and for a single price; or where a piece of land is sold as containing in gross, by estimation, a certain number of acres. So called because the buyer acts without particular examination or discrimination, turning his face, as it were, away.

Per bouche /pɜɹ bʊ(ʃ)ə/. L. Fr. By the mouth; orally.

Perca /pɜɹkə/. A perch of land; sixteen and one-half feet. See Perch.

Per capita /pɜɹ kəˈpeɪtə/. Lat. By the heads or polls; according to the number of individuals; share and share alike. This term, derived from the civil law, is much used in the law of descent and distribution, and denotes that method of dividing an intestate estate by which an equal share is given to each of a number of persons, all of whom stand in equal degree to the decedent, without reference to their stocks or the right of representation. It is the antithesis of per stirpes (q.v.). Buxton v. Noble, 146 Kan. 671, 73 F.2d 43, 47; MacGregor v. Roux, 198 Ga. 520, 32 S.E.2d 289, 291. A division "per capita" means by a number of individuals equally or share and share alike. Gilbert v. Wenzel, 247 Iowa 1278, 78 N.W.2d 783, 794.

Per cent. An abbreviation of the Latin "per centum," meaning by the hundred, or so many parts in the hundred, or so many hundredths.

Percentage lease. A lease, usually on a retail business property, using a percentage of the gross or net sales to determine the rent. There is usually a minimum or "base" rental, in the event of poor sales.

Percentage of completion method. A method of reporting gain or loss on certain long-term contracts. Under this method of accounting, the gross contract price is included in income as the contract is completed.

Percentage order. A market or limited price order to buy (or sell) a stated amount of a certain stock after a fixed number of shares of such stock have traded.

Perception. Taking into possession. Thus, perception of crops or of profits is reducing them to possession. As used with respect to money, it means the counting out and payment of a debt. Seeing, noticing or otherwise comprehending.

Perch. A measure of land containing five yards and a half, or sixteen feet and a half in length; otherwise called a "rod" or "pole."

Percolate /pərˈkɒliːt/. As used in the cases relating to the right of land-owners to use water on their premises, designates any flowage of sub-surface water other than that of a running stream, open, visible, clearly to be traced.

Percolating waters /pərˈkɒliːdɪŋ wəˈder/. See Water.
Percolation test. The test to determine the capability of the soil to absorb and drain water, both for construction and septic systems.

Per consequens /pər kənˈsɛkwəns/. Lat. By consequence; consequently.

Per considerationem curiae /pər kan(t)siðərɛʃəhiˈwɔnəm kəˈriə/. Lat. In old practice, by the consideration (judgment) of the court.

Per curiam /pər kəriˈæam/. Lat. By the court. A phrase used to distinguish an opinion of the whole court from an opinion written by any one judge. Sometimes it denotes an opinion written by the chief justice or presiding judge, or to a brief announcement of the disposition of a case by court not accompanied by a written opinion.

Per diem /pər ˈdiːəm/.*ˌdīəm/. By the day; an allowance or amount of so much per day. For example, state legislators are often given a per diem allowance to cover expenses while attending legislative sessions. Generally, as used in connection with compensation, wages or salary, means pay for a day’s service.

Perdonatio utlugarie /pərdənəˈtiːʃ(ə)n yˈuːtəˈlɡəriːə/. L. Lat. A pardon for a man who, for contempt in not yielding obedience to the process of a court, is outlawed, and afterwards of his own accord surrenders.

Perduellio /pərd(y)uˈwɛl(i)ˈjow/. Lat. In Roman law, hostility or enmity towards the Roman republic; traitorous conduct on the part of a citizen, subversive of the authority of the laws or tending to overthrow the government.

Perdurabile /pərd(y)ʉˈrəˌbəl/ˌpərˈʒarəˌbəl/. In old English law, as applied to an estate, perdurable signifies lasting long or forever. Thus, a disseisor or tenant in fee upon condition has as high and great an estate as the rightful owner or tenant in fee-simple absolute, but not so perdurable. The term is chiefly used with reference to the extinguishment of rights by unity of seisin, which does not take place unless both the right and the land out of which it is held are held for equally high and perdurable estates.

Perempt /pərˈɛm(p)t/. In old ecclesiastical procedure, to waive or bar an appeal by one’s own act so as partially to comply with or acquiesce in a sentence of a court.

Peremption /pərˈɛm(p)ˈʃən/. A nonsuit; also a quashing or killing.

Peremptorius /pərˈɛm(p)tɔrioʊs/. Lat. In the civil law, that which takes away or destroys forever; hence, exceptio peremptoria, a plea which is a perpetual bar.

Peremptory /pərˈɛm(p)toʊrɪə/. Imperative; final; decisive; absolute; conclusive; positive; not admitting of question, delay, reconsideration or of any alternative. Self-determined; arbitrary; not requiring any cause to be shown. Wolfe v. State, 147 Tex.Cr.R. 62, 178 S.W.2d 274, 279.

As to peremptory Defense; Mandamus; Nonsuit; Plea; and Writ, see those titles.

Peremptory challenge. The right to challenge a juror without assigning a reason for the challenge. In most jurisdictions each party to an action, both civil and criminal, has a specified number of such challenges and after using all his peremptory challenges he is required to furnish a reason for subsequent challenges. Fed.R.Crim.P. 24. See also Challenge; Jury challenge.

Peremptory day. A day assigned for trial or hearing in court, absolutely and without further opportunity for postponement.

Peremptory exceptions. In the civil law, any defense which denies entirely the ground of action. Those exceptions which tend to the dismissal of the action.

Peremptory rule. In practice, an absolute rule; a rule without any condition or alternative of showing cause. Ruling made by a trial judge or hearing magistrate “on the spot” and without taking the matter under advisement.

Peremptory undertaking. In English law, an undertaking by a plaintiff to bring on a cause for trial at the next sitting or assizes.

Per eundem /pər ɪˈwəndəm/. Lat. By the same. This phrase is commonly used to express “by, or from the mouth of, the same judge.” So “per eundem in eadem” means “by the same judge in the same case.”

Perfect or perfected. Complete; finished; executed; enforceable; without defect; merchantable; marketable.

As to perfect Equity; Obligation; Ownership; Title; and Usufruct; see those titles.

Perfect attestation clause. One that asserts performance of all acts required to be done to make valid testamentary disposition.

Perfected. Brought to a state of perfection, completed. See Perfect; Perfection of security interest.

Perfecting ball. Certain qualifications of a property character being required of persons who tender themselves as ball, when such persons are justified, i.e., established their sufficiency by satisfying the court that they possess the requisite qualifications; a rule or order of court is made for their allowance, and the bail is then said to be perfected, i.e., the process of giving bail is finished or completed.

Perfect instrument. An instrument such as a deed or mortgage is said to become perfect or perfected when recorded (or registered) or filed for record, because it then becomes good as to all the world.

Perfection of security Interest. Perfection of a security interest deals with those steps legally required to give a secured party an interest in subject property against debtor's creditors. Bramble Transp., Inc. v. Sam Senter Sales, Inc., Del.Super., 294 A.2d 97, 102.

The minimum meaning of this term in connection with a security interest is that the secured party has done whatever is necessary in the way of giving notice to make his security interest effective at least against lien creditors of the debtor. Depending upon the type of collateral and the method of perfection, it may mean more: it may mean that the interest is... good even against all purchasers. The methods for attaining perfection are stated in U.C.C. Sections 9-302 through 9-306. In most cases the secured party may obtain perfection either by filing (i.e. with Secretary of State) or by taking possession of the collateral. When the collateral is held by a bailee who has not issued a negotiable document of title, perfection by notification is possible: the secured party may obtain perfection by notifying the bailee of the secured party's interest. For a few special situations the Code provides that a security interest is perfected without any of the above actions on the part of the secured party. Such perfection is called automatic perfection, or perfection by attachment.

Perfect trust. An executed trust (q.v.).

Perfectum est cui nihil deest secundum sua perfectionis vel nature modum /perféktam ést k(yúw)ály náy(h)ál dijést skándam s(y)úwi perforéshiónnás vel nachúry moówdámi/. That is perfect to which nothing is wanting, according to the measure of its perfection or nature.

Perfidy /pérʃďí/,. The act of one who has engaged his faith to do a thing, and does not do it, but does the contrary. Faithlessness, treachery, violation of a promise or vow or a trust reposed.

Perform. To perform an obligation or contract is to execute, fulfill, or accomplish it according to its terms. This may consist either in action on the part of the person bound by the contract or in omission to act, according to the nature of the subject-matter; but the term is usually applied to any action in discharge of a contract other than payment.

Per formam doni /pér fór'mam dón'yi/. L. Lat. In English law, by the form of the gift; by the designation of the giver, and not by the operation of law.

Performance. The fulfillment or accomplishment of a promise, contract, or other obligation according to its terms. See also Execute; Execution; Part performance; Payment; Substantial performance.

Non performance. See Commercial frustration; Default; Impossibility.

Part performance. The doing some portion, yet not the whole, of what either party to a contract has agreed to do.

Part performance of an obligation, either before or after a breach thereof, when expressly accepted by the creditor in writing, in satisfaction, or rendered in pursuance of an agreement in writing for that purpose, though without any new consideration, extinguishes the obligation.

As regards the sale of goods, the statute of frauds requirement is dispensed with by partial performance for the goods which have been accepted or for which payment has been made and accepted. U.C.C. § 2–201(3). See also Part performance.

Specific performance. The remedy of performance of a contract in the specific form in which it was made, or according to the precise terms agreed upon. The actual accomplishment of a contract by a party bound to fulfill it. The doctrine of specific performance is that, where damages would be an inadequate compensation for the breach of an agreement, the contractor or vendor will be compelled to perform specifically what he has agreed to do; e.g. ordered to execute a specific conveyance of land. See Fed.R. Civil P. 70.

With respect to sale of goods, specific performance may be decreed where the goods are unique or in other proper circumstances. The decree for specific performance may include such terms and conditions as to payment of the price, damages, or other relief as the court may deem just. U.C.C. §§ 2–711(2)(b), 2–716.

As the exact fulfillment of an agreement is not always practicable, the phrase may mean, in a given case, not literal, but substantial performance.

Performance bond. A performance bond or, as it is sometimes referred to, "completion bond", is given to insure public authority that contract once awarded will be completed as awarded within fixed period of time. Extruded Louver Corp. v. McNulty, 34 Misc.2d 566, 226 N.Y.S.2d 220, 224. Bond which guarantees that contractor will perform contract and guarantees against breach of contract. Isaac v. Reliance Ins. Co., 201 Kan. 298, 440 P.2d 600, 605.

Per fraudem /pér fröďám/. Lat. By fraud. In common law pleading, where a plea alleges matter of discharge, and the replication avers that the discharge was fraudulently obtained and is therefore invalid, it is called a "replication per fraudem."

Periculosum existimo quod honorum virorum non comprobatur exemplo /péríkalówسم əzgi'stamów kwód bénówrm várówrm nōn kómprábéyðð agzémpłow/. I consider that dangerous which is not approved by the example of good men.

Periculosus /péríkalówsws/. Lat. Dangerous; perilous.

Periculum /péríkalów/. Lat. In the civil law, peril; danger; hazard; risk.

Peril. The risk, hazard, or contingency insured against by a policy of insurance. In general, the cause of any loss such as may be caused by fire, hail, etc. See also imminent peril.

Perils of the lakes. As applied to navigation of the Great Lakes, this term has the same meaning as "perils of the sea." See Infra.

Perils of the sea. In maritime and insurance law, natural accidents peculiar to the sea, which do not happen by the intervention of man, nor are to be prevented by human prudence. Hence to recover on marine policy insuring against loss by perils of sea, vessel must be seaworthy when it is sent to sea. Perils of the sea are from (1) storms and waves; (2) rocks, shoals, and rapids; (3) other obstacles, though of human origin; (4) changes of climate; (5) the confinement necessary at sea; (6) animals peculiar to the sea; (7) all other dangers peculiar to the sea. All losses caused by the action of wind and water acting on the property insured under extraordinary circumstances, either directly or mediately, without the intervention of other independent active external causes, are losses by "perils of the sea or other perils and dangers," within the meaning of the usual clause in a policy of marine insurance. In an enlarged sense, all losses which occur from maritime adventure may be said to arise from the perils of the sea; but underwriters are not bound to this extent. They insure against losses from extraordinary occurrences only; such as stress of weather, winds and waves, lightning, tempests, etc. These are understood to be meant by the phrase "the perils of the sea," in a marine policy, and not those ordinary perils which every vessel must encounter.

Peril of the sea within a marine policy envisions extraordinary and unusual perils which vessel may not reasonably expect to encounter; circumstances which are ordinarily encountered such as predictable winds, tides, wave actions and conditions of the water do not fall within such classification. Vining v. Security Ins. Co. of New Haven, La.App., 252 So.2d 754, 757. Under Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, "perils of the sea" are understood to mean those perils which are peculiar to sea and which are of extraordinary nature or arise from irresistible force or overwhelming power, and which cannot be guarded against by ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence. New Rotterdam Ins. Co. v. S. S. Lopper-sum, D.C.N.Y., 215 F.Supp. 563, 566, 567.

Per incuriam /pər ɪnk(ə)rɪəm/. Lat. Through inadvertence.

Per industriam hominis /pər indəstriəm həmənas/. Lat. In old English law, by human industry. A term applied to the reclamation of wild animals by art, industry, and education.

Per infortunium /pər infərˈtʃʊniəm/. Lat. By misadventure. In criminal law, homicide per infortunium is committed where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another. See Homicide.

Period. Any point, space, or division of time.

Periodic. Recurring at fixed intervals; to be made or done, or to happen, at successive periods separated by determined intervals of time, as periodic payments of interest on a bond, or periodic alimony payments.

Periodic alimony. An allowance payable at intermittent times, usually by the week or by the month, in a definite amount over a definite or indefinite period of time. An award of periodic alimony is appropriate according to the needs of the spouse requesting alimony and the corresponding ability of the other spouse to pay. Cann v. Cann, Fla.App., 334 So.2d 325, 328. State statutes which provide for alimony payments only from husbands, and not wives, have been held unconstitutional. Orr v. Orr, 99 S.Ct. 1102. See also Alimony; Permanent alimony.

Periodic tenancy. Generic term descriptive of a tenancy from week to week, month to month, or year to year.

Periodic tenancy is one continuing tenancy subject to termination at various rental periods rather than a series of individual and new tenancies. Rossow Oil Co. Inc. v. Heiman, 72 Wis.2d 686, 242 N.W.2d 176, 180. An estate that continues for successive periods unless terminated at end of a period by notice. State v. Fin & Feather Club, Me., 316 A.2d 351, 357.

Peripheral rights. Those rights which surround or spring from other rights.

Periphrasis. Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one.

Perish. To come to an end; to cease to be; to die.

Perishable. Subject to speedy and natural decay (e.g. fruits, vegetables, dairy products, meat). But, where the time contemplated is necessarily long, the term may embrace property liable merely to material depreciation in value from other causes than such decay.

Perishable commodity. A relative term used to describe a product, like fruit or fresh vegetables, which quickly deteriorates in quality and value. In re Rosenbaum Grain Corporation, C.C.A.III., 83 F.2d 391, 393.

Perishable goods. Goods which quickly decay and lose their value if not put to their intended use within a short period of time.

Perjuri sunt qui servatis verbis juramenti diecipient omnes eorum quae accepit /pərˈfɜrəri sɔnt kwə ˈsiːrvətəs vɜrˈbɪs ˈdʒʊrəmənti ˈdiːsəˈpɛnt əˈmoʊns əˈɛrəʊs kwə ˈəkəpət/. They are perjured, who, preserving the words of an oath, deceive the ears of those who receive it.

Perjury. In criminal law, the willful assertion as to a matter of fact, opinion, belief, or knowledge, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding as part of his evidence, either upon oath or in any form allowed by law to be substituted for an oath, whether such evidence is given in open court, or in an affidavit, or otherwise, such assertion being material to the issue or point of inquiry and known to such witness to be false. Perjury is a crime committed when a lawful oath is administered, in some judicial proceeding, to a person who swears willfully, absolutely, and falsely, in a matter material to the issue or point in question. Gatewood v. State, 15 Md.App. 314, 290 A.2d 551, 553.

A person is guilty of perjury if in any official proceeding he makes a false statement under oath or equivalent affirmation, or swears or affirms the truth of a statement previously made, when the statement is material and he does not believe it to be true. Model Penal Code, § 241.1. See also 18 U.S.C.A. § 1621.

Subornation of perjury is procuring another to commit perjury. See 18 U.S.C.A. § 1622.

See also False swearing.

Perks. See Perquisites.

Per legem terrae /pər lɪˈjeɪm tɛˈri/. Lat. By the law of the land; by due process of law.

Permanent. Continuing or enduring in the same state, status, place, or the like, without fundamental or marked change, not subject to fluctuation, or alteration, fixed or intended to be fixed; lasting; abiding; stable; not temporary or transient. Hiatt v. Department of Labor and Industries, 48 Wash.2d 843, 297 P.2d 244, 246. Generally opposed in law to "temporary," but not always meaning "perpetual."
As to permanent "Injunction"; and "Trespass"; see those titles.

Permanent abode. A domicile or fixed home, which the party may leave as his interest or whim may dictate, but which he has no present intention of abandoning. See also Domicile; Residence.

Permanent alimony. An allowance for the support and maintenance of a spouse during his or her lifetime, and its purpose is to provide nourishment, sustenance and the necessities of life to a former spouse who has neither the resources nor ability to be self-sustaining. Cann v. Cann, Fla.App., 334 So.2d 325, 329. See also Alimony; Periodic alimony.

Within insurance policies does not mean that disability must continue throughout life of insured, but it connotes idea that disability must be something more than temporary, and at least presumably permanent.

Permanent employment. As provided for by contract, means only that employment is to continue indefinitely and until either party wishes to sever relation for some good reason. Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters of Pacific, Cal.App., 158 P.2d 426, 429.

Permanent law. An act which continues in force for an indefinite time.

Per metas et bundas /pēr mētās et būndās/. L. Lat. In old English law, by metes and bounds.

Per minus /pēr māmīnas/. Lat. By threats. See Duress.

Per misadventure /pēr misadvēnchar/. In old English law, by mischance. The same with per infortunium (q.v.).

Permission. A license to do a thing; an authority to do an act which, without such authority, would have been unlawful. An act of permitting, formal consent, authorization, leave, license or liberty granted, and it has a flexible meaning depending upon the sense in which it is used. Winterton v. Van Zandt, Mo., 351 S.W.2d 696, 700. See also Authority; Certificate; License; Permit.

Permissions. Negations of law, arising either from the law's silence or its express declaration.

Permissive. Allowed; allowable; that which may be done. Lenient; tolerant.

Permissive counterclaim. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 13(b) grants defendant unqualified right to interpose "permissive counterclaim"; one that does not arise out of same transaction or occurrence furnishing subject matter of plaintiff's claim, and court possesses no discretion to reject it. U. S. for Use and Benefit of Kashulines v. Thermo Contracting Corp., D.C.N.J., 437 F.Supp. 195, 198. See also Counterclaim.

Permissive use. See Use.

Permissive waste. See Waste.

Permit, v. To suffer, allow, consent, let; to give leave or license; to acquiesce, by failure to prevent, or to expressly assent or agree to the doing of an act.

Permit, n. In general, any document which grants a person the right to do something. A license or grant of authority to do a thing. Matter of Building Permit and Zoning, 29 N.C.App. 749, 225 S.E.2d 647, 649. A written license or warrant, issued by a person in authority, empowering the grantee to do some act not forbidden by law, but not allowable without such authority.

A license or instrument granted by the officers of excise (or customs), certifying that the duties on certain goods have been paid, or secured, and permitting their removal from some specified place to another.

See also Building permit; Certificate; License; Special permit.

Permit card. A document given by a union to a non-union member which allows an employer to hire him for a job for which the union is unable to supply sufficient members.

Per mitter le droit /pēr miďār la dros/. L. Fr. By passing the right. One of the modes by which releases at common law were said to inure was "per mitter le droit," as where a person who had been disseised released to the disseisor or his heir or foeeffe. In such case, by the release, the right which was in the releasor was added to the possession of the releasee, and the two combined perfected the estate.

Per mitter l'estate /pēr miďār lastēt/. L. Fr. By passing the estate. At common law, if two or more are seised, either by deed, devise, or descent, as joint tenants or coparceners of the same estate, and one of them releases to the other, this is said to inure by way of "per mitter l'estate."

Permutatio /pērmūtātyēsh(y)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, exchange; barter.

Permutation /pērmūtātīyshān/. The exchange of one movable subject for another; barter.

Per my et per tout /pēr miē yē pēr tūt/. L. Fr. By the half and by the whole. A phrase descriptive of the mode in which joint tenants hold the joint estate, the effect of which, technically considered, is that for purposes of tenure and survivorship each is the holder of the whole, but for purposes of alienation each has only his own share, which is presumed in law to be equal.
Pernancy. Taking; a taking or receiving; as of the profits of an estate. Actual pernancy of the profits of an estate is the taking, perception, or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom.

Pernor of profits /pær'nɔr av prófəts/. He who receives the profits of lands, etc.; he who has the actual pernancy of the profits.

Pernour /pær'nɔr/. L. Fr. A taker. Le pernour ou le detenour, the taker or the detainer.

Per pais, trial /trɑy(s)əl pær pɛy(s)/. Trial by the country; i.e., by jury.

Perpars /pɜrpərz/. L. Lat. A purpart; a part of the inheritance.

Perpetration. The act of one committing a crime either with his own hands, or by some means or instrument or through some innocent agent.

Perpetrator /pɜprɪtrədər/. Generally, this term denotes the person who actually commits a crime or delict, or by whose immediate agency it occurs.

Perpetual /pɜrpə'chjuːwal/. Never ceasing; continuous; enduring; lasting; unlimited in respect of time; continuing without interruption or interval.

As to perpetual Injunction; Lease; and Statute, see those titles.

Perpetual edict. In Roman law, originally the term "perpetual" was merely opposed to "occasional" and was used to distinguish the general edicts of the prætors from the special edicts or orders which they issued in their judicial capacity. But under Hadrian the edict was revised by the jurist Julianus, and was republished as a permanent act of legislation. It was then styled "perpetual," in the sense of being calculated to endure in perpetuum, or until abrogated by competent authority.

Perpetua lex est nullam legem humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse, et clausula que abrogationem exclu stirred ab initio non valet /pær'pɛchuːwə lɛks ət nɪtl lɪəjɪm hjuvɪ'mɛnɪm ək poʊzə'tævəm pær'pɛchuːvəm ɛsɪ, ət kləz(ɪ)əl kwɪd əbrəgɛ'ʃɪlɪə'nɛm əks klɪ(ɪ)əwʊd əb ənɪʃ(ɪ)ow nɒn ˈvælət/. It is a perpetual law that no human and positive law can be perpetual, and a clause [in a law] which precludes the power of abrogation is void ab initio.

Perpetual succession. That continuous existence which enables a corporation to manage its affairs, and hold property without the necessity of perpetual conveyances, for the purpose of transmitting it. By reason of this quality, this ideal and artificial person remains, in its legal entity and personality, the same, though frequent changes may be made of its members.

Perpetuating testimony. Means or procedure permitted by federal and state discovery rules for preserving the testimony of witness, which might otherwise be lost before the trial in which it is intended to be used. Fed.R. Civ.P. 27(a) (depositions before trial).

Perpetuities, rule against. See Perpetuity; Rule (Rule against perpetuities).

Perpetuity /pærpə'kwɔːdɪə/. Continuing forever. Legally, pertaining to real property, any condition extending the inalienability or property beyond the time of a life or lives in being plus twenty one years. A perpetuity is a limitation which takes the subject-matter of the perpetuity out of commerce for a period greater than a life or lives in being and 21 years thereafter, plus ordinary period of gestation. Zahn v. National Bank of Commerce of Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 328 S.W.2d 783, 789. See also Rule (Rule against perpetuities).

Perpetuity of the king. That fiction of the English law which for certain political purposes ascribes to the king in his political capacity the attribute of immortality; for, though the reigning monarch may die, yet by this fiction the king never dies, i.e., the office is supposed to be reoccupied for all political purposes immediately on his death.

Per procuration /pær prɔkɹərəˈʃən/. By proxy; by one acting as an agent with special powers, as under a letter of attorney. These words give notice to all persons that the agent is acting under a special and limited authority. The phrase is commonly abbreviated to "per proc.," or "p. p.," and is more used in the civil law and in England than in American law. A proxy or signature of a principal executed by an agent who discloses his role as agent on the document.

Per que servitia /pær kwɪd máriˈʃɪə/. Lat. In old English law, a real action by which the grantee of a seigniory could compel the tenants of the grantor to attend to himself. It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27, § 35.

Perquisites /pɜrˈkwɪzɪts/. Emoluments, fringe benefits, or other incidental profits or benefits attaching to an office or position. Shortened term "Perks" is used with reference to such extraordinary benefits afforded to business executives (e.g. free cars, club memberships, insurance, etc.).

Perquisites /pɜrkwaˈzɪts/. Purchase. Acquisition by one's own act or agreement, and not by descent.

Perquisitor /pɜrkwaˈzɪdər/. In old English law, a pur- chaser; one who first acquired an estate to his family; one who acquired an estate by sale, by gift, or by any other method, except only that of descent.

Per quod /pær kwɒd/. Lat. Whereby. When the declaration in an action of tort, after stating the acts complained of, goes on to allege the consequences of those acts as a ground of special damage to the plaintiff, the recital of such consequences is prefaced by these words, "per quod," whereby; and sometimes the phrase is used as the name of that clause of the declaration or complaint.

At the common law, "per quod" acquired two meanings in the law of defamation: when used in the frame of reference of slander it meant proof of special damages was required and when used in the frame of reference of libel it meant that proof of extrinsic circumstances was required. General Motors Corp. v. Piskor, 27 Md.App. 95, 340 A.2d 767, 783.

Words "actionable per quod" are those not actionable per se upon their face, but are only actionable in consequence of extrinsic facts showing circumstances under which they were said or the damages resulting to slandered party therefrom.

See also Actionable per quod.

Per quod consortium amissit /pər kwəd kənˌsɔrθəm əm əˈmɪzət/. Lat. In old pleading, whereby he lost the company [of his wife]. A phrase used in the old declarations in actions of trespass by a husband for beating or ill using his wife, descriptive of the special damage he had sustained. Crocker v. Crocker, C.C. Mass., 98 F. 702, 703. See Consortium.

Per quod servitium amissit /pər kwəd ˈsɜrvətjuːm əm əˈmɪzət/. Lat. In old pleading, whereby he lost the service [of his servant]. A phrase used in the old declarations in actions of trespass by a master, for beating or ill using his servant, descriptive of the special damage he had himself sustained. This action was commonly brought by the father for the seduction of his daughter, in which case very slight evidence of the relation of master and servant was necessary; but still some loss of service, or some expense, had to be shown.

Per rationes pervenitur ad legitimam rationem /pər rəˈʃeɪliʊnəˌrɪtər əd ˈlɛgɪtɪməm rəˈʃeɪliʊnəm/. By reasoning we come to true reason.

Per rerum naturam factum negantis nulla probatio est /pər rərəm ˈnærəm ˈfæktəm nəɡəˈtæntz ˈnɔlə prəˈbæʃ(ə)ləʊ ˈɛst/. It is in the nature of things that he who denies a fact is not bound to give proof.

Per saltum /pər səˈləmt/. Lat. By a leap or bound; by a sudden movement; passing over certain proceedings.

Per sample /pər ˈsæmpəl/. By sample. A purchase so made is a collateral engagement that the goods shall be of a particular quality. U.C.C. § 2-313(1)(c).

Per se /pər sə/ˈsiː/ /ˈsiː/. Lat. By himself or itself; in itself; taken alone; inherently; in isolation; unconnected with other matters. The term "per se" means by itself; simply as such; in its own nature without reference to its relation; and, in connection with the lex, the term is applied to words which are actionable because they of themselves, without anything more, are opprobrious. McGaw v. Webster, 79 N.M. 104, 440 P.2d 296, 298.

In law of defamation, certain words and phrases are actionable as slander in and of themselves without proof of special damages, e.g. accusation of crime. Used in contrast to defamation per quod which requires proof of special damage. See Actionable per se.

Persecutio /pərˈsɛkjyʊwʃ(ə)ləʊ/. Lat. In the civil law, a following after; a pursuing at law; a suit or prosecution. Properly that kind of judicial proceeding before the praetor which was called "extraordinary." In a general sense, any judicial proceeding, including not only "actions" (actions), properly so called, but other proceedings also.

Per se doctrine. Under the "per se doctrine," if an activity is blatant in its intent and pernicious in its effect, a court need not inquire into the reasonableness of the same before determining that it is a violation of the antitrust laws. Connecticut Ass'n of Clinical Laboratories v. Connecticut Blue Cross, Inc., 31 Conn.Sup. 10, 324 A.2d 288, 291. See Per se violations.

Persequi /pərˈsɛkwɪ/. Lat. In the civil law, to follow after; to pursue or claim in form of law. An action is called a "fus persequendi."

Per se violations. A term that implies that certain types of business agreements, such as price-fixing, are considered inherently anti-competitive and injurious to the public without any need to determine if the agreement has actually injured market competition. See Per se doctrine.

Person. In general usage, a human being (i.e. natural person), though by statute term may include a firm, labor organizations, partnerships, associations, corporations, legal representatives, trustees, trustees in bankruptcy, or receivers. National Labor Relations Act, § 2(1).

Bankruptcy Act. "Person" includes individual, partnership, and corporation, but not governmental unit. Sec. 101(30).

Foreign government. Foreign governments otherwise eligible to sue in U.S. courts are "persons" entitled to bring treble-damage suit for alleged antitrust violations under Clayton Act, Section 4. Pfizer, Inc. v. Government of India, C.A.Minn., 550 F.2d 396.

Interested person. Includes heirs, devisees, children, spouses, creditors, beneficiaries and any others having a property right in or claim against a trust estate or the estate of a decedent, ward or protected person which may be affected by the proceeding. It also includes persons having priority for appointment as personal representative, and other fiduciaries representing interested persons. The meaning as it relates to particular persons may vary from time to time and must be determined according to the particular purposes of, and matter involved in, any proceeding. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201(20).

Municipalities. Municipalities and other government units are "persons" within meaning of 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983. Local government officials sued in their official capacities are "persons" for purposes of Section 1983 in those cases in which a local government would be liable in its own name. Monell v. N. Y. City Department of Social Services, 436 U.S. 658, 98 S.Ct. 2018, 56 L.Ed.2d 611. See Color of law. Protected person. One for whom a conservator has been appointed or other protective order has been made. Uniform Probate Code, § 5-101(3).
Resident alien. A resident alien is a "person" within the meaning of the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. C. D. R. Enterprises, Ltd. v. Board of Ed. of City of New York, D.C.N.Y., 412 F.Supp. 1164, 1168.

Unborn child. Word "person" as used in the Fourteenth Amendment does not include the unborn. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 729, 35 L.Ed.2d 147. A fetus is not a "person" and is not entitled to protection under the equal protection clause. Murray v. Clifford, C.A.N.J., 502 F.2d 1066, 1068.

A viable unborn child, which would have been born alive but for the negligence of defendant, is a "person" within meaning of Wrongful Death Statute. Simons v. Howard University, D.C.D.C., 323 F.Supp. 529. Unborn child is a "person" for purpose of remedies given for personal injuries, and child may sue after his birth. Weak v. Mounter, 88 Nev. 118, 493 P.2d 1307, 1309.

Persona /parsówma/. Lat. In the civil law, character in virtue of which certain rights belong to a man and certain duties are imposed upon him. Thus one man may unite many characters (personae), as, for example, the characters of father and son, of master and servant.

Personable /pérsonalbi/. Having the rights and powers of a person; able to hold or maintain a plea in court; also capacity to take anything granted or given.

Persona conjuncta equiparatur interesse proprio /parsówma kanjajgakta źkwaprėydar intarsišy prōw-prōwy/. A personal connection [literally, a united person, union with a person] is equivalent to one's own interest; nearness of blood is as good a consideration as one's own interest.

Persona designata /parsówma dźezagnēydz/. A person pointed out or described as an individual, as opposed to a person ascertained as a member of a class, or as filling a particular character.

Persona ecclesia /parsówma sklyzyjy/. The person or personation of the church.

Persona est homo cum statu quodam consideratus /parsówma ėst hōwmow kām stāchuw kwōdsm konsiderdrēydz/. A person is a man considered with reference to a certain status.

Person aggrieved. To have standing as a "person aggrieved" under equal employment opportunities provisions of Civil Rights Act, or to assert rights under any federal regulatory statute, a plaintiff must show (1) that he was actually injured, and (2) that the interest sought to be protected by the complainant is arguably within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute in question. Foust v. Transamerica Corp., D.C.Cal., 391 F.Supp. 312, 314.

A "person aggrieved" as contemplated by federal rule governing standing to object to alleged illegal search and seizure is one who is the victim of the search and seizure, as distinguished from one who claims prejudice only through the use of evidence gathered in a search directed at someone else. U.S. ex rel. Mann v. Mazurkiewicz, D.C.Pa., 316 F.Supp. 1041, 1043.

See also Aggrieved party; Standing to sue doctrine.

Personal. Appertaining to the person; belonging to an individual; limited to the person; having the nature or partaking of the qualities of human beings, or of movable property. In re Steimes' Estate, 150 Misc. 279, 270 N.Y.S. 339.

As to personal Action; Assets; Chattel; Contract; Covenant; Credit; Demand; Disability; Franchise; Injury; Judgment; Knowledge; Liberty; Notice; Obligation; Property; Replevin; Representative; Right; Security; Service; Servitude; Statute; Tax; Tithes; Tort; and Warranty, see those titles.

Personal effects. Articles associated with person, as property having more or less intimate relation to person of possessor; "effects" meaning movable or chattel property of any kind. Usual reference is to the following items owned by a decedent at the time of death: clothing, furniture, jewelry, stamp and coin collections, silverware, china, crystal, cooking utensils, books, cars, televisions, radios, etc. Term when used in will, includes only such tangible property as attended the person, or such tangible property as is worn or carried about the person. In re Sorensen's Estate, 46 Cal.App.2d 35, 115 P.2d 241, 243. Term "personal effects" when employed in a will enjoys no settled technical meaning and, when used in its primary sense, without any qualifying words, ordinarily embraces such tangible property as is worn or carried about the person, or tangible property having some intimate relation to the person of the testator or testatrix; where it is required by the context within which the term appears, it may enjoy a broader meaning. In re Stengel's Estate, Mo.App., 557 S.W.2d 255, 260.

Personal holding company. Type of corporation subject to special Personal Holding Company Tax (I.R.C. § 541 et seq.) on undistributed income so as to preclude use of such organization by individuals in high tax brackets to avoid taxes. Typically, the major sources of income of such corporations include dividends, interest, annuities, royalties, rent, and the like.

Personal holding company tax. Federal tax imposed on personal holding companies and designed to force the distribution of corporate earnings through the threat of a penalty tax on the corporation. I.R.C. § 541.

Personalla personam sequuntur /pérsonalyla(l)iya par-sównam skōwǐntar/. Personal things follow the person.

Personal income. The income which an individual earns or receives. National income minus corporate profits and social security contributions, plus dividends, government transfer payments to individuals, net interest paid by government, money and imputed income received by individuals, unincorporated businesses, and nonprofit institutions.

Personallis actio /pérsonalylis áksh(iy)ow/. Lat. Civil law. A personal action; an action against the person (in personam).

Old English law. A personal action. In this sense, the term was borrowed from the civil law by Bracton. The English form is used as the designation of one of the chief divisions of civil actions.

Personaliter /pérsonalylodar/. In old English law, personally; in person.
PERSONAL JURISDICTION

Personal jurisdiction. The power of a court over the person of a defendant in contrast to the jurisdiction of a court over a defendant's property or his interest therein; in personam as opposed to in rem jurisdiction.

Personal liability. A kind of responsibility for the payment or performance of an obligation which exposes the personal assets of the responsible person to payment of the obligation.

The liability of the stockholders in corporations, under certain statutes, by which they may be held individually responsible for the debts of the corporation, either to the extent of the par value of their respective holdings of stock, or to twice that amount, or without limit, or otherwise, as the particular statute directs. This may be required by state statute of stockholders of a new corporation that is undercapitalized.

Personal property. See Property.

Personal property tax. Tax on such items of personal property as household furniture, jewelry, etc. levied by local or state governments.

Personal recognizance. Pre-trial release based on the person's own promise that he will show up for trial (no bond required). A species of bail in which the defendant acknowledges personally without sureties his obligation to appear in court at the next hearing or trial date of his case. It is used in place of a bail bond when the judge or magistrate is satisfied that the defendant will appear without the need of a surety bond or other form of security. Also referred to as "release on own recognizance" or "ROR".

Personality. Personal property; movable property; chattels.

Quasi personality. Things which are movable in point of law, though fixed to things real, either actually, as emblems (fructus industriales), fixtures, etc.; or fictitiously, as chattels-real, leases for years, etc.

Persona non grata /pərˈsəʊnə ˈnɒn ɡrəˈɡeɪtə/. Person not wanted; an undesirable person. In international law and diplomatic usage, a person not acceptable (for reasons peculiar to himself) to the court or government to which it is proposed to accredit him in the character of an ambassador or minister.

Persona standi in judicio /pərˈsəʊnə ˈstændi ɪn dʒuˈdɪʃɪd/ı. Capacity of standing in court or in judgment; capacity to be a party to an action; capacity or ability to sue.

Personate /pərˈsəʊnət/. To assume the person (character) of another, without his consent or knowledge, in order to deceive others, and, in such feigned character, to fraudulently do some act or gain some advantage, to the harm or prejudice of the person counterfeited. To pass one's self off as another having a certain identity. Lane v. U. S., C.C.A. Ohio, 17 F.2d 923. See also Impersonation.

Personero /pərˈsəʊrnərəʊ/. In Spanish law, an attorney. So called because he represents the person of another, either in or out of court.

Person in loco parentis /ˈpɜrson ɪn ˈloʊkwək ˈpɛrəntɪs/. One who has assumed status and obligations of parent without formal adoption. Workman v. Workman, Okl., 498 P.2d 1384, 1386. See in loco parentis.

Personne /pərˈson/. Fr. A person. This term is applicable to men and women, or to either.

Person under disability. Any person who is impaired by reason of mental illness, mental deficiency, physical illness or disability, advanced age, chronic use of drugs, chronic intoxication, or other cause (except minority) to the extent that he lacks sufficient understanding or capacity to make or communicate responsible decisions concerning his person. Uniform Probate Code, § 5–101(1).

Perspicua vera non sunt probanda /pɜrˈspiːkwə vɪrə nɒn sənt pɹəˈbɔːndə/. Plain truths need not be proved.

Per stirpes /pər ˈstɪrplɪz/. Lat. By roots or stocks; by representation. This term, derived from the civil law, is much used in the law of descents and distribution, and denotes that method of dividing an intestate estate where a class or group of distributees take the share which their deceased would have been entitled to, taking thus by their right of representing such ancestor, and not as so many individuals. It is the antithesis of per capita (q.v.). Buxton v. Noble, 146 Kan. 671, 73 P.2d 43, 47.

Persuade. To induce one by argument, entreaty, or expostulation into a determination, decision, conclusion, belief, or the like; to win over by an appeal to one's reason and feelings, as into doing or believing something; to bring oneself or another to belief, certainty or conviction; to argue into an opinion or procedure. La Page v. U. S., C.C.A.Minn., 146 F.2d 536, 538.

Persuasion. The act of persuading; the act of influencing the mind by arguments or reasons offered, or by anything that moves the mind or passions, or inclines the will to a determination. For Fair persuasion, see that title.

Pertain. To belong or relate to, whether by nature, appointment, or custom.

Pertenencia /pɛɾˈtenənθiə/. In Spanish law, the claim or right which one has to the property in anything; the territory which belongs to any one by way of jurisdiction or property; that which is accessory or consequent to a principal thing, and goes with the ownership of it.

Perticata terra /pɛɾˈdækɛdə tɛˈri. The fourth part of an acre.

Pertinent /pɛɾˈdænt/. Applicable; relevant. Evidence is called "pertinent" when it is directed to the issue or matters in dispute, and legitimately tends to prove the allegations of the party offering it; otherwise it is called "impertinent." A pertinent hypothesis is one which, if sustained, would logically influence the issue. Vaughn v. State, 136 Tex.Cr.R. 455, 125 S.W.2d 568, 570. See Material; Relevant.

Per totem curiam /pər təˈtɔrm ˌkjuəˈriəm/. L. Lat. By the whole court. A common phrase in the old reports.
Per tout et non per my /pâr tûw(t) ey nôf pâr mîf/. L. Fr. By the whole, and not by the moiety. Where an estate in fee is given to a man and his wife, they cannot take the estate by moieties, but both are seised of the entirety, per tout et non per my.

Perturbation /pârdrbêyshân/. In old English ecclesiastical courts, a “suit for perturbation of seat” is the technical name for an action growing out of a disturbance or infringement of one’s right to a pew or seat in a church.

Perturbatrix /pârdrbêytrak/. A woman who breaks the peace.

Per universitatem /pâr yûnivarsatêydam/. Lat. In the civil law, by an aggregate or whole; as an entirety. The term described the acquisition of an entire estate by one act or fact, as distinguished from the acquisition of single or detached things.

Per varios actus legem experientia facit /pâr vêrïyowment akspîrîyêsht(y)ês fêst/. By various acts experience frames the law.

Per verba de futuro /pâr vêrbo dîy fyaçhîrow/. Lat. By words of the future [tense]. A phrase applied to contracts of marriage.

Pesa /pêza/. A weight of two hundred and fifty-six pounds.

Pessimi exempli /pêsamay agzêemplay/. Lat. Of the worst example.

Pessurable wares /pêzharabal wêrç/. Merchandise which takes up a good deal of room in a ship.

Petens /pêdân/. Lat. In old English law, a demandant; the plaintiff in a real action.

Peter-pence. An ancient levy or tax of a penny on each house throughout England, paid to the Pope. It was called “Peter-pence;” because collected on the day of St. Peter, ad vincula; by the Saxons it was called “Romefeoh;” “Romesco;” and “Rome-pennyng,” because collected and sent to Rome; and, lastly, it was called “hearth money,” because every dwelling-house was liable to it, and every religious house, the abbey of St. Albans alone excepted.

Petit /pêdîy/pêtîy(t)/. Fr. Small; minor; inconsiderable. Used in several compounds, and sometimes written “petty.” As to petit Jury; Larceny; Sergeanty; and Treason, see those titles.

Petit cape /pêdîy kêyp(î)/. A judicial writ, issued in the old actions for the recovery of land, requiring the sheriff to take possession of the estate, where the tenant, after having appeared in answer to the summons, made default in a subsequent stage of the proceedings.

Petite assise /pâtîyd sáyys/pêdîy/*. Used in contradistinction from the grand assise, which was a jury to decide on questions of property. Petite assise, a jury to decide on questions of possession.

Petito /pêtîht(y)ow/. Lat. Civil law. The plaintiff’s statement of his cause of action in an action in rem. Old English law. Petition or demand; the count in a real action; the form of words in which a title to land was stated by the defendant, and which commenced with the word “peto.”

Petition. A written address, embodying an application or prayer from the person or persons preferring it, to the power, body, or person to whom it is presented, for the exercise of his or their authority in the redress of some wrong, or the grant of some favor, privilege, or license. A formal written request addressed to some governmental authority. The right of the people to petition for redress of grievances is guaranteed by the First Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

A formal paper filed with the N.L.R.B. seeking a secret ballot election among a certain group of employees (bargaining unit).

A formal, written application to a court requesting judicial action on a certain matter. An application made to a court ex parte, or where there are no parties in opposition, praying for the exercise of the judicial powers of the court in relation to some matter which is not the subject for a suit or action, or for authority to do some act which requires the sanction of the court; as for the appointment of a guardian, for leave to sell trust property, etc. A written request to a board for action on some matter therein laid before it. McKillop v. County Bd. of Ed. of Sanborn County, 78 S.D. 587, 105 N.W.2d 671, 675.

Written request to the court after notice. Uniform Probate Code, § 1-201(31).

Petition de droit /pâtîshân de dôçît/. L. Fr. In old English practice, a petition of right; a form of proceeding to obtain restitution from the crown of either real or personal property, being of use where the crown is in possession of any hereditaments or chattels, and the petitioner suggests such a right as controverts the title of the crown, grounded on facts disclosed in the petition itself. 3 Bl.Com. 256.

Petitioner. One who presents a petition to a court, officer, or legislative body. In legal proceedings begun by petition, the person against whom action or relief is prayed, or who opposes the prayer of the petition, is called the “respondent.” The one who starts an equity proceeding or the one who takes an appeal from a judgment.

Petition in bankruptcy. A paper filed in a court of bankruptcy, or with the clerk, by a debtor seeking the benefits of the bankruptcy act, or by creditors alleging the commission of an act of bankruptcy by their debtor and seeking an adjudication of bankruptcy against him. See Bankruptcy Act, § 301 et seq.

Petitioning creditor. The creditor at whose instance an adjudication of bankruptcy is made against a bankrupt.
PETITION OF RIGHT

Petition of right. In old English law, a proceeding in chancery by which a subject may recover property in the possession of the king. See Petition de droit.

Petition of rights. A parliamentary declaration of the liberties of the people, assented to by King Charles I, in 1629. It is to be distinguished from the bill of rights, (1689), which has passed into a permanent constitutional statute.

Petit jury. See Jury.

Petitory action /pê'da(t)ərē aik'shan/. A driotual action; that is, one in which the plaintiff seeks to establish and enforce, by an appropriate legal proceeding, his right of property, or his title, to the subject-matter in dispute; as distinguished from a possessory action, where the right to the possession is the point in litigation, and not the mere right of property. In admiralty, suits to try title to property independent of questions concerning possession are referred to as "petitory suits," which suits must be based on a claim of legal title; the assertion of a mere equitable interest is not sufficient. Hunt v. A Cargo of Petroleum Products Laden on Steam Tanker Hilda, D.C.Pa., 378 F.Supp. 701, 703.

In Louisiana, an action brought by an alleged owner out of possession against one having possession to determine ownership, in which plaintiff must recover on strength of his own title, not on weakness of defendant's title. Saucier v. Crichton, C.C.A.La., 147 F.2d 430, 433.

Petronian law. See Lex Petronia.

Pettifogger /pê'dafogər/. A lawyer who is employed in a small or mean business, or who carries on a disreputable business by unprincipled or dishonorable means.

Petty. Small, minor, of less or inconconsiderable importance. The English form of "petit," and sometimes used instead of that word in such compounds as "petty jury," "petty larceny," and "petty treason." See Misdemeanor; Petit. As to petty Average; Con- stable; Larceny; and Session, see those titles.

Petty cash. Currency maintained for expenditures that are conveniently made with cash on hand. A fund used by business to pay the expenses for such items as travel, stationery, etc. Sometimes called imprest fund, it is operated by a voucher system in which the person desiring the money submits a voucher properly authorized and receives the cash.

Petty larceny. See Larceny.

Petty offense. A crime, the maximum punishment for which is generally a fine or short term in jail or house of correction. In some states, it is a classification in addition to misdemeanor and felony.

Any misdemeanor, the penalty for which does not exceed imprisonment for a period of six months or a fine of not more than $500, or both, is a petty offense. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1. State v. Holiday, 109 R.I. 93, 280 A.2d 333, 336. For purpose of determining right to jury trial, crimes carrying more than six-month sentences are "serious crimes" and those carrying less are "petty crimes." Maita v. Whitemore, C.A.Cal., 508 F.2d 143, 145.

See also Infraction; Misdemeanor.

Peyote. A type of cactus called mescal, found in Mexico and southwestern U.S. It contains button-like tubercles that are dried and chewed as an hallucinatory drug. Mescaline is an alkaloid of it.

P.H.V. An abbreviation for "pro hac vice," for this turn, for this purpose or occasion.

Physiast. A jailler.

Physical. Relating or pertaining to the body, as distinguished from the mind or soul or the emotions. Material, substantive, having an objective existence, as distinguished from imaginary or fictitious; real, having relation to facts, as distinguished from moral or constructive.

Physical cruelty. As used in divorce law means actual personal violence, or such a course of physical treatment as endangers life, limb or health, and renders cohabitation unsafe. Godwin v. Godwin, 140 S.E.2d 593, 595, 245 S.C. 370.

Physical disability. See Disability.

Physical fact. In the law of evidence, a fact having a physical existence, as distinguished from a mere conception of the mind; one which is visible, audible, or palpable, such as the sound of a pistol shot, a man running, impressions of human feet on the ground. See Demonstrative evidence.

Physical fact rule. In evidence, a judge is required to take case from jury if plaintiff's evidence as to physical facts leads to an impossibility in the light of undisputed physical laws. An appellate court is not bound by findings which violate physical laws. Zollman v. Symington Wayne Corp., 438 F.2d 28, 31.

The physical fact rule is that if a driver does not see that which he could or should have seen, he is guilty of negligence as a matter of law. Pennsylvania Nat. Mut. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Dennis, 195 Kan. 594, 408 P.2d 575, 579.

Physical force. Force applied to the body; actual violence.

Physical harm. The words "physical harm" are used throughout the Restatement of Torts to denote the physical impairment of the human body, or of land or chattels. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 7. See also Physical injury.

Pia fraus /ˈpɪə frəʊs/. Lat. A pious fraud; a subterfuge or evasion considered morally justifiable on account of the ends sought to be promoted. Particularly applied to an evasion or disregard of the laws in the interests of religion or religious institutions, such as circumventing the statutes of mortmain.

Picaaroon /ˈpɪkɑːrʊn/. A robber; a plunderer.

Picketing. Term refers to presence at an employer's business by one or more employees and/or other persons to publicize labor dispute, influence employees or customers to withhold their work or business, respectively, or show union's desire to represent employees; picketing is usually accompanied by patrolling with signs. C. Comella, Inc. v. United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, 33 Ohio App.2d 61, 292 N.E.2d 647, 655, 62 O.0.2d 128. Patrolling the entrance of a business by members of a labor union in order to inform other employees and the public of the existence of a strike and to influence or deter them from entering. See also Labor picketing; Secondary picketing; Unlawful picketing. Compare Boycott.

Peaceable picketing, in which laboring men and women have right to participate during labor dispute, means tranquil conduct, conduct devoid of noise or tumult, the absence of a quarrelsome demeanor, and a course of conduct that does not violate or disturb the public peace. Lilly Dache, Inc., v. Rose, Sup., 28 N.Y.S.2d 303, 305; Ex parte Bell, 37 Cal.App.2d 582, 100 P.2d 339, 340. It connotes peaceable methods of presenting a cause to the public in the vicinity of the employer's premises. Music Hall Theatre v. Moving Picture Mach. Operators Local No. 165, 249 Ky. 639, 61 S.W.2d 283.

Pick of land. A narrow slip of land running into a corner.

Pickpocket. A thief who secretly steals money or other property from the person of another.

Piepoudre. See Court of Piepoudre.

Pierage /ˈpɪrɪdʒ/. The duty for maintaining piers and harbors.

Piercing corporate veil. Judicial process whereby court will disregard usual immunity of corporate officers or entities from liability for corporate activities; e.g., when incorporation was for sole purpose of perpetrating fraud. The doctrine which holds that the corporate structure with its attendant limited liability of stockholders may be disregarded and personal liability imposed on stockholders, officers and directors in the case of fraud. The court, however, may look beyond the corporate form only for the defeat of fraud or wrong or the remedying of injustice. Hanson v. Bradley, 238 Mass. 371, 381, 10 N.E.2d 258, 264. See also Instrumentality rule.

Piegmaratio /ˈpɪgnɔːrəʃiˈɔʊ/. Lat. In the civil law, the contract of pledge; and also the obligation of such contract. Sealing up (obsignatio). A shutting up of an animal caught in one's field and keeping it till the expenses and damage have been paid by its master.

Piegmaratita actio /ˈpɪgnɔːrəʃiˈɔʊ əˈɔkʃəlˈiː. Lat. In the civil law, an action of pledge, or founded on a pledge, which was either directa, for the debtor, after payment of the debt, or contraria, for the creditor.

Piegmarative contract /ˈpɪgnɔːrədəv kɒntrəkt/. In the civil law, a contract of pledge, hypothecation, or mortgage of realty.

Piegnoris capio /ˈpɪgnɔrəs ˈkæpiːə/. Lat. In Roman law, this was the name of one of the legis actiones. It was employed only in certain particular kinds of pecuniary cases, and consisted in that the creditor, without preliminary suit and without the co-operation of the magistrate, by reciting a prescribed formula, took an article of property from the debtor to be treated as a pledge or security. The proceeding bears a marked analogy to distress at common law.

Piegnus /ˈpɪgnəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a pledge or pawn; a delivery of a thing to a creditor, as security for a debt. Also a thing delivered to a creditor as security for a debt.

Pifler /ˈpɪflər/. To piffer, in the plain and popular sense, means to steal.

Piflerage /ˈpɪflərædʒ/. Petty larceny; stealing of small items, generally of stored goods.

Piflerer /ˈpɪflərər/. One who steals petty things, or a small part of a thing.

Pillage /ˈplɪlɪdʒ/. Plunder; the forcible taking of private property by an invading or conquering army from the enemy's subjects.

Pillory /ˈpɪlərɪ/. A frame erected on a pillar, and made with holes and movable boards, through which the heads and hands of criminals were put.

Pimp. One who obtains customers ("tricks") for a whore or prostitute. See also Pander.

Pin-money. A small allowance set apart by a husband for the personal expenses of his wife; for her dress and pocket money.

Pint. A liquid measure of half a quart, or the eighth part of a gallon.
PIONEER PATENT

Pioneer patent. See Patent.

Pious uses /píeəs yúwsə/. See Charitable use.

Piracy. Those acts of robbery and depredation upon the high seas which, if committed on land, would have amounted to a felony. Brigandage committed on the sea or from the sea. Whoever, on the high seas, commits the crime of piracy as defined by the law of nations, and is afterwards brought into or found in the United States, shall be imprisoned for life. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1651. See also Air piracy.

The term is also applied to the illicit reprinting or reproduction of a copyrighted book or print or to unlawful plagiarism from it.

Pirate est hostis humani generis /párēyda ɛst hōstəs hyuwméyən ay jēnəros/. A pirate is an enemy of the human race.

Pirate. One guilty of the crime of piracy.

Piscary /piskarə/. The right of fishing. Thus, common of piscary is the right of fishing in waters belonging to another person.

P.J. An abbreviation for “president” (or presiding) “judge” (or justice).

P.L. An abbreviation for “Pamphlet Laws” or “Public Laws.”

Placard. An edict; a declaration; a manifesto. Also an advertisement or public notification.

Place. An old form of the word “pleas.” Thus the “Court of Common Pleas” was sometimes called the “Court of Common Place.”

Place, n. This word is a very indefinite term. It is applied to any locality, limited by boundaries, however large or however small. It may be used to designate a country, state, county, town, or a very small portion of a town. The extent of the locality designated by it must generally be determined by the connection in which it is used. In its primary and most general sense means locality, situation, or site, and it is also used to designate an occupied situation or building. See also Site; Situs.

Place, v. To arrange for something as to place a mortgage or to place an order. See also Placement.

Place lands. Lands granted which were within certain limits on each side of the road, and which became instantly fixed by the adoption of the line of the road. There is a well-defined difference between place lands and “indemnity lands.” See Indemnity.

Placement. The act of selling a new issue of securities or arranging a loan or mortgage. The act of finding employment for a person in the case of an employment agency. See also Finder; Offering.

Place of abode. One’s residence or domicile (q.v.).

Place of business. The location at which one carries on his business or employment. Under many state statutes, service of process may be made at one’s place of business and jurisdiction may be acquired by a court whose territorial district includes one’s place of business. See also Domicile.

Place of contract. The place (country or state) in which a contract is made, and whose law must determine questions affecting the execution, validity, and construction of the contract. Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U.S. 406, 412, 23 L.Ed. 245.

Place of delivery. The place where delivery is to be made of goods sold. If no place is specified in the contract, the articles sold must, in general, be delivered at the place where they are at the time of the sale. Hatch v. Standard Oil Co., 100 U.S. 124, 25 L.Ed. 854. See U.C.C. §§ 2–203, 2–504.

Place of employment. Within the safe place statutes, a place where active work, either temporary or permanent, is being conducted in connection with a business for profit; that is, where some process or operation related to such industry, trade or business is carried on and where any person is directly or indirectly employed by another.

Placer /pləsər/. In mining law, a superficial deposit of sand, gravel, or disintegrated rock, carrying one or more of the precious metals, along the course or under the bed of a watercourse, ancient or current, or along the shore of the sea. Under the acts of Congress, the term includes all forms of mineral deposits, except veins of quartz or other rock in place. 30 U.S.C.A. § 35.

Placer claim. A mining claim located on the public domain for the purpose of placer mining, that is, ground within the defined boundaries which contains mineral in its earth, sand, or gravel; ground which includes valuable deposits not “in place,” that is, not fixed in rock, or which are in a loose state. U. S. v. Iron Silver Min. Co., 128 U.S. 673, 9 S.Ct. 195, 32 L.Ed. 571; Clipper Min. Co. v. Eli Min. Co., 194 U.S. 220, 24 S.Ct. 632, 48 L.Ed. 944.

Placer location. A placer claim located and occupied on the public domain.

Place where. A phrase used in the older reports, being a literal translation of locus in quo (q.v.).

Placit /pləsat/, or placitum /pləsat(ə)m/. Decree; determination.

Placita /pləsədə/. See Placitum.

Placitabile /pləsəteɪbəl/. In Old English law, pleadable.

Placita communia /pləsədə kaməˈjuːniə/ya/. Common pleas. All civil actions between subject and subject.

Placita corona /pləsədə kəroʊnə/ya/. Pleas of the crown. All trials for crimes and misdemeanors, wherein the king is plaintiff, on behalf of the people.

Placita de transgressione contra pacem regis, in regno Anglie vi et armis facta, secundum legem et consuetudinem Anglie sine brevi regis placitari non debit /pləsədə dɪˈræŋɡrɛʃəˈhiːənɪə kɒntrə pɛˈsəm rɪˈjɪəs, iŋ ˈreɡnəʊ æŋɡliːˈviː ɛd ərˈməz ˈfæktə, ˈsæktəndəm lɪˈjəm ət ˈkɒnswət(ə)ˈwʊdənəm æŋɡliːˈsəʊnɪə ˈbɜːrvəɪ rɪˈjɪəs pləsəˈteɪrərə nɒn ˈdeɪbət/. Pleas of trespass against the peace of the king in the kingdom of England, made with force and arms, ought not, by the law and custom of England, to be pleaded without the king’s writ.

Placita juris /plássda júras/. Pleas or rules of law; particular and positive learnings of laws; grounds and positive learnings received with the law and set down; as distinguished from maxims or the formulated conclusions of legal reason.

Placita negativa duo exitum non faciunt /plássda négatíva dyjůwów ęgžadám nōn fásh(ly)emt/. Two negative pleas do not form an issue.

Plactare /plássțéry/. To plead.

Plactory /plássteri/. Relating to pleas or pleading.

Plactum /plássdam/. In civil law, an agreement of parties; that which is their pleasure to arrange between them.

An imperial ordinance or constitution; literally, the prince’s pleasure.

A judicial decision; the judgment, decree, or sentence of a court.

In old English law, a public assembly at which the king presided, and which comprised men of all degrees, met for consultation about the great affairs of the kingdom.

A court; a judicial tribunal; a lord’s court. Placita was the style or title of the courts at the beginning of the old nisi prius record.

A suit or cause in court; a judicial proceeding; a trial. Placita were divided into placita corona (crown cases or pleas of the crown, i.e., criminal actions) and placita communia (common cases or common pleas, i.e., private civil actions).

A fine, mulct, or pecuniary punishment.

A pleading or plea. In this sense, the term was not confined to the defendant’s answer to the declaration, but included all the pleadings in the cause, being nomen generalissimum.

In the old reports and abridgments, “placitum” was the name of a paragraph or subdivision of a title or page where the point decided in a cause was set out separately. It is commonly abbreviated “pl.”

Plactum allud personale, allud reale, allud mixtum /plássdam ályd parsanélyb, ályd ryiénylyb, ályd mílkenom/. Pleas [i.e., actions] are personal, real, and mixed.

Plactum fractum /plássdam frékštam/. A day past or lost to the defendant.

Plactum nominatum /plássdam nómanénydam/. The day appointed for a criminal to appear and plead and make his defense.

Plagiarism /pléyjarizam/. The act of appropriating the literary composition of another, or parts or passages of his writings, or the ideas or language of the same, and passing them off as the product of one’s own mind.

To be liable for plagiarism it is not necessary to exactly duplicate another’s literary work, it being sufficient if unfair use of such work is made by lifting of substantial portion thereof, but even an exact counterpart of another’s work does not constitute plagiarism if such counterpart was arrived at independently. O’Rourke v. RKO Radio Pictures, D.C. Mass., 44 F.Supp. 480, 482, 483.

See also Fair use doctrine.

Plagiarist /pléyjarist/, or plagiarism /pléyjiyéhrí/. One who publishes the thoughts and writings of another as his own.

Plagiarus /pléyjíyéríyas/. Lat. In the civil law, a kidnapper.

Plagium /pléyjíyám/. Lat. In the civil law, kidnapping. The offense of enticing away and stealing men, children, and slaves. The persuading a slave to escape from his master, or the concealing or harboring him without the knowledge of his master.

Pialdeur /pléydr/. Fr. An obsolete term for an attorney who pleaded the cause of his client; an advocate.

Plain error rule. Doctrine of “plain error” encompasses those errors which are obvious, which affect the substantial rights of the accused, and which, if uncorrected, would be an affront to the integrity and reputation of judicial proceedings. U. S. v. McCord, 166 U.S.App.D.C. 1, 501 F.2d 334, 341. The principle that an appeals court can reverse a judgment because of an error in the proceedings even if the error was not objected to at the time. "Plain error" doctrine applies where evidence is extremely damaging, the need for a limiting instruction is obvious, and failure to give it is so prejudicial that it affects defendant’s substantial rights. U. S. v. Cox, C.A.Tex., 536 F.2d 65, 69. Doctrine encompasses those errors which are obvious, which affect the substantial rights of the accused, and which, if uncorrected, would be an affront to the integrity and reputation of judicial proceedings. U. S. v. McCord, 166 U.S.App.D.C. 1, 501 F.2d 334, 341.

Plain error, requiring an award of a new trial although no objection was made at time error occurred, is error possessing a clear capacity to bring about an unjust result and which substantially prejudiced defendant’s fundamental rights to have jury fairly evaluate merits of defendant’s defense. State v. Thornton, 38 N.J. 380, 185 A.2d 9, 18.

Plaint /pléynt/. In civil law, a complaint; a form of action, particularly one for setting aside a testament alleged to be invalid. This word is the English equivalent of the Latin “querela.”

In English practice, a private memorial tendered in open court to the judge, wherein the party injured sets forth his cause of action. A proceeding in inferior courts by which an action is commenced without original writ. This mode of proceeding is commonly adopted in cases of replevin.

Plaintiff. A person who brings an action; the party who complains or sues in a civil action and is so named on the record. A person who seeks remedial relief for an injury to rights; it designates a complainant. City of Vancouver v. Jarvis, 76 Wash.2d 110, 455 P.2d 591, 593. The prosecution (i.e. State or United States) in a criminal case.

Plaintiff in error. The party who sues out a writ of error to review a judgment or other proceeding at law.
Plain view doctrine. In search and seizure context, objects falling in plain view of officer who has the right to be in position to have that view are subject to seizure without a warrant and may be introduced in evidence. Harris v. U. S., 390 U.S. 234, 236, 88 S.Ct. 982, 983, 19 L.Ed.2d 1069. Under "plain view doctrine," warrantless seizure of incriminating evidence may be permitted when police are lawfully searching specified area if it can be established that police had prior justification for intrusion into area searched, that police inadvertently came across item seized, and that it was immediately apparent to the police that the item seized was evidence. Smith v. State, 33 Md.App. 407, 365 A.2d 53, 55.

Plan. A delineation; a design; a draft, form or representation. The representation of anything drawn on a plane, as a map or chart; a scheme; a sketch. Also, a method of design or action, procedure, or arrangement for accomplishment of a particular act or object. Shainwald v. City of Portland, 153 Or. 167, 55 P.2d 1151, 1156. Method of putting into effect an intention or proposal.

Planned unit development (PUD). An area with a specified minimum contiguous acreage to be developed as a single entity according to a plan, containing one or more residential clusters or planned unit residential developments and one or more public, quasi-public, commercial or industrial areas in such ranges of ratios of nonresidential uses to residential uses as shall be specified in the zoning ordinance.

Area of land controlled by landowner to be developed as a single entity for a number of dwelling units, and commercial and industrial uses, if any, the plan for which does not correspond in lot size, bulk or type of dwelling or commercial or industrial use, density, lot coverage and required open space to the regulations established in any one or more districts, created from time to time, under the provisions of a municipal zoning ordinance enacted pursuant to the conventional zoning enabling act of the state.

Plantation. In English law, a colony; an original settlement in a new country.

In American law, a farm; a large cultivated estate. Term used chiefly in the southern states to refer to large farms on which cotton, tobacco, sugar, and like crops are grown.

Plat, or plot. A map of a town, section, or subdivision showing the location and boundaries of individual parcels of land subdivided into lots, with streets, alleys, easements, etc., usually drawn to a scale. See also Plat map.

Platform. A statement of principles and of policies adopted by a party convention as a basis for the party's appeal for public support.

Plat map. A plat map is generally drawn after the property has been described by some other means, such as a Government Survey System. Once a plat map is set, legal descriptions are defined by referring to the given map, in a lot and block description.

Play-debt. Debt contracted by gaming.

Plea. In common law pleading (now obsolete with adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure) a pleading; any one in the series of pleadings. More particularly, the first pleading on the part of the defendant. In the strictest sense, the answer which the defendant in an action at law made to the plaintiff's declaration, and in which he set up matter of fact as defense, thus distinguished from a demurrer, which interposed objections on grounds of law.

In equity pleading (now obsolete with adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure) a special answer showing or relying upon one or more things as a cause why the suit should be either dismissed or delayed or barred. A short statement. In response to a bill in equity, of facts which, if inserted in the bill, would render it demurrable.

Affirmative plea. In equity pleading, one which sets up a single fact, not appearing in the bill, or sets up a number of circumstances all tending to establish a single fact, which fact, if existing, destroys the complainant's case. Such is obsolete under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Anomalous plea. One which is partly affirmative and partly negative. Obsolete under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Common pleas. In common law pleading, common causes or suits; civil actions brought and prosecuted between subjects or citizens, as distinguished from criminal cases. Such are obsolete under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Criminal pleas. The defendant's response to a criminal charge (guilty, not guilty, or nolo contendere). If a defendant refuses to plead or if a defendant corporation fails to appear, the court shall enter a plea of not guilty. Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(a). See also Arraignment; Guilty plea; Nolo contendere; Not guilty; Plea bargaining.

Dilatory pleas. See Dilatory.

Double plea. In common law pleading, one having the technical fault of duplicity; one consisting of several distinct and independent matters alleged to the same point and requiring different answers. This does not present any problem under Rules of Civil Procedure which permits party to plead as many separate claims or defenses, regardless of consistency. Fed.R.Civil P. 8(e)(2).

False plea. A sham plea (q.v. infra).

Negative plea. In equity pleading, one which does not undertake to answer the various allegations of the bill, but specifically denies some particular fact or matter the existence of which is essential to entitle the complainant to any relief. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Denial.

Peremptory pleas. In common law pleading, "pleas in bar" are so termed in contradistinction to that class of pleas called "dilatory pleas." The former, viz., peremptory pleas, are usually pleaded to the merits of the action, with the view of raising a material issue between the parties; while the latter class, viz., dilatory pleas, are generally pleaded with a view of retarding the plaintiff's proceedings, and not for the purpose of raising an issue upon which the parties may go to trial and settle the point in dispute. Peremptory pleas are also called "pleas in bar," while dilatory pleas are said to be in abatement only. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure.
Plea agreements. See Plea bargaining.

Plea in abatement. In common law pleading, a plea which, without disputing justice of plaintiff’s claim, objects to place, mode, or time of asserting it. It allows plaintiff to renew suit in another place or form, or at another time, and does not assume to answer action on its merits, or deny existence of particular cause of action on which plaintiff relies. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Abatement of action.

Plea in bar. A plea which goes to bar the plaintiff’s action; that is, to defeat it absolutely and entirely. A plea in bar sets forth matters which per se destroy right of action and bar its prosecution absolutely, such as bar of statute of limitations or constitutional guarantee against self-incrimination. U. S. v. Brodson, C.A.Wis., 234 F.2d 97, 99. A plea in bar is one that denies a plaintiff’s right to maintain the action and which, if established, will destroy the action. Gillikin v. Gillikin, 248 N.C. 710, 104 S.E.2d 861, 862.

Plea in discharge. In common law pleading, one which admits that the plaintiff had a cause of action, but shows that it was discharged by some subsequent or collateral matter, as, payment or accord and satisfaction. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Plea in reconvention. In the civil law, a plea which sets up new matter, not in defense to the action, but by way of cross-complaint, set-off, or counterclaim.

Plea of confession and avoidance. In common law pleading, one which admits that plaintiff had a cause of action, but which avers that it has been discharged by some subsequent or collateral matter. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Plea of guilty. A confession of guilt in open court. See also Criminal pleas, supra.

Plea of nolo contendere /ply ov noklowt kanfendbre/. One which has the same effect as a “plea of guilty” in so far as regards the proceedings on the indictment, and it is a confession only for the purposes of the criminal prosecution and does not bind the defendant in a civil suit for the same wrong. Schireson v. State Board of Medical Examiners of New Jersey, 129 N.J.L. 203, 28 A.2d 879, 881. See also Nolo contendere.

Plea of release. In common law pleading, one which admits the cause of action, but sets forth a release subsequently executed by the party authorized to release the claim. Abolished by Rules of Civil Procedure. See Affirmative defense.

Sham plea. A false plea; a plea of false or fictitious matter, subtly drawn so as to entrap an opponent, or create delay. A vexatious or false defense, resorted to under the old system of pleading for purposes of delay and annoyance. Such a plea may be ordered stricken on motion under Rules of Civil P. 12(f).

Special plea. In common law pleading, a special kind of plea in bar, distinguished by this name from the general issue, and consisting usually of some new affirmative matter, though it may also be in the form of a traverse or denial. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Special plea in bar. In common law pleading, one which advances new matter. It differs from the general, in this: that the latter denies some material allegation, but never advances new matter. Abolished under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Plea agreement. See Plea bargaining.

Plea bargaining. The process whereby the accused and the prosecutor in a criminal case work out a mutually satisfactory disposition of the case subject to court approval. It usually involves the defendant’s pleading guilty to a lesser offense or to only one or some of the counts of a multi-count indictment in return for a lighter sentence than that possible for the graver charge. Plea bargaining procedures in the federal courts are governed by Fed.R.Crim.P. 11(e).

Plead. To make, deliver, or file any pleading; to conduct the pleadings in a cause. To interpose any pleading in a civil action. More particularly, to deliver in a formal manner the defendant’s answer to the plaintiff’s declaration, complaint or to the indictment, as the case may be. See Pleadings.

Pleader. A person whose business it was to draw pleadings. Formerly, when pleading at common law was a highly technical and difficult art, there was a class of men known as “special pleaders not at the bar,” who held a position intermediate between counsel and attorneys. In current usage, the pleader is the party asserting a particular pleading.

Pleadings. The formal allegations by the parties of their respective claims and defenses.

Rules or Codes of Civil Procedure. Unlike the rigid technical system of common law pleading, pleadings under federal and state rules or codes of civil procedure have a far more limited function, with determination and narrowing of facts and issues being left to discovery devices and pre-trial conferences. In addition, the rules and codes permit liberal amendment and supplementation of pleadings.

Under rules of civil procedure the pleadings consist of a complaint, an answer, a reply to a counterclaim, an answer to a cross-claim, a third party complaint, and a third party answer. Fed.R.Civ.P. 7(a).

For amendment of pleadings, see Amendment. For judgment on pleadings, see Judgment. See also Alternative pleading; Responsive pleading; Sham (Sham pleading); Supplemental pleading; Variance.

Common law pleading. The system of rules and principles, established in the common law, according to which the pleadings or responsive allegations of litigating parties were framed with a view to preserve technical propriety and to produce a proper issue.

The process performed by the parties to a suit or action, in alternately presenting written statements of their contention, each responsive to that which precedes, and each serving to narrow the field of controversy, until there evolves a single point, affirmed on one side and denied on the other, called the “issue,” upon which they then go to trial.

The individual allegations of the respective parties to an action at common law, proceeding from them alternately, in the order and under the distinctive names following: The plaintiff’s declaration, the defendant’s plea, the plaintiff’s replication, the defendant's rejoinder, the plaintiff's surrejoinder, the defendant's rebutter, the plaintiff's surrebutter; after which they have no distinctive names.

Plead over. To pass over, or omit to notice, a material allegation in the last pleading of the opposite party; to pass by a defect in the pleading of the other party without taking advantage of it. In another sense, to plead the general issue, after one has interposed a demurrer or special plea which has been dismissed by a judgment of respondeat ouster. Obsolete under Rules of Civil Procedure.

Plea in abatement. A plea in abatement is one which, without disputing the jurisdiction of plaintiff's claim, objects to the place, mode or time of asserting it, and it allows plaintiff to renew his suit in another place or form, or at another time, and does not assume to answer the action on its merits, or deny the existence of the particular cause of action on which plaintiff relies. A plea in abatement sets forth facts extrinsic to merits which affect only manner in which action is framed or circumstances under which it is sought to be prosecuted, and does not destroy the right of action but merely suspends or postpones its prosecution. U. S. v. Brodson, C.A.Wis., 234 F.2d 97, 99. See also Abatement of action.

Plea negotiations. See Plea bargaining.

Plea of privilege. In Texas, objection to venue is raised by a plea of privilege to be sued in the county of one's residence, and such plea if filed on due time, must be sustained unless the case falls within one of the exceptions in the venue statute.

Plebeity /plibiədi/ or plebity /pləbədi/. The common or meaner sort of people; the plebeians.

Plebeyos /plebɛyɔs/. In Spanish law, commons; those who exercise any trade, or who cultivate the soil.

Plebscele /plibeskɛl/ "sat/"sɛt/. A vote of the people expressing their choice for or against a proposed law or enactment, committed to them, and which, if adopted, will work a change in the constitution, or which is beyond the powers of the regular legislative body. See also Referendum.

Plebssemitum /plibesamit/. Lat. In Roman law, a law enacted by the plebs or commonality (that is, the citizens, with the exception of the patricians and senators), at the request or on the proposition of a plebeian magistrate, such as a "tribune."

Plebs /plɛbz/. Lat. In Roman law, the commonalty or citizens, exclusive of the patricians and senators.

Pledge. A bailment of goods to a creditor as security for some debt or engagement. A pledge, considered as a transaction, is a bailment or delivery of goods or property by way of security for a debt or engagement, or as security for the performance of an act. Another definition is that a pledge is a security interest in a chattel or in an intangible represented by an indispensable instrument (such as formal, written evidence of an interest in an intangible so representing the intangible that the enjoyment, transfer, or enforcement of the intangible depends upon possession of the instrument), the interest being created by a bailment for the purpose of securing the payment of a debt or the performance of some other duty. A pledge is a promise or agreement by which one binds himself to do or forbear something. Elmoquist v. Lock, 194 Cal.App.2d 372, 15 Cal.Rptr. 447, 450.

Much of the law of pledges has been replaced by the provisions for secured transactions in Article 9 of the U.C.C.

See also Collateral; Hypothecate; Secured transaction; Security.

Pledgee. The party to whom goods are pledged, or delivered in pledge.

Pledgery. Suretyship, or an undertaking or answering for another.

Pledges. In common law pledging, those persons who became sureties for the prosecution of the suit. Their names were anciently appended at the foot of the declaration. In time it became purely a formal matter, because the plaintiff was no longer liable to be amerced for a false claim, and the fictitious persons John Doe and Richard Roe became the universal pledges, or they might be omitted altogether; or inserted at any time before judgment; they are now omitted.

Pledgor /plɛˈɡɑr/. The party delivering goods in pledge; the party pledging.

Plegíl de retornó habendo /pleˈʒiːjə dɪ rəˈtornəʊ habˈɛndəʊ/. In common law, pledges to return the subject of distress, should the right be determined against the party bringing the action of replevin.

Plegís acquéltanđis /pleˈʒiːs əkwɛˈltaŋdɪs/. A writ that anciently lay for a surety against him for whom he was surety, if he paid not the money at the day.

Plena atas /plɛˈna ʃətəs/. Lat. In old English law, full age.

Plena et celeris justitia flat partibus /plɛˈna ɛt sɛˈlarəs jəstɪʃ(ə)ʃ flat pərtɪbəs/. Let full and speedy justice be done to the parties.

Plena forisfactura /plɛˈna fɔrɪsfɛktʊrə/. A forfeiture of all that one possesses.

Plena probatio /plɛˈna prəbəˈtiəʊ/ow/. In the civil law, a term used to signify full proof (that is, proof by two witnesses), in contradistinction to semi-plena probatio, which is only a presumption.

Plenary /ˈplɛnərɪ/ /ˈplɛnərɪ/ /ˈplɛnərɪ/. In old English law, fullness; a state of being full. A term applied to a benefice when full, or possessed by an incumbent. The opposite state to a vacation, or vacancy.

Plenary action. A complete and formal hearing or trial on the merits as distinguished from a summary hearing which is commonly less strict and more informal. May v. Henderson, 268 U.S. 111, 45 S.Ct. 456, 69 L.Ed. 870.

Plenary confession. A full and complete confession. An admission or confession, whether in civil or crimi-
Plenary jurisdiction. Full and complete jurisdiction or power of a court over the subject matter as well as the parties to a controversy. See also Jurisdiction.

Plenary powers. Authority and power as broad as is required in a given case.

Plenary session. A meeting of all members of a deliberative body, as distinguished from a meeting of a committee of the same body.

Plenary suit. One that proceeds on formal pleadings. Central Republic Bank and Trust Co. v. Caldwell, C.C.A.Mo., 58 F.2d 721. See also Plenary action.

Plene /p laini/. Lat. Completely; fully; sufficiently.

Plene administravit /p lainiy administrévit /. A plea by an executor or administrator that he has fully administered all the assets that have come to his hands, and that no assets remain out of which the plaintiff's claim could be satisfied.

Plene administravit preter /p lainiy administrévit priydzar /. A plea by an executor or administrator that he has "fully administered" all the assets that have come to his hands, "except" assets to a certain amount, which are not sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff.

Plene computavit /p lainiy kompystévat /. He has fully accounted. A plea in an action of account render, alleging that the defendant has fully accounted.

Plenipotentiary /plénapsténi(sh)iyariy /. One who has full power to do a thing; a person fully commissioned to act for another. A term applied in international law to ministers and envoys of the second rank of public ministers.

Plenum dominium /p lainam dominiyam /. Lat. In the civil law, full ownership; the property in a thing united with the usufruct.

Plevna /p lévan /. A warrant, or assurance.

Pleyto /p léytow /. In Spanish law, the pleadings in a cause.

Plight. In old English law, an estate, with the habit and quality of the land; extending to a rent charge and to a possibility of dower.

Plot. See Plat.

Plotage. A term used in appraising land values and particularly in eminent domain proceedings to designate the additional value given to city lots by the fact that they are contiguous, which enables the owner to utilize them as large blocks of land. Plotage is a recognized concept in the field of eminent domain, referring to an added increment of value which may accrue to two or more vacant and unimproved contiguous parcels of land held in one ownership because of their potentially enhanced marketability by reason of their greater use adaptability as a single unit; simplistically stated, an assemblage of vacant and unimproved contiguous parcels held in one ownership may have a greater value as a whole than the sum of their values as separate constituent parcels and, hence, plotage value may be considered in determining fair market value. State ex rel. State Highway Commission of Missouri v. Armacost Motors, Inc., Mo.App., 552 S.W.2d 360, 364.

Plow back. To retain earnings for continued investment in the business. To reinvest the earnings and profits into the business instead of paying them out as dividends or withdrawals by partners or proprietor.

Plunder, v. To pillage or loot. To take property from persons or places by open force, and this may be in course of a war, or by unlawful hostility, as in the case of pirates or robbers. The term is also used to express the idea of taking property from a person or place, without just right, but not expressing the nature or quality of the wrong done.

Plunder, n. Personal property belonging to an enemy, captured and appropriated on land; booty. Also the act of seizing such property. See Booty; Prize.

Plunderage. In maritime law, the embezzlement of goods on board of a ship is so called.

Plural. Containing more than one; consisting of or designating two or more.

Plurality /pluréladij /. The excess of the votes cast for one candidate over those cast for any other. Where there are only two candidates, he who receives the greater number of the votes cast is said to have a majority; when there are more than two competitors for the same office, the person who receives the greatest number of votes has a plurality, but he has not a majority unless he receives a greater number of votes than those cast for all his competitors combined, or, in other words, more than one-half of the total number of votes cast.

A plurality normally refers to the state of being numerous; a large number or quantity; while it may perhaps mean two, it embraces any number in excess of two. Technograph Printed Circuits, Limited v. Bendix Aviation Corp., D.C.Md., 218 F.Supp. 1, 52.

An opinion of an appellate court in which more justices join than in any concurring opinion (though not a majority of the court) is a plurality opinion as distinguished from a majority opinion in which a larger number of the justices on the panel join than not.

Plural marriage. See Marriage; Polygamy.

Plurilis fl. fa. /pl(y)uriliyiz fay(aray) féy(shiyis) /. A writ issued where other commands of the court have proved ineffectual.

Plus exempla quam peccata nocent /plás szgémpul kwém pokéyds nóisant /. Examples hurt more than crimes.

Plus peccat author quam actor /plás pékod ókær kwérm ókárt / Plókod ókárt /. The originator or instigator of a crime is a worse offender than the actual perpetrator of it. Applied to the crime of subornation of perjury.

Pluc peticio /plás pötish(i)yow /. In Roman law, a phrase denoting the offense of claiming more than was just in one's pleadings. Prior to Justinian's time, this offense was in general fatal to the action; but, under the legislation of the emperors Zeno and Justinian, the offense (if re, loco, or causa) exposed the party to the payment of three times the damage, if any, sustained by the other side, and (if tempore) obliged him to postpone his action for double the time, and to pay the costs of his first action before commencing a second.

Plus valet consuetudo quam concessio /plás válet kónswatyúwdow kwám kánshésh(ly)ow/ Custom is more powerful than grant.

Plus valet unus oculatus testis quam aurit decem /plás válet yúwnas ókáléyédas tésas kwám órádyy dásem/. One eye-witness is of more weight than ten ear-wit- nesses [or those who speak from hearsay].

Plus vident occuli quam ocularis /plás vídant ókáláy kwám ókýláy/. Several eyes see more than one.

P.M. An abbreviation for "postmaster," also for "post- meridiem," afternoon.

P.O. An abbreviation of "public officer," also of "post- office."

Poach. To steal or destroy game on another's land. See Poaching.

Poaching. In criminal law, the unlawful entry upon land for the purpose of taking or destroying fish or game. The illegal taking or killing of fish or game.

Pocket veto. The act of the President in retaining a legislative bill without approving or rejecting it at the end of the legislative session and, in effect, vetoing it by such inactivity.

P.O.D. account. An account payable on request to one person during lifetime and on his death to one or more P.O.D. payees, or to one or more persons during their lifetimes and on the death of all of them to one or more P.O.D. payees. Uniform Probate Code, § 5-101.

Pena /pýnya/. Lat. Punishment; a penalty.

Pena ad paucos, metus ad omnes pervenitat /pýnya əd pókwos, módyás əd ómníyíy parviýn(ly)íyt/. If punishment be inflicted on a few, a dread comes to all.

Pena corporalis /pýnya kó̅rparéyías/. Corporal punishment.

Pene potius mollifande quam exasperande sunt /pýniy pówsh(ly)as móliyéndíy kwám agzáspéndíy sánt/. Punishments should rather be softened than aggravated.

Pene sint restringende /pýnyln sint réstrínjéndíy/. Punishments should be restrained.

Pene suos tenere debet actores et non allos /pýnya swúwows táníriy déóbd aktrójíy ét nón əlýýows/. Punishment ought to be inflicted upon the guilty, and not upon others.

Pena ex delicto defuncti heres teneri non debet /pýnya èks dálkítow dafákýtay híríyíz táníriy nón déóbd/. The heir ought not to be bound by a penalty arising out of the wrongful act of the deceased.

Penalís /pənəýíslas/. Lat. In the civil law, penal; imposing a penalty; claiming or enforcing a penalty. Actiones penales, penal actions.

Pena non potest, culpa perennis erit /pýnya nón pówdast, kálpa pérénəs ëhrát/. Punishment cannot be, crime will be, perpetual.

Pena pilórralis /pýnya pilərýílás/. In old English law, punishment of the pillory.

Pena suos tenere debet actores et non allos /pýnya s(y)úwows táníriy déóbd aktrójíy ét nón əlýýows/. Punishment ought to bind the guilty, and not others.

Pena tolli potest, culpa perennis erit /pýnya tólý yówdast, kálpa pérénəs ëhrát/. The punishment can be removed, but the crime remains.

Penitentia /pənətěñ̩ʃə(ly)/pýnya"/. Lat. In the civil law, repentance; reconsideration; changing one's mind; drawing back from an agreement already made, or rescinding it. Locus penitentiae. Room or place for repentance or reconsideration; an opportunity to withdraw from a negotiation before finally concluding the contract or agreement. Also, in criminal law, an opportunity afforded by the circumstances to a person who has formed an intention to kill or to commit another crime, giving him a chance to reconsider and relinquish his purpose.

Point. A distinct proposition or question of law arising or propounded in a case. See also issue.

In the case of shares of stock, a point means $1. In the case of bonds a point means $10, since a bond is quoted as a percentage of $1,000. In the case of market averages, the word point means merely that and no more. If, for example, the Dow-Jones Industrial Average rises from 870.25 to 871.25, it has risen a point. A point in this average, however, is not equivalent to $1.

Real estate financing. The word "point" as used in home mortgage finance industry denotes a fee or charge equal to one percent of principal amount of loan which is collected by lender at time the loan is made. It is a fee or charge which is collected only once, at inception of loan, and is in addition to constant long-term stated interest rate on face of loan. V. F. Saul Co. v. West End Park North, Inc., 250 Md. 707, 246 A.2d 591, 595, 597.

Point reserved. When, in the progress of the trial of a cause, an important or difficult point of law is presented to the court, and the court is not certain of the decision that should be given, it may reserve the point, that is, decide it provisionally as it is asked by the party, but reserve its more mature consideration for the hearing on a motion for a new trial, when, if it shall appear that the first ruling was wrong, the verdict will be set aside. The point thus treated is technically called a"point reserved."
Points. See Point.

Point system. In some states points are assessed against motor vehicle law violators and when a pre-established number of points has been assessed against a driver during a given period, his license to operate is suspended.

Poison. A substance having an inherent deleterious property which renders it, when taken into the system, capable of destroying life. A substance which, on being applied to the human body, internally or externally, is capable of destroying the action of the vital functions, or of placing the solids and fluids in such a state as to prevent the continuance of life.

Poisonous tree doctrine. Doctrine refers to an illegal arrest or search which leads officers to evidence seized in a proper manner that may be inadmissible because of the taint of the original illegality. Com. v. Spofford, 343 Mass. 703, 180 N.E.2d 673. Sometimes also referred to as “fruit of poisonous tree” doctrine (q.v.).

Polar star rule. The rule that the intent of the maker of a written document, as gathered from its four corners, shall prevail unless such intent conflicts with some statutory provision within the jurisdiction, or is against public policy. Hanks v. McDanell, 307 Ky. 243, 210 S.W.2d 784, 786.

Pole. A measure of length, equal to five yards and a half.

Police. Branch of the government which is charged with the preservation of public order and tranquility, the promotion of the public health, safety, and morals, and the prevention, detection, and punishment of crimes. See also Internal police; Peace (Peace officers); Sheriff.

Police court. The name of an inferior court in several of the states, which has jurisdiction over minor offenses and city ordinances, concurrent jurisdiction in certain matters with justices of the peace, and the powers of a committing magistrate in respect to more serious crimes, and, in some states, a limited jurisdiction for the trial of civil causes.

Police jury. In Louisiana, the governing bodies of the parishes, which are political subdivisions of the state, comparable to counties in other states. National Liberty Ins. Co. of America v. Police Jury of Natchitoches Parish, C.C.A.La., 96 F.2d 261, 262.

Police justice. A magistrate charged exclusively with the duties incident to the common-law office of a conservator or justice of the peace; the prefix "police" serving merely to distinguish them from justices having also civil jurisdiction.

Police magistrate. An inferior judicial officer having jurisdiction of minor criminal offenses, breaches of police regulations, and the like; so called to distinguish them from magistrates who have jurisdiction in civil cases also, as justices of the peace.

Police officer. One of the staff employed in cities and towns to enforce the municipal laws and ordinances for preserving the peace, safety, and good order of the community. Also called "policeman" or "policewoman"; "patrolman" or "patrolwoman."

Policy of insurance. An instrument in writing, by which one party (insurer), in consideration of a premium, engages to indemnify another (insured) against a contingent loss, by making him a payment.

Policy power. An authority conferred by the American constitutional system in the Tenth Amendment, U.S. Const., upon the individual states, and, in turn, delegated to local governments, through which they are enabled to establish a special department of police; adopt such laws and regulations as tend to prevent the commission of fraud and crime, and secure generally the comfort, safety, morals, health, and prosperity of its citizens by preserving the public order, preventing a conflict of rights in the common intercourse of the citizens, and insuring to each an uninterrupted enjoyment of all the privileges conferred upon him or her by the general laws.

The power of the State to place restraints on the personal freedom and property rights of persons for the protection of the public safety, health, and morals or the promotion of the public convenience and general prosperity. The police power is subject to limitations of the federal and State constitutions, and especially to the requirement of due process. Police power is the exercise of the sovereign right of a government to promote order, safety, health, morals and general welfare within constitutional limits and is an essential attribute of government. Marshall v. Kansas City, Mo., 355 S.W.2d 877, 883.

Policy. The general principles by which a government is guided in its management of public affairs, or the legislature in its measures.

A general term used to describe all contracts of insurance. See Policy of Insurance.

This term, as applied to a law, ordinance, or rule of law, denotes its general purpose or tendency considered as directed to the welfare or prosperity of the state or community.

A species of "lottery" whereby the chance is determined by numbers; "numbers game" also being a lottery. People v. Hines, 258 App.Div. 466, 17 N.Y. S.2d 141, 142. Policy is a lottery or game of chance where bettors select numbers to bet on and place the bet with a policy writer. State v. Harris, Mo.App., 325 S.W.2d 352, 354. See Lottery.

Public policy. That principle of the law which holds that no subject can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public or against the public good. The principles under which the freedom of contract or private dealings is restricted by law for the good of the community. The term "policy," as applied to a statute, regulation, rule of law, course of action, or the like, refers to its probable effect, tendency, or object, considered with reference to the social or political well-being of the state. Thus, certain classes of acts are said to be "against public policy," when the law refuses to enforce or recognize them, on the ground that they have a mischiefuous tendency, so as to be injurious to the interests of the state, apart from illegality or immorality.

Policyholder. The person who owns the policy of insurance whether he is the insured or not. In most states, any person with an insurable interest may be a policyholder.

Policy of insurance. An instrument in writing, by which one party (insurer), in consideration of a premium, engages to indemnify another (insured) against a contingent loss, by making him a payment.
POLICY OF INSURANCE

in compensation, whenever the event shall happen by which the loss is to accrue. Contract whereby insur- er, in return for premiums, engages, on happening of designated event, to pay certain sum as provided. In re O'Neill's Estate, 145 Misc. 69, 255 N.Y.S. 767, 771.

The written instrument in which a contract of insurance is set forth.

See also Face of policy; Floater policy; Homeowner's policy; Master policy.

Assessable policy. A policy under which a policyholder may be held liable for losses of the insurance company beyond its reserves.

Blanket policy. A policy of fire insurance which contemplates that the risk is shifting, fluctuating, or varying, and is applied to a class of property rather than to any particular article or thing.

The term "specific" as applied in insurance phraseology is frequently used in contrast with "blanket insurance" and denotes coverage of a particular piece of property or property at a specific location, as contrasted with blanket insurance which covers the same and other property in several different locations.

Class of life insurance policies. Those policies issued in the same calendar year, upon the lives of persons of the same age, and on the same plan of insurance.

Endowment policy. In life insurance, a policy the amount of which is payable to the assured himself at the end of a fixed term of years, if he is then living, or to his heirs or a named beneficiary if he shall die sooner.

Extended policy. A policy which provides protection beyond the time when premiums are no longer paid.

Floater policy. A policy of fire insurance not applicable to any specific described goods, but to any and all goods which may at the time of the fire be in a certain building.

Incontestable policy. A policy which contains a provision to the effect that the company after the policy has been in force cannot contest, challenge or cancel the policy on the basis of statements made in the application. The period of contestability may be one, two or three years.

Interest policy. One where the assured has a real, substantial, and assignable interest in the thing insured; as opposed to a wager policy.

Master policy. In group life, medical, etc. insurance, the single policy under which the participants are covered. The individuals covered by the master policy receive a certificate indicating their participation.

Mixed policy. A policy of marine insurance in which not only the time is specified for which the risk is limited, but the voyage also is described by its local termini; as opposed to policies of insurance for a particular voyage, without any limits as to time, and also to purely time policies, in which there is no designation of local termini at all.

Open policy. One in which the value of the subject insured is fixed for the purpose of the insurance, and expressed on the face of the policy. But this term is also sometimes used to describe a policy in which an aggregate amount is expressed in the body of the policy, and the specific amounts and subjects are to be indorsed from time to time.

Paid-up policy. In life insurance, a policy on which no further payments are to be made in the way of annual premiums.

Participating policy. A policy commonly found in mutual insurance companies and in some stock companies in which the insured participates in the profits by receiving dividends or rebates from future premiums.

Policy loan. An advancement on life policy without a personal obligation on the part of the policyholder as to repayment. Board of Assessors of the Parish of Orleans v. New York Life Ins. Co., 216 U.S. 517, 30 S.Ct. 385, 54 L.Ed. 597. A loan made by an insurance company which takes the policy's cash reserve as security for the loan.

Term policy. In life insurance, a policy which gives protection for a specified period of time but no cash or reserve value is created in the policy. See Insurance.

Time policy. In fire insurance, one made for a defined and limited time, as, one year. In marine insurance, one made for a particular period of time, irrespective of the voyage or voyages upon which the vessel may be engaged during that period.

Valued policy. One in which the value of the thing insured, and also the amount to be paid thereon in the event of loss, is settled by agreement between the parties and inserted in the policy.

Voyage policy. A policy of marine insurance effected for a particular voyage or voyages of the vessel, and not otherwise limited as to time.

Wager policy. An insurance upon a subject-matter in which the party assured has no real, valuable, or insurable interest. A mere wager policy is that in which the party assured has no interest in the thing assured, and could sustain no possible loss by the event insured against, if he had not made such wager. Such policies are generally illegal, or not otherwise written, because the insured does not have an insurable interest.

Policy value. The amount of cash available to the policyholder on the surrender or cancellation of the insurance policy.

Policy year. In insurance, the year which commences with the date of the commencement or anniversary of the policy.

Političes legibus non leges politilis adaptandae /polish'yl(y) liyjabos nón liyj lýs polishyias adapténdy/. Politics are to be adapted to the laws, and not the laws to politics.

Political. Pertaining or relating to the policy or the administration of government, state or national. Pertaining to, or incidental to, the exercise of the functions vested in those charged with the conduct of government; relating to the management of affairs of state, as political theories; of or pertaining to exercise of rights and privileges or the influence by which individuals of a state seek to determine or control its public policy, having to do with organization or action of individuals, parties, or interests that seek to control appointment or action of those who manage affairs of a state. State ex rel. Maley v. Civic Action Committee, 238 Iowa 851, 28 N.W.2d 467, 470.

Political corporation. A public or municipal corporation; one created for political purposes, and having for its object the administration of governmental powers of a subordinate or local nature.

Political crime. In general, any crime directly against the government; e.g. treason; sedition. It includes any violent political disturbance without reference to a specific crime. See also Political offenses.

Political law. That branch of jurisprudence which treats of the science of politics, or the organization and administration of government. More commonly called "Political science."

Political liberty. See Liberty.

Political offenses. As a designation of a class of crimes usually excepted from extradition treaties, this term denotes crimes which are incidental to and form a part of political disturbances; but it might also be understood to include offenses consisting in an attack upon the political order of things established in the country where committed, and even to include offenses committed to obtain any political object. Under extradition treaties, such offense must involve uprising of some other violent political disturbance and act in question must have been incidental to occurrence; status of offense is to be determined by circumstances attending it and not by motives of those who subsequently handle prosecution. Garcia-Guillern v. U. S., C.A.Fla., 450 F.2d 1189, 1192. See also Political crime.

Political office. See Office.

Political party. A number of persons united in opinion and organized in the manner usual to the then existing political parties. Swindell v. State Election Board, 168 Okl. 97, 32 P.2d 691, 695. An unincorporated, voluntary association of persons sponsoring certain ideas of government or maintaining certain political principles or beliefs in public policies of government, not a governmental agency or instrumentality. Robinson v. Holman, 181 Ark. 428, 26 S.W.2d 66, 68.

Political questions. Questions of which courts will refuse to take cognizance, or to decide, on account of their purely political character, or because their determination would involve an encroachment upon the executive or legislative powers.

A matter of dispute which can be handled more appropriately by another branch of the government is not a "justiciable" matter for the courts. However, a state apportionment statute is not such a political question as to render it nonjusticiable. Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 208-210, 82 S.Ct. 691, 705-706, 7 L.Ed.2d 663.

Political rights. Those which may be exercised in the formation or administration of the government. Rights of citizens established or recognized by constitutions which give them the power to participate directly or indirectly in the establishment or administration of government.

Political subdivision. A division of the state made by proper authorities thereof, acting within their constitutional powers, for purpose of carrying out a portion of those functions of state which by long usage and inherent necessities of government have always been regarded as public. State ex rel. Maisano v. Mitchell, 155 Conn. 256, 231 A.2d 539, 542.

Political trial. Term loosely applied to trials in which the parties represent fundamentally different political convictions and in which the parties or one of them attempts to litigate their political beliefs.

Politics. The science of government; the art or practice of administering public affairs.

Polity. The form of government; civil constitution.

Poll. v. To single out, one by one, of a number of persons. To examine each juror separately, after a verdict has been given, as to his concurrence in the verdict. See Polling the jury.

Poll. n. A head; an individual person; a register of persons. In the law of elections, a list or register of heads or individuals who may vote in an election; the aggregate of those who actually cast their votes at the election, excluding those who stay away.

Polling the jury. A practice whereby the jurors are asked individually whether they assented, and still assent, to the verdict. To poll a jury is to call the names of the persons who compose a jury and require each juror to declare what his verdict is before it is recorded. This may be accomplished by questioning them individually or by ascertaining fact of unanimous concurrence by general question, and once concurrence has been determined, the polling is at an end. Fortenberry v. New York Life Ins. Co., C.A.Tenn., 459 F.2d 114, 115.

If upon the poll there is not unanimous concurrence, the jury may be directed to retire for further deliberations or may be discharged. Fed.R.Crim.P. 31.

Polls. The place where electors cast in their votes.

Poll-tax. A capitation tax; a tax of a specific sum levied upon each person within the jurisdiction of the taxing power and within a certain class (as, all males of a certain age, etc.) without reference to his property or lack of it.

Poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting in federal elections are prohibited by the 24th Amendment and as to state elections such were held to be unconstitutional in Harper v. Virginia Bd. of Elections, 383 U.S. 663, 86 S.Ct. 1079, 16 L.Ed.2d 169.

Po. lo. su. An old abbreviation for the words "ponit loco suo" (puts in his place), used in warrants of attorney.

Pollute. To corrupt or defile. The contamination of soil, air and water by noxious substances and noises.

Polyandry /pəˈlɒɪəndrɪ/. The civil condition of having more husbands than one to the same woman; a social order permitting plurality of husbands.
Polygamy est plurium simul virorum uxorumque connublium /pólajéymiá est pl(y)úriam sánymv varón-úsérmívi kán(y)úwbíyam/. Polygamy is the marriage with many husbands or wives at one time.

Polygamy /pólajímí/. The offense of having several wives or husbands at the same time, or more than one wife or husband at the same time. Bigamy literally means a second marriage distinguished from a third or other; while polygamy means many mar-rriages,—implies more than two. Polygamy is a crime in all states.

A person is guilty of polygamy, a felony of the third degree, if he marries or cohabits with more than one spouse at a time in purported exercise of the right of plural marriage. The offense is a continuing one until all cohabitation and claim of marriage with more than one spouse terminates. This section does not apply to parties to a polygamous marriage, lawful in the country of which they are residents or nationals, while they are in transit through or temporarily visiting this State. Model Penal Code, § 230.1.

Polyarchy /pólajárki/. A term sometimes used to deinate a government of many or several; a government where the sovereignty is shared by several persons; a collegiate or divided executive.

Polygraph. Lie detector test and the apparatus for conducting the test. The "polygraph" is an elec-tromechanical instrument which simultaneously measures and records certain physiological changes in the human body which it is believed are involuntarily caused by an examinee's conscious attempts to deceive an interrogator while responding to a carefully prepared set of questions. U. S. v. DeBetham, D. C.
Cal., 348 F.Supp. 1377, 1384. While the general rule is that the results of such tests are not admissible as evidence (United States v. Tremont, C.A.Tenn., 351 F.2d 144), a minority of courts permit such if the parties have entered into an adequate stipulation to that effect. Herman v. Eagle Star Ins. Co., D.C.Cal., 283 F.Supp. 33. See also Lie detector.

Polyopsony. The condition of a market characterized by the farness of buyers. The farness has an effect on the price of the materials or products.

Polyopoly. A market condition characterized by the farness of sellers and this has a direct effect on prices.

§§ 81–124. See also Bill of lading acts.

Pond. A body of stagnant water without an outlet, larger than a puddle and smaller than a lake; or a like body of water with a small outlet.

Great ponds. In Maine and Massachusetts, natural ponds having a superficial area of more than ten acres and not appropriated by the proprietors to their private use prior to a certain date.

Public pond. In New England, a great pond; a pond covering a superficial area of more than ten acres.

Private pond. A body of water wholly on the lands of a single owner, or of a single group of joint owners or tenants in common, which did not have any such connection with any public waters that fish could pass from one to the other. At common law, if pond was so connected with public waters that at time of high water, fish could go in and out, it was not "private pond" from which defendants could seize fish whether fish might go out same day or next season.

Ponderantur testes, non numerantur /póndarántár téstiýz nón n(y)úwbíyárntár/. Witnesses are weighed, not counted.

Pondus /póndás/. In old English law, poundage; i.e., a duty paid to the crown according to the weight of merchandise.

Pondus regis /póndás réjíyás/. The king's weight;
the standard weight appointed by the king.

Pone /pówníy/. In old English practice, an original writ formerly used for the purpose of removing suits from the court-baron or county court into the superior courts of common law. It was also the proper writ to remove all suits which were before the sheriff by writ of justices. But this writ is now in disuse, the writ of certiorari being the ordinary process by which at the present day a cause is removed from a county court into any superior court.

Ponendis in assistis /póndás in ásáyás/. An old writ directing a sheriff to impanel a jury for an assize or real action.

Ponendum in ballium /póndám in bélíyám/. An old writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in cases bailable.

Ponendum sigillum ad exceptionem /póndám sjílám èkakséjshyóvnám/. A writ by which justices were required to put their seals to exceptions exhibited by a defendant against a plaintiff's evidence, verdict, or other proceedings, before them.

Pone per vadum /pówníy pár wádíyám/. In English practice, an obsolete writ to the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear and answer the plaintiff's suit, on his putting in sureties to prosecute. It was so called from the words of the writ, "pone per vadum et salvo plégios," "put by gage and safe pledges, A.
B., the defendant."

Ponút se super patriam /pównat sjí yúwbí rétrí-yám/. Lat. He puts himself upon the country. The defendant's plea of not guilty in a criminal action was recorded, in old English practice, in these words, or in the abbreviated form "po. se."

Pool. A combination of persons or corporations engaged in the same business, or for the purpose of engaging in a particular business or commercial or speculative venture, where all contribute to a common fund, or place their holdings of a given stock or other security in the hands and control of a managing member or committee, with the object of eliminating competition as between the several members of the pool, or of establishing a monopoly or controlling prices or rates by the weight and power of their combined capital, or of raising or depressing prices on the stock market, or simply with a view to the successful conduct of an enterprise too great for the capital of any member individually, and on an agreement for the division of profits or losses among the members, either equally or pro rata. Also, a similar combination not embracing the idea of a pooled or contributed capital, but simply the elimination of destructive competition between the members by an agreement to share or divide the profits of a given business or venture, as, for example, a contract between two or more competing railroads to abstain from "rate wars" and (usually) to maintain fixed rates, and to divide their earnings from the transportation of freight in fixed proportions. Such type pooling arrangements are illegal under the Sherman Antitrust Act. See also Cartel; Trust.

In various methods of gambling, a "pool" is a sum of money made up of the stakes contributed by various persons, the whole of which is then wagered as a stake on the event of a race, game, or other contest, and the winnings (if any) are divided among the contributors to the pool pro rata. Or it is a sum similarly made up by the contributions of several persons, each of whom then makes his guess or prediction as to the event of a future contest or hazard, the successful bettor taking the entire pool. Such pools are distinct from the practice of bookmaking. U. S. v. Berent, C.A.Nev., 523 F.2d 1360, 1361.

A body of standing water, without a current or issue, accumulated in a natural basin or depression in the earth, and not artificially formed. See Pond.

Pooling of interests. In accounting for a merger, the asset and liability accounts of the merging companies are combined with any difference between book values of the net worth of the combined companies in the capital surplus accounts and the merger terms.

Pope. The bishop of Rome, and supreme head of the Roman Catholic Church.

Popular sense. In reference to the construction of a statute, this term means that sense which persons conversant with the subject-matter with which the statute is dealing would attribute to it.

Populisctum /pôpûlîsikûtum/. Lat. In Roman law, a law enacted by the people; a law passed by an assembly of the Roman people, in the comitia centuriata, on the motion of a senator; differing from a plebiscitum, in that the latter was always proposed by one of the tribunes.

Populus /pôpûlûs/. Lat. In Roman law, the people; the whole body of Roman citizens, including as well the patricians as the plebeians.

Porcion /pôrûshûn/. In Spanish law, a part or portion; a lot or parcel; an allotment of land.

Pornographic. That which is of or pertaining to obscene literature; obscene; licentious. Material is pornographic or obscene if the average person, applying contemporary community standards, would find that the work taken as a whole appeals to the prurient interest and if it depicts in a patently offensive way sexual conduct and if the work taken as a whole lacks serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 24–25, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 2615, 37 L.Ed.2d 419. See also Dominant theme; Obscene; Prurient interest.

Port. A place for the loading and unloading of the cargoes of vessels, and the collection of duties or customs upon imports and exports. A place, either on the seacoast or on a river, where ships stop for the purpose of loading and unloading cargo, or for purpose of taking on or letting off passengers, from whence they depart, and where they finish their voyage. A port is a place intended for loading or unloading goods; hence includes the natural shelter surrounding water, as also sheltered water produced by artificial jetties, etc. The Baldhill, C.C.A.N.Y., 42 F.2d 123, 125.

Foreign port. One exclusively within the jurisdiction of a foreign nation, hence one without the United States. But the term is also applied to a port in any state other than the state where the vessel belongs or her owner resides. Port other than home port.

Free port. See that title.

Home port. The port at which a vessel is registered or enrolled or where the owner resides.

Port of call. Port at which ships usually stop on a route or voyage.

Port of delivery. The port which is to be the terminus of any particular voyage, and where the vessel is to unload or deliver her cargo, as distinguished from any port at which she may touch, during the voyage, for other purposes.

Port of departure. The port from which vessel clears and departs upon start of voyage. As used in the United States statutes requiring a ship to procure a bill of health from the consular officer at the place of departure, is not the last port at which the ship stops while bound for the United States, but the port from which she cleared.

Port of destination. The port at which a voyage is to end. In maritime law and marine insurance, the term includes both ports which constitute the termini of the voyage: the home port and the foreign port to which the vessel is consigned as well as any usual stopping places for the receipt or discharge of cargo.

Port of discharge. In a policy of marine insurance, means the place where the substantial part of the cargo is discharged, although there is an intent to complete the discharge at another basin.

Port of entry. One of the ports designated by law, at which a custom-house or revenue office is established for the execution of the laws imposing duties on vessels and importations of goods. Port where immigrants arrive. 8 U.S.C.A. § 1221.

Post-reeve, or post-warden. An officer maintained in some ports to oversee the administration of the local regulations; a sort of harbor-master.

Port-risk. In marine insurance, a risk upon a vessel while lying in port, and before she has taken her departure upon another voyage. See also Port risk Insurance.

Port toll. The toll paid for bringing goods into a port.

Portal-to-Portal Act. Federal statute regulating pay for non-productive time required of employee to reach place of employment and to return in some instances.
PORT AUTHORITY

Port authority. Governmental agency authorized by a state or the federal government to regulate and plan traffic through a port, and also commonly charged with responsibility of encouraging or securing businesses to locate on land or areas served by port. Sometimes such authorities also have responsibility over establishment and maintenance of airports, bridges, tollways, and surface transportation in metropolitan area of port; e.g. New York Port Authority, which is operated jointly by New York and New Jersey under an interstate compact.

Portfolio. In investments, the collective term for all the securities held by one person or institution.

Portio legitima /pôrsh(i)y)oł lajcidam/. Lat. In the civil law, the birthright portion; that portion of an inheritance to which a given heir is entitled, and of which he cannot be deprived by the will of the decedent, without special cause, by virtue merely of his relationship to the testator.

Portion. An allotted part; a share, a parcel; a division in a distribution; a share of an estate or the like, received by gift or inheritance. Lecompte v. Davis' Ex'r, 285 Ky. 433, 148 S.W.2d 292, 295. See Per capita; Per stirpes.

Portion disponible. Fr. In French law, that part of a man's estate which he may bequeath to other persons than his natural heirs. A parent leaving one legitimate child may dispose of one-half only of his property; one leaving two, one-third only; and one leaving three or more, one-fourth only; and it matters not whether the disposition is inter vivos or by will.

Portora /portôrya/. In the civil law, duties paid in ports on merchandise. Taxes levied in old times at city gates. Tolls for passing over bridges.

Port risk insurance. Under New York law, "port risk insurance," in contradistinction to voyage or time insurance, means a risk upon a vessel while lying in port, and before she has taken her departure on another voyage. Bristol S.S. Corp. v. London Assur., D.C.N.Y., 404 F.Supp. 749, 752.

Portsale. In old English law, an auction; a public sale of goods to the highest bidder; also a sale of fish as soon as it is brought into the haven.

Portus est locus in quo exportantur et importantur merces /pôrdas ɛst ³owkes in kwôv ek³spɔrqantɛr ɛd importantɛr ³ârsiz/. A port is a place where goods are exported or imported.

Positive. Laid down, enacted, or prescribed. Express or affirmative. Direct, absolute, explicit. As to positive Condition; Fraud; Proof; and Servitude, see those titles.

Positive evidence. Direct evidence. Direct proof of the fact or point in issue; evidence which, if believed, establishes the truth or falsehood of a fact in issue; and does not arise from any presumption. It is distinguished from circumstantial evidence. See also Evidence.

Positive law. Law actually and specifically enacted or adopted by proper authority for the government of an organized jural society.

Positiv juris /pôzatâyvây júrâs/. Lat. Of positive law.

Posito uno oppositorum, negatur alterum /pazîsh(i)y)oô yûwûnôw apôzâtorâm ngûjêgêy otâram/. One of two opposite positions being affirmed, the other is denied.

Possé /pôsîy/. Lat. A possibility. A thing is said to be in posse when it may possibly be; in esse when it actually is. Group of people acting under authority of police or sheriff and engaged in searching for a criminal or in making an arrest. Same as Posse comitatus (q.v.).

Posse comitatus /pôsîy kômâtêydas/. Lat. The power or force of the county. The entire population of a county above the age of fifteen, which a sheriff may summon to his assistance in certain cases, as to aid him in keeping the peace, in pursuing and arresting felons, etc. Williams v. State, 253 Ark. 973, 490 S.W.2d 117, 121.

Possess. To occupy in person; to have in one's actual and physical control; to have the exclusive detention and control of; to have and hold as property; to have a just right to; to be master of; to own or be entitled to.

See also Hold; Possession.

Possessio /pazîsh(i)y)oû/. Lat. Civil law. That condition of fact under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure, to the exclusion of all others. This condition of fact is called "detention," and it forms the substance of possession in all its varieties.

Old English law. Possession; seisim. The detention of a corporeal thing by means of a physical act and mental intent, aided by some support of right.

General Classification

Pedis possessio /piy'das pazîsh(i)y)oû/. A foothold; an actual possession of real property, implying either actual occupancy or enclosure and use.

Possessio bona fide /pazîsh(i)y)oû bôw'nô fáy'dîy/. Possession in good faith. Possessio mala fide, possession in bad faith. A possessor bona fide is one who believes that no other person has a better right to the possession than himself. A possessor mala fide is one who knows that he is not entitled to the possession.

Possessio bonorum /pazîsh(i)y)oû bônônôrm/. In the civil law, the possession of goods. More commonly termed "bonorum possessio" (q.v.).

Possessio civilis /pazîsh(i)y)oû sıvâs/. In Roman law, a legal possession, i.e., a possessing accompanied with the intention to be or to thereby become owner; and, as so understood, it was distinguished from "possessio naturalis," otherwise called "nuda detentio," which was a possessing without any such intention. Possessio civilis was the basis of usuaptio or of longi temporis possessio, and was usually (but not necessarily) adverse possession.
Possessio fratris /pazėš(y)ow fratres/. The possession or seisin of a brother; that is, such possession of an estate by a brother as would entitle his sister of the whole blood to succeed him as heir, to the exclusion of a half-brother. Hence, derivatively, that doctrine of the older English law of descent which shut out the half-blood from the succession to estates; a doctrine which was abolished by the descent act, 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 106.

Possessio longi temporis /pazėš(y)ow lónjày tempæras/. See Usucapio.

Possessio naturalis /pazėš(y)ow náxcharéylas/. See Possessio civilis, supra.

Possessio est quasi pedis positio /pazėš(y)ow ést kwéyśay pydïs pazish(y)ow/. Possession is, as it were, the position of the foot.

Possessio fratris de foedo simplici facit sororem esse heredem /pazėš(y)ow frátris di fywúðw simplasay féyśt soróm éshy hariydam/. The brother’s possession of an estate in fee-simple makes the sister to be heir.

Possession. The detention and control, or the manual or ideal custody, of anything which may be the subject of property, for one’s use and enjoyment, either as owner or as the proprietor of a qualified right in it, and either held personally or by another who exercises it in one’s place and name. Act or state of possessing. That condition of facts under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure to the exclusion of all other persons.

The law, in general, recognizes two kinds of possession: actual possession and constructive possession. A person who knowingly has direct physical control over a thing, at a given time, is then in actual possession of it. A person who, although not in actual possession, knowingly has both the power and the intention at a given time to exercise dominion or control over a thing, either directly or through another person or persons, is then in constructive possession of it. The law recognizes also that possession may be sole or joint. If one person alone has actual or constructive possession of a thing, possession is joint.

Generally, “possession” within context of title insurance policies refers to open, visible and exclusive use. Happy Canyon Inv. Co. v. Title Ins. Co. of Minnesota, Colo.App., 560 P.2d 839, 842.

See also Adverse possession; Constructive possession; Contentious possession; Exclusive possession; Hold; Notorious possession; Occupancy; Repossession.

Actual possession. Exists where the thing is in the immediate occupancy and control of the party. Field Furniture Co. v. Community Loan Co., 257 Ky. 825, 79 S.W.2d 211, 215. See also general definition above.

Adverse possession. See Adverse possession.

Chose in possession. A thing (subject of personal property) in actual possession, as distinguished from a “chose in action,” which is not presently in the owner’s possession, but which he has a right to demand, receive, or recover by suit.

Civil possession. In modern civil law and in the law of Louisiana, that possession which exists when a person ceases to reside in a house or on the land which he occupied, or to retain the movable which he possessed, but without intending to abandon the possession. It is the detention of a thing by virtue of a just title and under the conviction of possessing as owner. A fiction resulting from the registry of the title of the original owner.

Constructive possession. Possession not actual but assumed to exist, where one claims to hold by virtue of some title, without having the actual occupancy, as, where the owner of a tract of land, regularly laid out, is in possession of a part, he is constructively in possession of the whole. See also general definition above.

Corporeal possession. The continuing exercise of a claim to the exclusive use of a material thing. The elements of this possession are first, the mental attitude of the claimant, the intent to possess, appropriate to oneself; and second, the effective realization of this attitude. All the authorities agree that an intent to exclude others must coexist with the external facts, and must be fulfilled in the external physical facts in order to constitute possession.

Criminal law. Possession as necessary for conviction of offense of possession of controlled substances with intent to distribute may be constructive as well as actual. U. S. v. Craig, C.A.Tenn., 522 F.2d 29, 31. The defendants must have had dominion and control over the contraband. U. S. v. Morando-Alvarez, C.A. Ariz., 520 F.2d 882, 884. See also Possess.

Possession, as an element of offense of stolen goods, is not limited to actual manual control upon or about the person, but extends to things under ne’s power and dominion. McConnell v. State, 48 Ala. App. 523, 266 So.2d 328, 333.

Possession as used in indictment charging possession of stolen mail may mean actual possession or constructive possession. U. S. v. Ellison, C.A.Cal., 469 F.2d 413, 415.

To constitute “possession” of a concealable weapon under statute proscribing possession of a concealable weapon by a felon, it is sufficient that defendant have constructive possession and immediate access to the weapon. State v. Kelley, 12 Or.App. 496, 507 P.2d 837, 839.

Derivative possession. The kind of possession of one who is in the lawful occupation or custody of the property, but not under a claim of title of his own, but under a right derived from another, as, for example, a tenant, bailee, licensee, etc.

Dispossession. The act of ousting or removing one from the possession of property previously held by him, which may be tortious and unlawful, as in the case of a forcible emption, or in pursuance of law, as where a landlord “dispossesses” his tenant at the expiration of the term or for other cause by the aid of judicial process. See Dispossess proceedings; Ejectment; Eviction.

Estate in possession. An estate whereby a present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not depending on any subsequent circumstance or contingency. An estate where the tenant is in actual per-nancy, or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom.

Exclusive possession. See Exclusive possession.

Hostile possession. This term, as applied to an occupant of real estate holding adversely, is not construed as implying actual emnity or ill will, but merely means that he claims to hold the possession in the character of an owner, and therefore denies all validity to claims set up by any and all other persons. See Adverse possession.

Naked possession. The actual occupation of real estate, but without any apparent or colorable right to hold and continue such possession; spoken of as the lowest and most imperfect degree of title.

Natural possession. That by which a man detains a thing corporeally, as, by occupying a house, cultivating ground, or retaining a movable in possession; natural possession is also defined to be the corporeal detention of a thing which we possess as belonging to us, without any title to that possession or with a title which is void.

Open possession. Possession of real property is said to be "open" when held without concealment or attempt at secrecy, or without being covered up in the name of a third person, or otherwise attempted to be withdrawn from sight, but in such a manner that any person interested can ascertain who is actually in possession by proper observation and inquiry. See Adverse possession.

Peaceable possession. See Peaceable.

Pedal possession. In establishing title by adverse possession this means actual possession; that is, living upon or actually occupying the land, or placing improvements directly upon it.

Possession, writ of. Where the judgment in an action of ejectment is for the delivery of the land claimed, or its possession, this writ is used to put the plaintiff in possession. It is in the nature of execution.

Quasi possession. Is to a right what possession is to a thing, it is the exercise or enjoyment of the right, not necessarily the continuous exercise, but such an exercise as shows an intention to exercise it at any time when desired.

Scrambling possession. By this term is meant a struggle for possession on the land itself, not such a contest as is waged in the courts, or possession gained by an act of trespass, such as building a fence.

Unity of possession. Joint possession of two rights by several titles, as where a lessee of land acquires the title in fee-simple, which extinguishes the lease. The term also describes one of the essential properties of a joint estate, each of the tenants having the entire possession as well of every parcel as of the whole.

Vacant possession. An estate which has been abandoned, vacated, or forsaken by the tenant. The abandonment must be complete in order to make the possession vacant, and, therefore, if the tenant have goods on the premises it will not be so considered.

Possession is nine-tenths of the law. This adage is not to be taken as true to the full extent, so as to mean that the person in possession can only be ousted by one whose title is nine times better than his, but it places in a strong light the legal truth that every claimant must succeed by the strength of his own title, and not by the weakness of his antagonist's.

Possession vaut titre /pəˈʒeɪʃən vɔt tɪˈtʃeɪt/ Fr. In English law, as in most systems of jurisprudence, the fact of possession raises a prima facie title or a presumption of the right of property in the thing possessed. In other words, the possession is as good as the title (about).

Possesio pacifica per annos 60 factus /pəˈʒeɪʃə(r)tʃiˈtʃi ˈfæktəs/ Peaceable possession for sixty years gives a right.

Possessor. One who possesses; one who has possession. See also Occupant.

Possessor bona fide /pəˈʒeɪʃər ˈbɒnə ˈfaɪdi/ He is a bona fide possessor who possesses as owner by virtue of an act sufficient in terms to transfer property, the defects of which he was ignorant of. He ceases to be a bona fide possessor from the moment these defects are made known to him, or are declared to him by a suit instituted for the recovery of the thing by the owner.

Possessor mala fide /pəˈʒeɪʃər ˈmeɪlə ˈfaɪdi/ The possessor in bad faith is he who possesses as master, but who assumes this quality, when he well knows that he has no title to the thing, or that his title is vicious and defective.

Possessory. Relating to possession; founded on possession; contemplating or claiming possession.

Possessory action. See next title.

Possessory claim. The title of a pre-emptor of public lands who has filed his declaratory statement but has not paid for the land.

Possessory lien. A lien is possessory where the creditor has the right to hold possession of the specific property until satisfaction of the debt or performance of an obligation.

Possessory action. An action which has for its immediate object to obtain or recover the actual possession of the subject-matter; as distinguished from an action which merely seeks to vindicate the plaintiff's title, or which involves the bare right only; the latter being called a "petitory" action; e.g. summary process action to dispossess tenant for non-payment of rent. A "possessory action" is one brought by a possessor of immovable property to be maintained in his possession when his possession has been disturbed or to be restored to possession from which he has been evicted. Mott v. Smith, La.App., 273 So.2d 675, 677.

An action founded on possession. Trespass for injuries to personal property is called a "possessor's" action, because it lies only for a plaintiff who, at the moment of the injury complained of, was in actual or constructive, immediate, and exclusive possession.

Admiralty practice. One which is brought to recover the possession of a vessel, had under a claim of title.

Old English law. A real action which had for its object the regaining possession of the freehold, of which the demandant or his ancestors had been un-Possessory Interest. Right to exert control over specific land to exclusion of others. Right to possess property by virtue of an interest created in the property though it need not be accompanied by title; e.g. right of a tenant for years.

A possessory interest in land exists in a person who has (a) a physical relation to the land of a kind which gives a certain degree of physical control over the land, and an intent so to exercise such control as to exclude other members of society in general from any present occupation of the land; or (b) interests in the land which are substantially identical with those arising when the elements stated in Clause (a) exist. Restatement, Property, § 7.

Possessory warrant. The proceeding by possessory warrant is a summary remedy for the recovery of a personal chattel which has been taken by fraud, violence, enticement, or seduction from the possession of the party complaining or which, having been in his recent possession, has disappeared and is believed to be in the possession of the party complained against.

The purpose of the proceeding is to protect and quiet the possession of personality, but only as against acts which are inhibited by statute.

Possibilitas /possibilitas/. Lat. Possibility; a possibility. Possibilitas post dissolutionem executionis nunquam revivescat, a possibility will never be revived after the dissolution of its execution. Post executionem status, lex non patitur possibilitatem, after the execution of an estate the law does not suffer a possibility.

Possibility. An uncertain thing which may happen. A contingent interest in real or personal estate.

It is either near (or ordinary), as where an estate is limited to one after the death of another, or remote (or extraordinary), as where it is limited to a man, provided he marries a certain woman, and that she shall die and he shall marry another.

See also Impossibility; Probability.

Bare possibility. The same as a "naked" possibility. See infra.

Naked possibility. A bare chance or expectation of acquiring a property or succeeding to an estate in the future, but without any present right in or to it which the law would recognize as an estate or interest.

Possibility coupled with an interest. An expectation recognized in law as an estate or interest, such as occurs in executory devises and shifting or springing uses. Such a possibility may be sold or assigned.

Possibility of reverter. Future estate left in creator or in his successors in interest upon simultaneous creation of estate that will terminate automatically within a period of time defined by occurrence of specified event. United Methodist Church in West Sand Lake v. Kunz, 78 Misc.2d 565, 357 N.Y.S.2d 637, 640. The interest which remains in a grantor or testator after the conveyance or devise of a fee simple determinable and which permits the grantor to be revested automatically of his estate on breach of the condition.

Possibility on a possibility. A remote possibility, as if a remainder be limited in particular to A.'s son John, or Edward, it is bad if he have no son of that name, for it is too remote a possibility that he should not only have a son, but a son of that particular name.

Possible. Capable of existing, happening, being, becoming or coming to pass; feasible, not contrary to nature of things; neither necessitated nor precluded; free to happen or not; contrasted with impossible.

In another sense, the word denotes improbability, without excluding the idea of feasibility. It is also sometimes equivalent to "practicable" or "reasonable," as in some cases where action is required to be taken "as soon as possible." See also Potential.

Post. Lat. After; as occurring in a report or a textbook, term is used to send the reader to a subsequent part of the book. Same as "infra."

Post, n. Military establishment where body of troops is stationed; also place where soldier is stationed.

Post, v. To bring to the notice or attention of the public by affixing to a post or wall, or putting up in some public place; to announce, publish or advertise by use of placard. To place in mails. In accounting, to transfer an entry from an original record to a ledger. As regards posting of bail, see Bail. See also Posting.

Post-act. An after-act; an act done afterwards.

Postage. Charges for postal service.

Postal. Relating to the mails; pertaining to the post-office.

Postal currency. During a brief period following soon after the commencement of the civil war in the United States, when specie change was scarce, postage stamps were popularly used as a substitute; and the first issues of paper representatives of parts of a dollar, issued by authority of congress, were called "postal currency." This issue was soon merged in others of a more permanent character, for which the later and more appropriate name is "fractional currency."

Postal order. A money order. A letter of credit furnished by the government, at a small charge, to facilitate the transmission of money.

Postal Service. The United States Postal Service replaced the Post Office Department in 1971. It is administered by a governing board whose members are appointed by the President. The head of the Service is the Postmaster General.

Post-conviction remedies. Federal. A federal prisoner, attacking the constitutionality of his sentence, may move the court which imposed the sentence to vacate, set aside or correct the same. This motion, under 28 U.S.C.A. § 2255, must normally be made before the prisoner can seek habeas corpus relief.

State. Almost every state has one or more post-conviction procedures that permit prisoners to challenge at least some constitutional violations. A substantial group of states have adopted special post-conviction statutes or court rules, roughly similar to section 2255 of 28 U.S.C.A., that encompass all constitutional claims. Case v. Neb., 381 U.S. 336, 338, 85 S.Ct. 1486, 14 L.Ed.2d 422. Others, following the federal habeas corpus statute, have held that at least some constitutional violations are jurisdictional defects cognizable under a common law or statutory writ of habeas corpus. Ex Parte Story, 88 Okl.Cr. 358, 203 P.2d 474. The writ of coram nobis is also viewed in several states as an appropriate remedy for presenting certain types of constitutional claims. People v. Cooper, 307 N.Y. 253, 120 N.E.2d 813. In addition, several states have adopted the Uniform Post Conviction Procedure Act.

Post-date. To date an instrument as of a time later than that at which it is really made. The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by the fact that it is post-dated. U.C.C. § 3-114.

Post-dated check. One delivered prior to its date, generally payable at sight or on presentation on or after day of its date. See Post-date.

Post diem /pōwst dáym/. After the day; as, a plea of payment post diem, after the day when the money became due.

Post dissisn /pōwst dafisz/. In old English law, the name of a writ, which lies for him who, having recovered lands and tenements by force of a novel dissisn, is again dispossessed by a former disseisor.

Postea /pōwstéa/. In the common-law practice, a formal statement, indorsed on the nisi prius record, which gives an account of the proceedings at the trial of the action.

Posted waters. Waters flowing through or lying upon inclosed or cultivated lands, which are preserved for the exclusive use of the owner or occupant by his posting notices (according to the statute) prohibiting all persons from shooting, trapping, or fishing thereon, under a prescribed penalty.

Posteriora derogant prioribus /pōstirýôra dērōgant praryôrabas/. Posterior things derogate from things prior.

Posteriores /pōstirôyôrîyz/. Lat. This term was used by the Romans to denote the descendants in a direct line beyond the sixth degree.

Posteriority /pōstirôyôrîdiy/. This is a word of comparison and relation in tenure, the correlative of which is the word “priority.” Thus, a man who held lands or tenements of two lords was said to hold of his more ancient lord by priority, and of his less ancient lord by posteriority. It has also a general application in law consistent with its etymological meaning, and, as so used, it is likewise opposed to priority.

Posteriity /pōstirîdiy/. All the descendants of a person in a direct line to the remotest generation.

Post executionem status lex non patitur possibilitatem /pōwst eśkûlywshiwyōwnam stêydas lêks nôn pêddar pōssibilatêydam/. After the execution of the estate the law suffers not a possibility.

Post facto /pōwst fêktow/. After the fact. See Ex post facto.

Post-factum, or postfactum /pōwstfêiktam/. An after-act; an act done afterwords; a post-act.

Post-fine. In old conveyancing, a fine or sum of money, (otherwise called the “king’s silver”) formerly due on granting the licentia concordandi, or leave to agree, in levying a fine of lands. It amounted to three-twentieths of the supposed annual value of the land, or ten shillings for every five marks of land.

Post hoc /pōwst hék/. Lat. After this; after this time; hereafter.

Posthumous. That which is done after the death of a person as the publication of a book after the death of the author, or the birth of a child after the death of its father.

Posthumous child /pôstýomas cháyld/. Child born after the death of his or her father. See Unborn child.

Posthumous work /pôstýomas wârk/. Work on which original copyright has been taken out by someone to whom literary property passed before publication. Shapiro, Bernstein & Co. v. Bryan, C.C.A.N.Y., 123 F.2d 697, 699.

Posthumus pro nato habetur /pôstýomas prôw nédyow habêydr/. A posthumous child is considered as though born [at the parent’s death].

Posting. The act of transferring an original entry to a ledger. The act of mailing a document. Form of service of process consisting of displaying the process in a prominent place when other forms of service are availning.

Postliminium /pōwstlêminyam/. Lat. In the civil law, a doctrine or fiction of the law by which the restoration of a person to any status or right formerly possessed by him was considered as relating back to the time of his original loss or deprivation; particularly in the case of one who, having been taken prisoner in war, and having escaped and returned to Rome, was regarded, by the aid of this fiction, as having never been abroad, and was thereby reinstated in all his rights.

The term is also applied, in international law, to the recapture of property taken by an enemy, and its consequent restoration to its original owner.

Postliminium fingit eum qui captos est in civitate semper fuisses /pōwstlêminyam finjâ iyám kwây kêptows âst in svatêydiy sêmper fywuisîy/. Postliminy feigns that he who has been captured has never left the state.

Postliminy /pōwstlêmînîy/. See Postliminium.

Post litem motam /pōwst láydam môwdam/. Lat. After suit moved or commenced. Deposits in relation to the subject of a suit, made after litigation had commenced, were formerly sometimes so termed.

Postman. A letter-carrier; mailman. In England, a senior barrister in the court of exchequer, who has precedence in motions, so called from the place where he sits.

Postmark. A stamp or mark put on letters or other mailable matter received at the post-office for transmission through the mails.
Postmaster. An officer of the United States Postal Service appointed to take charge of a local post-office and transact the business of receiving and forwarding the mails at that point, and such other business as is committed to him under the postal laws.

Postmaster general. The head of the U.S. Postal Service.

Post-mortem /pəʊwstɜrmɔːrdəm/. After death; pertaining to matters occurring after death. A term generally applied to an autopsy or examination of a dead body, to ascertain the cause of death, or to the Inquisition for that purpose by the coroner.

Postnati /pəʊwstnéiday/. Those born after. See Post natus.

Post natus /pəʊwst néýdəs/. Born afterwards. A term once used in private international law to designate a person who was born after some historic event (such as the American Revolution or the act of union between England and Scotland), and whose rights or status will be governed or affected by the question of his birth before or after such event.

Post-notes /pəʊwstnəʊts/. A species of bank-notes payable at a future time, and not on demand.

Post-nuptial /pəʊwstnʌptʃəl/. After marriage.

Post-nuptial agreement. Post-nuptial agreements or settlements are made after marriage between couples still married; they take the form of separation agreements, property settlements in contemplation of a separation or divorce, or property settlements where there is no intention of the parties to separate. Friedlanders v. Friedlander, 80 Wash.2d 293, 454 P.2d 208, 212.

Post-nuptial settlement. See Post-nuptial agreement.

Post-obit. Lat. An agreement by which the obligor borrows a certain sum of money and promises to pay a larger sum, exceeding the lawful rate of interest, upon the death of a person from whom he has some expectation, if the obligor be then living.

Post-obit bond. A bond given by an expectant, to become due on the death of a person from whom he will have property. A bond or agreement given by a borrower of money, by which he undertakes to pay a larger sum, exceeding the legal rate of interest, on or after the death of a person from whom he has expectations, in case of surviving him. Such are common in England.

Postpone. To put off; defer; delay; continue; adjourn; as when a hearing is postponed. Also to place after; to set below something else; as when an earlier lien is for some reason postponed to a later lien. The word "postpone" carries with it the idea of deferring the doing of something or the taking effect of something until a future or later time. Gartner v. Roth, 26 Cal.2d 184, 157 P.2d 361, 363.

Post proem suscitatum /pəʊwst prɒvlæm süstɛʃədæm/. After issue born (raised).

Post-terminal sittings. Sittings after term. See Sitting.
POTENTIA

Potentia inutilis frustra est /poténsh(i)yə inyúwðalas frístə ɛst/. Useless power is to no purpose.

Potential. Existing in possibility but not in act. Naturally and probably expected to come to existence at some future time, though not now existing; for example, the future product of grain or trees already planted, or the successive future installments or payments on a contract or engagement already made. Things having a “potential existence” may be the subject of mortgage, assignment, or sale. See Possible.

Potentia non est nisi ad bonum /poténsh(i)yə nɔn ɛst náʃsə ɛd bɔwnəm/. Power is not conferred but for the public good.

Potentia propinqua /poténsh(i)yə prɔpɨŋkwə/. Common possibility. See Possibility.

Potestas /potéstəs/. Lat. In the civil law, power; authority, domination; empire. Imperium, or the jurisdiction of magistrates. The power of the father over his children, patria potestas. The authority of masters over their slaves.

Potestas stricte interpretatur /potéstəs strɪkt̪ɛ intɪrˈprɛtərət/. A power is strictly interpreted.

Potestas suprema selpsum dissolvere potest, ligare non potest /pətéstəs səlˈpəsm dɪˈsəʊləvərɪ ˈpəʊdəst/ ligər ən ˈpəʊdəst/. Supreme power can dissolve [unleash] but cannot bind itself.

Potest quis renunciare pro se et suis juri quod pro se introductum est /ˈpəʊdəst kwɪs rənənˈʃərə prəʊ sərət sə dəˈtrəktəm ɛst/.. One may relinquish for himself and his heirs a right which was introduced for his own benefit.

Potior est conditio defendentis /pəˈwɔʃ(i)yər əst kənˈdiʃən(ɨ)yə ˈdɛfəndəntəs/. Better is the condition of the defendant [than that of the plaintiff].

Potior est conditio possidentis /pəˈwɔʃ(i)yər əst kənˈdiʃən(ɨ)yə pəsəˈdʒiəntəs/. Better is the condition of the possessor.

Potts’ fracture /ˈpɔts fræˈkʃər/. A fracture of the lower part of the fibula, accompanied with injury to the ankle joint, so that the foot is dislocated outward. Stockham v. Hall, 145 Kan. 291, 65 P.2d 348.

Pound. A place, inclosed by public authority, for the detention of stray animals; e.g. dog pound. Place where impounded property is held until redeemed.

A pound-ovett is said to be one that is open over- head; a pound-cover is one that is closed, or covered over, such as a stable or other building.

A measure of weight, equal to 16 avoirdupois ounces or 7,000 grains; the pound troy 12 ounces or 5,760 grains.

Basic monetary unit of United Kingdom; also called pound sterling.

Poundage fees. An allowance to the sheriff, commissioner, or the like, of so much upon the amount levied under an execution. The money which an owner of animals (or other property) impounded must pay to obtain their release.

In old English law, a subsidy to the value of twelve pence in the pound, granted to the king, of all manner of merchandize of every merchant, as well denizen as alien, either exported or imported.

Pound breach. The common law offense of breaking a pound, for the purpose of taking out the cattle or goods impounded.

Pour acquit. Fr. In French law, the formula which a creditor prefixes to his signature when he gives a receipt.

Pour appuyer. For the support of, or “in the support of.”

Pour appuyer nouvelle demande. In support of his new action.

Pour autrui. For others.

Pour compte de qui il appartient. Fr. For account of whom it may concern.

Pour faire proclamer. L. Fr. An ancient writ addressed to the mayor or bailiff of a city or town, requiring him to make proclamation concerning nuisances, etc.

Pour-over. Provision in a will which directs the distribution of property into a trust. Also, a similar provision in a trust which directs property into a will.

Pour-over trust. See Pour-over; Trust.

Pour-over will. See Pour-over.

Pourparier. Fr. In French law, the preliminary negotiations or bargainings, which lead to a contract between the parties. As in English law, these form no part of the contract when completed. The term is also used in this sense in international law and the practice of diplomacy.

Pourparty /ˈpərprærpiːˈɛrpiː/ /ˈpərpræshkær pəːrəˈɛrpiː/. To make pourparty is to divide and sever the lands that fall to parceners, which, before partition, they held jointly and pro indiviso.

Pourpresture /ˈpərprɛʃkər pəːrəˈɛrpiː/. In old English law, an inclosure. Anything done to the nuisance or hurt of the public demesnes, or the highways, etc., by inclosure or building, endeavoring to make that private which ought to be public. The difference between a pourpresture and a public nuisance is that pourpresture is an invasion of the jus privatum of the crown; but where the jus publicum is violated it is a nuisance.

Pour selsir terres /ˈpər səˈsɪər təˈriːs/. L. Fr. An ancient writ whereby the crown seized the land which the wife of its deceased tenant, who held in capite, had for her dowuer, if she married without leave.

Poursuivant /ˈpɔrsəvənt/. The king’s messenger; a royal or state messenger. In the heralds’ college, a functionary of lower rank than a herald, but discharging similar duties, called also “poursuivant at arms.”
Pourvyanse /pərvvɛn̪s/ /pərvvɛn̪s/. In old English law, the providing corn, fuel, victuals, and other necessaries for the king’s house.

Pourveyor, or porveyor /pərvvɛrər/. A buyer; one who provided for the royal household.

Poverty. The state or condition of being poor. See also Indigent.

Poverty affidavit. An affidavit, made and filed by person seeking public assistance, appointment of counsel, waiver of court fees, or other free services or benefits, that he or she is in fact, financially unable to pay for such.

Document signed under oath which may be the basis of a court’s permitting one to proceed in forma paupers. Leave to proceed on appeal in forma pauperis from district court to court of appeals is governed by Fed.R.App.P. 24.

See also Pauper’s oath.

Power. The right, ability, authority, or faculty of doing something. Authority to do any act which the grantor or might himself lawfully perform. Porter v. Household Finance Corp. of Columbus, D.C. Ohio, 385 F.Sup. 336, 341.

A power is an ability on the part of a person to produce a change in a given legal relation by doing or not doing a given act. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 6; Restatement, Property, § 3.

In a restricted sense a “power” is a liberty or authority reserved by, or limited to, a person to dispose of real or personal property, for his own benefit, or benefit of others, or enabling one person to dispose of interest which is vested in another.

See also Authority; Beneficial power; Capacity; Concurrent power; Control; Delegation of powers; Donee of power; Enumerated powers; Executive powers; Governmental powers; Judicial power; Legislative power; Police power; Right.

Appendant or appurtenant powers. Those existing where the donee of the power has an estate in the land and the power is to take effect wholly or in part out of that estate, and the estate created by its exercise affects the estate and interest of the donee of the power.

Collateral powers. Those in which the donee of the power has no interest or estate in the land which is the subject of the power. Also called “naked powers.”

Constitutional powers. The right to take action in respect to a particular subject-matter or class of matters, involving more or less of discretion, granted by the constitution to the several departments or branches of the government, or reserved to the people. Powers in this sense are generally classified as legislative, executive, and judicial (q.v.); and further classified as enumerated (or express), implied, inherent, resulting, or sovereign powers.

Commerce powers. Power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states. Art. I, § 8, Cl. 3, U.S.Const.

Enforcement powers. The 13th, 14th, 15th, 19th, 23rd, 24th, and 26th Amendments each contain a section providing, in these or equivalent words, that “Congress shall have the power to enforce by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.”

Enumerated or express powers. Powers expressly provided for in Constitution; e.g., U.S.Const. Art. I, § 8.

Implied powers. Such as are necessary to make available and carry into effect those powers which are expressly granted or conferred, and which must therefore be presumed to have been within the intention of the constitutional or legislative grant. See Enforcement powers, above; also Necessary and proper powers, below. See also Penumbra doctrine.

Inherent powers. Powers which necessarily inhere in the government by reason of its role as a government; e.g., conducting of foreign affairs. United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp., 299 U.S. 304, 315, 316, 57 S.Ct. 216, 81 L.Ed. 255. See also Supremacy clause.

Necessary and proper powers. Art. I, § 8, Cl. 18 gives Congress power “To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers (i.e. those enumerated in clauses 1–17), and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.” See also Penumbra doctrine.

Preemptive powers. See Pre-emption; Supremacy clause.

Reserved or residual state powers. The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people. 10th Amend., U.S.Const.

Resulting powers. Those powers which “result from the whole success of the powers of the National Government and from the nature of political society.” American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 26 U.S. (1 Pet.) 516, 7 L.Ed. 242.

Spending power. Power of Congress “to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.” Art. I, § 8, Cl. 1, U.S.Const.

Corporate powers. The right or capacity to act or be acted upon in a particular manner or in respect to a particular subject; as, the power to have a corporate seal, to sue and be sued, to make by-laws, to carry on a particular business or construct a given work.

General and special powers. A power is general when it authorizes the alienation in fee, by means of a conveyance, will, or charge, of the lands embraced in the power to any alienee whatsoever. It is special (1) when the persons or class of persons to whom the disposition of the lands under the power is to be made are designated, or (2) when the power authorizes the alienation, by means of a conveyance, will, or charge, of a particular estate or interest less than a fee.

General and special powers in trust. A general power is in trust when any person or class of persons other than the grantee of such power is designated as entitled to the proceeds or any portion of the proceeds or other benefits to result from the alienation. A special power is in trust (1) when the disposition or charge which it authorizes is limited to be made to any person or class of persons other than the holder of the power, or (2) when any person or class of persons other than the holder is designated as entitled to any benefit from the disposition or charge authorized by the power.

Implied powers. Powers not granted in express terms but existing because they are necessary and proper to carry into effect some expressly granted power. See also Constitutional powers, supra.

Inherent powers. Those which are enjoyed by the possessors of natural right, without having been received from another. Such are the powers of a people to establish a form of government, of a father to control his children. Some of these are regulated and restricted in their exercise by law, but are not technically considered in the law as powers.

Inherent agency power is a term used in the Restatement of Agency to indicate the power of an agent which is derived not from authority, apparent authority or estoppel, but solely from the agency relation and exists for the protection of persons harmed by or dealing with a servant or other agent. Restatement, Second, Agency § 8A.

Ministerial powers. See Ministerial.

Naked power. One which is simply collateral and without interest in the donee, which arises when, to a mere stranger, authority is given of disposing of an interest, in which he had not before, nor has by the instrument creating the power, any estate whatsoever.

Power of revocation. A power which is to divest or abridge an existing estate.

Powers in gross. Those which give a donee of the power, who has an estate in the land, authority to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him or take effect out of his interest, but will take effect after donee's estate has terminated.

Real property law. An authority to do some act in relation to real property, or to the creation or revocation of an estate therein, or a charge thereon, which the owner granting or reserving such power might himself perform for any purpose. An authority expressly reserved to a grantor, or expressly given to another, to be exercised over lands, etc., granted or conveyed at the time of the creation of such power. See Power of alienation.

For other compound terms, such as Power of appointment; Power of sale; etc., see the following titles.

Power coupled with an interest. A right or power to do some act, together with an interest in the subject-matter on which the power is to be exercised. It is distinguished from a naked power, which is a mere authority to act, not accompanied by any interest of the donee in the subject-matter of the power. Arcweld Mfg. Co. v. Burney, 12 Wash.2d 212, 121 P.2d 350, 355.

Power of alienation. The power to sell, transfer, assign or otherwise dispose of property.

Power of appointment. A power or authority conferred by one person by deed or will upon another (called the "donee") to appoint, that is, to select and nominate, the person or persons who are to receive and enjoy an estate or an income therefrom or from a fund, after the testator's death, or the donee's death, or after the termination of an existing right or interest.

A power of appointment may be exercisable by deed or by will depending upon the terms established by the donor of the power, and is defined, generally, as power or authority given to person to dispose of property, or interest therein, which is vested in person other than donee of the power. In re Conroy's Estate, 67 C.A.3d 734, 136 Cal.Rptr. 807, 809.

Powers are either: Collateral, which are given to strangers; i.e., to persons who have neither a present nor future estate or interest in the land. These are also called simply "collateral," or powers not coupled with an interest, or powers not being interests. Or they are powers relating to the land. These are called "appendant" or "appurtenant," because they strictly depend upon the estate limited to the person to whom they are given. Thus, where an estate for life is limited to a man, with a power to grant leases in possession, a lease granted under the power may operate wholly out of the life-estate of the party executing it, and must in every case have its operation out of his estate during his life. Such an estate must be created, which will attach on an interest actually vested in himself. Or they are called "in gross." If given to a person who had an interest in the estate at the execution of the deed creating the power, or to whom an estate is given by the deed, but which enabled him to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him. Of necessity, therefore, where a man seised in fee settles his estate on others, reserving to himself only a particular power, the power is in gross.

An important distinction is established between general and particular powers. By a general power we understand a right to appoint to whomsoever the donee pleases including himself or his estate. By a particular power it is meant that the donee is restricted to some objects designated in the deed or will creating the power.

A general power is beneficial when no person other than the grantee has, by the terms of its creation, any interest in its execution. A general power is in trust when any person or class of persons, other than the grantee of such power, is designated as entitled to the proceeds, or any portion of the proceeds, or other benefits to result from the alienation.

When a power of appointment among a class requires that each shall have a share, it is called a "distributive" or "non-exclusive" power; when it authorizes, but does not direct, a selection of one or more to the exclusion of the others, it is called an "exclusive" power, and is also distributive; when it gives the power of appointing to a certain number of the class, but not to all, it is exclusive only, and not distributive. A power authorizing the donee either to give the whole to one of a class or to give it equally among such of them as he may select (but not to give one a larger share than the others) is called a "mixed" power.

See also General power of appointment; Illusory appointment; Limited power of appointment.

Testamentary power. A power of appointment that can only be exercised through a will (i.e., upon the death of the holder).

Power of attorney. An instrument authorizing another to act as one's agent or attorney. The agent is attorney in fact and his power is revoked on the death of the principal by operation of law. Such power may be either general or special.

Power of disposition. Every power of disposition is deemed absolute, by means of which the donee of such power is enabled in his life-time to dispose of the entire fee for his own benefit; and, where a general and beneficial power to devise the inheritance is given to a tenant for life or years, it is absolute, within the meaning of the statutes of some of the states. See Power of appointment.

Power of sale. A clause commonly inserted in mortgages and deeds of trust, giving the mortgagee (or trustee) the right and power, on default in the payment of the debt secured, to advertise and sell the mortgaged property at public auction (but without resorting to a court for authority), satisfy the creditor out of the net proceeds, convey by deed to the purchaser, return the surplus, if any, to the mortgagor, and thereby divest the latter's estate entirely and without any subsequent right of redemption.

Power of termination. The interest left in the grantor or testator after the conveyance or devise of a fee simple on condition subsequent or conditional fee, e.g. "to A on condition that the property be used for church purposes." When such property is no longer used for church purposes, the grantor may enter or commence an action for entry based on the breach of the condition. However, he is not automatically vested. He must enter or commence an action.

P.P. An abbreviation for "propria persona," in his proper person, in his own person, and for per procuration (q.v.).

P.P.I. Policy proof of interest, i.e., in the event of loss, the insurance policy is to be deemed sufficient proof of interest.

Practicable, practicably. Practicable is that which may be done, practiced, or accomplished; that which is performable, feasible, possible; and the adverb practicably means in a practicable manner. Within liability policy providing that when accident occurred, written notice should be given by or on behalf of insured to insurer or any of its authorized agents as soon as practicable, "practicable" was held to mean feasible in the circumstances. Frey v. Security Ins. Co. of Hartford, D.C.Pa., 331 F.Supp. 140, 143.

Practice. Repeated or customary action; habitual performance; a succession of acts of similar kind; custom; usage. Application of science to the wants of men. The exercise of any profession.

The form or mode or proceeding in courts of justice for the enforcement of rights or the redress of wrongs, as distinguished from the substantive law which gives the right or denies the wrong. The form, manner, or order of instituting and conducting an action or other judicial proceeding, through its successive stages to its end, in accordance with the rules and principles laid down by law or by the regulations and precedents of the courts. The term applies as well to the conduct of criminal as to civil actions, to proceedings in equity as well as at law, and to the defense as well as the prosecution of any proceeding. Wells Lamont Corp. v. Bowles, Em. App., 149 F.2d 364, 366.

Practice of law. The rendition of services requiring the knowledge and the application of legal principles and technique to serve the interests of another with his consent. R. J. Edwards, Inc. v. R. L. Hert, Okl., 504 P.2d 407, 416. It is not limited to appearing in court, or advising and assisting in the conduct of litigation, but embraces the preparation of pleadings, and other papers incident to actions and special proceedings, conveying, the preparation of legal instruments of all kinds, and the giving of all legal advice to clients. It embraces all advice to clients and all actions taken for them in matters connected with the law. Rhode Island Bar Ass'n v. Lesser, 68 R.I. 14, 26 A.2d 6, 7. An attorney engages in the "practice of law" by maintaining an office where he is held out to be an attorney, using a letterhead describing himself as an attorney, counseling clients in legal matters, negotiating with opposing counsel about pending litigation, and fixing and collecting fees for services rendered by his associate. State v. Schumacher, 214 Kan. 1, 519 P.2d 1116, 1127.

Practice of medicine. The treatment of injuries as well as the discovery of the cause and nature of disease, and the administration of remedies, or the prescribing of treatment therefor.

Practice court. In English law, a court attached to the court of king's bench, which heard and determined common matters of business and ordinary motions for writs of mandamus, prohibition, etc. It was usually called the "bail court." It was held by one of the puisne justices of the king's bench. See also Moot court.

Practices. A succession of acts of a similar kind or in a like employment.

Practitioner. He who is engaged in the exercise or employment of any art or profession as contrasted with one who teaches such.

Preceptores /praesiptöriyz/. Lat. In old English law, masters. The chief clerks in chancery were formerly so called, because they had the direction of making out remedial writs.

Preceptories /praespëtariyz/. In feudal law, a kind of benefices, so called because they were possessed by the more eminent templars whom the chief master by his authority created and called "Preceptores Templi."

Precipe /prespi/. Lat. In practice, an original writ drawn up in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason why he had not done it. It includes an order to the clerk of court to issue an execution on a judgment already rendered. Yazoo & M.V.R. Co. v. Clarksdale, 257 U.S. 10, 42 S.Ct. 27, 66 L.Ed. 104.
A paper upon which the particularis of a writ are written. It is filed in the office out of which the required writ is to issue. Also an order, written out and signed, addressed to the clerk of a court, and requesting him to issue a particular writ.

Praecipe quod redat /prəsəpi kwaď rédat/. Command that he render. A writ directing the defendant to restore the possession of land, employed at the beginning of a common recovery.

Praecipe, tenant to the /tənant tə sə prəspəpi/. A person having an estate of freehold in possession, against whom the praecipe was brought by a tenant in tail, seeking to bar his estate by a recovery.

Praecliptum /prəsəpʃ(ɨ)ləm/. The punishment of casting headlong from some high place.

Preco /prəıkəʊ/. Lat. In Roman law, a herald or crier.

Preetognita /prəıkəʊgnətə/. Things to be previously known in order to the understanding of something which follows.

Praedea /prəi(d)iə/. In the civil law, lands; estates; tenements; properties. See Praedium.

Praedea bellica /prəi(d)iə bɛləka/. Booty. Property seized in war.

Praedial /prəi(d)iəl/. That which arises immediately from the ground: as, grain of all sorts, hay, wood, fruits, herbs, and the like.

Praedial servitute /prəi(d)iəl sərvət(y)wud/. A right which is granted for the advantage of one piece of land over another, and which may be exercised by every possessor of the land entitled against every possessor of the servient land. It always presupposes two pieces of land (praedias) belonging to different proprietors; one burdened with the servitude, called "praedium serviens," and one for the advantage of which the servitude is conferred, called "praedium dominans."

Praedial tithes /prəi(d)iəl tətʃəz/. Such as arise merely and immediately from the ground; as grain of all sorts, hops, hay, wood, fruit, herbs.

Praedla stipendiaria /prəi(d)iəla stədəpəndiəriə/. In the civil law, provincial lands belonging to the people.

Praedla tributaria /prəi(d)iəla trəbiτəriə/. In the civil law, provincial lands belonging to the emperor.

Predicus /prədikəs/. Lat. Aforesaid. In civil law, pleading, of the three words, "idem," "predicus," and "praefatus." "Idem" was most usually applied to plaintiffs or demandants; "predicus," to defendants or tenants, places, towns, or lands; and "praefatus," to persons named, not being actors or parties. These words may all be rendered in English by "said" or "aforesaid."

Praedium /prəi(d)iəm/. Lat. In the civil law, land; an estate; a tenement; a piece of landed property.

Praedium dominans /prəi(d)iəm dəmənən(d)z/. In the civil law, the name given to an estate to which a servitude is due; the dominant tenement.

Praedium serviens /prəi(d)iəm sərvəyən(d)z/. In the civil law, the name of an estate which suffers a servitude or easement to another estate; the servient tenement.

Praedium servit prædicio /prəi(d)iəm sərvət prədiʃiəʊ/. Land is under servitude to land [i.e., servitudes are not personal rights, but attach to the dominant tenement].

Praedium urbanum /prəi(d)iəm ərəbənəm/. In the civil law, a building or edifice intended for the habitation and use of man, whether built in cities or in the country.

Praedo /prəi(d)əʊ/. Lat. In Roman law, a robber.

Praefatus /prəefədəs/. Lat. Aforesaid. Sometimes abbreviated to "praefat," and "p. fat."

Prefecture /prəfekt(y)ʊriə/. In Roman law, conquered towns, governed by an officer called a "prefect," who was chosen in some instances by the people, in others by the praetors.

Praefectus vigilum /prəfəktəs vəjɪliəm/. Lat. In Roman law, the chief officer of the night watch. His jurisdiction extended to certain offenses affecting the public peace, and even to larcenies; but he could inflict only slight punishments.

Praefectus ville /prəfəktəs əliə/. The mayor of a town.

Prafine /prəfinə/. The fee paid on suing out the writ of covenant, on levying fines, before the fine was passed.

Praejuramentum /prəi(d)eʃurəməntəm/. In old English law, a preparatory oath.

Praegaturum /prəi(d)eɡətərum/. Lat. In Roman law, a payment in advance of the whole or part of the share which a given heir would be entitled to receive out of an inheritance; corresponding generally to "advance ment" in English and American law.

Premium /prəmiəm/. Lat. Reward; compensation. Premium assecurationis, compensation for insurance; premium of insurance.

Premium emancipationis /prəmiəm əmənən(t)səpəʃiənəməs/. In Roman law, a reward or compensation anciently allowed to a father on emancipating his child, consisting of one-third of the child's separate and individual property, not derived from the father himself.

Premium pudicitie /prəmiəm pyʊwdəsəʃiətiə/. The price of chastity; or compensation for loss of chastity. A term applied to bonds and other engagements given for the benefit of a seduced female. Sometimes called "premiunum pudoris."

Premunire /prəmiuənəriə/. In old English law, an offense against the king and his government, though not subject to capital punishment. So called from the words of the writ which issued preparatory to the prosecution: "Premunire facias A. B. quod sit corum nobis," etc.; "Cause A. B. to be forewarned that he appear before us to answer the contempt with which he stands charged."

The statutes establishing this offense, the first of which was made in the thirty-first year of the reign of Edward I, were framed to encounter the papal usurpations in England; the original meaning of the offense called "praemunire" being the introduction of a foreign power into the kingdom, and creating imperium in imperio, by paying that obedience to papal process which constitutionally belonged to the king alone. The penalties of præmunire were afterwards applied to other heinous offenses. 4 Bl. Comm. 103–117.

Prenomen /priyównman/. Lat. Forename, or first name. The first of the three names by which the Roman were commonly distinguished. It marked the individual, and was commonly written with one letter; as “A.” for “Aulus,” “C.” for “Caius,” etc.

Prepositus /priypōzadas/. In old English law, an officer next in authority to the alderman of a hundred, called "praepositus regius;" or a steward or bailiff of an estate, answering to the “vicious.”

Also the person from whom descents are traced under the old canons.

Prepositus ville /priypōzadas vilivy/. A constable of a town, or petty constable.

Prepropra consilla raro sunt prospera /priywprwpr kan(i)sl(i)ys rɛcw snt prwprwa/. Hasty counsels are rarely prosperous.

Prescriptio /prskriph(i)ow/. Lat. In the civil law, that mode of acquisition whereby one becomes proprietor of a thing on the ground that he has for a long time possessed it as his own; prescription. It was anciently distinguished from "usucapio" (q.v.), but was blended with it by Justinian.

Prescriptio est titulus ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens ab auctoritate legis /prskriph(i)ow ɛst tʃ(ʃ)ylas ɛks ʃjuːs(ʃ)ow ɛt ˈtɛmpəri ˈsɛbstənʃiəliəm kəpiəm(d)z əb ˈɔktəˈhɔrstədiə lɪˈjaː/. Prescription is a title by authority of law, deriving its force from use and time.

Prescriptio et executione non pertinent ad valorum contractus, set ad tempus et modum actionis instituendae /prskriph(i)ow əd ɛkskriph(ʃ)iow ən pəˈdɛnt əd ˈvələrm ˈkɒntrəktəs, ˈsɛd əd ˈtɛmpəs ət ˈməʊdəm ɛkskriph(ʃ)iow ɪnˈstitjuːdəˈwiːndə/. Prescription and execution do not affect the validity of the contract, but the time and manner of bringing an action.

Prescriptiones /prskriph(ʃ)iowˈniːz/. Lat. In Roman law forms of words (of a qualifying character) inserted in the formulæ in which the claims in actions were expressed; and, as they occupied an early place in the formulæ, they were called by this name, i.e., qualifications preceding the claim. For example, in an action to recover the arrears of an annuity, the claim was preceded by the words "so far as the annuity is due and unpaid," or words to the like effect ("cujus rei dies fuit").

Presstante nihil alium est quam præsto dare seu offere /ˈprezəntəri nai̯ˈθiːl aˈliːm eʃt kæm prɛˈstɔʊ dɛrɛ syˈyuː ofˈɛriː/. To present is no more than to give or offer on the spot.

Presentia corporis tollit errorem nominis; et veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis /prɛˈzɛntʃiə kɔrˈpɔːris tɔllɨt ɛrɔˈroʊm nəˈmɪnis, ɛt vərɪˈtæs nəˈmɪnis tɔllɨt ɛrɔˈroʊm dɪˌstrəˌmeɪʃənɪz/. The presence of the body cures error in the name; the truth of the name cures an error of description.

Praes /prəˈziːʃə/. Lat. In Roman law, a president or governor. Called a "nomen generale," including proconsuls, legates, and all who governed provinces.

Prestare /prəˈstiːrə/. Lat. In Roman law, "præstare" meant to make good, and when used in conjunction with the words "dare," "facere," "opere," denoted obligations of a personal character, as opposed to real rights.

Prestat cautela quam medela /prəˈistat kəˈtɪlə kwəm məˈdɛlə/. Prevention is better than cure.

Presumatur pro justitia sententia /prəˈzuːmər pro ˈsɛntəntʃə. The presumption should be in favor of the justice of a sentence.

Presumatur pro legitimatione /prəˈzuːmər pro ˈlɪdʒɪtəˌmeɪjə. The presumption is in favor of legitimacy.

Presumatur pro negante /prəˈzuːmər pro ˈnegəntʃə. The presumption is for the negative. The rule of the house of lords when the numbers are equal on a motion.

Presumptio /prəˈzuːmətʃio/ ow/. Lat. Presumption; a presumption. Also intrusion, or the unlawful taking of anything.

Presumptio, ex eo quod plerunque fit /prəˈzuːmətʃo ə ə ˈkwɒd ˈplɛrʊnkwət ʃiˈt/. Presumptions arise from what generally happens.

Presumptio fortior /prəˈzuːmətʃio ˈfɔːrtjəriə/ ow/. A strong presumption; a presumption of fact entitled to great weight. One which determines the tribunal in its belief of an alleged fact, without, however, excluding the belief of the possibility of its being otherwise; the effect of which is to shift the burden of producing evidence to the opposite party, and, if this proof be not made, the presumption is held for truth. See Presumption.

Presumptio hominis /prəˈzuːmətʃio ˈhəʊmɪnəs/. The presumption of the man or individual; that is, natural presumption unfettered by strict rule.

Presumptio juris /prəˈzuːmətʃio ˈdʒiːriəs/. A legal presumption or presumption of law; that is, one in which the law assumes the existence of something until it is disproved by evidence; a conditional, inconclusive, or rebuttable presumption.

Presumptio juris et de jure /prəˈzuːmətʃio ˈdɨ ˈdʒuːr/. A presumption of law and of right; a presumption which the law will not suffer to be contradicted; a conclusive or irrebuttable presumption.

Presumptio muciana /prəˈzuːmətʃio ˈmjuːkiənə/. In Roman law, a presumption of law that property in the hands of a wife came to her as a gift from her husband and was not acquired from other sources; available only in doubtful cases and until the contrary is shown.
PRÆSUMPTIONES

Presumptiones sunt conjectura ex signo verisimili ad probandum assumpte /prɔzɔm(p)ʃiyəˈnɪz sɪnt kɔnˈdʒɛktʃʊrɪ ɛks sɪgnəʊ vəˈrɪsɪmɪli əd ˈprɔbənˌdəm əsaʊmˈpɪti/. Presumptions are conjectures from probable proof, assumed for purposes of evidence.

Presumptio violenta plena probatio /prɔzɔm(p)ʃiyəˈnɪz ˈvɑːləntə ˈplɪnə ˈprɔbəˈʃɪs/ow. Strong presumption is full proof.

Presumptio violenta valet in lege /prɔzɔm(p)ʃiyəˈnɪz ˈvɑːləntə ˈvɛləs id ɪn lɪˈdʒi/. Strong presumption is of weight in law.

Præteritio /prɛˈtɛriʃ(ʌ)ˌow/. Lat. A passing over or omission. Used in the Roman law to describe the act of a testator in excluding a given heir from the inheritance by silently passing him by, that is, neither instituting nor formally disinheriting him.

Prætextu illiciti non debetur admittit illictum /pr ætɛˈksɪst(ʌ)ˌjuː ˈlɪsədəj nɒn ˈdɛbət ədmɪt ˈaɪlɪktəm/. Under pretext of legality, what is illegal ought not to be admitted.

Prætextus /prætɛˈkstəs/. Lat. A pretext; a pretense or color. Prætextu cujus, by pretext, or under pretext whereof.

Prætor /prəˈtɔr/. Lat. In Roman law, a municipal officer of the city of Rome, being the chief judicial magistrate, and possessing an extensive equitable jurisdiction.

Prætor fidel-commissarius /prəˈtɔr fəˈdiːʃ(ʌ)ˌdʒiː ˈkɒmˌsɪˈmɪsərɪəs/. In the civil law, a special prætor created to pronounce judgment in cases of trusts or fidel-commissaria.

Prætorian law /præˈtɔriən lɔː/. See Lex prætoria.

Prævaricatur /prəˈværəˌkətər/ˈvɛɹəˌkətər/. Lat. In the civil law, one who betrays his trust, or is unfaithful to his trust. An advocate who aids the opposite party by betraying his client’s cause.

Pragmatica /præɡˈmætɪkə/. In Spanish colonial law, an order emanating from the sovereign, and differing from a cedula only in form and in the mode of promulgation.

Prairie /prəˈriː/. An extensive tract of level or rolling land, destitute of trees, covered with coarse grass, and usually characterized by a deep, fertile soil.

Pratique /prɔˈtʁitʃə/. A license for the master of a ship to traffic in the ports of a given country, or with the inhabitants of a given port, upon the lifting of quarantine or production of a clean bill of health.

Praxis /prəˈksiːs/. Lat. Use; practice.

Praxis judicium est interpres legum /prəˈksiːs ˈdʒɪdɪkɪm eʃ ɪntəˈprɪs lɪˈgʊm/. The practice of the judges is the interpreter of the laws.

Prayer. The request contained in a bill in equity that the court will grant the process, aid, or relief which the complainant desires. Also, by extension, the term is applied to that part of the bill which contains this request. Under rules practice, the pleader does not pray for relief, but, rather, demands it. Fed.R.Civl P. 8(a). See Prayer for relief.

Prayer for relief. That portion of a complaint (more properly called “demand for relief”) in a civil action which sets forth the requested relief or damages to which the pleader deems himself entitled. This is a requisite element of the complaint. Fed.R.Civil P. 8(a).

Prayer of process. A petition with which a bill in equity used to conclude, to the effect that a writ of subpoena might issue against the defendant to compel him to answer upon oath all the matters charged against him in the bill.

Pray in aid. In old English practice, to call upon for assistance. In real actions, the tenant might pray in aid or call for assistance of another, to help him to plead, because of the feebleness or imbecility of his own estate.

In current English practice, term refers to practice of attorney in action involving several parties to claim benefit for his client of argument used by another counsel for his client.

Preamble. A clause at the beginning of a constitution or statute explanatory of the reasons for its enactment and the objects sought to be accomplished. Generally, a preamble is a declaration by the legislature of the reasons for the passage of the statute and is helpful in the interpretation of any ambiguities within the statute to which it is prefixed. Griffith v. New Mexico Public Service Comm., 86 N.M. 113, 520 P.2d 269, 271. It has been held however to not be an essential part of act, and neither enlarges nor confers powers. Portland Van & Storage Co. v. Hess, 139 Or. 434, 9 P.2d 122, 126.

Preappointed evidence. The kind and degree of evidence prescribed in advance (as, by statute) as requisite for the proof of certain facts or the establishment of certain instruments. It is opposed to casual evidence, which is left to grow naturally out of the surrounding circumstances.

Preaudience /prəˈɔdiəns(t)əs/. The right of being heard before another. A privilege belonging to the English bar, the members of which are entitled to be heard in their order, according to rank, beginning with the Attorney and Solicitor General, and Queen’s Counsel, and ending with barristers at large.

Prebend. In English ecclesiastical law, a stipend granted in cathedral churches; also, but improperly, a prebendary. A simple prebend is merely a revenue; a prebend with dignity has some jurisdiction attached to it. The term "prebend" is generally confounded with "canonicate," but there is a difference between them. The former is the stipend granted to an ecclesiastic in consideration of his officiating and serving in the church; whereas the canonicate is a mere title or spiritual quality which may exist independently of any stipend.

Fixed portion of rents and profits of cathedral church used for maintenance of prebendaries.

Prebendary /prəˈbændəri/. An ecclesiastical person serving on the staff of a cathedral, and receiving a stated allowance or stipend from the income or endowment of the cathedral, in compensation for his services.
precariis /prɛkɛriɪʃ/ or preces /prɪsɪsɪz/. Day-works which the tenants of certain manors were bound to give their lords in harvest time. Magna precaria was a great or general reaping day.

Precarious /prɛkɛriɪv/. Liable to be returned or rendered up at the mere demand or request of another; hence, held or retained only on sufferance or by permission; and, by an extension of meaning, doubtful, uncertain, dangerous, very liable to break, fail, or terminate.

Precarious loan. A bailment by way of loan which is not to continue for any fixed time, but may be recalled at the mere will and pleasure of the lender. A loan, the repayment of which is in doubt or uncertain.

Precarious possession. In modern civil law, possession is called “precarious” which one enjoys by the leave of another and during his pleasure.

Precarious right. The right which the owner of a thing transfers to another, to enjoy the same until it shall please the owner to revoke it.

Precarious trade. In international law, such trade as may be carried on by a neutral between two belligerent powers by the mere sufferance of the latter.

Precarium /prɛkɛriæm/. Lat. In the civil law, a convention whereby one allows another the use of a thing or the exercise of a right gratuitously until revocation. The bailee acquires thereby the lawful possession of the thing, except in certain cases. The bailor can redeem the thing at any time, even should he have allowed it to the bailee for a designated period.

Precatory /prɛkɑriɪʃ/. Having the nature of prayer, request, or entreaty; conveying or embodying a recommendation or advice or the expression of a wish, but not a positive command or direction.

Precatory trust. A trust created by certain words, which are more like words of entreaty and permission than of command or certainty. Examples of such words, which the courts have held sufficient to constitute a trust, are “wish and request,” “have fullest confidence,” “heartily beseech,” and the like.

Precatory words. Words of entreaty, request, desire, wish, or recommendation, employed in wills, as distinguished from direct and imperative terms. Mere precatory words or expressions in a trust or will are ineffective to dispose of property. There must be a command or order as to the disposition of property.

Precaution /prɛkɔʃn/. Previous action; proven foresight; care previously employed to prevent mischief or to secure good result; or a measure taken beforehand; an active foresight designed to ward off possible problems, accidents, liability, or secure good results. Rincon v. Berg Co., Tex.Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 811, 813.

Precedence /prɛsɪdænt(ə)s/ or precedence /prɛsɪdænt(ə)sɪs/. The act or state of going before; adjustment of place. The right of being first placed in a certain order. See also Preference; Precedent; Priority.

Precedence, patent of. In old English law, a grant from the crown to such barristers as it thinks proper to honor with that mark of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and preaudience as are assigned in their respective patents.

Precedent /prɛsɪdænt/. An adjudged case or decision of a court, considered as furnishing an example or authority for an identical or similar case afterwards arising or a similar question of law. Courts attempt to decide cases on the basis of principles established in prior cases. Prior cases which are close in facts or legal principles to the case under consideration are called precedents. A rule of law established for the first time by a court for a particular type of case and thereafter referred to in deciding similar cases.

A course of conduct once followed which may serve as a guide for future conduct. See Custom and usage; Habit.

See also Stare decisis.

Precedent condition. Such as must happen or be performed before an estate can vest or be enlarged. See Condition.

Precedents sub silentio /prɛsɪdɛnts sæb sælɛnʃ(y)əʊ/. Silent uniform course of practice, uninterrupted though not supported by legal decisions.

Prece partium /prɛsɪsɪ pərθɪəm/. The continuance of a suit by consent of both parties.

Precept /prɛsɪpt/. An order, writ, warrant, or process. An order or direction, emanating from authority, to an officer or body of officers, commanding him or them to do some act within the scope of their powers. An order in writing, sent out by a justice of the peace or other like officer, for the bringing of a person or record before him. Precept is not to be confined to civil proceedings, and is not of a more restricted meaning than “process.” It includes warrants and processes in criminal as well as civil proceedings.

Rule imposing standard of conduct or action.

In English law, the direction issued by a sheriff to the proper returning officers of cities and boroughs within his jurisdiction for the election of members to serve in parliament. The direction by the judges or commissioners of assize to the sheriff for the summoning a sufficient number of jurors. The direction issued by the clerk of the peace to the overseers of parishes for making out the jury lists. Written command of justice of the peace or other like officer for the bringing of a person or record before him. In old English criminal law, instigation to commit a crime.

In old French law, a kind of letters issued by the king in subversion of the laws, being orders to the judges to do or tolerate things contrary to law.

Precept of attachment. Precept of attachment is an order to attach the goods and property of the defendant issued by a court generally after the action has been commenced when a writ of attachment has not been used.

Preces /prɛsɪsɪz/. Lat. In Roman law, prayers. One of the names of an application to the emperor.

Preces primarie /prɛsɪsɪz prɛmɪrɪjɪz/. In English ecclesiastical law, a right of the crown to name to the first prebend that becomes vacant after the accession of the sovereign, in every church of the empire. This right was exercised by the crown of England in the reign of Edward I.

Precinct /pri'sikt/. A constable's or police district. A small geographical unit of government. An election district created for convenient localization of polling places. A county or municipal subdivision for casting and counting votes in elections.

Precipe /présəply/. Another form of the name of the written instructions to the clerk of court; also spelled “precipe” (q.v.).

Precipitation /prəsɪpəˈtʃən/. Hastening occurrence of event or causing to happen or come to crisis suddenly, unexpectedly or too soon.

Preliminaries. In French law, a portion of an estate or inheritance which falls to one of the coheirs over and above his equal share with the rest, and which is to be taken out before partition is made.

Precise /prəˈsɪs/. Having determinate limitations. To the point.

Preclude /prəˈklud/ or /ˈkwəld/. Estop. To prohibit or prevent from doing something; e.g., injunction.

Precludi non /prəˈklud i ˈnɒn/ or /ˈkwəld i ˈnɒn/. Lat. In common law pleading, the commencement of a replication to a plea in bar, by which the plaintiff "says that, by reason of anything in the said plea alleged, he ought not to be barred" from having and maintaining hisforesaid action against him, the said defendant, because he says," etc.

Preclusion order. Under Fed.R.Civ.P. 37(b)(2)(B), a party to an action who fails to comply with an order for discovery may be precluded from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses.

Preclusion /prɪˈkənəˈzɛʃən/. Proclamation.

Precontract. A contract or engagement made by a person, which is of such a nature as to preclude him from lawfully entering into another contract of the same nature.

Predatory Intent. "Predatory intent," in pursuance of Robinson-Patman Act, means that alleged price discrimination must have at least satisfied present revenues for purpose of driving competitor out of market with hope of recouping losses through subsequent higher prices. International Air Industries, Inc. v. American Excelsior Co., C.A.Tex., 517 F.2d 714, 723.

Predentor. One who goes or has gone before; the correlative of "successor." One who has filled an office or station before the present incumbent. Applied to a body politic or corporate, in the same sense as "ancestor" is applied to a natural person.

Predial servitude /prɪˈdiːəl ˈsɜrvəti/ or /ˈkwədəl ˈsɜrvəti/. A charge laid on an estate for the use and utility of another estate belonging to another owner. See Predial servitude.

Predominant. Something greater or superior in power and influence to others with which it is connected or compared.

Pre-emption /praˌimbəm(ə)n/. Doctrine adopted by U.S. Supreme Court holding that certain matters are of such a national, as opposed to local, character that federal laws pre-empt or take precedence over state laws. As such, a state may not pass a law inconsistent with the federal law. Examples are federal laws governing interstate commerce. See also Federal pre-emption; Supremacy clause.

In international law, the right of pre-emption was formerly the right of a nation to detain the merchandise of strangers passing through her territories or seas, in order to afford to her subjects the preference of purchase.

In old English law, the first buying of a thing. A privilege formerly enjoyed by the crown, of buying up provisions and other necessaries, by the intervention of the king's purveyors, for the use of his royal household, at an appraised valuation, in preference to all others, and even without consent of the owner.

Pre-emption claimant. One who has settled upon land subject to pre-emption, with the intention to acquire title to it, and has complied, or is proceeding to comply, in good faith, with the requirements of the law to perfect his right to it. Hosmer v. Wallace, 97 U.S. 575, 581, 24 L.Ed. 1130. See Pre-emption right.

Pre-emption doctrine. See Pre-emption.

Pre-emption entry. See Entry.

Pre-emption right. A privilege accorded by the government to the actual settler upon a certain limited portion of the public domain, to purchase such tract at a fixed price to the exclusion of all other applicants. Nix v. Allen, 112 U.S. 129, 5 S.Ct. 70, 28 L.Ed. 675. One who, by settlement upon the public land, or by cultivation of a portion of it, has obtained the right to purchase a portion of the land thus settled upon or cultivated, to the exclusion of all other persons.

Pre-emptive right. The privilege of a stockholder to maintain a proportionate share of ownership by purchasing a proportionate share of any new stock issues. An existing stockholder in most jurisdictions has the right to buy additional shares of the new issue to preserve his equity before others have a right to purchase shares of the new issue. See also Stock.

Prefect. In French law, the name given to the public functionary who is charged in chief with the administration of the laws, in each department of the country. Crespin v. U.S., 168 U.S., 208, 18 S.Ct. 83, 42 L.Ed. 438. The term is also used, in practically the same sense, in Mexico. But in New Mexico, a prefect is a probate judge.

Prefer. To bring before; to prosecute; to try; to proceed with. Thus, preferring an indictment signifies prosecuting or trying an indictment.

To give advantage, priority, or privilege; to select for first payment, as to prefer one creditor over others.

Preference. The paying or securing to one or more of his creditors, by an insolvent debtor, the whole or a part of their claim, to the exclusion or detriment of the rest. The act of an insolvent debtor who, in distributing his property or in assigning it for the benefit of his creditors, pays or secures to one or more creditors the full amount of their claims or a larger amount than they would be entitled to receive on a pro rata distribution. Jackson v. Coons, 285 Ky. 154, 147 S.W.2d 45, 47. It imports the relation of existing creditors having equal equities at the time of the transfer whereby the rights of one are advanced over those of another. Adams v. City Bank & Trust Co. of Macon, Ga., C.C.A.Ga., 115 F.2d 453, 454. The treatment of such preferential payments in bankruptcy is governed by Bankruptcy Act, § 547. See also Voidable preference.

Preference share. One giving its holder a preference, either as to receipt of dividends, or as to payment in case of winding up, or both. In re Schaffer Stores Co., 224 App.Div. 268, 229 N.Y.S. 735, 739.

Preferential assignment. An assignment of property for the benefit of creditors, made by an insolvent debtor, in which it is directed that a preference (right to be paid first in full) shall be given to a creditor or creditors therein named. Such assignments are controlled by statute in most states, normally requiring recording, filing of schedules of assets and liabilities, giving notice to creditors, etc. Most all state statutes prohibit preferential assignments as being fraudulent conveyances. See Preference.

Preferential claim. See Preferential debts.

Preferential debts. In bankruptcy, those debts which are payable in preference to all others; as, wages of employees and administrative costs. Such debts are classified according to priority of claim. See Bankruptcy Act § 507.

Preferential dividend. See Preferred stock.

Preferential shop. A place of employment in which union members are given preference over nonunion members in matters of employment by agreement with the employer. A labor situation in a business in which preference is given to union men in hiring and layoff, but nonunion men may be hired when members of the union are not available. See Right-to-work laws.

Preferential tariff. A tariff which imposes lower rates of duty on goods imported from some countries ("preferred countries") than on the same goods imported from other countries. See also Most favored nation clause.

Preferential transfer. See Preference; Preferential assignment.

Prefered. Possessing or accorded a priority, advantage, or privilege. Generally denoting a prior or superior claim or right of payment as against another thing of the same kind or class; e.g. creditor with perfected security interest.

Preferred creditor. Creditor with preferential right to payment over junior creditors; e.g. creditor with perfected security interest has priority over unsecured creditor. U.C.C. § 9-301.

Preferred dividend. See Dividend.

Preferred dockets. Lists of preference cases prepared by the clerks when the cases are set for trial. For example, because of the constitutional right to a speedy trial in criminal cases, criminal dockets are normally given preference over civil dockets.

Preferred stock. Capital stock with a claim to income or assets after bondholders but before common stock. Dividends on preferred stock are income distributions, not expenses. Type of capital stock in which stockholder is entitled to preference in payment of dividends and assets on dissolution. Such stock is generally expressed as a percentage of par; e.g. 7%, preferred. See also Stock.

Callable. Preferred stock which is subject by its terms to being called in for payment at a predetermined price.

Cumulative. If a dividend is passed, it must be paid before the common stockholders receive their current dividend, and hence, the dividends accumulate in connection with this type of preferred stock.

Non-cumulative. Once a preferred dividend is passed in a particular period, the right to that dividend has passed though the preferred stockholder is entitled to his dividend in the next period before the common stockholders receive their dividend.

Participating. That type of preferred stock which is entitled to additional dividends beyond its stated dividend after the common stock dividend has been paid.

Preferred stock bailout. A procedure whereby the issuance, sale, and later redemption or a preferred stock dividend was used by a shareholder to obtain long-term capital gains without any loss of voting control over the corporation. In effect, therefore, the shareholder was able to bail-out corporate profits without suffering the consequences of dividend income treatment. This procedure led to the enactment by Congress of I.R.C. § 306 which, if applicable, converts the prior long-term capital gain on the sale of the stock to ordinary income. Under these circumstances, the amount of ordinary income is limited to the shareholder's portion of the corporation's earnings and profits existing when the preferred stock was issued as a stock dividend.

Prior. Preferred stock which takes precedence over other issues of preferred stock of the same corporation.

Pregnancy. The condition resulting from the fertilized ovum. The existence of the condition beginning at the moment of conception and terminating with delivery of the child.

Extra uterine or ectopic pregnancy is the development of the ovum outside of the uterine cavity, as in the Fallopian tubes or ovary. Extra uterine pregnancy commonly terminates by rupture of the sac, profuse internal hemorrhage, and death if not relieved promptly by a surgical operation.

Pregnancy, plea of. A plea which a woman capacitly convicted may plead in stay of execution; for this, though it is no stay of judgment, yet operates as a respite of execution until she is delivered. See also Matrons, jury of.

Pregnant negative. See Negative pregnant.

Prejudice. A forejudgment; bias; preconceived opinion. A leaning towards one side of a cause for some reason other than a conviction of its justice. See also Average man test; Bias; Discrimination.

Of judge. That which disqualified judge is condition of mind, which sways judgment and renders judge unable to exercise his functions impartially in particular case. It refers to mental attitude or disposition of the judge toward a party to the litigation, and not to any views that he may entertain regarding the subject matter involved. State ex rel. Mitchell v. Sage Stores Co., 157 Kan. 622, 143 P.2d 652, 655. Speedy trial. Prejudice with respect to right to speedy trial means actual prejudice to defendant's ability to present effective defense. U. S. v. Menke, D.C.Pa., 339 F.Supp. 1023, 1026. Prejudice as a factor in a speedy trial claim is not confined to merely an impairment of the defense but includes any threat to what has been termed an accused's significant stakes, psychological, physical and financial, in the prompt termination of a proceeding which may ultimately deprive him of life, liberty or property. U. S. v. Dreyer, C.A.N.J., 533 F.2d 112, 115.

Without prejudice. Where an offer or admission is made "without prejudice," or a motion is denied or a bill in equity dismissed "without prejudice," it is meant as a declaration that no rights or privileges of the party concerned are to be considered as thereby waived or lost, except in so far as may be expressly conceded or decided. See also Dismissal without prejudice; Without prejudice; With prejudice.

Prejudicial publicity. Due process requires that all parties to an action, civil or criminal, receive a trial by an impartial jury or tribunal free from outside influences. Extensive newspaper, radio and television coverage of a criminal trial may deprive the defendant of a fair trial. Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333, 86 S.Ct. 1507, 16 L.Ed.2d 600. See Gag order; Trial (Trial by news media).

Preliminary. Introductory; initiatory; preceding; temporary and provisional; as preliminary examination, injunction, articles of peace, etc.

Preliminary complaint. In some states, a court without jurisdiction to hear a criminal case on its merits may issue a preliminary complaint or process and conduct a probable cause or bind over hearing on such complaint.

Preliminary evidence. Such evidence as is necessary to commence a hearing or trial and which may be received conditionally in anticipation of other evidence linking it to issues in the case.

Preliminary examination. See Preliminary hearing.

Preliminary hearing. The hearing by a judge to determine whether a person charged with a crime should be held for trial. A hearing held in felony cases prior to indictment during which the state is required to produce sufficient evidence to establish that there is probable cause to believe (a) that a crime has been committed and (b) that the defendant committed it. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 5.1.

Preliminary hearing before magistrate is, basically, a first screening of the charge; its function is not to try the defendant, nor does it require the same degree of proof or quality of evidence as is necessary for an indictment or for conviction at trial. Mattioli v. Brown, 71 Misc.2d 99, 335 N.Y.S.2d 613, 615.

A preliminary injunction should be granted only upon a clear showing by party seeking the extraordinary remedy of (1) probable success upon a trial on the merits, and (2) likely irreparable injury to him unless the injunction is granted; or (3) if his showing of probable success is limited but he raised substantial and difficult issues meriting further inquiry, that the harm to him outweighs the injury to others if it is denied. Cohen v. Price Commission, D.C.N.Y., 337 F.Supp. 1236, 1239.

See also Injunction.

Preliminary proof. In insurance, the first proof offered of a loss occurring under the policy, usually sent in to the underwriters with the notification of claim.

Preliminary warrant. In some jurisdictions, a warrant or order to bring a person to court for a preliminary hearing on probable cause.

Premeditate. To think of an act beforehand; to contrive and design; to plot or lay plans for the execution of a purpose. See Deliberate; Premeditation.

Premeditated design. In homicide cases, the mental purpose, the formed intent, to take human life. Premeditated murder is murder in the first degree.

Premeditatedly. Thought of beforehand, for any length of time, however short.

Premeditation. The act of meditating in advance; deliberation upon a contemplated act; plotting or contriving; a design formed to do something before it is done. Decision or plan to commit a crime, such as murder, before committing it. A prior determination to do an act, but such determination need not exist for any particular period before it is carried into effect. Term "premeditation," means "thought of beforehand for any length of time, however short." State v. Marston, Mo., 479 S.W.2d 481, 484. See also Malice aforethought; Willful.

Premises. That which is put before; that which precedes; the foregoing statements. Thus, in logic, the two introductory propositions of the syllogism are called the "premises," and from them the conclusion is deduced. So, in pleading, the expression "in consideration of the premises" means in consideration of the matters hereinbefore stated.

In conveynancig. That part of a deed which precedes the habendum, in which are set forth the names of the parties with their titles and additions, and in which are recited such deeds, agreements, or matters of fact as are necessary to explain the reasons upon which the present transaction is founded; and it is here, also, the consideration on which it is made is set down and the certainty of the thing granted.

In equity pleading. The stating part of a bill. It contains a narrative of the facts and circumstances of the plaintiff's case, and the wrongs of which he complains, and the names of the persons by whom done and against whom he seeks redress. In most states equity pleading is obsolete, having been replaced by notice pleading under Rules of Civil Procedure. See Complaint.

In estates and property. Lands and tenements; an estate, including land and buildings thereon; the subject-matter of a conveynance. F. F. Proctor Troy Properties Co. v. Dugan Store, 191 App.Div. 685, 181 N.Y.S. 786, 788. The area of land surrounding a house, and actually or by legal construction forming one inclosure with it. A distinct and definite locality, and may mean a room, shop, building, or other definite area, or a distinct portion of real estate. Land and its appurtenances.

In Worker's Compensation Acts. "Premises" of the employer as used in Worker's Compensation Acts is not restricted to the permanent site of the statutory employer's business nor limited to property owned or leased by him but contemplates any place under the exclusive control of statutory employer where his usual business is being carried on or conducted. Boatman v. Superior Outdoor Advertising Co., Mo. App., 482 S.W.2d 743, 745.

A bounty or bonus; a consideration given to invite a loan or a bargain, as the consideration paid to the assignor by the assignee of a lease, or to the transferee by the transferee of shares of stock, etc. So stock is said to be "at a premium" when its market price exceeds its nominal or face value. The excess of issue (or market) price over par value. See Par.

In granting a lease, part of the rent is sometimes capitalized and paid in a lump sum at the time the lease is granted. This is called a "premium."

The sum paid or agreed to be paid by an insured to the underwriter (insurer) as the consideration for the insurance. The price for insurance protection for a specified period of exposure.

See also Earned premium; Net premium; Net single premium.

Premium note. A promissory note given by the insured for part or all of the amount of the premium. Securities issue. The amount by which a preferred stock or bond may sell above its par value. In the case of a new issue of bonds or stocks, premium is the amount the market price rises over the original selling price. Also refers to a charge sometimes made when a stock is borrowed to make delivery on a short sale. May refer, also, to redemption price of a bond or preferred stock if it is higher than face value.

Unearned premium. That portion which must be returned to insured on cancellation of policy. In accounting, the account which reflects that portion of a premium that has been paid for insurance coverage which has not yet been extended.

Premium loan. Loan made for purpose of paying an insurance premium and secured by the policy.

Premium pudicitiae /prijymiyam pıyúwdéshiyiy/. The price of chastity. A compensation for the loss of chastity, paid or promised to, or for the benefit of, a seduced female.

Premium tax. Tax paid by insurer on gross insurance premiums sold in state.

Premunire /pře-man'áry/. See Premunire.

Prenatal injuries. See Child.

Prenda /prënda/. In Spanish law, pledge.

Prender, prendre /pɾen dre/ or /pɾόndrə/ or. L. Fr. To take. The power or right of taking a thing without waiting for it to be offered. See A prendre.

Prender de baron /pɾe ndr da bærōn/. L. Fr. In old English law, a taking of husband; marriage. An exception or plea which might be used to disable a woman from pursuing an appeal of murder against the killer of her former husband.

Prenomen /prijpənəm/. Lat. The first or Christian name of a person.

Pre-nuptial agreement. One entered into by prospective spouses prior to marriage but in contemplation and in consideration thereof; by it, the property rights of one or both of the prospective spouses are determined or are secured to one or both of them or their children. Friedlander v. Friedlander, 80 Wash.2d 293, 494 P.2d 208, 212. See also Antenuptial agreement; Post-nuptial agreement.

Prepaid expense. An expense paid before it is currently due. In accounting, an expenditure for a benefit not yet enjoyed, e.g. pre-paid insurance premiums from the standpoint of the insured. Cash basis as well as accrual basis taxpayers are generally required to capitalize prepayments for rent, insurance, etc. that cover more than one year. Deductions are taken during the period the benefits are received.

Prepaid income. In accounting, income received but not yet earned.

Prepaid legal services. System by which persons may pay premiums to cover future legal services much the same as payments are made for future medical expenses. Such plan may be either open-ended whereby the person can secure legal services from the attorney of his choice, or closed-end whereby he must secure the services of a particular attorney, group of attorneys, or list of attorneys.

Preparation. With respect to criminal offense, consists in devising or arranging means or measures necessary for its commission, while attempt is direct movement toward commission after preparations are made. State v. Quick, 199 S.C. 256, 19 S.E.2d 101, 103. See also Ald and abet.

Prepare. To provide with necessary means; to make ready; to provide with what is appropriate or necessary.

Prepayment penalty. A penalty under a note, mortgage, or deed of trust, imposed when the loan is paid before its due date. Consideration to terminate loan at borrower's election before maturity.

Prepayments. Deferred charges. Assets representing expenditures for future benefits. Rent and insurance premiums paid in advance are usually classified as current prepayments.

Prepense. Forethought; preconceived; premeditated.

Preponderance of evidence. Evidence which is of greater weight or more convincing than the evidence which is offered in opposition to it; that is, evidence which as a whole shows that the fact sought to be proved is more probable than not. Braud v. Kinchen, La.App., 310 So.2d 657, 659. With respect to burden of proof in civil actions, means greater weight of evidence, or evidence which is more credible and convincing to the mind. That which best accords with reason and probability. The word "preponderance" means something more than "weight"; it denotes a superiority of weight, or outweighing. The words are not synonymous, but substantially different. There is generally a "weight" of evidence on each side in case of contested facts. But juries cannot properly act upon the weight of evidence, in favor of the one having the onus, unless it overbear, in some degree, the weight upon the other side.

That amount of evidence necessary for the plaintiff to win in a civil case. It is that degree of proof which is more probable than not.

Preponderance of evidence may not be determined by the number of witnesses, but by the greater weight of all evidence, which does not necessarily mean the greater number of witnesses, but opportunity for knowledge, information possessed, and manner of testifying determines the weight of testimony.

Prerogative /prərəˈɡəvər/. An exclusive or peculiar right or privilege. The special power, privilege, immunity, right or advantage vested in an official person, either generally, or in respect to the things of his office, or in an official body, as a court or legislature.

Prerogative court. In old English law, a court established for the trial of all testamentary causes, where the deceased left bona notabilia within two different dioceses; in which case the probate of wills belonged to the archbishop of the province, by way of special prerogative. And all causes relating to the wills, administrations, or legacies of such persons were originally cognizable herein, before a judge appointed by the archbishop, called the "judge of the prerogative court," from whom an appeal lay to the privy council. The jurisdiction of these courts became obsolete with the transfer of the testamentary jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts to the Chancery Division of the High Court.

Prerogative law. That part of the common law of England which is more particularly applicable to the king.

Prerogative writs. In English law, the name was given to certain judicial writs issued by the courts only upon proper cause shown, never as a mere matter of right, the theory being that they involved a direct interference by the government with the liberty and property of the subject, and therefore were justified only as an exercise of the extraordinary power (prerogative) of the crown. In America, issuance is now generally regulated by statute, and such are generally referred to as extraordinary writs or remedies.

Such writs have been abolished in the federal and most state courts with the adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure. The relief formerly available by such writs is now available by appropriate action or motion under the Rules of Civil Procedure. See Rule 81. These writs are the writs of mandamus, procedendo, prohibition, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and certiorari.

Pres /prɛs/. L. Fr. Near. Cy pres, so near; as near. See Cy pres.

Presbyter /prɛzɪbɛr/. Lat. In civil and ecclesiastical law, an elder; a presbyter; a priest.

Presbyterianism. One of the principal systems of church polity known as the "Christian Protestant Church", occupying an intermediate position between episcopacy and congregationalism. A religious faith or doctrine, based on the Westminster Confession of Faith and the Larger and Shorter Catechisms.

Presbyterium. That part of the church where divine offices are performed; formerly applied to the choir or chancel, because it was the place appropriated to the bishop, priest, and other clergy, while the laity were confined to the body of the church.

Prescribable /prəskrɪˈbæbl/. That to which a right may be acquired by prescription.

Prescribe. To assert a right or title to the enjoyment of a thing, on the ground of having hitherto had the uninterrupted and immemorial enjoyment of it.

To lay down authoritatively as a guide, direction, or rule; to impose as a peremptory order; to dictate; to point, to direct; to give as a guide, direction, or rule of action; to give law. To direct; define; mark out.

In a medical sense "prescribe" means to direct, designate, or order use of a particular remedy, therapy, medicine, or drug.

Prescription. A direction of remedy or remedies for a disease, illness, or injury and the manner of using them. Also, a formula for the preparation of a drug or medicine.

Prescription is a peremptory and perpetual bar to every species of action, real or personal, when creditor has been silent for a certain time without urging his claim. Jones v. Butler, La.App., 346 So.2d 790, 791.

Acquisition of a personal right to use a way, water, light and air by reason of continuous usage. See also Prescriptive easement.
International law. Acquisition of sovereignty over a territory through continuous and undisputed exercise of sovereignty over it during such a period as is necessary to create under the influence of historical development the general conviction that the present condition of things is in conformity with international order. State of Arkansas v. State of Tennessee, 310 U.S. 563, 60 S.Ct. 1026, 1030, 84 L.Ed. 1362.

Prescription in a que estate. A claim of prescription based on the immemorial enjoyment of the right claimed, by the claimant and those former owners “whose estate” he has succeeded to and holds.

Real property law. The name given to a mode of acquiring title to incorporeal hereditaments by immemorial or long-continued enjoyment. Hester v. Sawyers, 41 N.M. 497, 71 P.2d 646, 649. Prescription is the term usually applied to incorporeal hereditaments, while “adverse possession” is applied to lands.

In Louisiana, prescription is defined as a manner of acquiring the ownership of property, or discharging debts, by the effect of time, and under the conditions regulated by law. Each of these prescriptions has its special and particular definition. The prescription by which the ownership of property is acquired, is a right by which a mere possessor acquires the ownership of a thing which he possesses by the continuance of his possession during the time fixed by law. The prescription by which debts are released, is a peremptory and perpetual bar to every species of action, real or personal, when the creditor has been silent for a certain time without urging his claim. In this sense of the term it is very nearly equivalent to what is elsewhere expressed by “limitation of actions,” or rather, the “bar of the statute of limitations.”

See also Adverse possession; Prescriptive easement.

Prescriptive easement. A right to use another’s property which is not inconsistent with the owner’s rights and which is acquired by a use, open and notorious, adverse and continuous for the statutory period (e.g. twenty years). To a certain extent, it resembles title by adverse possession but differs to the extent that the adverse user acquires only an easement and not title. To create an easement by “prescription,” the use must have been open, continuous, exclusive, and under claim of right for statutory period. See also Adverse possession.

Presence. Act, fact, or state of being in a certain place and not elsewhere, or within sight or call, at hand, or in some place that is being thought of. The existence of a person in a particular place at a given time particularly with reference to some act done there and then. Besides actual presence, the law recognizes constructive presence, which latter may be predicated of a person who, though not on the very spot, was near enough to be accounted present by the law, or who was actively co-operating with another who was actually present.

Presence of an officer. An offense is committed in “presence” or “view” of officer, within rule authorizing arrest without warrant, when officer sees act constituting it, though at distance, or when circumstances within his observation give probable cause for belief that defendant has committed offense, or when he hears disturbance created by offense and proceeds as once to scene, or if offense is continuing, or has not been fully consummated when arrest is made.

Presence of defendant. In the trial of all felonies, the defendant or accused has the right to be present at every stage of the criminal proceeding unless he willfully and without justification absents himself or by his conduct renders it impossible to conduct the trial.

In many states, this rule does not obtain as to misdemeanors. Fed.R.Crim.P. 43 specifies when the presence of the defendant is required and not required.

Presence of the court. A contempt is in the “presence of the court,” if it is committed in the ocular view of the court, or where the court has direct knowledge of the contempt.

Presence of the testator. Will is attested in presence of testator if witnesses are within range of any of testator’s senses. In re Demaris’ Estate, 166 Or. 36, 110 P.2d 571, 585, 586. See Attestation.

Present, n. A gift; a gratuity; anything presented or given.

Present, adj. Now existing; at hand; relating to the present time; considered with reference to the present time. See also Presentment.

Present ability. As used in describing an element of the crime of assault, it means immediate or a point near immediate as regards the defendant’s capacity to inflict harm. People v. Ranson, 40 Cal.App.3d 317, 114 Cal.Rptr. 874, 877.

Present conveyance. A conveyance made with the intention that it take effect at once and not at a future time.

Present danger test. See Clear and present danger doctrine.

Present enjoyment. The immediate or present possession and use of an estate or property, as distinguished from such as is postponed to a future time.

Present estate. An estate in immediate possession; one now existing, or vested at the present time; as distinguished from a future estate, the enjoyment of which is postponed to a future time.

Present interest. One which entitles the owner to the immediate possession of the property.

A “present interest”, as distinguished from a future interest for purpose of federal gift tax annual exclusion, denotes a present right to realize, enjoy or use donated property. Duffy v. U. S., D.C.Minn., 182 F.Supp. 765, 767. “An interest in property is a “present interest” if the donee has the right presently to use, possess, or enjoy it.” Gilmore v. C. I. R., C.A. 6th, 213 F.2d 520, 521.

Present sale. A sale which is accomplished by the making of the contract. U.C.C. § 2-106(1).

Present time. A period of appreciable and generally considerable duration within which certain transactions are to take place.

Present use. One which has an immediate existence, and is at once operated upon by the statute of uses.

Presentative advowson /prəzˈɛntətɪv ədˌvɒwzən/. See Advowson.
Pre-sentence hearing. Procedural step prior to sentencing at which a judge may examine the presentence report and all other relevant material before imposing sentence. Sentencing is a “critical stage” of a criminal prosecution requiring assistance of appointed counsel. Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 88 S.Ct. 254, 19 L.Ed.2d 336. See Pre-sentence investigation; Presentence report.

Pre-sentence investigation. Investigation of the relevant background of a convicted offender, usually conducted by a probation officer attached to a court, designed to act as a sentencing guide for the sentencing judge. Fed.R.Crim.P. 32(c).

Pre-sentence report. The report prepared from the pre-sentence investigation, which is designed to assist the judge in passing sentence on a convicted defendant. Presentence reports vary in scope and focus, but should contain at least the following items: (1) complete description of the situation surrounding the criminal activity; (2) offender’s educational background; (3) offender’s employment background; (4) offender’s social history; (5) residence history of the offender; (6) offender’s medical history; (7) information about environment to which the offender will return; (8) information about any resources available to assist the offender; (9) probation officer’s view of the offender’s motivations and ambitions; (10) full description of the defendant’s criminal record; and, (11) recommendation as to disposition.

Presenter. Any person presenting a draft or demand for payment for honor under a credit even though that person is a confirming bank or other correspondent which is acting under an issuer’s authorization. U.C.C. § 5–112(3). See also Presentment.

Presently. Immediately; now; at once. A right which may be exercised “presently” as opposed to one in reversion or remainder.

Presentment. The written notice taken by a grand jury of any offense, from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the government. A presentment is an accusation, initiated by the grand jury itself, and in effect an instruction that an indictment be drawn. U.S. v. Briggs, C.A.Fla., 514 F.2d 794, 804. A written accusation of crime made and returned by the grand jury upon its own initiative in the exercise of its lawful inquisitorial powers, is in the form of a bill of indictment, and in practice is signed individually by all the grand jurors who return it. State v. Hudson, Tenn.Cr.App., 487 S.W.2d 672, 674. See also Indictment; Information; Presenter.

The production of a negotiable instrument to the drawee for his acceptance, or to the drawer or acceptor for payment; or of a promissory note to the party liable, for payment of the same. Presentment is a demand for acceptance or payment made upon the maker, acceptor, drawee or other payor by or on behalf of the holder. U.C.C. § 3–504(1).

Present recollection recorded. A witness may use any document which helps revive or “jog” his memory of a past event and such document does not thereby become evidence. His testimony is the evidence though the opponent is entitled to see and examine the document and to impeach the credibility of the witness with it. Fed.Evid.R. 612.

Present recollection revived. The use by a witness of some writing or other object to refresh his recollection so that he may testify about past events from present recollection. Atkins v. State, Md.App., 284 A.2d 626, 631. See also Present recollection recorded.

Presents. The present instrument. The phrase “these presents” is used in any legal document to designate the instrument in which the phrase itself occurs.

Preservation. Keeping safe from harm; avoiding injury, destruction, or decay; maintenance. It is not creation, but the saving of that which already exists, and implies the continuance of what previously existed. See Maintenance.

Preside. To occupy the place of authority as of president, chairman, moderator, etc. To direct, control or regulate proceedings as chief officer, moderator, etc. To possess or exercise authority. To preside over a court is to “hold” it, to direct, control, and govern it as the chief officer. A judge may “preside” whether sitting as a sole judge or as one of several judges.

President. One placed in authority over others; a chief officer; a presiding or managing officer; a governor, ruler; or director. The chairman, moderator, or presiding officer of a legislative or deliberative body, appointed to keep order, manage the proceedings, and govern the administrative details of their business.

The chief executive magistrate of a state or nation, particularly under a democratic form of government; or of a province, colony, or dependency. In the United States, the word is commonly used in reference to the private as well as public character of the nation’s chief executive. U. S. v. Metzdorf, D.C. Mont., 252 F. 933, 937.

Presidential electors. A body of electors chosen in the different states, whose sole duty it is to elect a president and vice-president of the United States.

The state appoints, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the state is entitled in congress. Const.U.S. Art. 2, § 1; Amendment XII; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 13 S.Ct. 3, 36 L.Ed. 869. The usual method of appointment is by general ballot, so that each voter in a state votes for the whole number of electors to which his state is entitled. See Electoral college.

Presidential powers. See Executive powers.

President of the United States. The official title of the chief executive officer of the federal government in the United States.
Press. In old English practice, a piece or skin of parchment, several of which used to be sewed together in making up a roll or record of proceedings. 1 Bl. Comm. 183.

The aggregate of publications issuing from the press, or the giving publicity to one’s sentiments and opinions through the medium of printing; as in the phrase “liberty of the press.” Freedom of the press is guaranteed by the First Amendment. See Liberty.

Pressing seamen. See Impressment.

Pressing to death. See Peine forte et dure.

Prest. In old English law, a duty in money to be paid by the sheriff upon his account in the exchequer, or for money left or remaining in his hands.

Prestation /prɛstɛˈʃən/. In old English law, a presting or payment of money. A payment or performance; the rendering of a service.

Prestimony /prɛstɪˈmɔnɪ/ or prestation /prɛstɪˈmən-/i/ /ˈi/. In canon law, a fund or revenue appropriated by the founder for the subsistence of a priest, without being erected into any title or benefice, chapel, prebend, or priory. It is not subject to the ordinary; but of it the patron, and those who have a right from him, are the collators.

Prest money. In old English law, a payment which binds those who receive it to be ready at all times appointed, being meant especially of soldiers.

Presumably. Fit to be assumed as true in advance of conclusive evidence; credibly deduced; fair to suppose; by reasonable supposition or inference; what appears to be entitled to belief without direct evidence. See Presumption.

Presume. To assume beforehand. In a more technical sense, to believe or accept upon probable evidence. See Presumption.

Presumed Intent. A person is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his voluntary acts. The government is not required in crimes to prove that a defendant intended the precise consequences of his act and his criminal intent can be inferred from his act.

Presumption. A presumption is a rule of law, statutory or judicial, by which finding of a basic fact gives rise to existence of presumed fact, until presumption is rebutted. Van Wart v. Cook, Okl.App., 557 P.2d 1161, 1163.

In all civil actions and proceedings not otherwise provided for by Act of Congress or by these rules, a presumption imposes on the party against whom it is directed the burden of going forward with evidence to rebut or meet the presumption, but does not shift to such party the burden of proof in the sense of the risk of nonpersuasion, which remains throughout the trial upon the party on whom it was originally cast. Federal Evidence Rule 301.

A presumption is an assumption of fact resulting from a rule of law which requires such fact to be assumed from another fact or group of facts found or otherwise established in the action. Uniform Evidence Rule 13.

A presumption is a rebuttable assumption of fact resulting from a rule of law which requires such fact to be assumed from another fact or group of facts found or otherwise established in the action. N.J. Evidence Rule 13.

A presumption is an assumption of fact that the law requires to be made from another fact or group of facts found or otherwise established in the action. A presumption is not evidence. A presumption is either conclusive or rebuttable. Every rebuttable presumption is either (a) a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence or (b) a presumption affecting the burden of proof. Calif.Evid.Code.

See also Disputable presumption; Inference; Juris et de jure; Raise a presumption.

Commercial law. A presumption means that the trier of fact must find the existence of the fact presumed unless and until evidence is introduced which would support a finding of its non-existence. U.C.C. § 1-201(31).

Conclusive presumptions. A conclusive presumption is one in which proof of basic fact renders the existence of the presumed fact conclusive and irrebuttable. Few in number and often statutory, the majority view is that a conclusive presumption is in reality a substantive rule of law, not a rule of evidence. An example of this type of presumption is the rule that a child under seven years of age is presumed to be incapable of committing a felony. The Federal Evidence Rules (301, 302) and most state rules of evidence are concerned only with rebuttable presumptions.

Conflicting presumptions. If two presumptions arise which are conflicting with each other, the judge shall apply the presumption which is founded on the weightier considerations of policy and logic. If there is no such preponderance both presumptions shall be disregarded. Maine Evidence Rule 301(c); Uniform Evidence Rule 15.

Effect of presumption. If evidence to the contrary of a presumed fact is offered, the existence or nonexistence of such fact shall be for the trier of fact, unless the evidence is such that the minds of reasonable men would not differ as to the existence or nonexistence of the presumed fact. New Jersey Evidence Rule 14.

The better rule is that once evidence tending to rebut the presumption is introduced, the presumption loses all its force.

Inconsistent presumptions. See Conflicting presumptions, supra.

Irrebuttable presumption. In evidence, a conclusive presumption which requires a finding of the presumed fact once the underlying evidence is introduced, e.g. incapacity of a child five years old to commit a crime. Evidence tending to rebut it is not admissible. See Conclusive presumptions, supra.

Presumptions of fact. Such are presumptions which do not compel a finding of the presumed fact but which warrant one when the basic fact has been proved. The trend has been to reject the classifications of presumptions of "fact" and presumptions of "law". See Inference.
Presumption of law. A presumption of law is one which, once the basic fact is proved and no evidence to the contrary has been introduced, compels a finding of the existence of the presumed fact. The presumption of law is rebuttable and in most cases the adversary introduces evidence designed to overcome it. The trend has been to reject the classifications of presumptions of "law" and presumptions of "fact."

Rebuttable presumption. A presumption that can be overturned upon the showing of sufficient proof. In general, all presumptions other than conclusive presumptions are rebuttable presumptions. Once evidence tending to rebut the presumption is introduced, the force of the presumption is entirely dissipated and the party with the burden of proof must come forward with evidence to avoid a directed verdict.

Statutory presumption. A presumption, either rebuttable or conclusive, which is created by statute in contrast to a common law presumption.

Example of presumptions. Thompson v. McCey, 101 Ariz. 125, 416 P.2d 558 (receipt of letter by addressee presumed from proper mailing); Hobart-Farrell Plumbing and Heating Co. v. Klaiman, 302 Mass. 506, 19 N.E.2d 805 (same presumption: mailing is "prima facie case" of receipt in ordinary and due course of post); American-First Title & Trust Co. v. First Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n, Okla., 415 P.2d 930 (presumption that, upon receipt of mail, regular course of business regarding opening and filing was followed).

Presumption of death. A presumption which arises upon the disappearance and continued absence of a person from his customary location or home for an extended period of time, commonly 7 years, without any apparent reason for such absence. Magers v. Western & Southern Life Ins. Co., C.A.Mo., 335 S.W.2d 355.

Presumption of innocence. A hallowed principle of criminal law to the effect that the government has the burden of proving every element of a crime beyond a reasonable doubt and that the defendant has no burden to prove his innocence. It arises at the first stage of the criminal process but it is not a true presumption because the defendant is not required to come forward with proof of his innocence once evidence of guilt is introduced to avoid a directed verdict of guilt.

Presumption of innocence succinctly conveys the principle that no person may be convicted of a crime unless the Government carries the burden of proving his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt but it does not mean that no significance at all may be attached to the indictment. U. S. v. Friday, D.C.Mich., 404 F.Supp. 1343, 1346.

Presumption of legitimacy. Whenever it is established in an action that a child was born to a woman while she was the lawful wife of a specified man, the party asserting the illegitimacy of the child has the burden of producing evidence and the burden of persuading the trier of fact beyond reasonable doubt that the man was not the father of the child. Bernheimer v. First Nat'l Bank, 359 Mo. 1119, 225 S.W.2d 745; Model Code of Evidence, Rule 703.

Presumption of survivorship. A presumption of fact, to the effect that one person survived another, applied for the purpose of determining a question of succession or similar matter, in a case where the two persons perished in the same catastrophe, and there are no circumstances extant to show which of them actually died first, except those on which the presumption is founded, viz., differences of age, sex, strength, or physical condition.

Presumptive. Resting on presumption; created by or arising out of presumption; inferred; assumed; supposed; as, "presumptive" damages, evidence, heir, notice, or title.

Presumptive evidence. Prima facie evidence or evidence which is not conclusive and admits of explanation or contradiction; evidence which must be received and treated as true and sufficient until and unless rebutted by other evidence, i.e., evidence which a statute says shall be presumptive of another fact unless rebutted. See Presumption; Prima facie evidence.

Presumptive trust. Trust raised by implication of law and presumed always to have been contemplated by parties, intention as to which is to be found in nature of transaction but not expressed in deed or instrument of conveyance, and is thus distinguished from "constructive trust." Kollbaum v. K & K Chevrolet Inc., 196 Neb. 555, 244 N.W.2d 173, 174. Also called "Resulting trust."

Prêt /pré/. In French law, a loan. A contract by which one of the parties delivers an article to the other, to be used by the latter, on condition of his returning, after having used it, the same article in nature or an equivalent of the same species and quality.

Prêt à intérêt /pré à ántéré/. Loan at interest. A contract by which one of the parties delivers to the other a sum of money, or commodities, or other movable or fungible things, to receive for their use a profit determined in favor of the lender.

Prêt à usage /pré yuwsákh/. Loan to use. A contract by which one of the parties delivers an article to the other, to be used by the latter, the borrower agreeing to return the specific article after having used it. A contract identical with the commodatum (q.v.) of the civil law.

Prêt de consommation /pré dá konsonmasyówn/. Loan for consumption. A contract by which one party delivers to the other a certain quantity of things, such as are consumed in the use, on the undertaking of the borrower to return to him an equal quantity of the same species and quality. A contract identical with the mutuum (q.v.) of the civil law. See False pretenses.

Pretend. To feign or simulate; to hold that out as real which is false or baseless.

Prête-nom /prétñóm/. One who lends his name. See False pretenses.

Preter legal /priydr liygal/. Not agreeable to law; exceeding the limits of law; not legal.
Pretermission. The state of one who is pretermitted, as an heir or child of the testator. The act of omitting a child or heir from a will.

Pretermission statute. Those laws of the various states which make provision for children and heirs who have been omitted from the will of the father or ancestor. Commonly the child takes the same share of the estate which he would have taken if the testator had died intestate unless the omission was intentional and not occasioned by accident or mistake. Nicholson v. Sorensen, Alaska, 517 P.2d 766, 768.

Pretermitt /priy darmit/. To "pretermitt" is to pass by, to omit or to disregard, e.g., failure of testator to mention his children in his will.

Pretermitted heir /priy darmúdá ér/. A child or other descendant omitted by a testator. Where a testator unintentionally fails to mention in his will, or make provision for, a child, either living at the date of the execution of the will or born thereafter, a statute may provide that such child, or the issue of a deceased child, shall share in the estate as though the testator had died intestate. In re Price’s Estate, 56 Cal. App.2d 335, 132 P.2d 485.

Pretext. Ostensible reason or motive assigned or assumed as a color or cover for the real reason or motive; false appearance, pretense.

In international law, a reason alleged as justificatory, but which is so only in appearance, or which is even absolutely destitute of all foundation. The name of "pretext" may likewise be applied to reasons which are in themselves true and well-founded, but, not being of sufficient importance for undertaking a war [or other international act], are made use of only to cover ambitious views.

Pretum /priysh(y)am/. Lat. Price; cost; value; the price of an article sold.

Pretum affections /priysh(y)am sfěkshiyówns/. An imaginary value put upon a thing by the fancy of the owner, and growing out of his attachment for the specific article, its associations, his sentiment for the donor, etc.

Pretum pericull /priysh(y)am perikyaly/. The price of the risk, e.g., the premium paid on a policy of insurance; also the interest paid on money advanced on bottomry or respondentia.

Pretum sepulchri /priysh(y)am sapálkray/. A mortuary (q.v.).

Pretum sucedid in locum rel /priysh(y)am saksìyíd ãn lòwkam rìray/. The price stands in the place of the thing sold.

Pretorial court /pratóríyal kórt/. In the colony of Maryland, formerly a court for the trial of capital crimes, consisting of the lord proprietor or his lieutenant-general, and the council. Also called Pretorial.

Pre-trial conference. Procedural device used prior to trial to narrow issues to be tried, to secure stipulations as to matters and evidence to be heard, and to take all other steps necessary to aid in the disposition of the case. Such conferences between opposing attorneys may be called at the discretion of the court. The actions taken at the conference are made the subject of an order which controls the future course of the action. Fed.R.Civ. P. 16. See Pre-trial order.

Criminal cases. At any time after the filing of the indictment or information the court upon motion of any party or upon its own motion may order one or more conferences to consider such matters as will promote a fair and expeditious trial. At the conclusion of a conference the court shall prepare and file a memorandum of the matters agreed upon. No admissions made by the defendant or his attorney at the conference shall be used against the defendant unless the admissions are reduced to writing and signed by the defendant and his attorney. Fed.R.Crim.P. 17.1.

Pre-trial discovery. Those devices which may be used by the parties to an action prior to trial such as interrogatories, depositions, requests for admission of fact, etc. provided for under rules of procedure and statutes; e.g. Fed.R.Civ. P. 26–37. See Discovery.

Pre-trial diversion. A system of recent origin by which certain defendants in criminal cases are referred to community agencies prior to trial while their criminal complaints or indictments are held in abeyance. The defendant may be given job training, counselling, and education. If he responds successfully within a specified period (e.g. 90 days, more or less), the charges against him are commonly dismissed.

Pre-trial hearing. See Pre-trial conference.

Pre-trial order. An order embodying the terms and stipulations agreed upon at the pre-trial conference or hearing. This order governs the conduct of the trial and binds the parties unless, for good cause shown, the trial judge modifies it. Fed.R.Civ. P. 16.

Preval. To be or become effective or effectual, to be in force, to obtain, to be in general use or practice, to be commonly accepted or adopted; to exist. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Gamble, 155 Fla. 678, 21 So.2d 348, 350. To succeed; to win.

Prevailing party. The party to a suit who successfully prosecutes the action or successfully defends against it, prevailing on the main issue, even though not necessarily to the extent of his original contention. The one in whose favor the decision or verdict is rendered and judgment entered. Dunne v. New York Telephone Co., 107 Misc. 439, 176 N.Y.S. 519, 520; O’Hare v. Peacock Dairies, 28 Cal.App.2d 562, 82 P.2d 1112, 1113. The party ultimately prevailing when the matter is finally set at rest. Comparri v. James Readding, Inc., 121 N.J.L. 59, 3 A.2d 802, 803. May be the party prevailing in interest, and not necessarily the prevailing party. To be such does not depend upon the degree of success at different stages of the suit, but whether, at the end of the suit, or other proceeding, the party who has made a claim against the other, has successfully maintained it.

Prevarication /pravárakéysihan/. In the civil law, the acting with unfaithfulness and want of probity; deceitful, crafty, or unfaithful conduct; particularly, such as is manifested in concealing a crime.

In English law, a collusion between an informer and a defendant, in order to a feigned prosecution. Any secret abuse committed in a public office or private commission; willful concealment or misrepresentation of truth, by giving evasive or equivocating evidence.

Prevent. To hinder, frustrate, prohibit, impede, or preclude; to obstruct; to intercept. Orme v. Atlas Gas and Oil Co., 217 Minn. 27, 13 N.W.2d 757, 761. To stop or intercept the approach, access, or performance of a thing. See Injunction; Restraining order.

Prevention. In the civil law, the right of a judge to take cognizance of an action over which he has concurrent jurisdiction with another judge.

    In canon law, the right which a superior person or officer has to lay hold of, claim, or transact an affair prior to an inferior one, to whom otherwise it more immediately belongs.

Preventive detention. Confinement imposed generally on a defendant in criminal case who has threatened to violate the law while awaiting trial or disposition, or of a mentally ill person who may harm himself or others. The term is also used to describe the improper use of bail. See also Commitment; Preventive justice.

Preventive justice. The system of measures taken by government with reference to the direct prevention of crime. It generally consists in obliging those persons whom there is probable ground to suspect of future misbehavior to give full assurance to the public that such offense as is apprehended shall not happen, by requiring pledges or securities to keep the peace, or for their good behavior (e.g. peace bonds).

Previous. Antecedent; prior; before. Sometimes limited in meaning to “next prior to” or “next preceding”.

Previously taxed income. The taxable income of a Subchapter S corporation is taxed to its shareholders whether distributed or not. To the extent such income is not distributed as dividends (known as undistributed taxable income or UTI), it later becomes previously taxed income (i.e., PTI). Since such income has been taxed to the shareholders when earned by the corporation, it may later be distributed to them without further income tax consequences.

Price. Something which one ordinarily accepts voluntarily in exchange for something else. The consideration given for the purchase of a thing. Amount which a prospective seller indicates as the sum for which he is willing to sell; market value. The term may be synonymous with cost, and with value, as well as with consideration, though price is not always identical either with consideration.

    See also Asking price; Fair market value; Going price; Liquidation price; Open price term.

Support price. A minimum price set by the government for a particular agricultural raw commodity. For example, the support price of wheat may be set at, say $2 per bushel. That means that the farmer never has to sell his or her wheat below that support price. See also Parity.

Target price. Prices set by the government for particular agricultural commodities such as wheat and corn. If the actual market price falls below the target price, farmers get a subsidy from the government for the difference. See Parity.

Unit pricing. Pricing of food products expressed in a well-known unit such as ounces or pounds.

Price current. A list or enumeration of various articles of merchandise, with their prices, the duties, if any, payable thereon, when imported or exported, with the drawbacks occasionally allowed upon their exportation, etc.

Price discrimination. Exists when a buyer pays a price that is different from the price paid by another buyer for an identical product or service. Price discrimination is prohibited if the effect of this discrimination may be to lessen substantially or injure competition, except where it was implemented to dispose of perishable or obsolete goods, was the result of differences in costs incurred, or was given in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor. Clayton Act, § 2. See also Predatory intent; Robinson-Patman Act.

Price earnings ratio. At a given time, the market value of a company's common stock, per share, divided by the earnings per common share for the past year. For example, a stock selling for $50 a share and earning $5 a share is said to be selling at a price-earnings ratio of 10 to 1.

Price-fixing. The cooperative setting of price levels or ranges by competing firms. Such agreements are in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Price-fixing within intent of Sherman Act is either horizontal (dealing with arrangements among competitors) or vertical (attempting to control resale price). Knuth v. Erie-Crawford Dairy Co-op. Ass'n, D.C.Pa., 326 F.Supp. 48, 53.

    See also Horizontal price-fixing contracts; Peg; Predatory intent; Resale price maintenance; Vertical price-fixing contract.

Price index. A number representing average prices as a percent of the average prevailing at some other time (called the base or base year).

Price leadership. A market condition in which a leader in the industry establishes a price and the others in the field follow suit by adopting that price as their own. Price leadership implies a set of industry practices or customs under which list price changes are normally announced by a specific firm accepted as the leader by others, who follow the leader's initiatives. Such practices have been held to not be in violation of the antitrust laws in the absence of a showing of confederated action or an intent to monopolize. United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U.S. 417, 40 S.Ct. 293, 64 L.Ed. 543; United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U.S. 693, 47 S.Ct. 748, 71 L.Ed. 1302.

Price supports. A device used generally by the federal government to keep prices (normally commodity prices) from falling below a predesignated level by such means as loans, subsidies, and government purchases. See also Parity; Price.
Priest. A sacerdotal minister of a church. A person in the second order of the ministry, as distinguished from bishops and deacons.

Priest-penitent privilege. In evidence, the recognition of the seal of confession which bars testimony as to the contents of a communication from one to his confessor. Nearly all states provide for this privilege by statute.

Prime impressionis /pra’mi-mi-i-im-prěshii-yōw-nas/. A case prime impressionis (of the first impression) is a case of a new kind, to which no established principle of law or precedent directly applies, and which must be decided entirely by reason as distinguished from authority. See First impression case.

Prime preces /pra’mi-mi-prē-si-si/. Lat. In the civil law, an imperial prerogative by which the emperor exercised the right of naming to the first prebend that became vacant after his accession, in every church of the empire.

Prime facie /pra’mi-ma-fē-shii-yii/. Lat. At first sight; on the first appearance; on the face of it; so far as can be judged from the first disclosure; presumably; a fact presumed to be true unless disproved by some evidence to the contrary. State ex rel. Herbert v. Whims, 68 Ohio App. 39, 38 N.E.2d 596, 599, 22 O.O. 110.

Prime facie case. Such as will prevail until contradicted and overcome by other evidence. Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Wallace, 158 Or. 210, 75 P.2d 942, 947. A case which has proceeded upon sufficient proof to that stage where it will support finding if evidence to contrary is disregarded. In re Hoagland’s Estate, 126 Neb. 377, 253 N.W. 416.

A prima facie case consists of sufficient evidence in the type of case to get plaintiff past a motion for directed verdict in a jury case or motion to dismiss in a nonjury case; it is the evidence necessary to require defendant to proceed with his case. White v. Abrams, C.A.Cal., 495 F.2d 724, 729. Courts use concept of “prima facie” case in two senses: (1) in sense of plaintiff producing evidence sufficient to render reasonable a conclusion in favor of allegation he asserts; this means plaintiff’s evidence is sufficient to allow his case to go to jury, and (2) courts used “prima facie” to mean not only that plaintiff’s evidence would reasonably allow conclusion plaintiff seeks, but also that plaintiff’s evidence compels such a conclusion if the defendant produces no evidence to rebut it. Husband v. Com. of Pa., D.C.Pa., 395 F.Supp. 1107, 1139.

Prima facie evidence. Evidence good and sufficient on its face; such evidence as, in the judgment of the law, is sufficient to establish a given fact, or the group or chain of facts constituting the party’s claim or defense, and which if not rebutted or contradicted, will remain sufficient. Prima facie evidence is evidence which, if unexplained or uncontradicted, is sufficient to sustain a judgment in favor of the issue which it supports, but which may be contradicted by other evidence. State v. Haremza, 213 Kan. 201, 515 P.2d 1217, 1222.

Prima facie evidence is evidence that, until its effect is overcome by other evidence, will suffice as proof of fact in issue; “prima facie case” is one that will entitle party to recover if no evidence to contrary is offered by opposite party. Duncan v. Butterowe, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 474 S.W.2d 619, 621. Evidence which suffices for the proof of a particular fact until contradicted and overcome by other evidence. Evidence which, standing alone and unexplained, would maintain the proposition and warrant the conclusion to support which it is introduced. An inference or presumption of law, affirmative or negative of a fact, in the absence of proof, or until proof can be obtained or produced to overcome the inference.

See also Presumptive evidence.

Prima facie tort. The infliction of intentional harm, resulting in damage, without excuse or justification, by an act or series of acts which would otherwise be lawful. Cartwright v. Golub Corp., 51 A.D.2d 407, 381 N.Y.S.2d 901, 902.

Primeur /pra’mi-maor/. In old mercantile law, a small allowance or compensation payable to the master and mariners of a ship or vessel; to the former for the use of his cables and ropes to discharge the goods of the merchant; to the latter for lading and unlading in any port or haven. It is no longer, however, a gratuity to the master, unless especially stipulated; but it belongs to the owners or freighters, and is nothing but an increase of the freight rate.

Prima pars aequitatis aequitas /pra’mi-pa-rz ėk-wi-te-das śkwi-wi-tas/. The radical element of equity is equality.

Primary. First; principal; chief; leading. First in order of time, or development, or in intention. As to primary Conveyance; Election; Obligation; and Vein, see those titles.

Primary activity. Concerted action such as a strike or picketing directed against the employer with whom it has a dispute. Compare, secondary activity.

Primary allegation. The opening pleading in a suit in the ecclesiastical court. It is also called a “primary plea.”

Primary beneficiary. In life insurance, the person named in the policy who is to receive the proceeds on the death of the insured if such person is alive. If deceased, the proceeds are payable to a secondary beneficiary also designated as such in the policy.

Primary boycott. Action by a union by which it tries to induce people not to use, handle, transport or purchase goods of an employer with which the union has a grievance. See also Boycott.

Primary disposal of the soil. In acts of congress admitting territories as states, and providing that no laws shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil, this means the disposal of it by the United States government when it parts with its title to private persons or corporations acquiring the right to a patent or deed in accordance with law.

Primary election. A preliminary election for the nomination of candidates for office or of delegates to a party convention, designed as a substitute for party conventions. Such elections are classified as closed or open depending on whether or not tests of party affiliation are required. See also Closed primary; Election.

Primary evidence. Primary evidence means original or first-hand evidence; the best evidence that the nature of the case admits of; the evidence which is required in the first instance, and which must fail before secondary evidence can be admitted. That evidence which the nature of the case or question suggests as the proper means of ascertaining the truth. It is the particular means of proof which is the most natural and satisfactory of which the case admits, and includes the best evidence which is available to a party and procurable under the existing situation, and all evidence failing short of such standard, and which in its nature suggests there is better evidence of the same fact, is "secondary evidence." See also Best evidence.

Primary jurisdiction. Under the "primary jurisdiction" doctrine, in cases raising issues not within the conventional experience of judges or cases requiring the exercise of administrative discretion, agencies created by Congress for regulating the subject matter should not be passed over. Cavanagh Communities Corp. v. New York Stock Exchange, Inc., D.C.N.Y., 422 F.Supp. 382, 385, 386. The doctrine of "primary jurisdiction" does not involve jurisdiction in the technical sense, but it is a doctrine predicated on an attitude of judicial self-restraint and is applied when the court feels that the dispute should be handled by an administrative agency created by the legislature to deal with such problems. Kerr v. Department of Game, 14 Wash.App. 427, 542 P.2d 467, 469. The doctrine of "primary jurisdiction" is properly invoked whenever the enforcement of a claim, which is originally cognizable in the courts, requires the resolution of issues which, under a regulatory scheme, have been placed within the special competence of an administrative body. W. U. Tel. Co., v. Graphic Scanning Corp., D.C.N.Y., 360 F.Supp. 593, 595.

Primary market. In finance, the market where the initial sale by the issuer of securities occurs.

Primary obligation. In contract law, the foundational requirement of a contracting party from which other obligations may spring; e.g. in a contract of sale, the buyer's primary obligation is to purchase the goods.

Primary powers. The principal authority given by a principal to his agent. It differs from "mediate powers."

Primary purpose. That which is first in intention; which is fundamental. The principal or fixed intention with which an act or course of conduct is undertaken.

Primate. A chief ecclesiastic; an archbishop who has jurisdiction over his province, or one of several metropolitans presiding over others. Exarch comes nearest to it in the Greek church. Thus the archbishop of Canterbury is styled "Primate of all England;" the archbishop of York is "Primate of England."

Prime. To stand first or paramount; to take precedence or priority of; to outrank.

Prime contractor. The party to a building contract who is charged with the total construction and who enters into sub-contracts for such work as electrical, plumbing and the like. Also called "general contractor."

Prime cost. The true price paid for goods upon a bona fide purchase.

Prime maker. The person who signs a negotiable instrument such as a note and becomes primarily liable thereon.

Prime minister. The responsible head of a ministry or executive government, especially of a monarchical government. In England, he is the head of the cabinet, and usually holds the office of First Lord of the Treasury. The office was unknown to the law until 1906, when the prime minister was accorded a place in the order of precedence.

Primer. A law French word, signifying first; primary.

Prime rate. Usually defined as the lowest rate of interest from time to time charged by a specific lender to its best customers for short term unsecured loans. The prime rate is often used as the measuring rod for interest rates on other loans.

Primer election /práymer álékshan/. A term used to signify first choice; e.g., the right of the eldest co-partner to first choose a purport.

Primer fine /práymer fáym/. On suing out the writ or precept called a "writ of covenant," there was due to the crown, by ancient prerogative, a primer fine, or a noble for every five marks of land sued for. That was one-tenth of the annual value.

Primer seisin /práymer slyzan/. See Seisin.

Prime serjeant /práym sárjant/. In English law, the king's first serjeant at law.

Primicerius /práymasír(f)yás/. In old English law, the first of any degree of men.

Pribittie /prímsílti/. In old English law, first fruits; the first year's whole profits of a spiritual preferment.

Primitive obligation /prímsdav óblágéyshán/. See Obligation.

Primo beneficio /práymow bënsfísh(i)yów/. Lat. A writ directing a grant of the first benefice in the sovereign's gift.

Primo executienda est verbi vis, ne sermonis vitio obstruatur oratio, sive lex sine argumentis /práymow éksísokwúshiyénds est várba vís, níy sármówná vish(i)yów óbstruíwéyár aréysh(i)yów, sáuyvi léks sáyni argaméntas/. The full meaning of a word should be ascertained at the outset, in order that the sense may not be lost by defect of expression, and that the law be not without reasons [or arguments].

Primogeniture /práymajénéÚchar/. The state of being the first-born among several children of the same parents; seniority by birth in the same family. The superior or exclusive right possessed by the eldest son, and particularly, his right to succeed to the estate of his ancestor, in right of his seniority by birth, to the exclusion of younger sons.

Primogenitus /práymajéndás/. Lat. In old English law, a first-born or eldest son.
Primo venienti /práymow vénýéntay/. Lat. To the one first coming. An executor anciently paid debts as they were presented, whether the assets were sufficient to meet all debts or not.

Primum decretum /práymom dékfrýdám/. Lat. In the canon law, the first decree; a preliminary decree granted on the non-appearance of a defendant, by which the plaintiff was put in possession of his goods, or of the thing itself which was demanded. In the courts of admiralty, this name was given to a provisional decree.

Prince. In a general sense, a sovereign; the ruler of a nation or state. More particularly, the son of a king or emperor, or the issue of a royal family; as princes of the blood. The chief of any body of men.

Princes /prín(t)séps/. Lat. In the civil law, the prince; the emperor.

Princes et respublica ex justa causa possunt rem meam auferre /prín(t)séps ét rzepáblíka éks jásá kózzá pósánt róm méyám ofélírí/. The prince and the commonwealth, for a just cause, can take away my property.

Princps legibus solutus est /prín(t)séps lijýabes sal(y)úwds ést/. The emperor is released from the laws; is not bound by the laws.

Princps mavult domesticos milites quam stipendiarios bellicis opponere casibus /prín(t)séps méyvált dámséktákov múldýjz kwyrm stápěndýliýwos bélásas spównary kýwssábs/. A prince, in the chances of war, had better employ domestic than stipendiary troops.

Princess royal /prín(t)sás róyal/. In English law, the eldest daughter of the sovereign.

Principal, adj. Chief; leading; most important or considerable; primary; original. Highest in rank, authority, character, importance, or degree.

As to principal Challenge; Contract; Obligation; Office; and Vein, see those titles.

Principal establishment. In the law concerning domicile, the principal domestic establishment. Mosely v. Dabezles, 142 La. 256, 76 So. 705, 706. See Domicile; Resident.

Principal fact. In the law of evidence, a fact sought and proposed to be proved by evidence of other facts (termed "evidentiary facts") from which it is to be deduced by inference. A fact which is the principal and ultimate object of an inquiry, and respecting the existence of which a definite belief is required to be formed.

Principal, n. The source of authority or right. A superintendent, as of a school.

The capital sum of a debt or obligation, as distinguished from interest or other additions to it. An amount on which interest is charged or earned. Amount of debt, not including interest. The face value of a note, mortgage, etc. Capital sum placed at interest, due as a debt, or use as a fund, as distinguished from interest or profit. Kiltgaard v. Gaines, Tex.Civ.App., 479 S.W.2d 765, 770.

See also Coprincipal; Undisclosed principal.

Criminal law. A chief actor or perpetrator, or an aider and abettor actually or constructively present at the commission of the crime, as distinguished from an "accessory." At common law, a principal in the first degree is he that is the actor or absolute perpetrator of the crime; and, in the second degree, he who is present, aiding and abetting the principal in the first degree. The distinction between principals in the first and second degrees has been abrogated in the Model Penal Code and by many state codes. A "principal" differs from an "accessory before the fact" only in the requirement of presence during commission of crime. Huff v. State, 23 Md.App. 211, 326 A.2d 196, 201.

Whoever commits an offense against the United States or aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures its commission, is punishable as a principal. Also, whoever willfully causes an act to be done which if directly performed by him or another would be an offense against the United States, is punishable as a principal. 18 U.S.C.A. § 2.

Principal in the first degree. A principal in the first degree may simply be defined as the criminal actor. He is the one who, with the requisite mental state, engages in the act or omission concurring with the mental state which causes the criminal result.

Principal in the second degree. To be a principal in the second degree, one must be present at the commission of a criminal offense and aid, counsel, command, or encourage the principal in the first degree in the commission of that offense. This requirement of presence may be fulfilled by constructive presence. A person is constructively present when he is physically absent from the situs of the crime but aids and abets the principal in the first degree at the time of the offense from some distance.

Investments. The person for whom a broker executes an order, or a dealer buying or selling for his own account. The term "principal" may also refer to a person's capital or to the face amount of a bond.

Law of agency. The term "principal" describes one who has permitted or directed another (i.e. agent or servant) to act for his benefit and subject to his direction and control. Principal includes in its meaning the term "master," a species of principal who, in addition to other control, has a right to control the physical conduct of the species of agents known as servants, as to whom special rules are applicable with reference to harm caused by their physical acts.

If, at the time of a transaction conducted by an agent, the other party thereto has notice that the agent is acting for a principal and of the principal's identity, the principal is a disclosed principal. If the other party has notice that the agent is or may be acting for a principal but has no notice of the principal's identity, the principal for whom the agent is acting is a partially disclosed principal. If the other party has no notice that the agent is acting for a principal, the one for whom he acts is an undisclosed principal. Restatement, Second, Agency, § 4.

Law of guaranty and suretyship. The person primarily liable, for whose performance of his obligation the guarantor or surety has become bound.

Principal and surety. Relationship between accommodation maker and party accommodated on promissory note is that of "principal and surety." Putney Credit Union v. King, 130 Vt. 86, 286 A.2d 282, 284.
PRINCIPAL

Trust law. Property as opposed to income. The term is often used to designate the corpus of a trust. If, for example, G places real estate in trust with income payable to A for life and the remainder to B upon A's death, the real estate is the principal or corpus of the trust. See also Kentucky Rule. The majority of states have adopted the Uniform Principal and Income Act.

Vice principal. A vice principal is an employee to whom the master delegates those absolute or nondelегable duties cast upon a master for protection of his employees, and who is in charge of the master's business or any department thereof, and whose duties are exclusively supervision, direction and control of the work of subordinate employees engaged therein, whose duty it is to obey him. Haynie v. Haynie, Okl., 426 P.2d 717, 724. Vice principal is servant who, in addition to his authority to direct and supervise work of those under him, has authority to hire and discharge a subordinate servant. Sartain v. Southern Nat. Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 364 S.W.2d 245, 252.

Principalis /prin(t)sapéylas/. Lat. Principal; a principal debtor; a principal in a crime.

Principalis debet semper excuti antequam pervenatur ad fidejussores /prin(t)sapéylas débot sémpor áskkyúvdai ántakwam pærvéniyéydar ád fádiy-aayjsáóríyz/. The principal should always be exhausted before coming upon the sureties.

Principia data sequuntur concomitantia /prin(t)síip(i)ya déyda sakwántar kankómatášsh(i)ya/. Given principles are followed by their concomitants.

Principia probant, non probantur /prin(t)síip(i)ya prówbant, nón próbantur/. Principles prove; they are not proved. Fundamental principles require no proof.

Principis obsta /prin(t)síiyás obståy/. Withstand beginnings; oppose a thing in its early stages, if you would do so with success.

Principiorum non est ratio /prin(t)síipyaým nón ést réysh(i)yow/. There is no reasoning of principles; no argument is required to prove fundamental rules.

Principium est potissima pars cu jusque rei /prin(t)síipiyam ést pétííma párz kajíškwíy riýw/. The principle of anything is its most powerful part.

Principle. A fundamental truth or doctrine, as of law; a comprehensive rule or doctrine which furnishes a basis or origin for others; a settled rule of action, procedure, or legal determination. A truth or proposition so clear that it cannot be proved or contradicted unless by a proposition which is still clearer. That which constitutes the essence of a body or its constituent parts. That which pertains to the theoretical part of a science.

Printers Ink Statute. A model statute drafted in 1911 and adopted with some variations in a number of states making it a misdemeanor to advertise a representation that is untrue, deceptive or misleading.

Prior /préýar/. Lat. The former; earlier; preceding; preferable or preferred.

Prior, n. The chief of a convent; next in dignity to an abbot.

Prior, adj. Earlier; elder; preceding; superior in rank, right, or time; as, a prior lien, mortgage, or judgment.

Prior art. Practical definition of "prior art" is anything in tangible form that may properly be relied on by patent office in patent cases in support of rejection on matter of substance, not form, of claim in pending application for patent. Borden, Inc. v. Occidental Petroleum Corp., D.C.Tex., 381 F.Supp. 1178, 1203.

Prior creditor. Generally, the creditor who is accorded priority in payment from the assets of his debtor. See Preferential debts.

Prior inconsistent statements. In evidence, prior statements made by the witness which contradict statements made on the witness stand may be introduced to impeach the witness after a foundation has been laid and an opportunity given to the witness to affirm or deny whether such prior statements were made. Such impeachment may be made through the witness himself or through another witness who heard the prior statements or by means of inconsistent prior depositions (Fed.R.Civ.P. 32(a)). Such prior inconsistent statements are not admissible to prove the truth of the matter asserted but only to impeach the credibility of the witness.

Prior petent /préýar peténtay/. To the first person first applying. In probate practice, where there are several persons equally entitled to a grant of administration (e.g., next of kin of the same degree), the rule of the court is to make the grant priori petenti, to the first applicant.

Priority. Precedence; going before. A legal preference or precedence. When two persons have similar rights in respect of the same subject-matter, but one is entitled to exercise his right to the exclusion of the other, he is said to have priority. The order in which claims may be satisfied out of the sale of real property. See also Preferential debts.

Priority of liens. Liens are ranked in the order in which they are perfected and those which are perfected first are said to be priority liens. For priority of security interests, see U.C.C. § 9-301 et seq.

Prior jeopardy. See Jeopardy.

Prior lien. This term commonly denotes a first or superior lien, and not one necessarily antecedent in time.

Prior petens /préýar péتدan(d)ız/. The person first applying.

Prior restraint. In constitutional law, the First Amendment, U.S.Const., prohibits the imposition of a restraint on a publication before it is published. The person defamed is left to his remedy in libel. Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357. Three exceptions are recognized: a publication creating a "clear and present danger" to the country, Schenck v. U. S., 249 U.S. 47, 52, 39 S.Ct. 247, 249, 63 L.Ed. 470; obscene publications, and publications which invade the zone of personal privacy.
A prohibited prior restraint is not limited to the suppression of a thing before it is released to the public; rather, an invalid prior restraint is an infringement upon constitutional right to disseminate matters that are ordinarily protected by the First Amendment without there first being a judicial determination that the material does not qualify for First Amendment protection. State v. I, A Woman—Part II, 53 Wis.2d 102, 191 N.W.2d 897, 902, 903.

See also Censor; Censorship.

Prior tempore potior jure /p ráyarr témparri pówšh(ly)ar júri/. He who is first in time is preferred in right.

Prisage /p ráyz/. An ancient hereditary revenue of the crown, consisting in the right to take a certain quantity from cargoes of wine imported into England. In Edward I’s reign it was converted into a pecuniary duty called “butlerage.”

Prise /p ráyz/. Fr. In French law, prize; captured property.

Prison. A public building or other place for the confinement of persons, whether as a punishment imposed by the law or otherwise in the course of the administration of justice. The words “prison” and “penitentiary” are used synonymously to designate institutions for the imprisonment of persons convicted of the more serious crimes, as distinguished from reformatories and county or city jails.

Prison breaking, or breach. The common-law offense of one who, being lawfully in custody, escapes from the place where he is confined, by the employment of force and violence. This offense is to be distinguished from “rescue” (q.v.), which is a deliverance of a prisoner from lawful custody by a third person, and from “escape” which is an unauthorized departure of a prisoner from legal custody without the use of force. The trend however of modern statutes is to abandon these common-law distinctions based upon the presence or absence of force, and substitute other factors to determine the grade of the offense; with “prison breaking” generally referring to escaping from prison or jail by any means.

Prisoner. One who is deprived of his liberty. One who is against his will kept in confinement or custody in a prison, penitentiary, or jail as a result of conviction of a crime.

Prisoner at the bar. An accused person, while on trial before the court, is so called. One accused of crime, who is actually on trial, is in legal effect a “prisoner at the bar;” notwithstanding he has given bond for his appearance at the trial. He is a “prisoner” if held in custody either under bond or other process of law, or when physically held under arrest, and when actually on trial he is a “prisoner at the bar.”

Priest /p r íst/. L. Fr. Ready. In the old forms of oral pleading, this term expressed a tender or joiner of issue.

Prus vitlis laboravitmus, nunc legibus /pryas višiyas láberéyvmnas, náŋk llyjybas/. We labored first with vices, now with laws.

Privacy acts. Those federal and state statutes which prohibit an invasion of a person’s right to be left alone (e.g. to not be photographed in private), and also restrict access to personal information (e.g. income tax returns, credit reports); and overhearing of private communications (e.g. electronic surveillance). Some provide for equitable relief in the form of injunction to prevent the invasion of privacy while others specifically call for money damages and some provide for both legal and equitable protection. See e.g. Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1681n-p).

The federal Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.A. § 552a) provides for making known to the public the existence and characteristics of all personal information systems kept by every Federal agency. The Act permits an individual to have access to records containing personal information on that individual and allows the individual to control the transfer of that information to other Federal agencies for nonroutine uses. The Act also requires all Federal agencies to keep accurate accountings of transfers of personal records to other agencies and outsiders, and to make the accountings available to the individual. The Act further provides for civil remedies for the individual whose records are kept or used in contravention of the requirements of the Act.

Breach of privacy is knowingly and without lawful authority: (a) Intercepting, without the consent of the sender or receiver, a message by telephone, telegraph, letter or other means of private communications; or (b) Divulging, without the consent of the sender or receiver, the existence or contents of such message if such person, in knows that the South is illegally intercepted, or if he illegally learned of the message in the course of employment or any agency in transmitting it. Kansas Criminal Code. See Eavesdropping; Wiretapping.

Privacy, right of. The right to be let alone; the right of a person to be free from unwarranted publicity. Term “right of privacy” is generic term encompassing various rights recognized to be inherent in concept of ordered liberty, and such right prevents governmental interference in intimate personal relationships or activities, freedoms of individual to make fundamental choices involving himself, his family, and his relationship with others. Industrial Foundation of the South v. Jones Indus. Ass’n, 268 U.S. 540, 45 S.Ct. 568, 69 S.Ct. The right of an individual (or corporation) to withhold himself and his property from public scrutiny, if he so chooses. It is said to exist only so far as its assertion is consistent with law or public policy, and in a proper case equity will interfere, if there is no remedy at law, to prevent an injury threatened by the invasion of, or infringement upon, this right from motives of curiosity, gain or malice. Federal Trade Commis- sion v. American Tobacco Co., 264 U.S. 298, 44 S.Ct. 356, 68 L.Ed. 686. See also Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 889, 97 S.Ct. 869, 51 L.Ed.2d 64; Warren and Brandeis, The Right to Privacy, 4 Harv.L.Rev. 193.
Tort actions for invasion of privacy fall into four general classes: Appropriation, consisting of appropriation, for the defendant's benefit or advantage, of the plaintiff's name or likeness; Carnal v. Fawcett Publications, 201 Cal.App.2d 733, 20 Cal.Rptr. 405; Intrusion, consisting of intrusion upon the plaintiff's solitude or seclusion, as by invading his home (Ford Motor Co. v. Williams, 108 Ga.App. 21, 132 S.E.2d 206), eavesdropping (LaCrone v. Ohio Bell Tel. Co., 114 Ohio App. 299, 182 N.E.2d 15, 19 O.O.2d 236); as well as persistent and unwanted telephone calls (Housh v. Peth, 165 Ohio St. 35, 133 N.E.2d 340, 59 O.O. 60); Public disclosure of private facts, consisting of a cause of action in publicity, of a highly objectionable kind, given to private information about the plaintiff, even though it is true and no action would lie for defamation, Melvin v. Reid, 112 Cal.App. 285, 297 P. 91: False light in the public eye, consisting of publicity which places the plaintiff in a false light in the public eye, Norman v. City of Las Vegas, 64 Nev. 38, 177 P.2d 442.

Private bank. An unincorporated banking institution owned by an individual or partnership and, depending upon state statutes, subject to or free from state regulation.

Private bill. Legislation for the special benefit of an Individual or a locality. Many State constitutions prohibit such legislation except by general law. See also Private law.

Privateer /prəˈvɑːtər/. A vessel owned, equipped, and armed by one or more private individuals, and duly commissioned by a belligerent power to go on cruises and make war upon the enemy, usually by preying on his commerce. A private vessel commissioned by a nation by the issue of a letter of marque to its owner to carry on all hostilities by sea, presumably according to the laws of war. Formerly a state issued letters of marque to its own subjects, and to those of neutral states as well, but a privateersman who accepted letters of marque from both belligerents was regarded as a pirate. By the Declaration of Paris (April, 1856), privateering was abolished, but the United States, Spain, Mexico, and Venezuela did not accede to this declaration. It has been thought that the constitutional provision empowering Congress to issue letters of marque deprives it of the power to join in a permanent treaty abolishing privateering. See Piracy.

Piracy and privateering are federal offenses. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1651 et seq.

Private foundations. A charitable or scientific organization which is operated privately for the advancement of charitable or educational projects.

Private international law. A name used by some writers to indicate that branch of the law which is now more commonly called "Conflict of laws" (q.v.).

Private law. As used in contradistinction to public law, the term means all that part of the law which is administered between citizen and citizen, or which is concerned with the definition, regulation, and enforcement of rights in cases where both the person in whom the right inheres and the person upon whom the obligation is incident are private individuals. See also Private bill; Public law; Special law.

Private letter ruling. A written statement issued to the taxpayer by the Internal Revenue Service in which interpretations of the tax laws are made and applied to a specific set of facts. Function of the letter ruling, usually sought by the taxpayer in advance of a contemplated transaction, is to advise the taxpayer regarding the tax treatment he can expect from the I.R.S. in the circumstances specified by the ruling. U. S. v. Wahlin, D.C.Wis., 384 F.Supp. 43, 47. See also Letter ruling.

Private nuisance. A private nuisance is generally anything that by its continuous use or existence works annoyance, harm, inconvenience or damage to another landowner in the enjoyment of his property. Mandell v. Pasquaretto, 76 Misc.2d 405, 350 N.Y.S.2d 561, 566. Activity which results in an unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of another's property. Robie v. Liliis, 112 N.H. 492, 289 A.2d 155, 156; City of Newport News v. Hertzler, 216 Va 587, 221 S.E.2d 146, 150. A nuisance affecting a single individual or definite small number of persons in enjoyment of private rights not common to the public. Spur Industries, Inc. v. Del E. Webb Development Co., 108 Ariz. 178, 494 P.2d 700, 705. See also Nuisance.

Private offering. See Offering.

Private person. Term sometimes used to refer to persons other than those holding public office or in military services.

Private placement. Adoption. In adoption cases, the placement of a child for adoption by the mother or parents themselves or by an intermediary like a lawyer or doctor, rather than by an adoption agency. Also sometimes called a "direct" placement.

Securities. In securities law, the sale of corporate stock to private persons outside of a public offering. Securities Act, 1933, § 4(2).

Private ruling. In a private ruling, the Internal Revenue Service advises individual taxpayers on the tax consequences of specific transactions that are either contemplated or completed. See also Letter ruling; Private letter ruling.

Privation /prəˈvɑːʃən/. A taking away or withdrawing.

Privatio presumpunt habitum /prəˈvɑːʃən(ɪ)əm priˈsæpənt ˈhæbɪtʊm/. A deprivation presupposes a possession.

Privatisačionibus non dubium est non iudex jus ceterorum quibus tamen nihil in ius iuris est non iudicium jussa sed coram/. There is no doubt that the rights of others [third parties] cannot be prejudiced by private agreements.
Privatorum conventio juris publico non derogat /prɪvə'tɔːrəm kənˌvɛnʃ(ə)l jʊri pʌbˈlɪkəʊ nɒn dɛˈrɒgət/. The agreement of private individuals does not derogate from the public right [law].

Prævatum commodum publico cedit /prɪvə'tæm kəmˈɒdəm pʌbˈlɪkəʊ kəˈsɪd/. Private good yields to public. The interest of an individual should give place to the public good.

Prævatum incommodum publico bono pensatur /prɪvə'tæm inˈkɒmədəm pʌbˈlɪkəʊ ˈbɒnəu ˈpɛnsəˈtʃʊər/. Private inconvenience is made up for by public benefit.

Priviae /prɪˈvaɪə/. Those who are partakers or have an interest in any action or thing, or any relation to another. Brown v. Fidelity Union Trust Co., 126 N.J.Eq. 406, 9 A.2d 311, 326; Hamelik v. Sypek, 152 Misc. 799, 274 N.Y.S. 875. They are of six kinds:

1. Privies of blood; such as the heir to his ancestor.
2. Privies in representation; as executors or administrators to their deceased testator or intestate.
3. Privies in estate; as grantor and grantee, lessor and lessee, assignor and assignee, etc.
4. Privies in respect to contract.
5. Privies in respect of estate and contract; as where the lessee assigns his interest, but the contract between lessor and lessee continues, the lessee not having accepted of the assignee.
6. Privies in law; as the lord by escheat, a tenant by the curtesy, or in dower, the incumbent of a benefice, a husband suing or defending in right of his wife, etc.

Privies, in the sense that they are bound by the judgment, are those who acquired an interest in the subject-matter after the rendition of the judgment. Privies to a judgment are those whose succession to the rights of property affected occurs after the institution of the suit and form a party to it.

Privigna /prɪvɪg'nə/. Lat. In the civil law, a stepdaughter.

Privignus /prɪvɪgnəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a son of a husband or wife by a former marriage; a stepson.

Privilege. A particular and peculiar benefit or advantage enjoyed by a person, company, or class beyond the common advantages of other citizens. An exceptional or extraordinary power or exemption. A right, power, franchise, or immunity held by a person or class, against or beyond the course of the law.

An exemption from some burden or attendance, with which certain persons are indulged, from a supposition of law that the stations they fill, or the offices they are engaged in, are such as require all their time and care, and that, therefore, without this indulgence, it would be impracticable to execute such offices to that advantage which the public good requires. That which releases one from the performance of a duty or obligation, or exempts one from a liability which he otherwise would be required to perform, or sustain in common with all other persons.

A peculiar advantage, exemption, or immunity. See also Exemption; Immunity.

Civil law. A right which the nature of a debt gives to a creditor, and which entitles him to be preferred before other creditors. Civil Code La. art. 3186. It is merely an accessory of the debt which it secures, and fails with the extinguishment of the debt. The civil law privilege became, by adoption of the admiralty courts, the admiralty lien. The J. E. Rumble, 148 U.S. 1, 13 S.Ct. 498, 37 L.Ed 345.

Communications. See Privileged communications.

Discovery. When interrogatories, depositions or other forms of discovery seek information which is otherwise privileged, the party from whom it is sought may claim his privilege. Fed.R.Civil P. 26; Fed.R. Crim.P. 16. See also Protective order; Work product rule.

Evidence. See Privileged communications; Privileged evidence.

Executive privilege. The protection afforded to confidential presidential communications. However, the generalized need for confidentiality of high level communications cannot sustain an absolute unqualified presidential privilege. U. S. v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 41 L.Ed.2d 1039. See also Executive privilege.

Journalist’s privilege. See Journalist’s privilege; Newsmen’s privilege; Shield laws.

Libel and slander. An exemption from liability for the speaking or publishing of defamatory words concerning another, based on the fact that the statement was made in the performance of a political, judicial, social, or personal duty. Privilege is either absolute or conditional. The former protects the speaker or publisher without reference to his motives or the truth or falsity of the statement. This may be claimed in respect, for instance, to statements made in legislative debates, in reports of military officers to their superiors in the line of their duty, and statements made by judges, witnesses, and jurors in trials in court. Conditional privilege (called also “qualified privilege”) will protect the speaker or publisher unless actual malice and knowledge of the falsity of the statement is shown. This may be claimed where the communication related to a matter of public interest, or where it was necessary to protect one’s private interest and was made to a person having an interest in the same matter. Saroyan v. Burkett, 57 Cal.2d 706, 21 Cal.Rptr. 557, 558, 371 P.2d 293.

For defense of “constitutional privilege” in libel actions, see Libel.

Privilege is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded by defendant. Fed.R.Civl P. 8(c).

Writ of privilege. A common law process to enforce or maintain a privilege; particularly to secure the release of a person arrested in a civil suit contrary to his privilege.

Privilege against self-incrimination. The privilege derived from the Fifth Amendment, U.S.Const., and similar provisions in the constitutions of states. It requires the government to prove a criminal case against the defendant without the aid of the defendant as a witness against himself, though it protects only communications, not physical evidence such as handwriting and fingerprints. It is invoked by any witness who is called to the witness stand against his wishes whether the proceeding be a trial or grand jury hearing or a proceeding before an investigating body, but it is waived when the witness voluntarily takes the witness stand. See also Immunity; Link-in-chain.

Privileged. Possessing or enjoying a privilege; exempt from burdens; entitled to priority or precedence.

Privileged communications. Those statements made by certain persons within a protected relationship such as husband-wife, attorney-client, priest-penitent and the like which the law protects from forced disclosure on the witness stand at the option of the witness client, penitent, spouse. The extent of the privilege is governed by state statutes. Fed.Evid.Rule 501. See also Attorney-client privilege; Communication; Conditionally privileged communication; Journalist's privilege.

Privileged copyholds. See Copyhold.

Privileged debts. Those which an executor or administrator, trustee in bankruptcy, and the like, may pay in preference to others; such as funeral expenses, servants' wages, and doctors' bills during last sickness, etc. See also Preferential debts.

Privileged evidence. In addition to privileged communications (q.v.), privileged evidence may also include governmental secrets, records, identity of informer, grand jury proceedings, certain types of accident reports, and attorney's work product.

Privileged vessel. That one of two vessels which, as against the other, ordinarily has the right or duty to hold her course and speed. Under International Rules, arts. 20, 22 (33 U.S.C.A. §§ 105, 107), a sailing vessel, except when the overtaking vessel, is always the privileged vessel, as against a steamer. But the fact that a vessel is privileged does not excuse her from failing to observe the rules, inattention to signals, or failure to answer where an answer is required, or from adopting such precautions as may be necessary to avoid a collision.

Privileges and Immunities clause. There are two Privileges and Immunities Clauses in the federal Constitution and Amendments, the first being found in Art. IV, and the second in the 14th Amendment, § 1, second sentence, clause 1. The provision in Art. IV states that "The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States," while the 14th Amendment provides that "No State shall make or enforce any law which Pension, or rather a gratuity, customary in certain trades, and which the law assumes to be a fair and equitable allowance, because the contract on both sides is made under the knowledge of such usage by the parties.

Parliamentary law. The right of a particular question, motion, or statement to take precedence over all other business before the house and to be considered immediately, notwithstanding any consequent interference with or setting aside the rules of procedure adopted by the house. The matter may be one of "personal privilege," where it concerns one member of the house in his capacity as a legislator, or of the "privilege of the house," where it concerns the rights, immunities, or dignity of the entire body, or of "constitutional privilege," where it relates to some action to be taken or some order of proceeding expressly enjoined by the constitution.

Privilege from arrest. A privilege extended to certain classes of persons, either by the rules of international law, the policy of the law, or the necessities of justice or the administration of government, whereby they are exempted from arrest on civil process, and, in some cases, on criminal charges, either permanently, as in the case of a foreign minister and his suite, or temporarily, as in the case of members of the legislature, parties and witnesses engaged in a particular suit, etc. Art. I, § 6, U.S.Const. See also Immunity.

Privilege tax. A tax on the privilege of carrying on a business or occupation for which a license or franchise is required. Gulf & Ship Island R. Co. v. Hewes, 183 U.S. 66, 22 S.Ct. 26, 46 L.Ed. 86.

Torts. Privilege is the general term applied to certain rules of law by which particular circumstances justify conduct which otherwise would be tortious, and thereby defeat the tort liability (or defense) which, in the absence of such circumstances, ordinarily would follow from that conduct. In other words, even if all of the facts necessary to a prima facie case of tort liability can be proved, there are additional facts present sufficient to establish some privilege, and therefore defendant has committed no tort. Privileges thus differ from other defenses, such as contributory negligence, which operate to bar plaintiff's recovery but do not negate the tortious nature of defendant's conduct. Conversely, plaintiff's privilege may defeat a defense which defendant otherwise might have had. The term and concept of privilege apply primarily to the intentional torts, but also appear in other areas, such as defamation. (See Libel and slander above.)

A privilege may be based upon: (a) the consent of the other affected by the actor's conduct, or (b) the fact that its exercise is necessary for the protection of some interest of the actor or of the public which is of such importance as to justify the harm caused or threatened by its exercise, or (c) the fact that the actor is performing a function for the proper performance of which freedom of action is essential. Restatement, Second, Torts, § 10.

Privileges may be divided into two general categories: (1) consent, and (2) privileges created by law irrespective of consent. In general, the latter arise when there are some important and overriding social value in sanctioning defendant's conduct, despite the fact that it causes plaintiff harm.
shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States.

The purpose of these Clauses is to place the citizens of each State upon the same footing with citizens of other states, so far as the advantages resulting from citizenship in those states is concerned; to insure that a citizen of State A who ventures into State B be accorded the same privileges that the citizens of State B enjoy. Toomer v. Witsell, 334 U.S. 385, 68 S.Ct. 1156, 92 L.Ed. 1460. See also Full faith and credit clause.

Privilegea que re vera sunt in prejudicium reipublicæ, magis tamen habent speciosa frontispicium, et boni publici praetextum, quam bone et legales concessiones; sed praetextu licenti non debet admitti ille tres /privileji(y)am kwiy ri' víra sánt in prejadish(y)am riyapblishi, meyjas téyman hæbant slihyoiwia fríntaspish(y)am, ét bównay póllassay pratékstam, kwám bówniny ét layélyiz kan(t)séshóniwniy; sèd pratéks(n)uy lússad yón débant admiday aílsádam./ Privileges which are truly in prejudice of public good have, however, a more specious front and pretext of public good than good and legal grants; but, under pretext of legality, that which is illegal ought not to be admitted.

Privilegium /privileji(y)am/. In Roman law, a special constitution by which the Roman emperor conferred on some single person some anomalous or irregular right, or imposed upon some single person some anomalous or irregular obligation, or inflicted on some single person some anomalous or irregular punishment. When such privilegia conferred anomalous rights, they were styled “favorable.” When they imposed anomalous obligations, or inflicted anomalous punishments, they were styled “odious.” A private law inflicting a punishment or conferring a reward.

In civil law, every peculiar right or favor granted by the law, contrary to the common rule. A species of lien or claim upon an article of property, not dependent upon possession, but continuing until either satisfied or released. Such is the lien, recognized by maritime law, of seamen upon the ship for their wages.

Privilegium clericale /privileji(y)am klèhhrakélyii/. The benefit of clergy (q.v.).

Privilegium est beneficium personæ, et extinguitur cum persona /privileji(y)am est béstésfah(y)am persónélyii ed exstingwádár kám pársonwa/. A privilege is a personal benefit, and dies with the person.

Privilegium est quasi privata lex /privileji(y)am ést kwésysay prayvéyds léks/. Privilege is, as it were, a private law.

Privilegium non valet contra rempublicam /privileji(y)am nón váešt kóntra rampéblakam/. Privilege is of no force against the commonwealth. Even necessity does not excuse, where the act to be done is against the commonwealth.

Privilegium, property proper /prépárdi próptar privileji(y)am/. A qualified property in animals fere nature; i.e., a privilege of hunting, taking, and killing them, in exclusion of others.

Privity. Mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property. In its broadest sense, “privity” is defined as mutual or successive relationships to the same right of property, or such an identification of interest of one person with another as to represent the same legal right. Petersen v. Fee Intern., Ltd., D.C.Okl., 435 F.Supp. 938, 942. Derivative interest founded on, or growing out of, contract, connection, or bond of union between parties; mutuality of interest. Hodgson v. Midwest Oil Co., C.C.A.Wyo., 17 F.2d 71, 75. Thus, the executor is in privity with the testator, the heir with the ancestor, the assignee with the assignor, the donee with the donor, and the lessee with the lessor. Litchfield v. Crane, 123 U.S. 549, 8 S.Ct. 210, 31 L.Ed. 199.

Concept of “privity” pertains to the relationship between a party to a suit and a person who was not a party, but whose interest in the action was such that he will be bound by the final judgment as if he were a party. Foitz v. Pullman Inc., Del.Super., 319 A.2d 38, 41.

Private knowledge; joint knowledge with another of a private concern; cognizance implying a consent or concurrence. See Insider; Legal privity; Prvty. Privity of blood. Such existed between an heir and his ancestor (privity in blood inheritable), and between coparceners. This privity was formerly of importance in the law of descent cast.

Privity of contract. That connection or relationship which exists between two or more contracting parties. It was traditionally essential to the maintenance of an action on any contract that there should subsist such privity between the plaintiff and defendant in respect of the matter sued on. However, the absence of privity as a defense in actions for damages in contract and tort actions is generally no longer viable with the enactment of warranty statutes (see e.g. U.C.C. § 2–318 below), acceptance by states of doctrine of strict liability (q.v.), and court decisions (e.g. MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co., 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050) which have extended the right to sue for injuries or damages to third party beneficiaries, and even innocent bystanders (Eimere v. American Motors Corp., 70 Cal.2d 578, 75 Cal.Rptr. 652, 451 P.2d 84).

U.C.C. § 2–318 provides three Alternative provisions (A–C) covering third party beneficiaries of express or implied warranties. Most states have enacted Alternative A: “A seller’s warranty whether express or implied extends to any natural person who is in the family or household of his buyer or who is a guest in his home if it is reasonable to expect that such person may use, consume or be affected by the goods and who is injured in person by breach of the warranty. A seller may not exclude or limit the operation of this section.” Other states have further broadened this model provision. For example Massachusetts U.C.C. § 2–318 provides: “Lack of privity between plaintiff and defendant shall be no defense in any action brought against the manufacturer, seller, lessor or supplier of goods to recover damages for breach of warranty, express or implied, or for negligence, although the plaintiff did not purchase the goods from the defendant if the plaintiff was a person whom the manufacturer, seller, lessor or supplier might reasonably have expected to use, consume or be affected by the goods.”
PRIVITY

Privity of estate. That which exists between lessor and lessee, tenant for life and remainderman or reversioner, etc., and their respective assignees, and between joint tenants and coparceners.

Privity of possession. Relationship which exists between parties in successive possession of real property. Such relationship becomes important in cases of adverse possession claims.

Privity or knowledge. Under Rev.St. §§ 4283–4286 (46 U.S.C.A. §§ 183–186) withholding the right to limit liability if the shipowner had “privity or knowledge” of the fault which occasioned damages, privity or knowledge must be actual and not merely constructive, and must involve a personal participation of the owner in some fault or act of negligence causing or contributing to the injury suffered. The words import actual knowledge of the things causing or contributing to the loss, or knowledge or means of knowledge of a condition of things likely to produce or contribute to the loss without adopting proper means to prevent it.

Privy. A person who is in privy with another. One who is a partaker or has any part or interest in any action, matter, or thing. See Insider; Privies; Privity.

As an adjective, the word has practically the same meaning as “private.”

Privy council. In England, the principal council of the sovereign, composed of the cabinet ministers, and other persons chosen by the king or queen as privy councillors. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council acts as a court of ultimate appeal in various cases. The importance of the Privy Council has been replaced to a great extent by the Cabinet.

Privy counsellor. A member of the privy council.

Privy purse. In England, the income set apart for the sovereign’s personal use.

Privy seal. In England, a seal used in making out grants or letters patent, preparatory to their passing under the great seal. A seal which the sovereign uses to such grants or things as pass the great seal. A seal of the British government which is affixed to documents not requiring the great seal.

Privy signet /privi signat/. In English law, the signet or seal which is first used in making out grants and private letters and which is always in the custody of the Queen’s secretaries.

Privy token /privi tówkon/. A false mark or sign, forged object, counterfeited letter, key, ring, etc., used to deceive persons, and thereby fraudulently obtain possession of property. A false privy token is a false privy document or sign, not such as is calculated to deceive men generally, but designed to defraud one or more individuals. Cheating by such false token was not indictable at common law.

Privy verdict. A verdict given privily to the judge out of court, but which was of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court. Now generally superseded by the “sealed verdict,” i.e., one written out, sealed up, and delivered to the judge or the clerk of the court.

Prize. Anything offered as a reward of contest. A reward offered to the person who, among several persons or among the public at large, shall first (or best) perform a certain undertaking or accomplish certain conditions. An award or recompense for some act done; some valuable thing offered by a person for something done by others. It is distinguished from a “bet” or “wager” in that it is known before the event who is to give either the premium or the prize, and there is but one operation until the accomplishment of the act, thing, or purpose for which it is offered.

The fair market value of a prize or award is generally includible in gross income. Certain exceptions are provided where the prize or award is made in recognition of religious, charitable, scientific, educational, artistic, literary, or civic achievement providing certain other requirements are met. I.R.C. § 74.

A vessel or cargo, belonging to one of two belligerent powers, apprehended or forcibly captured at sea by a war-vessel or privateer of the other belligerent, and claimed as enemy’s property, and therefore liable to appropriation and condemnation under the laws of war. The apprehension and detention at sea of a ship or other vessel, by authority of a belligerent power, either with the design of appropriating it, with the goods and effects it contains, or with that of becoming master of the whole or a part of its cargo.

Prize courts. Courts having jurisdiction to adjudicate upon captures made at sea in time of war, and to condemn the captured property as prize if lawfully subject to that sentence. In England, the admiralty courts have jurisdiction as prize courts, distinct from the jurisdiction on the instance side. A special commission issues in time of war to the judge of the admiralty court, to enable him to hold such court. In the United States, the federal district courts have jurisdiction in cases of prize. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1333.

Prize goods. Goods which are taken on the high seas, jure belli, out of the hands of the enemy.

Prize law. The system of laws and rules applicable to the capture of prize at sea; its condemnation, rights of the captors, distribution of the proceeds, etc.

Pro. For; in respect of; on account of; in behalf of. The introductory word of many Latin phrases.

Proamita /prowamada/. Lat. In the civil law, a great paternal aunt; the sister of one’s grandfather.

Proamita magna /prowamada mäagna/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-great-aunt.

Pro and con /prów an kón/. For and against. A phrase descriptive of the presentation of arguments or evidence on both sides of a disputed question.

Proavia /provía(i)va/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandmother.

Proavunculus /provunçykalas/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandfather’s or great-grandmother’s brother.
Proavus /prówaːs/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandfather. Employed in making genealogical tables.

Probability. Likelihood; appearance of reality or truth; reasonable ground of presumption; verisimilitude; consonance to reason. The likelihood of a proposition or hypothesis being true, from its conformity to reason or experience, or from superior evidence or arguments adduced in its favor. A condition or state created when there is more evidence in favor of the existence of a given proposition than there is against it.

High probability rule. A rule relating to the right of insured to abandon a vessel, by virtue of which the right of abandonment does not depend upon the certainty, but upon the high probability of a total loss, either of the property, or voyage, or both. The result is to act not upon certainties, but upon probabilities; and if the facts present a case of extreme hazard, and of probable expense, exceeding half the value of the ship, the insured may abandon, though it should happen that she was afterwards recovered at a less expense.

Probable. Having the appearance of truth; having the character of probability; appearing to be founded in reason or experience. Having more evidence for than against; supported by evidence which inclines the mind to believe, but leaves some room for doubt; likely. See also Possible.

Probable cause. Reasonable cause; having more evidence for than against. A reasonable ground for belief in the existence of facts warranting the proceedings complained of. An apparent state of facts found to exist upon reasonable inquiry (that is, such inquiry as the given case renders convenient and proper), which would induce a reasonably intelligent and prudent man to believe, in a criminal case, that the accused person had committed the crime charged, or, in a civil case, that a cause of action existed. Cook v. Singer Sewing Mach. Co., 138 Cal.App. 418, 32 P.2d 430, 431. See also Information and belief; Reasonable and probable cause; Reasonable belief; Reasonable grounds.

Arrest, search and seizure. Reasonable grounds for belief that a person should be arrested or searched. Probable cause exists where the facts and circumstances would warrant a person of reasonable caution to believe that an offense was or is being committed. Com. v. Stewart, 358 Mass. 747, 267 N.E.2d 213. Probable cause is the existence of circumstances which would lead a reasonably prudent man to believe in guilt of arrested party; mere suspicion or belief, unsupported by facts or circumstances, is insufficient. State v. Jones, 248 Or. 428, 435 P.2d 317, 319. It permits an officer to arrest one for a felony without a warrant. Probable cause justifying officer's arrest without warrant has been defined as situation where officer has more evidence favoring suspicion that person is guilty of crime than evidence against such suspicion, but there is some room for doubt. Nugent v. Superior Court for San Mateo County, 254 C.A.2d 420, 62 Cal.Rptr. 217, 221.

Probable cause exists when facts and circumstances within officer's knowledge and of which he has reasonably trustworthy information are sufficient to warrant a man of reasonable caution in believing that an offense has been or is being committed. State v. Kolb, N.D., 239 N.W.2d 815, 817. Probable cause for search and seizure with or without search warrant involves probabilities which are not technical but factual and practical considerations of every day life upon which reasonable and prudent men act, and essence of probable cause is reasonable ground for belief of guilt. Paula v. State, Fla.App., 188 So.2d 388, 390.

The finding of probable cause for issuance of an arrest warrant (as required by 4th Amend.) may be based upon hearsay evidence in whole or part. Fed. R.Crim.P. 4(b). See also Rule 5.1(a) (Preliminary examination), and Rule 41(c) (Search and seizure).

See also Arrest; Probable cause hearing; Search; Search-warrant.

False imprisonment action. For arrest which must be shown as justification by defendants in action for false imprisonment is reasonable ground of suspicion supported by circumstances sufficient in themselves to warrant cautious man in believing accused to be guilty, but does not depend on actual state of case in point of fact, as it may turn out upon legal investigation, but on knowledge of facts which would be sufficient to induce reasonable belief in truth of accusation. Christ v. McDonald, 152 Or. 494, 52 P.2d 655, 658.

Probable cause hearing. That procedural step in the criminal process at which the judge or magistrate decides whether a complaint should issue or a person should be bound over to a grand jury on a showing of probable cause. See Preliminary hearing.

Probable consequence. One that is more likely to follow its supposed cause than it is not to follow it.

Probable evidence. Presumptive evidence is so called, from its foundation in probability.

 Probably. In all probability; so far as the evidence shows; presumably; likely.

Probandi necessitas incumbit illi qui agit /próbən’diː nɛsəsɪtəs ənkəmbɪt ɪlɪ juː əgɪt/. The necessity of proving lies with him who sues. In other words, the burden of proof of a proposition is upon him who advances it affirmatively.

Probate. Court procedure by which a will is proved to be valid or invalid; though in current usage this term has been expanded to generally include all matters and proceedings pertaining to administration of estates, guardianships, etc. See Letters; Probate court; Probate jurisdiction.

In the canon law, "probate" consisted of probatio, the proof of the will by the executor, and approbatio, the approbation given by the ecclesiastical judge to the proof.

Probate bond. One required by law to be given to the probate court or judge, as incidental to proceedings in such courts, such as the bonds of executors, administrators, and guardians.

Probate code. The body or system of law relating to all matters of which probate courts have jurisdiction; e.g. Uniform Probate Code.
PROBATE COURT

Probate court. A court having general powers over probate of wills, administration of estates, and, in some States, empowered to appoint guardians or approve the adoption of minors. Court with similar functions is called Surrogate or Orphan's Court in certain states. See also Court of orphan's; Probate Jurisdiction.

Probate duty. A tax laid by government on every will admitted to probate or on the gross value of the personal property of the deceased testator, and payable out of the decedent's estate. See also Estate tax; Inheritance tax.

Probate homestead. See Homestead.

Probate Jurisdiction. The exercise of the ordinary, generally understood power of a probate, surrogate or orphan's court, which includes the establishment of wills, settlement of decedents' estates, supervision of guardianship of infants, control of their property, and other powers and functions pertaining to such subjects. See also Probate court.

Probate proceeding. A general designation of the actions and proceedings whereby the law is administered upon the various subjects within "probate jurisdiction" (q.v.).

Probato /próběsh(t)ov/. Lat. Proof; more particularly, as distinguished from indirect or circumstantial evidence.

Probatio mortua /próběsh(t)ov mórčuwa/. Dead proof; that is proof by inanimate objects, such as deeds or other written evidence.

Probation. The evidence which proves a thing; the act of proving; proof; trial; test. Used in the latter sense when referring to the initial period of employment during which a new, transferred, or promoted employee must prove or show that he is capable of performing the required duties of the job or position before he will be considered as permanently employed in such position. As applied to teachers, term means that teacher is on trial, with his competence and suitability remaining to be finally determined. Turner v. Board of Trustees, Calexico Unified School Dist., 121 Cal.Rptr. 705, 535 P.2d 1171, 1178.

A sentence releasing the defendant into the community under the supervision of a probation officer. The status of a convicted person who is allowed his freedom after conviction subject to the condition that for a stipulated period he shall conduct himself in a manner approved by a special officer to whom he must make periodic reports. Probation is release by court before sentence has commenced. State v. Gates, 230 Or. 84, 368 P.2d 605. Compare Parole.

System of allowing a person convicted of some lesser offense (frequently juveniles or first offenders) to avoid imprisonment, under a suspension of sentence, during good behavior, and generally under the supervision of a probation officer. An act of grace and clemency which may be granted by the trial court to a seemingly deserving defendant whereby such defendant may escape the extreme rigors of the penalty imposed by law for the offense of which he stands convicted. People v. Leach, 22 Cal.App.2d 525, 71 P.2d 594, 595.

Probationer. A convicted offender who is allowed to go at large, under suspension of sentence, during good behavior.

Probationes debent esse evidentes, id est, perspicue et facilis intelligi /próběshlyóyvnljž dežbánt éslý évěnděnlyž, id ét, paréplikuyway ét fásalyly int disbelief/. Proofs ought to be evident, that is, perspicuous and easily understood.

Probation officer. One who supervises a person (commonly juveniles) placed on probation by a court in a criminal proceeding. He is required to report to the court the progress of the probationer and to surrender him if he violates the terms and conditions of his probation.

Probatio plena /próběsh(t)ov pl défini/. In the civil law, full proof; proof by two witnesses, or a public instrument.

Probatio semi-plena /próběsh(t)ov sémaypl défini/. In the civil law, half-full proof; half-proof. Proof by one witness, or a private instrument.

Probatio vita /próběsh(t)ov wává/. Living proof; that is, proof by the mouth of living witnesses.

Probatis extremis, præsumuntur media /próbéddas akstrýmas, príyzyamútár mijy(t)ýy/. The extremes being proved, the intermediate proceedings are presumed.

Probative evidence /prówbadov/. In the law of evidence, having the effect of proof; tending to prove, or actually proving. Testimony carrying quality of proof and having fitness to induce conviction of truth, consisting of fact and reason co-operating as co-ordinate factors. Globe Indemnity Co. v. Daviess, 243 Ky. 356, 47 S.W.2d 990, 992.

See Relevant evidence.

Probative facts. In the law of evidence, facts which actually have effect of proving facts sought; evidentiary facts. Matters of evidence required to prove ultimate facts. Johnson v. Inter-Southern Life Ins. Co., 244 Ky. 83, 50 S.W.2d 16.

Probator /próbéddar/. In old English law, strictly, an accomplice in felony who to save himself confessed the fact, and charged or accused any other as principal or accessory, against whom he was bound to make good his charge. It also signified an approver, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charged upon another.

Probatum est /próbéddam ét/. Lat. It is tried or proved.

Pro bono /prów bównow/. Lit. For the good; used to describe work or services (e.g. legal services) done or performed free of charge.

Pro bono et malo /prów bównow ét málow/. For good and ill; for advantage and detriment.
Pro bono publico /prôw bównow pâblâkow/. For the public good; for the welfare of the whole.

Probus et legallis homo /prôwbas êt lagélyâs hówmow/. Lat. A good and lawful man. A phrase particularly applied to a juror or witness who was free from all exception, and competent in point of law to serve on juries. In the plural form: probi et legales homines.

Procedendo /prôwswâdênôw/. Action wherein court of superior jurisdiction orders court of inferior jurisdiction to proceed to judgment but has no bearing on nature of judgment to be entered. State ex rel. Jacobs v. Municipal Court of Franklin County, 26 Ohio App.2d 113, 269 N.E.2d 629, 631, 55 O.O.2d 245. A writ by which a cause which has been removed from an inferior to a superior court by certiorari or otherwise is sent down again to the same court, to be proceeded in there, where it appears to the superior court that it was removed on insufficient grounds.

More commonly, a case returned to a lower court is said to be remanded to such court.

A writ (procedendo ad judicium) which issued out of the common-law jurisdiction of the court of chancery, when judges of any subordinate court delayed the parties for that they would not give judgment either on the one side or on the other, when they ought so to do. In such a case, a writ of procedendo ad judicium was awarded, commanding the inferior court in the sovereign's name to proceed to give judgment, but without specifying any particular judgment. It was the earliest remedy for the refusal or neglect of justice on the part of the courts. In re Press Printers & Publishers, C.C.A.N.J., 12 F.2d 660, 664.

A writ by which the commission of a justice of the peace is revived, after having been suspended. 1 Bl.Comn. 353.

Procedendo on aid prayer /prôwswâdênôw ön éyd prê(y)âr/. If one pray in aid of the crown in real action, and aid be granted, it shall be awarded that he sue to the sovereign in chancery, and the justices in the common pleas shall stay until this writ of procedendo de loquela come to them. So, also, on a personal action.

Procedural due process. Those safeguards to one's liberty and property mandated by the 14th Amend., U.S.Const., such as the right to counsel appointed for one who is indigent, the right to a copy of a transcript, the right of confrontation; all of which are specifically provided for in the 6th Amendment and made applicable to the states' procedure by the 14th Amendment.

Central meaning of procedural due process is that parties whose rights are to be affected are entitled to be heard and, in order that they may enjoy that right, they must be notified. Parham v. Cortese, 407 U.S. 67, 92 S.Ct. 1983, 1994, 32 L.Ed.2d 556. Reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard and present any claim or defense are embodied in the term "procedural due process." In re Nelson, 78 N.M. 739, 437 P.2d 1008.

Procedural law. That which prescribes method of enforcing rights or obtaining redress for their invasion; machinery for carrying on procedural aspects of civil or criminal action; e.g., Rules of Civil, Criminal, and Appellate Procedure, as adopted by the Federal and most state courts. Barker v. St. Louis County, 340 Mo. 986, 104 S.W.2d 371, 377, 378, 379; Schultz v. Gosselin, 260 Iowa 115, 148 N.W.2d 434, 436. As a general rule, laws which fix duties, establish rights and responsibilities among and for persons, natural or otherwise, are "substantive laws" in character, while those which merely prescribe the manner in which such rights and responsibilities may be exercised and enforced in a court are "procedural laws". State ex rel. Blood v. Gibson Circuit Court, 239 Ind. 394, 157 N.E.2d 475, 478. See also Procedure.

Procedure. The mode of proceeding by which a legal right is enforced, as distinguished from the substantive law which gives or defines the right, and which, by means of the proceeding, the court is to administer; the machinery, as distinguished from its product. That which regulates the formal steps in an action or other judicial proceeding; a form, manner, and order of conducting suits or prosecutions. The judicial process for enforcing rights and duties recognized by substantive law and for justly administering redress for infraction of them. Sims v. United Pacific Ins. Co., D.C.Idaho, 51 F.Supp. 433, 435.

The law of procedure is what is commonly termed by jurists "adjective law" (q.v.).

See also Procedural law.

Proceeding. In a general sense, the form and manner of conducting judicial business before a court or judicial officer. Regular and orderly progress in form of law, including all possible steps in an action from its commencement to the execution of judgment. Term also refers to administrative proceedings before agencies, tribunals, bureaus, or the like.

An act which is done by the authority or direction of the court, agency, or tribunal, express or implied; an act necessary to be done in order to obtain a given end; a prescribed mode of action for carrying into effect a legal right. All the steps or measures adopted in the prosecution or defense of an action. Statter v. United States, C.C.A.Alaska, 66 F.2d 819, 822. The word may be used synonymously with "action" or "suit" to describe the entire course of an action at law or suit in equity from the issuance of the writ or filing of the complaint until the entry of a final judgment, or may be used to describe any act done by authority of a court of law and every step required to be taken in any cause by either party. The proceedings of a suit embrace all matters that occur in its progress judicially.

Term "proceeding" may refer not only to a complete remedy but also to a mere procedural step that is part of a larger action or special proceeding. Rooney v. Vermont Investment Corp., 10 Cal.3d 351, 110 Cal.Rptr. 353, 365, 515 P.2d 287. A "proceeding" includes action and special proceedings before judicial tribunals as well as proceedings pending before quasi-judicial officers and boards. State ex rel. Johnson v. Independent School Dist. No. 810, Wabasha County, 280 Minn. 237, 109 N.W.2d 596, 602. In a more particular sense, any application to a court of justice, however made, for aid in the enforcement of rights, for relief, for redress of injuries, for damages, or for any remedial object.

"Proceeding" means any action, hearing, investigation, inquest, or inquiry (whether conducted by a court, administrative agency, hearing officer, arbitrator, legislative body, or any other person authorized by law) in which, pursuant to law, testimony can be compelled to be given. Calif.Evid.Code.

Collateral proceeding. One in which the particular question may arise or be involved incidentally, but which is not instituted for the very purpose of deciding such question; as in the rule that a judgment cannot be attacked, or a corporation's right to exist be questioned, in any collateral proceeding. See Collateral estoppel doctrine.

Legal proceedings. See Legal proceedings.

Ordinary proceedings. Those founded on the regular and usual mode of carrying on a suit by due course at common law.

Special proceeding. Generic term for remedies or proceedings which are not ordinary actions; e.g. condemnation (Fed.R.Civ.P. 71A); vesting title (Rule 70).

A "special proceeding" has reference only to such proceedings as may be commenced independently of a pending action by petition or motion upon notice in order to obtain special relief, and, generally speaking, a special proceeding is confined to type of case which was not, under the common-law or equity practice, either an action at law or a suit in equity. Church v. Humboldt County, 248 C.A.2d 855, 57 Cal.Rptr. 78, 81.

Summary proceeding. Any proceeding by which a controversy is settled, case disposed of, or trial conducted, in a prompt and simple manner, without the aid of a jury, without presentment or indictment, or in other respects out of the regular course of the common law. In procedure, proceedings are said to be summary when they are short and simple in comparison with regular proceedings; e.g. conciliation or small claims court proceedings as contrasted with usual civil trial.

Supplementary proceeding. A separate proceeding in an original action, in which the court where the action is pending is called upon to exercise its jurisdiction in aid of execution of the judgment in the action. It is a statutory equivalent in actions at law of the creditor's bill in equity, and in the majority of states where law and equity are merged, is provided as a substitute therefor. See e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 69.

In this proceeding the judgment debtor is summoned to appear before the court (or a referee or examiner) and submit to an oral examination touching all his property and effects, and if property subject to execution and in his possession or control is thus discovered, he is ordered to deliver it up, or a receiver may be appointed. See Execution; Supplementary proceedings.

Proceeds. Issues; income; yield; receipts; produce; money or articles or other thing of value arising or obtained by the sale of property; the sum, amount, or value of property sold or converted into money or into other property. Proceeds does not necessarily mean only cash or money. Phelps v. Harris, 101 U.S. 370, 25 L.Ed. 855. That which results, proceeds, or accrues from some possession or transaction. State Highway Commission v. Spainhower, Mo., 504 S.W.2d 121, 125. The funds received from disposition of assets or from the issue of securities.

Proceeds includes whatever is received when collateral or proceeds is sold, exchanged, collected or otherwise disposed of. The term also includes the account arising when the right to payment is earned under a contract right. Money, checks and the like are "cash proceeds". All other proceeds are "non-cash proceeds". U.C.C. § 9-306(1).

Proceses /prəˈsɛriːz/. Nobles; lords. The house of lords in England is called, in Latin, "Domus Proceorum." Formerly, the chief magistrates in cities.

Process. A series of actions, motions, or occurrences; progressive act or transaction; continuous operation; method, mode or operation, whereby a result or effect is produced; normal or actual course of procedure; regular proceeding, as, the process of vegetation or decomposition; a chemical process; processes of nature. Sokol v. Stein Fur Dyeing Co., 216 App.Div. 573, 216 N.Y.S. 167, 169; Kelley v. Coe, App.D.C., 99 F.2d 435, 441.

Process is mode, method or operation whereby a result is produced; and means to prepare for market or to convert into marketable form. Employment Security Commission of Ariz. v. Bruce Church, Inc., 109 Ariz. 183, 507 P.2d 108, 112.

Patent Law

An art or method by which any particular result is produced. An act or series of acts performed upon the subject-matter to be transformed or reduced to a different state or thing. A means or method employed to produce a certain result or effect, or a mode of treatment of given materials to produce a desired result, either by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, or of one substance to another, irrespective of any machine or mechanical device; in this sense a "process" is patentable, though, strictly speaking, it is the art and not the process which is the subject of patent. Broadly speaking, a "process" is a definite combination of new or old elements, ingredients, operations, ways, or means to produce a new, improved or old result, and any substantial change therein by omission, to the same or better result, or by modification or substitution, with different function, to the same or better result, is a new and patentable process.

Civil and Criminal Proceedings

Process is defined as any means used by court to acquire or exercise its jurisdiction over a person or over specific property. Austin Liquor Mart, Inc. v. Department of Revenue, 18 Ill.App.3d 894, 310 N.E.2d 719, 728. Means whereby court compels appearance of defendant before it or a compliance with its demands. Dansby v. Dansby, 222 Ga. 118, 149 S.E.2d 252, 254.

When actions were commenced by original writ, instead of, as at present, by summons, the method of compelling the defendant to appear was by what was termed "original process," being founded on the original writ, and so called also to distinguish it from "mesne" or "intermediate" process, which was some writ or process which issued during the progress of the suit. The word "process," however, as now commonly understood, refers to a summons, or, summons and complaint, and, less commonly, to a writ. The content of the summons, and service requirements, are provided for in Rule of Civil Proc. 4.

See also Abuse (Process); Alias process; Compulsory process; Constructive service of process; Executive process; Long arm statute; Malicious abuse of legal process; Malicious use of process; Prohibition; Service (Service of process); Summons.

Abuse of process. See Abuse.

Alias process. See that title.

Compulsory process. See Compulsory.

Criminal process. See Warrant.

Final process. The last process in an action; i.e. process issued to enforce execution of judgment.

Irregular process. Term is usually applied to process not issued in strict conformity with the law, whether the defect appears upon the face of the process, or by reference to extrinsic facts, and whether such defects render the process absolutely void or only voidable. Under current practice, a defective summons may be amended under Rule of Civil Proc. 15.

Judicial process. In a wide sense, this term may include all the acts of a court from the beginning to the end of its proceedings in a given cause; but more specifically it means the writ, summons, mandate, or other process which is used to inform the defendant of the institution of proceedings against him and to compel his appearance, in either civil or criminal cases.

Legal process. This term is sometimes used as equivalent to "lawful process." Thus, it is said that legal process means process not merely fair on its face, but in fact valid. But properly it means a summons, writ, warrant, mandate, or other process issuing from a court.

Mesne process. As distinguished from final process, this signifies any writ or process issued between the commencement of the action and the suing out of execution. "Mesne" in this connection may be defined as intermediate; intervening; the middle between two extremes. The writ of capias ad respondendum was called "mesne" to distinguish it, on the one hand, from the original process by which a suit was formerly commenced; and, on the other, from the final process of execution.

Original process. That by which a judicial proceeding is instituted; process to compel the appearance of the defendant. Distinguished from "mesne" process, which issues, during the progress of a suit, for some subordinate or collateral purpose; and from "final" process, which is process of execution. See Summons.

Process of interpleader. A means of determining the right to property claimed by each of two or more persons, which is in the possession of a third. See Interpleader.

Process of law. See Due process of law.

Regular process. Such as is issued according to rule and the prescribed practice, or which emanates, lawfully and in a proper case, from a court or magistrate possessing jurisdiction.

Service of process. See Service.

Summary process. Such as is immediate or instantaneous, in distinction from the ordinary course, by emanating and taking effect without intermediate applications or delays. In some jurisdictions (e.g. Massachusetts), term used to describe action for eviction of tenant.

Trustee process. The name given in some states (particularly in New England) to the process of garnishment or foreign attachment.

Void process. Such as was issued without power in the court to award it, or which the court had not acquired jurisdiction to issue in the particular case, or which fails in some material respect to comply with the requisite form of legal process.

Process agent. Person authorized to accept service of process in behalf of another (e.g. on behalf of corporation).

Processioning. Subjecting to some special treatment, to prepare for the market, to convert into marketable form, to make usable, marketable or the like. State v. Four States Drilling Co., 278 Ala. 273, 177 So.2d 828, 831.

A survey and inspection of boundaries formerly performed in some of the American colonies by the local authorities. It was analogous in part to the English perambulation (q.v.), and was superseded by the introduction of the practice of accurate surveying and of recording.

See also Process (Patent law).

Process server. Person authorized by law (e.g. sheriff) to serve process papers on defendant.

Processuum continuand o/præsàm kantinyuwêndow/. In old English practice, a writ for the continuance of process after the death of the chief justice or other justices in the commission of oyer and terminer.

Processus legis est gravis vexatio; executio legis coronat opus /præsàm liyjus ėst gryvës veksëy(h)yow; ëksakywësh(i)yow karowmë ówpes/. The process of the law is a grievous vexation; the execution of the law crowns the work. The proceedings in an action while in progress are burdensome and vexatious; the execution, being the end and object of the action, crowns the labor, or rewards it with success.

Procès-verbal. In French law, a true relation in writing in due form of law, of what has been done and said verbally in the presence of a public officer, and what he himself does upon the occasion. It is a species ofquisition of office, and must be signed by the officer.
Prochein am/or prōshēn əmī//. (Spelled, also, prochein amy and prochain amy.) Next friend. As an infant cannot legally sue in his own name, the action must be brought by his prochein ami; that is, some friend (not being his guardian) who will appear as plaintiff in his name.

Prochronism/prək(ə)roʊnˈizəm//. An error in chronology, consisting in dating a thing before it happened.

Prodictus/prəsɪˈkətəs//. Lat. In the Roman law, a girding or preparing for battle. Testamentum in prodictu, a will made by a soldier, while girding himself, or preparing to engage in battle.

Proclaim. To promulgate; to announce; to publish, by governmental authority, intelligence of public acts or transactions or other matters important to be known by the people. To give wide publicity to; to disclose.

Proclamation. The act of publicly proclaiming or publishing; a formal declaration; an avowal. The act of causing some governmental matters to be published or made generally known. A written or printed document in which are contained such matters, issued by proper authority, usually by a high governmental executive (President, Governor, Mayor).

The declaration made by the bailiff, by authority of the court, that something is about to be done.

In equity practice, proclamation made by a sheriff upon a writ of attachment, summoning a defendant who has failed to appear personally to appear and answer the plaintiff’s bill.

Proclamation by lord of manor. In old English law, proclamation made by the lord of a manor (thrice repeated) requiring the heir or devisee of a deceased copyholder to present himself, pay the fine, and be admitted to the estate; failing which appearance, the lord might seize the lands quousque (provisionally).

Proclamation of a fine. The notice or proclamation at common law which was made after the engrossment of a fine of lands, and which consisted in its being openly read in court sixteen times, viz., four times in the term in which it was made, and four times in each of the three succeeding terms, which, however, was afterwards reduced to one reading in each term.

Proclamation of exigents/prɔkləˈmeɪʃən əv ɪɡˈzɪʒəntz//. In old English law, when an exigent was awarded, a writ of proclamation issued, at the same time, commanding the sheriff of the county wherein the defendant dwelt to make three proclamations thereof in places the most notorious, and most likely to come to his knowledge, a month before the outlawry should take place.

Proclamation of rebellion. In old English law, a proclamation to be made by the sheriff commanding the attendance of a person who had neglected to obey a subpœna or attachment in chancery. If he did not surrender himself after this proclamation, a commission of rebellion issued.

Proclamation of recusants/prɔkləˈmeɪʃən əv ˈreɪkəˈzentz//. A proclamation whereby recusants were formerly convicted, on non-appearance at the assizes.

Proclamator/prɔkləˈmeɪtər//. An officer of the English court of common pleas.

Pro confesso/prəw kɑnˈfɛsəw//. For confessed; as confessed. A term applied to a bill in equity, and the decree founded upon it, where no answer is made to it by the defendant. Under rules practice, this has been replaced by a default for want of prosecution. Fed.R.Civ.P. 55(a).

Pro consilio/prəw ˈkɔnsɪl(ə)ˈjoʊw//. For counsel given. An annuity pro consilio amounts to a condition, but in a feoffment or lease for estate, etc., it is the consideration, and does not amount to a condition; for the state of the land by the feoffment is executed, and the grant of the annuity is executory.

Pro-consult/prəwˈkɔnˈsəlt//. Lat. In the Roman law, originally a consil which whose command was prolonged after his office had expired. An officer with consular authority, but without the title of "consul." The governor of a province.

Pro corpore regni/prəw ˈkɔrprər ɾəˈnai//. In behalf of the body of the realm.

Procreation. The generation of children.

Proctor/prəˈkɔtər//. One appointed to manage the affairs of another or represent him in judgment. A procurator, proxy, or attorney. Formerly, an officer of the admiralty and ecclesiastical courts whose duties and business correspond exactly to those of an attorney at law or solicitor in chancery. See also Power of attorney; Procuration; Proxy.

Procurecy/prəˈkɜrəsɛɪ//. The writing or instrument which authorizes a procurator to act.

Procureure/prəkʊˈrɛri//. Lat. To take care of another's affairs for him, or in his behalf; to manage; to take care of or superintend.

Procuration/prəˈkɜrəʃən//. Lat. Management of another's affairs by his direction and in his behalf; procuration; agency.

Procuration est exhibito sumptuum necessarium facta prelatiis, qui dieceses peragrandi, ecclesias subjectas visitant/prəˈkɜrəʃən əˈfas ˈfæktə pəˈrɛdɡrændi, ɛkˈklɛsɪəs suˈbɛktəs vɪˈzɪtənt//. Procuration is the providing of necessary services for the bishops, who, in traveling through their dioceses, visit the churches subject to them.

Procuration/prəˈkɜrəʃən//. Agency; proxy; the act of constituting another's attorney in fact. The act by which one person gives power to another to act in his place, as he could do himself. Action under a power of attorney or other constitution of agency. Indorsing a bill or note "by procuration" is doing it as proxy for another or by his authority. The use of the word procuration (usually, per procurationem, or abbreviated to per proc. or p. p.) on a promissory note by an agent is notice that the agent has but a limited authority to sign.
An express procuration is one made by the express consent of the parties. An implied or tacit procuration takes place when an individual sees another managing his affairs and does not interfere to prevent it. Procurations are also divided into those which contain absolute power, or a general authority, and those which give only a limited power.

Also, the act or offence of procuring women for lewd purposes.

See also Proctor.

Procurationem adversus nulla est prescriptio /prɔkɔryɛʃiʃɛnɔm advɛɾsas ʁala ɛʃ praskrɪpʃi(ly)ow/. There is no prescription against procuration.

Procuration fee, or money /prɔkɔryɛʃyan fιʃ/mˈɛni/. In English law, brokerage or commission allowed to scriveners and solicitors for obtaining loans of money.

Procurator /prɔkɔryɛʃdɔ/. In the civil law, a proctor; a person who acts for another by virtue of a procuration.

In old English law, an agent or attorney; a bailiff or servant. A proxy of a lord in parliament.

In ecclesiastical law, one who collected the fruits of a benefice for another. An advocate of a religious house, who was to solicit the interest and plead the causes of the society. A proxy or representative of a parish church.

See Proctor; Procuration.

Procurationes ecclesie parochialis /prɔkɔryɛʃarɔtɔrfiʃ ʁikliʒiʃi pɛɾbɛkliʃəʃiʃ/. The old name for churchwardens.

Procutor in rem suam /prɔkɔryɛʃdɔr in ʁɛm s(y)ɔwam/. Proctor (attorney) in his own affair, or with reference to his own property. This term is used in Scotch law to denote that a person is acting under a procuration (power of attorney) with reference to a thing which has become his own property.

Procuratorium /prɔkɔryɛʃariœm/. In old English law, the procuratory or instrument by which any person or community constituted or delegated their procurator or proctors to represent them in any judicial court or cause.

Procurator illicitus /prɔkɔryɛʃdɔr laʃdɔʃ/. In the civil law, one who by command of another institutes and carries on for him a suit. Procurator is properly used of the attorney of actor (the plaintiff), defensor of the attorney of reus (the defendant). It is distinguished from advocatus, who was one who undertook the defence of persons, not things, and who was generally the patron of the person whose defence he prepared, the person himself speaking it. It is also distinguished from cognitor who conducted the cause in the presence of his principal, and generally in cases of citizenship; whereas the procurator conducted the cause in the absence of his principal.

Procurator negotiorum /prɔkɔryɛʃdɔr ʃaɡowʃiʃɔram/. In the civil law, an attorney in fact; a manager of business affairs for another person.

Procurator provinciæ /prɔkɔryɛʃdɔ prɔvɛɾniʃliʃiʃ/. In Roman law, a provincial officer who managed the affairs of the revenue, and had a judicial power in matters that concerned the revenue.

Procuratrix /prɔkɔryɛʃtræks/. In old English law, a female agent or attorney in fact.

Procure. To initiate a proceeding; to cause a thing to be done; to instigate; to contrive, bring about, effect, or cause. To persuade, induce, prevail upon, or cause a person to do something. Rose v. Hunter, 155 Cal. App.2d 319, 317 P.2d 1027, 1030. To obtain, as a prostitute, for another. Procure comnotes action and means to cause, acquire, gain, get, obtain, bring about, cause to be done. Ford v. City of Caldwell, 79 Idaho 499, 321 P.2d 589, 593. To find or introduce; said of a broker who obtains a customer. To bring the seller and the buyer together so that the seller has an opportunity to sell. See also Finder; Pandor; Procure.

Procurement contract. A government contract with a manufacturer or supplier of goods or machinery or services under the terms of which a sale is made to the government. Such contracts are governed by government regulations, standard forms, etc.

Procurer /prɔkɔryʃar/. One who prevails upon, induces or persuades a person to do something. One who procures for another the gratification of his lusts; a pimp; a panderer. One who solicits trade for a prostitute or lewd woman. One that procures the seduction or prostitution of girls. The offense is punishable by statute. See e.g. Model Penal Code, § 251.2.

One who uses means to bring anything about, especially one who does so secretly and corruptly. As regards solicitation of crime, see Solicitation.

Procureur /prɔkɔyr(y)ʊər/. In French law, an attorney; one who has received a commission from another to act on his behalf. There were in France two classes of procureurs: Procureurs ad negociat, appointed by an individual to act for him in the administration of his affairs; persons invested with a power of attorney; corresponding to “attorneys in fact.” Procureurs ad lites were persons appointed and authorized to act for a party in a court of justice. These corresponded to attorneys at law (now called, in England, “solicitors of the supreme court”). The order of procureurs was abolished in 1791, and that of avoués established in their place.

Procureur de la république /prɔkɔyr(y)ʊər də la rɛpyblik/. (Formerly procureur du roi.) In French law, a public prosecutor, with whom rests the initiation of all criminal proceedings. In the exercise of his office (which appears to include the apprehension of offenders) he is entitled to call to his assistance the public force (posse comitatus); and the officers of police are auxiliary to him.

Procureur general, or Imperial /prɔkɔyr(y)ʊər jɛnaral /ˈɪmpɛrɪʃəl/. In French law, an officer of the imperial court, who either personally or by his deputy prosecuted every one who was accused of a crime.
according to the forms of French law. His functions were apparently confined to preparing the case for trial at the assizes, assisting in that trial, demanding the sentence in case of a conviction, and being present at the delivery of the sentence. He had a general superintendence over the officers of police and of the fuges d'instruction, and he required from the procureur du roi a general report once in every three months.

Procurate cause. The proximate cause; the cause originating a series of events, which, without break in their continuity, result in the accomplishment of the prime object. The inducing cause; the direct or proximate cause. Substantially synonymous with “efficient cause.”

A broker will be regarded as the “procurate cause” of a sale, so as to be entitled to commission, if his efforts are the foundation on which the negotiations resulting in a sale are begun. A cause originating a series of events which without break in their continuity result in accomplishment of prime objective of the employment of the broker who is producing a purchaser ready, willing and able to buy real estate on the owner’s terms. Mohamed v. Robbins, 23 Ariz. App. 195, 531 P.2d 926, 930.

See also Producant cause; Proximate cause.

Pro defuncto emptorum /prów dəfɛkt(y)u(m)pɔrəm/. For want (failure) of purchasers.

Pro defuncto exitus /prów dəfɛkt(y)u(m)ɛgzɛdəs/. For, or in case of, default of issue.

Pro defuncto heredis /prów dəfɛkt(y)u(m)ɔrɛdɪs/. For want of an heir.

Pro defuncto justitiae /prów dəfɛkt(y)u(m) ʃastɪʃlijɪjə/. For defect or want of justice.

Pro defendente /prów dɛfɛndɛntɪjə/. For the defendant. Commonly abbreviated “pro def.”

Pro derelicto /prów dɛrɛlɪktəʊ/. As derelict or abandoned. A species of usucaption in the civil law.

Prodigal. Wasteful; extravagant. A spendthrift.

In civil law, a person who, though of full age, is incapable of managing his affairs, and of the obligations which attend them, in consequence of his bad conduct, and for whom a curator is therefore appointed. See Prodigus.

Pro dignitate regali /prów dɪɡnəˈtiːdi ɾəɡəˈliː/. In consideration of the royal dignity.

Prodigus /prɒdɪɡəs/. Lat. In Roman law, a prodigal; a spendthrift; a person whose extravagant habits manifested an inability to administer his own affairs, and for whom a guardian might therefore be appointed.

Prodigton /prɒdɪɡʃən/. Treason; treachery.

Proditor /prɒdɪtər/. A traitor.

Proditorio /prɒdɪtɔˈriːoʊ/. Treasonably. This is a technical word formerly used in indictments for treason, when they were written in Latin.

Pro diviso /prów ˈdɛvɪsəʊ/. As divided; i.e., in severality.

Pro domino /prów dəˈmənəʊ/. As master or owner; in the character of master.

Pro donato /prów dəˈnætəʊ/. As a gift; in case of gift; by title of gift. A species of usucaption in the civil law.

Pro dote /prów dɔtɪ/; As a dowry; by title of dowry. A species of usucaption.

Produce /prʊd(ə)ˈjuːs/. n. The product of natural growth, labor, or capital. Articles produced or grown from or on the soil, or found in the soil.

Produce /prʊd(ə)ˈjuːs/. v. To bring forward; to show or exhibit; to bring into view or notice; as, to present a play, including its presentation in motion pictures. To produce witnesses or documents at trial in obedience to a subpoena (Fed.R.Civ.P. 45; Fed.R.Crim.P. 17); or to be compelled to produce materials subject to discovery rules (Fed.R.Civ.P. 37; Fed.R.Crim.P. 16).

To make, originate, or yield, as gasoline. To bring to the surface, as oil.

To yield, as revenue. Thus, sums are “produced” by taxation, not when the tax is levied, but when the sums are collected.

Producant /prʊd(ə)ˈjuːs(ə)nt/. The party calling a witness under the old system of the English ecclesiastical courts.

Producing. Bring about; to cause to happen or take place, as an effect or result. Strong v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., Tex.Civ.App., 170 S.W.2d 786, 798.

Producing cause. Respecting broker’s commission, is act which, continuing in unbroken chain of cause and effect, produces result. Schebesta v. Stewart, Tex. Civ.App., 37 S.W.2d 781, 786. A producing cause of an employee’s death for which compensation is sought is that cause which, in a natural and continuous sequence, produces the death, and without which death would not have occurred. Jones v. Traders & General Ins. Co., 140 Tex. 599, 169 S.W.2d 160, 162. A producing cause is an efficient, existing, or contributing cause which, in natural and continuing sequence, produces the injury or damage complained of, if any. O. M. Franklin Serum Co. v. C. A. Hoover and Son, Tex.Civ.App., 437 S.W.2d 613, 619. See also Procurare cause; Proximate cause.

Product. With reference to property, term refers to proceeds; yield; income; receipts; return. Goods produced or manufactured, either by natural means, by hand, or with tools, machinery, chemicals, or the like. “Product” means something produced by physical labor or intellectual effort or something produced naturally or as result of natural process as by generation or growth. Minnesota Power & Light Co. v. Personal Property Tax, Taxing Dist., City of Fraser, School Dist. No. 693, 289 Minn. 64, 182 N.W.2d 685, 691.
Production. Process or act of producing. That which is produced or made; i.e. goods. Fruit of labor, as the productions of the earth, comprehending all vegetables and fruits; the productions of intellect, or genius, as poems and prose compositions; the productions of art, as manufactures of every kind.

Production of suit. In common law pleading, the formula, "and therefore [or thereupon] he brings his suit," etc., with which declarations always conclude. This referred to the production by the plaintiff of his secta or suit, i.e. persons prepared to confirm what he had stated in the declaration.

Productio secta /prôdoʃiʃ(ɔ)yɔw sêkˈtiːy/ In old English law, production of suit; the production by a plaintiff of his secta or witnesses to prove the allegations of his count.

Product liability. Refers to the legal liability of manufacturers and sellers to compensate buyers, users, and even bystanders, for damages or injuries suffered because of defects in goods purchased. A tort which makes a manufacturer liable if his product has a defective condition that makes it unreasonably dangerous to the user or consumer. Cobbins v. General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp., 3 Ill.App.3d 379, 279 N.E.2d 443, 446.

Although the ultimate responsibility for injury or damage in a products liability case most frequently rests with the manufacturer, liability may also be imposed upon a retailer, occasionally upon a wholesaler and/or middleman, a bailor or lessor, and infrequently upon a party wholly outside the manufacturing and distributing process, such as a certifier. This ultimate responsibility may be imposed by an action by the plaintiff against the manufacturer directly, or by a claim for indemnification, asserted by way of a cross-claim or third party claim by the retailer or wholesaler, or others who might be held liable for the injury caused by a defective product. Under modern principles of products liability, and with the elimination of privity requirements in most instances, recovery is no longer limited to the purchaser of the product, or even to a user, but may extend to the non-user; the bystander who is injured or damaged by a defective product, for example. However, the term "products liability" normally contemplates injury or damage caused by a defective product, and if loss occurs as a result of a condition on the premises, or as a result of a service, as distinguished from loss occasioned by a defective product, a products liability claim does not ordinarily arise, even though a product may be involved.

See also Intended use doctrine; Privity; Strict liability; Warranty.

Product liability insurance. Type of insurance coverage which protects manufacturers and suppliers when claims are made for injuries and damage incurred in the use of their goods or products.

Pro emptore /prôw em(ɔ)pɔˈriː/. As a purchaser; by the title of a purchaser. A species of usucaption.

Pro facto /prôw ʃaktɔ/. For the fact; as a fact; considered or held as a fact.

Pro falso clamore suō /prôw fɔˈlo(t)sɔw klɔmˈɔri s(ɔ)yˈuʃ/. A nominal amercement of a plaintiff for his false claim, which used to be inserted in a judgment for the defendant. Obsolete.

Profane. Irreverence toward God or holy things; writing, speaking, or acting, in manifest or implied contempt of sacred things. Town of Torrington v. Taylor, 59 Wyo. 137, 219 P.2d 621, 624; Duncan v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 42 F.2d 128, 133. That which has not been consecrated.

Profanity. Irreverence towards sacred things; particularly, an irreverent or blasphemous use of the name of God. Vulgar, irreverent, or coarse language. It is a federal offense to utter an obscene, indecent, or profane language on the radio. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1464. See also Obscenity.

Proficium /prôfikˈʃiːum/. Lat. In the civil law, which that descends to us from our ancestors.

Profer or Profert /prôfɔr/ In old English law, an offer or proffer, an offer or endeavor to do in an action, by any man concerned to do so. A return made by a sheriff of his accounts into the exchequer, a payment made on such return. See Profert in curia.

Profert in curia /prôfɔrt ən kjuˈriːa/ L. Lat. (Sometimes written profert in curiam.) He produces in court. In old practice, these words were inserted in a declaration, as an allegation that the plaintiff was ready to produce, or did actually produce, in court, the deed or other written instrument on which his suit was founded, in order that the court might inspect the same and the defendant hear it read. The same formula was used where the defendant pleaded a written instrument.

An allegation formally made in a pleading, where a party alleged a deed, that he showed it in court, it being in fact retained in his own custody. But by virtue of the allegation, the deed was then constructively in possession of the court. The profer of any recorded instrument, as letters patent, was equivalent to annexing a copy. This result did not occur, however, in the case of other documents, such as a note.

Profess. To make open declaration of, to make public declaration or avowal.

Professio juris /prôʃiʃ(ɔ)yɔw ʃjuˈɾiː/ In conflicts and contract law, a recognition of the right of parties to a contract to stipulate in the document the law which will govern their contract.

Profession. A vocation or occupation requiring special, usually advanced, education and skill; e.g. law or medical professions. Also refers to whole body of such profession.

The labor and skill involved in a profession is predominantly mental or intellectual, rather than physical or manual.

The term originally contemplated only theology, law, and medicine, but as applications of science and learning are extended to other departments of affairs, other vocations also receive the name, which implies professed attainments in special knowledge as distinguished from mere skill.

Act of professing; a public declaration respecting something. Profession of faith in a religion.

Professional association. Any group of professional people organized to practice their profession together, though not necessarily in corporate or partnership form. A group of professionals organized for education, social activity, lobbying and the like; e.g. bar or medical association. See also Corporation (Professional).

Professional corporation. See Corporation.

Professional responsibility. See Canon; Code of Professional Responsibility.

Proffer. To offer or tender, as, the production of a document and offer of the same in evidence.

Proffered evidence. See Proffer.

Proficua /profi'kiuva/. L. Lat. In old English law, profits; especially the "issues and profits" of an estate in land.

Profit. Most commonly, the gross proceeds of a business transaction less the costs of the transaction; i.e. net proceeds. Excess of revenues over expenses for a transaction; sometimes used synonymously with net income for the period. Gain realized from business or investment over and above expenditures.

Profit means accession of good, valuable results, useful consequences, avail, gain, as an office of profit, excess of returns over expenditures or excess of income over expenditure. U. S. v. Mintzes, D.C.Md., 304 F.Supp. 1305, 1312.

The benefit, advantage, or pecuniary gain accruing to the owner or occupant of land from its actual use; as in the familiar phrase "rents, issues and profits," or in the expression "mesne profits."

A division sometimes made of incorporeal hereditaments. Profits are divided into profits à prendre and profits à rendre (q.v.).

Community of profits. See that title.

Gross profit. The difference between sales and cost of goods sold, but excluding expenses and taxes. See also Gross income.

Mesne profits. Intermediate profits; that is, profits which have been accruing during two given periods. Value of use or occupation of land during time it was held by one in wrongful possession and is commonly measured in terms of rents and profits. Thus, after a party has recovered the land itself in an action of ejectment, he frequently brings another action for the purpose of recovering the profits which have been accruing or arising out of the land between the time when his title to the possession accrued or was raised and the time of his recovery in the action of ejectment, and such an action is thence termed an "action for mesne profits."

Net profit. The amount arrived at by deducting from total sales the cost of goods sold and all expenses. See also Net income; Net profits.

Operating profit. The profit arrived at by deducting from sales all expenses attributable to operations but excluding expenses and income related to non-operating activities such as interest payments.

Paper profit. Profit not yet realized as derived from an appreciation in value of an asset not yet sold.

Profit and loss. The gain or loss arising from goods bought or sold, or from carrying on any other business, the former of which, in bookkeeping, is placed on the creditor's side; the latter on the debtor's side. See also Profit and loss account; Profit and loss statement.

Profit à prendre /prófád à próndar/. Called also "right of common." A right exercised by one man in the soil of another, accompanied with participation in the profits of the soil thereof. A right to take a part of the soil or produce of the land. A right to take from the soil, such as by logging, mining, drilling, etc. The taking (profit) is the distinguishing characteristic from an easement.

Right of "profit à prendre" is a right to make some use of the soil of another, such as a right to mine metals, and it carries with it the right of entry and the right to remove and take from the land the designated products or profit and also includes right to use such of the surface as is necessary and convenient for exercise of the profit. Costa Mesa Union School Dist. of Orange County v. Security First Nat. Bank, 254 Cal.App.2d 4, 62 Cal.Rptr. 113, 118.

Profit à rendre /prófád a ron'dar/. Such as is received at the hands of and rendered by another. The term comprehends rents and services.

Surplus profits. Within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the declaration of corporate dividends other than from such profits, means the excess of receipts over expenditures, or net earnings or receipts, or gross receipts, less expenses of operation. Of a corporation, the difference over and above the capital stock, debts, and liabilities.

Undistributed profits. Profits which have not been distributed to the stockholders in the form of dividends though earned by the corporation. See also Undistributed profits tax.

Undivided profits. See that title.

Profit and loss account. A transfer account of all income and expense accounts which is closed into the surplus account of a corporation or the capital account of a partnership.

Profit and loss statement. A statement showing the income and expenses of a business over a stated time; the difference being the profit or loss for the period. See also Income statement.

Profiteering. Taking advantage of unusual or exceptional circumstances to make excessive profits; e.g. selling of scarce or essential goods at inflated prices during time of emergency or war.

Profit margin. Sales minus all expenses as a single amount. Frequently used to mean the ratio of sales minus all operating expenses divided by sales.

Profit-sharing plan. A plan established and maintained by an employer to provide for the participation in his profits by his employees or their beneficiaries. In order to qualify for tax benefits, the plan must provide a definite predetermined formula for allocating the contributions made to the plan among the participants and for distributing the funds accumulated under the plan after a fixed number of years, the attainment of a stated age, or upon the prior occurrence of some event such as layoff, illness, disability, retirement, death, or severance of employment. Such plans are regulated by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA).

Pro forma /prów fórmə/. As a matter of form or for the sake of form. Used to describe accounting, financial, and other statements or conclusions based upon assumed or anticipated facts.

The phrase "pro forma," in an appealable decree or judgment, usually means that the decision was rendered, not on a conviction that it was right, but merely to facilitate further proceedings. Cramp & Sons S. & E. Bldg. Co. v. Turbine Co., 228 U.S. 645, 33 S.Ct. 722, 57 L.Ed. 1003.

Progenor /prówjímrə/. Lat. In the civil law, a grandson-in-law.

Progressive tax. A type of graduated tax as in the case of the federal income tax which applies higher tax rates as the income increases.

Pro hac vice /prów hæk váysi/. For this turn; for this one particular occasion. A lawyer may be admitted to practice in a jurisdiction for a particular case only.

Prohibetur ne quils facat in suo quod nocere possit allenò /prów(h)əbįdįri nȳ kwis fāshįdyi in s(y)ųwōw kwō̆ nōsāri pōsā ąlijįnyōw/. It is forbidden for any one to do or make on his own [land] what may injure another's.

Prohibit. To forbid by law; to prevent;—not synonymous with "regulate."

Prohibited degrees. Those degrees of relationship by consanguinity which are so close that marriage between persons related to each other in any of such degrees is forbidden by law; e.g. brother and sister.

Prohibito de vaso, directa parti /prów(h)əbįsh(ly)ow dį̆ wąstow, dąřęktą pārdy̆y/. A judicial writ which was formerly addressed to a tenant, prohibiting him from waste, pending suit.

Prohibition. Inhibition; interdict. Act or law prohibiting something, as 18th Amendment to U.S.Const. (1920) prohibited the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal purposes (such Prohibition Amendment was repealed by 21st Amendment in 1933).

Writ or process. Prohibition is that process by which a superior court prevents an inferior court or tribunal possessing judicial or quasi-judicial powers from exceeding its jurisdiction in matters over which it has cognizance or usurping matters not within its jurisdiction to hear or determine. The Florida Bar, Fla., 329 So.2d 301, 302. A writ issued by a superior court, directed to the judge and parties of a suit in an inferior court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution of the same, upon a suggestion that the cause originally, or some collateral matter arising therein, does not belong to that jurisdiction, but to the cognizance of some other court.

The writ of prohibition is the counterpart of the writ of mandamus.

Pro illa vice /prów įlə váysi/. For that turn.

Pro indefenso /prów įndaʃfəns(t)sow/. As uncommended; as making no defense.

Pro indíviso /prów índavązyow/. As undivided; in common. The joint occupation or possession of lands. Thus, lands held by coparceners are held pro indíviso; that is, they are held undividedly, neither party being entitled to any specific portions of the land so held, but both or all having a joint interest in the undivided whole.

Pro interesse suo /prów ñarəsési s(y)ųwōw/. According to his interest; to the extent of his interest. Thus, a third party may be allowed to intervene in a suit pro interesse suo.

Examination pro interesse suo. When a person claims to be entitled to an estate or other property sequestered, whether by mortgage, judgment, lease, or otherwise, or has a title paramount to the sequestration, he should apply to the court to direct an inquiry whether the applicant has any, and what interest in the property; and this inquiry is called an "examination pro interesse suo." Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U.S. 276, 4 S.Ct. 27, 28 L.Ed. 145; Hitz v. Jenks, 185 U.S. 155, 22 S.Ct. 598, 46 L.Ed. 851.

Projectio /prajėkš(h)yow/. Lat. In old English law, a throwing up of earth by the sea.

Projet. Fr. In international law, the draft of a proposed treaty or convention.

Projet de loi. A bill in a legislative body.

Pro lesione fidel /prów liyzihiyównii fiydiyái/. For breach of faith.

Pro legato /prów lągydyow/. As a legacy; by the title of a legacy. A species of usucaption.

Prolem ante matrimonium natam, ita ut post legititam, lex civiliis succedere factit in harreditate parentum; sed prolem, quam matrimonium non parit, succedere non solit lex anglorium /prówləm ānti liə̆trəmənw(ly)ə̆m néydə̆m, ādyə̆ āt pōwst lajĭdə̆məm, lę̆ kə̆ sə̆sə̆sə̆də̆ fę̆ssə̆d in har̆̆də̆t̆də̆dĭyə̆ parə̆ntə̆m; sed prówləm, kwĭm liə̆trəmənw(ly)ə̆m nə̆n pə̆rə̆t̆, sə̆sə̆sə̆də̆rə̆ nə̆n sə̆jə̆nə̆ lę̆ kə̆ æŋglŏrmə̆/. The civil law permits the offspring born before marriage, provided such offspring be afterwards legitimized, to be the heirs of their parents; but the law of the English does not suffer the offspring not produced by the marriage to succeed.

Proles /prówliydz/. Lat. Offspring; progeny; the issue of a lawful marriage. In its enlarged sense, it signifies any children.

Proles sequitur sortem paternam /prówliydz sə̆kwə̆də̆r sə̆rdə̆m pŏtə̆rmə̆/. The offspring follows the condition of the father.

Proletariat, proletariate /prówlətəriə̆/.* tə̆r/. The class or body of proletarians. The class of unskilled laborers, without property or capital, engaged in the lower grades of work. The class of proletarii (see the next title); the lowest stratum of the people of a country, consisting mainly of the waste of other classes, or of those fractions of the population who, by their isolation and their poverty, have no place in the established order of society.

Proletarius /prɔwɛləˈtɛriəs/. Lat. In Roman law, a proletary; a person of poor or mean condition; one among the common people whose fortunes were below a certain valuation; one of a class of citizens who were so poor that they could not serve the state with money, but only with their children (proles).

Prolicide /prɔˈwɪlsəd/. A word used to designate the destruction of the human offspring. Jurists divide the subject into feticide, or the destruction of the fetus in utero, and infanticide, or the destruction of the new-born infant. See also Abortion.

Prolixity /prɔˈwɪlkstɪdɪ/. The unnecessary and superfluous statement of facts in pleading or in evidence.

Prolocutor /prɔˈlɒk(ə)r/odar/prɔˈwɪlk(ə)r/odar/. In ecclesiastical law, the president or chairman of a convocation. The speaker of the house of lords is called the prolocutor. The office belongs to the lord chancellor by prescription.

Prolongation /prɔˈwɪlnɡəˈʃən/. Time added to the duration of something; an extension of the time limited for the performance of an agreement.

Pro majori cautela /prɔw məˈdʒɔrə kəˈtɪlə/. For greater caution; by way of additional security. Usually applied to some act done, or some clause inserted in an instrument, which may not be really necessary, but which will serve to put the matter beyond any question.

Promatertera /prɔˈmɔstərdərə/. Lat. In the civil law, a maternal great-aunt; the sister of one’s grandmother.

Promatertera magna /prɔˈmɔstərdərə məɡnə/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-great-aunt.

Promise. A declaration which binds the person who makes it, either in honor, conscience, or law, to do or forbear a certain specific act, and which gives to the person to whom made a right to expect or claim the performance of some particular thing. A declaration, verbal or written, made by one person to another for a good or valuable consideration, in the nature of a covenant by which the promisor binds himself to do or forbear some act, and gives to the promisor a legal right to demand and enforce a fulfillment. An express undertaking, or agreement to carry a purpose into effect. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co. v. Clalborne-Reno Co., C. C. A. Iowa, 64 F. 2d 224.

Promise is an undertaking, however expressed, either that something shall happen, or that something shall not happen, in the future. Plumbing Shop, Inc. v. Pitts, 67 Wash. 2d 514, 408 P. 2d 382, 384.

A promise is a manifestation of intention to act or refrain from acting in a specified way, so made as to justify a promisee in understanding that a commitment has been made. Restatement, Second, Contracts § 2.

While a “promise” is sometimes loosely defined as a declaration by any person of his intention to do or forbear from anything at the request or for the use of another, it is to be distinguished, on the one hand, from a mere declaration of intention involving no engagement or assurance as to the future, and, on the other, from “agreement,” which is an obligation arising upon reciprocal promises, or upon a promise founded on a consideration.

See also Aleatory promise; Conditional promise; Illusory promise; Implied promise; Offer; Raising a promise.

Commercial law. An undertaking to pay and it must be more than an acknowledgment of an obligation. U. C. C. § 3-102(1)(c).

Fictitious promise. Sometimes called “implied promises,” or “promises implied in law,” occur in the case of those contracts which were invented to enable persons in certain cases to take advantage of the old rules of pleading peculiar to contracts, and which are not now of practical importance.

Illusory promise. A promise in which the promisor does not bind himself to do anything and hence it furnishes no basis for a contract because of the lack of consideration; e.g. a promise to buy whatever goods the promisor chooses to buy.

Mutual promises. Promises simultaneously made by and between two parties; each promise being the consideration for the other.

Naked promise. One given without any consideration, equivalent, or reciprocal obligation, and for that reason not enforceable at law.

New promise. An undertaking or promise, based upon and having relation to a former promise which, for some reason, can no longer be enforced, whereby the promisor recognizes and revives such former promise and engages to fulfill it.

Parol promise. A simple contract; a verbal promise.

Promise implied in fact. Promise implied in fact is merely tacit promise, one which is inferred in whole or in part from expressions other than words by promisor. Cooke v. Adams, Miss., 183 So. 2d 925, 927.

Promise implied in law. Promise implied in law is one in which neither words nor conduct of party involved are promissory in form or justify inference of promise and term is used to indicate that party is under legally enforceable duty as he would have been, if he had in fact made promise. Cooke v. Adams, Miss., 183 So. 2d 925, 927.

Promise of marriage. A contract mutually entered into by a man and a woman that they will marry each other.

Promise to pay the debt of another. Within the statute of frauds, a promise to pay the debt of another is an undertaking by a person not before liable, for the purpose of securing or performing the same duty for which the party for whom the undertaking is made, continues liable.

Promisee. One to whom a promise has been made.

Promisor. One who makes a promise.

Promissor /prɔˈmɪsər/. Lat. In the civil law, a promiser; properly the party who undertook to do a thing in answer to the interrogation of the other party, who was called the "stipulator."

Promissory /prómas(ó)ri/. Containing or consisting of a promise; in the nature of a promise; stipulating or engaging for a future act or course of conduct.

As to promissory Oath; Representation; and Warranty, see those titles.

Promissory estoppel. That which arises when there is a promise which promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on part of promisee, and which does induce such action or forbearance, and such promise is binding if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of promise. "Moore" Burger, Inc. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., Tex., 492 S.W.2d 934.

Promissory fraud. A promise to perform made at a time when the promisor has a present intention not to perform. It is a misrepresentation of the promisor's frame of mind and is, for that reason a fact which makes it the basis of an action for deceit. It is sometimes called common law fraud.

Promissory note. A promise or engagement, in writing, to pay a specified sum at a time therein limited, or on demand, or at sight, to a person therein named, or to his order, or bearer. A written promise made by one or more to pay another, or order, or bearer, at a specified time, a specific amount of money, or other articles of value. An unconditional written promise, signed by the maker, to pay absolutely and at all events a sum certain in money, either to the bearer or to a person therein designated or his order, at a time specified therein, or at a time which must certainly arrive.

A signed paper promising to pay another a certain sum of money. An unconditional written promise to pay a specified sum of money on demand or at a specified date. Such a note is negotiable if signed by the maker and containing an unconditional promise to pay a sum certain in money either on demand or at a definite time and payable to order or bearer.

U.C.C. § 3–104.

Promissory warranty. In insurance law, a promissory warranty is an absolute undertaking by insured, contained in a policy or in an instrument properly incorporated by reference, that certain facts or conditions pertaining to the risk insured against shall continue, or shall be done or omitted. Reid v. Hardware Mut. Ins. Co. of Carolinas, 252 S.C. 339, 166 S.E.2d 317, 321.

Promote. To contribute to growth, enlargement, or prosperity of; to forward; to further; to encourage; to advance.

Promoter. One who promotes, urges on, encourages, incites, advances, etc. One promoting a plan by which it is hoped to insure the success of a business, entertainment, etc. venture.

The persons who, for themselves or others, take the preliminary steps to the organization of a corporation. Those persons who first associate themselves together for the purpose of organizing the company, issuing its prospectus, procuring subscriptions to the stock, securing a charter, etc. Incorporators. Dick-

Prompt. To act immediately, responding on the instant.

Prompt delivery. Delivery as promptly as possible, all things considered.

Promptly. Adverbial form of the word "prompt," which means ready and quick to act as occasion demands. The meaning of the word depends largely on the facts in each case, for what is "prompt" in one situation may not be considered such under other circumstances or conditions. To do something "promptly" is to do it without delay and with reasonable speed. Application of Beattie, 4 Storey 506, 180 A.2d 741, 744.

Prompt shipment. Shipment within a reasonable time, all things considered.

Promulgare /pró(w)malgré/. Lat. In Roman law, to make public; to make publicly known; to promulgate. To publish or make known a law after its enactment.

Promulgator /pró(w)malgréptor/pramalgrért/. To publish; to announce officially; to make public as important or obligatory. The formal act of announcing a statute or rule of court.

Promutuum /pramywchuwam/. Lat. In the civil law, a quasi contract, by which he who receives a certain sum of money, or a certain quantity of fungible things, which have been paid to him through mistake, contracts towards the payer the obligation of returning him as much.

Pronepos /prównepo/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandson.

Proneptis /prównéptas/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-granddaughter; a niece's daughter.

Pro non scripto /prów nó skriptow/. As not written; as though it had not been written; as never written.

Pronitory /prównówdarri/. First notary. See Prothonotary.

 Pronounce. To utter formally, officially, and solemnly; to declare or affirm; to declare aloud and in a formal manner. In this sense a court is said to "pronounce" judgment or a sentence.

Pronunciation /prónan(í)siyéshan/. L. Fr. A sentence or decree.

Pronurus /prónwra/. Lat. In the civil law, the wife of a grandson or great-grandson.

"Proof" is the establishment by evidence of a requisite degree of belief concerning a fact in the mind of the trier of fact or the court. Calif. Evidence Code.
See also Burden of going forward; Burden of persuasion; Burden of producing evidence; Burden of proof; Clear and convincing proof; Clear evidence of proof; Degree of proof; Evidence; Failure of proof; Offer of proof; Testimony.

_Evidence and proof distinguished._ Proof is the logically sufficient reason for ascertaining to the truth of a proposition advanced. In its juridical sense it is a term of wide import, and comprehends everything that may be adduced at a trial, within the legal rules, for the purpose of producing conviction in the mind of judge or jury, aside from mere argument; that is, everything that has a probative force intrinsically, and not merely as a deduction from, or combination of, original probative facts. But "evidence" is a narrower term, and includes only such kinds of proof as may be legally presented at a trial, by the act of the parties, and through the aid of such concrete facts as witnesses, records, or other documents. Thus, to urge a presumption of law in support of one's case is adducing proof, but it is not offering evidence. "Belief" is a subjective condition resulting from proof. It is a conviction of the truth of a proposition, existing in the mind, and induced by persuasion, proof, or argument addressed to the judgment. Proof is the result or effect of evidence, while evidence is the medium or means by which a fact is proved or disproved, but the words "proof" and "evidence" may be used interchangeably. Proof is the perfection of evidence; for without evidence there is no proof, although there may be evidence which does not amount to proof; for example, if a man is found murdered at a spot where another has been seen walking but a short time before, this fact will be evidence to show that the latter was the murderer, but, standing alone, will be very far from _proof_ of it.

_Affirmative proof._ Evidence establishing the fact in dispute by a preponderance of the evidence.

_Burden of proof._ See that title.

_Degree of proof._ Refers to effect of evidence rather than medium by which truth is established, and in this sense expressions "preponderance of evidence" and "proof beyond reasonable doubt" are used.

_Full proof._ See _Full_.

_Half proof._ See _Half_.

_Negative proof._ See _Positive proof, infra_.

_Positive proof._ Direct or affirmative proof. That which directly establishes the fact in question; as opposed to _negative proof_, which establishes the fact by showing that its opposite is not or cannot be true.

_Preliminary proof._ See _Preliminary_.

_Proof beyond a reasonable doubt._ Such proof as precludes every reasonable hypothesis except that which it tends to support and which is wholly consistent with defendant's guilt and inconsistent with any other rational conclusion. State v. Dubina, 164 Conn. 95, 318 A.2d 95, 97. Such is the required standard of proof in criminal cases.

_Proof evident or presumption great._ As used in constitutional provisions that accused shall be bailable unless for capital offenses when the "proof is evident" or "presumption great," means evidence clear and strong, and which leads well guarded, dispassionate judgment to conclusion that accused committed offense and will be punished capitaly. Ex parte Coward, 145 Tex.Cr.R. 593, 170 S.W.2d 754, 755; Ex parte Goode, 123 Tex.Cr.R. 492, 59 S.W.2d 841.

_Proof of claim._ Statement under oath filed in a bankruptcy proceeding by a creditor in which the creditor sets forth the amount owed and sufficient detail to identify the basis for the claim. Also used in probate proceedings to submit the amount owed by the decedent to the creditor and filed with the court for payment by the fiduciary.

_Proof of debt._ The formal establishment by a creditor of his debt or claim, in some prescribed manner (as, by his affidavit or otherwise), as a preliminary to its allowance, along with others, against an estate or property to be divided, such as the estate of a bankrupt or insolvent, a deceased person or a firm or company in liquidation. See _Proof of claim, supra_.

_Proof of loss._ A formal statement made by the policyowner to the insurer regarding a loss, intended to give insurer enough information to enable it to determine the extent of its liability under a policy or bond.

_Proof of service._ Evidence submitted by a process server that he has made service on a defendant in an action. It is also called a return of service. Fed.R. Civil P. 4.

_Proof of will._ A term having the same meaning as "probate," (q.v.), and used interchangeably with it.

_Standard of proof._ A statement of how convincing the evidence must be in order for a party to comply with his/her burden of proof. The main standards of proof are proof beyond a reasonable doubt (in criminal cases only), proof by clear and convincing evidence, and proof by a preponderance of the evidence.

_Pro opere et labore_ /prów ópari èt labóri/. For work and labor.

_Propagate_ /própagèyt/. To cause to spread.

_Pro partibus liberandis_ /prów párđabs liberèndas/. An ancient writ for partition of lands between co-heirs.

_Propatruus_ /prówpètrúwas/. Lat. In the civil law, a great-grandfather's brother.

_Propatruus magnus_ /prówpètrúwas mágnas/. In the civil law, a great-great-uncle.

_Proper._ That which is fit, suitable, appropriate, adapted, correct. Reasonably sufficient. Peculiar; naturally or essentially belonging to a person or thing; not common; appropriate; one's own. See also _Reasonable_.

_Proper evidence._ Such evidence as may be presented under the rules established by law and recognized by the courts; i.e. admissible evidence; material, relevant evidence.

_Proper feuds._ In feudal law, the original and genuine feuds held by purely military service.
Proper independent advice. As to donor means that he had preliminary benefit of conferring upon subject of intended gift with a person who was not only competent to inform him correctly of its legal effect, but who was so disassociated from interests of donee as to be in position to advise with donor impartially and confidentially as to consequences to donor of his proposed gift.

Proper lookout. Duty imposed on motorist to keep such lookout requires motorist to use care, prudence, watchfulness, and attention of an ordinarily prudent person under same or similar circumstances. Such lookout as person of ordinary care and prudence would have kept under same or similar conditions. Duncan v. Durham, Tex.Civ.App., 356 S.W.2d 377, 380. See also Lookout.

Proper party. As distinguished from a necessary party, is one who has an interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, which may be conveniently settled therein. One without whom a substantial decree may be made, but not a decree which shall completely settle all that may be involved in the controversy and conclude the rights of all the parties who have any interest in the subject of the litigation. See Fed.R.Civ. P. 19.

A proper party is one who may be joined in action but whose nonjoinder will not result in dismissal. Jones Knitting Corp. v. A. M. Pullen & Co., D.C.N.Y., 50 F.R.D. 311, 314. Those without whom cause might proceed but whose presence will allow judgment more clearly to settle controversy among all parties. Cities Service Oil Co. v. Kronewitter, 199 Kan. 228, 428 P.2d 804, 807. See also Parties.

Property. That which is peculiar or proper to any person; that which belongs exclusively to one. In the strict legal sense, an aggregate of rights which are guaranteed and protected by the government. Fulton Light, Heat & Power Co. v. State, 65 Misc.Rep. 263, 121 N.Y.S. 536. The term is said to extend to every species of valuable right and interest. More specifically, ownership; the unrestricted and exclusive right to a thing; the right to dispose of a thing in every legal way, to possess it, to use it, and to exclude every one else from interfering with it. That dominion or indefinite right of use or disposition which one may lawfully exercise over particular things or subjects. The exclusive right of possessing, enjoying, and disposing of a thing. The highest right a man can have to anything; being used to refer to that right which one has to land or tenements, goods or chattels, which no way depends on another man's courtesy.

The word is also commonly used to denote everything which is the subject of ownership, corporeal or incorporeal, tangible or intangible, visible or invisible, real or personal; everything that has an exchangeable value or which goes to make up wealth or estate. It extends to every species of valuable right and interest, and includes real and personal property, easements, franchises, and incorporeal hereditaments, and includes every invasion of one's property right is injurious or wrongful. nach v. General, Cas. Co. of America, 53 Wash.2d 180, 332 P.2d 250, 252, 254.

Property embraces everything which is or may be the subject of ownership, whether a legal ownership, or whether beneficial, or a private ownership. Davis v. Davis, Tex.Civ.App., 495 S.W.2d 607, 611. Term includes not only ownership and possession but also the right of use and enjoyment for lawful purposes. Hoffman v. Kinealy, Mo., 389 S.W.2d 745, 752.

Property, within constitutional protection, denotes group of rights inhering in citizen's relation to physical thing, as right to possess, use and dispose of it. Cereghino v. State By and Through State Highway Commission, 230 Or. 439, 370 P.2d 694, 697.

Goodwill is property, Howell v. Bowden, Tex.Civ. App., 368 S.W.2d 842, 848; as is an insurance policy and rights incident thereto, including a right to the proceeds, Harris v. Harris, 83 N.M. 441, 493 P.2d 407, 408.

Criminal code. “Property” means anything of value, including real estate, tangible and intangible personal property, contract rights, choses-in-action and other interests in or claims to wealth, admission or transportation tickets, captured or domestic animals, food and drink, electric or other power. Model Penal Code, § 223.0. See also Property of another, infra.

Trusts. Under definition in Restatement, Second, Trusts, § 2(c), it denotes interest in things and not the things themselves.

Classification
Property is either: real or immovable; or, personal or movable. Calif.Civil Code, § 657.

See also Chattel; Community property; Intangible property; Interest; Land; Literary property; Lost property; Marital property.

Absolute property. In respect to chattels personal property is said to be "absolute" where a man has, solely and exclusively, the right and also the possession of movable chattels. In the law of wills, a bequest or devise "to be the absolute property" of the beneficiary may pass a title in fee simple. Or it may mean that the property is to be held free from any limitation or condition or free from any control or disposition on the part of others. See Fee simple.

Common property. A term sometimes applied to lands owned by a municipal corporation and held in trust for the common use of the inhabitants. Also property owned jointly by husband and wife under the community system. See Community property, also "Public property", infra.

Community property. See that title.

Ganancial property. See that title.

General property. The right and property in a thing enjoyed by the general owner. See Owner.

Intangible property. Property which cannot be touched because it has no physical existence such as claims, interests, and rights. See also Intangible asset.

Literary property. See Literary.

Mislaid property. Property which an owner has put deliberately in a certain place but owner is unable to remember where he put it, as distinguished from lost property which the owner leaves unwittingly in a place, forgetting its location.
Movable property. Property the location of which can be changed, including things growing on, affixed to, or found in land, and documents although the rights represented thereby have no physical location. "Immovable property" is all other property. Model Penal Code, § 223.0.

Personal property. In broad and general sense, everything that is the subject of ownership, not coming under denomination of real estate. A right or interest in things personal, or right or interest less than a freehold in realty, or any right or interest which one has in things movable.

Generally, all property other than real estate. It is sometimes designated as personality when real estate is termed realty. Personal property also can refer to property which is not used in a taxpayer’s trade or business or held for the production or collection of income. When used in this sense, personal property could include both realty (e.g., a personal residence) and personality (e.g., personal effects such as clothing and furniture).

The term “personal property” in its broadest legal significance includes everything the subject of ownership not being land, or any interest in land, as goods, chattels, money, notes, bonds, stocks and choses in action generally, including intangible property. Bismarck Tribune Co. v. Omdahl, N.D., 147 N.W.2d 903, 906.

Personal property is divisible into (1) corporeal personal property, which includes movable and tangible things, such as animals, furniture, merchandise, etc.; and (2) incorporeal personal property, which consists of such rights as personal annuities, stocks, shares, patents, and copyrights.

Private property. As protected from being taken for public uses, is such property as belongs absolutely to an individual, and of which he has the exclusive right of disposition. Property of a specific, fixed and tangible nature, capable of being in possession and transmitted to another, such as houses, lands, and chattels. Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U.S. 141, 21 S.Ct. 48, 45 L.Ed. 126.

Property of another. Includes property in which any person other than the actor has an interest which the actor is not privileged to infringe, regardless of the fact that the actor also has an interest in the property and regardless of the fact that the other person might be precluded from civil recovery because the property was used in an unlawful transaction or was subject to forfeiture as contraband. Property in possession of the actor shall not be deemed property of another who has only a security interest therein, even if legal title is in the creditor pursuant to a conditional sales contract or other security agreement. Model Penal Code, § 223.0.

Property tax. See that title.

Public property. This term is commonly used as a designation of those things which are publici juris (q.v.), and therefore considered as being owned by "the public," the entire state or community, and not restricted to the dominion of a private person. It may also apply to any subject of property owned by a state, nation, or municipal corporation as such. See also State property, infra.

Qualified property. Property in chattels which is not in its nature permanent, but may at some times subsist and not at other times; such for example, as the property a man may have in wild animals which he has caught and keeps, and which are his only so long as he retains possession of them. Any ownership not absolute. See also Special property, infra.

Real property. Land, and generally whatever is erected or growing upon or affixed to land. Also rights issuing out of, annexed to, and exercisable within or about land. A general term for lands, tenements, and hereditaments; property which, on the death of the owner intestate, passes to his heir.

Real or immovable property consists of: Land; that which is affixed to land; that which is incidental or appurtenant to land; and that which is immovable by law; except that for the purposes of sale, emblements, industrial growing crops and things attached to or forming part of the land, which are agreed to be severed before sale or under the contract of sale, shall be treated as goods and be governed by the regulating the sales of goods. Calif.Civil Code, § 658.

Separate property. See that title.

Special property. Property of a qualified, temporary, or limited nature; as distinguished from absolute, general, or unconditional property. Such is the property of a bailee in the article bailed, of a sheriff in goods temporarily in his hands under a levy, of the finder of lost goods while looking for the owner, of a person in wild animals which he has caught. See also Qualified property, supra.

State property. The State is the owner of all land below tide water, and below ordinary high-water mark, bordering upon tide water within the State; of all land below the water of a navigable lake or stream; of all property lawfully appropriated by it to its own use; of all property dedicated to the State; and of all property of which there is no other owner. Calif.Civil Code, § 670.

Tangible property. All property which is touchable and has real existence (physical) whether it is real or personal.

Unclaimed property. The majority of states have adopted the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act.

Property right. A generic term which refers to any type of right to specific property whether it is personal or real property, tangible or intangible; e.g. professional baseball player has valuable property right in his name, photograph and image, and such right may be saleable by him. Cepeda v. Swift & Co., C.A.Mo., 415 F.2d 1205, 1206.

Property settlement. Agreement made between spouses as an incident of a divorce proceeding. Such agreement may contain provisions for division of property owned by the spouses during the marriage, periodic payments by the husband or a lump sum payment or one time conveyance of property. See Equitable distribution.

Property tax. A tax levied on both real and personal property; the amount of the tax being dependent on the value of the property, generally expressed as a uniform rate per thousand of valuation. See Ad valorem.

Property torts. Such involve injury or damage to property, real or personal, in contrast to "personal torts" which involve injuries to person, i.e., the body, reputation, or feelings. Travelers Indem. Co. v. Chumbley, Mo.App., 394 S.W.2d 418, 422.

Propinquium et consanguinei /prœpiŋkway eʔ kounsængwini-yay/. Lat. The nearest of kin to a deceased person.

Propinquium /prœpiŋkwium/; Propinquus remotum; et remotus remotorem /prœpiŋkwiar aksklyjyûwdat prœpiŋkwam, prœpiŋkwas ramîowdan, ət ramîowdas ramîowshiyorum/. He who is nearer excludes him who is near; he who is near, him who is remote; he who is remote, him who is remover.

Propinquity /prœpiŋkwadiy/. Kindred; parentage; nearness; proximity.

Propior sobrino, propior sobrina /prœwpɪˈpiːrɔbrɪno, prœwpɪˈpiːrɔbrɪnə/. In the civil law, the son or daughter of a great-uncle or great-aunt, paternal or maternal.

Propios, proprios /prœwpɔrɪoʊs/. In Spanish law, certain portions of ground laid off and reserved when a town was founded in Spanish America as the unalienable property of the town, for the purpose of erecting public buildings, markets, etc., or to be used in any other way, under the direction of the municipality, for the advancement of the revenues or the prosperity of the place.

Propone /prœpwɔn/. In ecclesiastical and probate law, to bring forward for adjudication; to exhibit as basis of a claim; to proffer for judicial action.

Proponent /prœpwɔnənt/. The propounder of a thing. Thus, the proponent of a will is the party who offers it for probate (q.v.).

Propionate /prœprɔʃnæt/. Adjusted to something else according to certain rate of comparative relation. See Pro rata.

Proposal. An offer; something proffered. An offer, by one person to another, of terms and conditions with reference to some work or undertaking, or for the transfer of property, the acceptance whereof will make a contract between them. Signification by one person to another of his willingness to enter into a contract with him on the terms specified in the offer.

The initial overt acts or preliminary statement for consideration by the other party to a proposed agreement. As so used, it is not an offer but it contemplates an offer and hence, its acceptance does not ripen into a contract. See also Offer.

Proposito indefinita equpoliet universali /prɔpɔziˈʃiːɒw iːdənˈfæniːdə ikwpɔlɪɛt juːwˈnɜːsərvɛlɛj/. An indefinite proposition is equivalent to a general one.

Proposition. An offer to do a thing. See Offer; Proposal.

Propositus /prɔpoʊˈzədəs/. Lat. The person proposed; the person from whom a descent is traced.

Pro possessione presumitur de jure /prɔw poʊˈzɛʃiljɔˈwni præz(ə)yʊmsdər dɪˈjʊri/. From possession arises a presumption of law.

Pro possessor /prɔw poʊˈwɔzəˈɔrɪ/. As a possessor; by title of a possessor.

Pro possessore habetur qui dolo injuriave desilis possidere /prɔw poʊˈwɔzəˈɔrɪ hablɪdər kwoʊˈweɪ dəˈliːwəl ənˈjʊriəviˈvi desɪˈliːst poʊˈsɪdɪˌri/. He is esteemed a possessor whose possession has been disturbed by fraud or injury.

Pro posse suo /prɔw pɔˈsɪɡ s(ə)yʊˈwɔw/. To the extent of his power or ability.

Propound. To offer; to propose. An executor or other person is said to propound a will when he takes proceedings for obtaining probate solemn form.

Propria persona /prɔwˈprɪə prəˈsɔrənə/. See In propria persona.

Propriedad /prɔwpriˈeɡaɾ/-. In Spanish law, property.

Proprietary, n. /prəprəˈreɪtər̩/-. A proprietor or owner; one who has the exclusive title to a thing; one who possesses or holds the title to a thing in his own right; one who possesses the dominion or ownership of a thing in his own right. The grantees of Pennsylvania and Maryland and their heirs were called the proprietaries of those provinces.

Proprietary, adj. /prəprəˈreɪtər̩/-. Belonging to ownership; belonging or pertaining to a proprietor; relating to a certain owner or proprietor. Made and marketed by a person or persons having the exclusive right to manufacture and sell such; as a proprietary article, medicine, or food.

Proprietary articles. Goods manufactured under some exclusive individual right to make and sell them. The term is so used in the internal revenue laws of the United States. Ferguson v. Arthur, 117 U.S. 482, 6 S.Ct. 861, 29 L.Ed. 979.

Proprietary capacity. Used to describe functions of a city or town when it engages in a business-like venture as contrasted with a governmental function. See Proprietary functions, below.

Proprietary capital. In accounting, that account in a sole proprietorship which represents the original investment in addition to accumulated profits.

Proprietary duties. Those duties of a municipality which are not strictly governmental duties. See also Governmental duties.

Proprietary functions. Functions which city, in its discretion, may perform when considered to be for best interests of citizens of city. Sarmiento v. City of Corpus Christi, Tex.Civ.App., 465 S.W.2d 813, 816, 819. Acts done by municipality for general betterment and improvement of such. Municipal corporations act in two distinct capacities: (1) governmental, legislative or public and (2) proprietary, commercial.
or quasi-private; the “governmental functions” of a municipal corporation are those functions exercised as arm of state, and for public good generally, whereas “proprietary functions” are those exercised for pecuniary benefit and advantage of citizens of municipality. City of Pueblo v. Weed, Colo.App., 570 P.2d 15, 18. See Governmental duties.

Proprietary governments. This expression is used by Blackstone to denote governments granted out by the crown to individuals, in the nature of feudalatory principalities, with inferior royalties and subordinate powers of legislation such as formerly belonged to the owners of counties palatine. 1 Bl.Comm. 108.

Proprietary interest. The interest of an owner of property together with all rights appurtenant thereto such as the right to vote shares of stock and right to participate in managing if the person has a proprietary interest in the shares. Stroh v. Blackhawk Holding Corp., 48 Ill.2d 471, 272 N.E.2d 1. Proprietary lease. Type of lease in cooperative apartment between owner-cooperative and tenant-stockholder.

Proprietary rights. Those rights which an owner of property has by virtue of his ownership. Asch v. First Nat. Bank in Dallas, Tex.Civ.App., 304 S.W.2d 179, 183; Douglas v. Taylor, Tex.Civ.App., 497 S.W.2d 308, 310. See also Proprietary interest, supra.

Proprietat /prɔprɪˈstætʃəs/. Lat. In the civil and old English law, property; that which is one’s own; ownership. Proprietas nuda, naked or mere property of ownership; the mere title, separate from the usufruct.

Proprietas plena, full property, including not only the title, but the usufruct, or exclusive right to the use.

Proprietæ totius navis carinæ causam sequitur /prɔprɪˈstætʃəs tɔwʃiːʃ ɡeɪvæs karəniː kɔzəm sɛkwəðə/. The property of the whole ship follows the condition of the keel. If a man builds a vessel from the very keel with the materials of another, the vessel belongs to the owner of the materials.

Proprietat /prɔprɪˈstætʃəs/. The French law term corresponding to our “property,” or the right of enjoying and of disposing of things in the most absolute manner, subject only to the laws.

Proprietor /prɔprɪˈstɔr/. One who has the legal right or exclusive title to anything. In many instances it is synonymous with owner.
total limits of all available insurance. Putnam v. New Amsterdam Cas. Co., 48 Ill.2d 71, 269 N.E.2d 97, 99. Provision in insurance policy to the effect that the insurer will not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss than the amount of the policy bears to the total amount of insurance on the property.

Pro-rata distribution clause. In fire insurance, provision in the policy that the amount of insurance written shall apply to each parcel of property in the proportion which the value of each parcel bears to the total value of all the property insured under the policy.

Pro rate. To divide, share, or distribute proportionally; to assess or apportion pro-rata.

The act of adjusting, dividing or prorating property taxes, interest, insurance premiums, rental income, etc., between buyer and seller proportionately to time of use, or the date of closing. See also Pro rata.

Pro re nata /prɔːrɪ rɪə nətə/. For the affair immediately in hand; for the occasion as it may arise; adapted to meet the particular occasion. Thus, a course of judicial action adopted under pressure of the exigencies of the affair in hand, rather than in conformity to established precedents, is said to be taken pro re nata.

Prorogation /prɔwˈrɑɡəʃən/. Prolonging or putting off to another day. The discontinuation or termination of a session of the legislature, parliament, or the like. In English law, a prorogation is the continuance of the parliament from one session to another, as an adjournment is a continuation of the session from day to day.

In the civil law, the giving time to do a thing beyond the term previously fixed.

Prorogue. To direct suspension of proceedings of parliament; to terminate a legislative session.

Pro salute anime /prɔw ˈsælət(ə)ˈwʌdli əˈnæmi/. For the good of his soul. All prosecutions in the ecclesiastical courts are pro salute anime; hence it will not be a temporal damage founding an action for slander that the words spoken put any one in danger of such a suit.

Proscribed /prɔskɹəbd/. In the civil law, among the Romans, a man was said to be "proscribed" when a reward was offered for his head; but the term was more usually applied to those who were sentenced to some punishment which carried with it the consequences of civil death.

Pro se /prɔw ˈsiː/. For himself; in his own behalf; in person. Appearing for oneself, as in the case of one who does not retain a lawyer and appears for himself in court.

Prosecute. To follow up; to carry on an action or other judicial proceeding; to proceed against a person criminally. To "prosecute" an action is not merely to commence it, but includes following it to an ultimate conclusion. See also Prosecution.

Prosecuting attorney. The name of the public officer who is appointed or elected in each judicial district, circuit, or county, to conduct criminal prosecutions on behalf of the State or people. Federal prosecutors represent the United States in prosecuting federal crimes.

A locally elected officer who represents the State in securing indictments and informations and in prosecuting criminal cases. Also called district attorney or State’s attorney.

See also Prosecutor.

Prosecuting witness. The private person upon whose complaint or information a criminal accusation is founded and whose testimony is mainly relied on to secure a conviction at the trial. In a more particular sense, the person who was chiefly injured, in person or property, by the act constituting the alleged crime (as in case of robbery, assault, criminal negligence, bastardy, and the like), and who instigates the prosecution and gives evidence.

Prosecutio legis est gravis vexatio, executio legis coronat opus /prɔskeptjoʊˈwʊsh(i)ˈəʊw lɪˈɪʒəs əst gɹɑːvɪs vɛksɛˈθəʃ(i)ˈəʊw, ɛkskɛˈθəʃ(i)ˈəʊw lɪˈɪʒəs kərəʊnət əʊpʊs/. Litigation is vexatious, but an execution crowns the work.

Prosecution. A criminal action; a proceeding instituted and carried on by due course of law, before a competent tribunal, for the purpose of determining the guilt or innocence of a person charged with crime. U. S. v. Reisinger, 128 U.S. 398, 9 S.Ct. 99, 32 L.Ed. 480. The continuous following up, through instrumentalities created by law, of a person accused of a public offense with a steady and fixed purpose of reaching a judicial determination of the guilt or innocence of the accused.

By an extension of its meaning, "prosecution" is also used to designate the government (state or federal) as the party proceeding in a criminal action, or the prosecutor, or counsel; as when we speak of "the evidence adduced by the prosecution."

The term is also used respecting civil litigation, and includes every step in action, from its commencement to its final determination. The Brazil, C.C.A. Ill., 134 F.2d 929, 930.

The Fifth Amendment, U.S.Const., requires that all prosecutions for infamous federal crimes (i.e. federal offenses carrying a term of imprisonment in excess of one year) be commenced by grand jury indictment. This requirement, however, does not apply to state prosecutions for such crimes, which may be prosecuted on the basis of an information. Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516, 4 S.Ct. 111, 28 L.Ed.2d 232.

Malicious prosecution. See that title.

Prosecutor. One who prosecutes another for a crime in the name of the government. One who instigates a prosecution by making affidavit charging a named person with the commission of a penal offense on which a warrant is issued or an indictment or information is based. One who instigates the prosecution upon which an accused is arrested or who prefers an accusation against the party whom he suspects to be guilty. A "prosecutor" is one who takes charge of case and performs function of trial lawyer for the people, as does a district attorney. People v. Pohl, 47 Ill.App.2d 232, 197 N.E.2d 759, 764. See also Prosecuting attorney.
Prosecutor

Private prosecutor. One who sets in motion the machinery of criminal justice against a person whom he suspects or believes to be guilty of a crime, by laying an accusation before the proper authorities, and who is not himself an officer of the government. Compare Public prosecutor below.

Prosecutor of the pleas. This name was given in New Jersey to the county officer who was charged with the prosecution of criminal actions, corresponding to the “district attorney” or “county attorney” in other states.

Public prosecutor. An officer of government (such as a state’s attorney or district attorney) whose function is the prosecution of criminal actions, or suits partaking of the nature of criminal actions. See also Prosecuting attorney.

Prosecutrix /prəskjuːtrɪs/. A female prosecutor.

Prosequi /prəskwɛi/. Lat. To follow up or pursue; to sue or prosecute. See Nolle prosequi.

Prosequitur /prəskwɛtɔr/. Lat. He follows up or pursues; he prosecutes. See Non pros.

Prosecer /prəswɛsər/. Lat. In the civil law, a father-in-law’s father; a grandfather of wife.

Proscerus /prəsɔːrəs/. Lat. In the civil law, a wife’s grandfather.

Pro socio /prəʊ səʊʃ(ə)ʊ/ow/. For a partner, the name of an action in behalf of a partner. A title of the civil law.

Pro solido /prəʊ səld(ə)ʊdəʊ/ow/. For the whole; as one; jointly; without division.

Prospective /prəsˈpektɪv/. Looking forward; contemplating the future.

Prospective damages /prəsˈpektɪv ˈdeɪmædʒəs/. See Damages.

Prospective law /prəsˈpektɪv ˈlɔɪ/. One applicable only to cases which shall arise after its enactment.

Prospectus. A document published by a company or corporation, or by persons acting as its agents or assignees, setting forth the nature and objects of an issue of shares, debentures, or other securities created by the company or corporation, and inviting the public to subscribe to the issue. The principal document of a registration statement required by law to be furnished an investor prior to any purchase. It is the document which is to contain all material facts concerning a company and its operations so that a prospective investor may make an informed decision as to the merit of an investment. The content of the prospectus is governed by federal securities laws and regulations.

The term “prospectus” means any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, letter, or communication, written or by radio or television, which offers any security for sale or confirms the sale of any security. Securities Act of 1933, § 1.

See also Red herring.

The word in its most general sense means the act of setting one’s self to sale, or of devoting to infamous purposes what is in one’s power: as, the prostitution of talents or abilities; the prostitution of the press, etc.

Prostitution. Prostitution is performing an act of sexual intercourse for hire, or offering or agreeing to perform an act of sexual intercourse or any unlawful sexual act for hire. The act or practice of a female of prostituting or offering her body to an indiscriminate intercourse with men for money or its equivalent.

A person is guilty of prostitution, a petty misdemeanor, if he or she: (a) is an inmate of a house of prostitution or otherwise engages in sexual activity as a business; or (b) loiters in or within view of any public place for the purpose of being hired to engage in sexual activity. Model Penal Code, § 251.2.

See also Mann Act; Pander.

Pro tanto /prəʊ ˈtæntəʊ/. For so much; for as much as may be; as far as it goes. Partial payment made on a claim. Commonly used in eminent domain cases to describe a partial payment made for the taking by the government without prejudice to the right of the petitioner to bring action for the full amount that he claims is due.

Protection. In old English law, a writ by which the king might, by a special prerogative, privilege a defendant from all personal and many real suits for one year at a time, and no longer, in respect of his being engaged in his service out of the realm. In former times the name “protection” was also given to a certificate given to a sailor to show that he was exempt from impressment into the royal navy.

In mercantile law, the name of a document generally given by notaries public to sailors and other persons going abroad, in which it is certified that the bearer therein named is a citizen of the United States.

In public commercial law, a system by which a government imposes customs duties upon commodities of foreign origin or manufacture when imported into the country, for the purpose of stimulating and developing the home production of the same or equivalent articles, by discouraging the importation of foreign goods, or by raising the price of foreign commodities to a point at which the home producers can successfully compete with them. See Protective tariff.

Protectio transactio subjectio, et subjectio protectione /prəˈtræksətʃ(ə)ʊ ˌtræktʃ(ə)ʊˌsɪdʒ(ə)ʊˌprəˈtekʃ(ə)ʊˌsɪdʒ(ə)ʊˌnəm/. Protection draws with it subjectio, and subjectio protectione. The protection of an individual by government, as condition of his submission to the laws, and such submission on the other hand entitles the individual to the protection of the government.

Protective committee. A group of security holders or preferred stockholders appointed to protect the interest of their group at a time of liquidation or reorganization of corporation.

Protective custody. The condition of one who is held under force of law for his own protection as in the case of a material witness whose safety is in jeopardy, or one who is drunk in public though public drunkenness may not be a criminal offense, or of a person who because of mental illness may harm himself or others.

Protective order. Any order or decree of a court whose purpose is to protect a person from further harassment or service of process or discovery; see e.g. Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(c); Fed.R.Crim.P. 16(d)(1). See also Gag order.

Protective tariff. A law imposing duties on imports, with the purpose and the effect of discouraging the importation of competitive products of foreign origin, and consequently of stimulating and protecting the home production of the same or equivalent articles.

Protective trust. A species of spendthrift trust (q.v.) containing a provision for forfeiture to protect against creditors and voluntary alienation.

Pro tem /ˈprow tɛm/. Abbreviation for "pro tempore" which means, literally, for the time being. Hence, one who acts as a substitute on a temporary basis is said to serve pro tem.

Pro tempore /ˈprow tɛmpərɪ/. For the time being; temporarily; provisionally.

Protest. A formal declaration made by a person interested or concerned in some act about to be done, or already performed, whereby he expresses his dissent or disapproval, or affirms the act against his will. The object of such a declaration is generally to save some right which would be lost to him if his implied assent could be made out, or to exonerate himself from some responsibility which would attach to him unless he expressly negatived his assent.

A notarial act, being a formal statement in writing made by a notary under his seal of office, at the request of the holder of a bill or note, in which it is declared that the bill or note described was on a certain day presented for payment (or acceptance), and that such payment or acceptance was refused, and stating the reasons, if any, given for such refusal, whereupon the notary protests against all parties to such instrument, and declares that they will be held responsible for all loss or damage arising from its dishonor. It denotes also all the steps or acts accompanying dishonor necessary to charge an indorser.

A protest is a certificate of dishonor made under the hand and seal of a United States consul or a notary public or other person authorized to certify dishonor by the law of the place where dishonor occurs. It may be made upon information satisfactory to such person. U.C.C. § 3–509. See also Dishonor.

A formal declaration made by a minority (or by certain individuals) in a legislative body that they dissent from some act or resolution of the body, usually adding the grounds of their dissent. The term, in this sense, refers to such a proceeding in the English House of Lords.

The formal statement, usually in writing, made by a person who is called upon by public authority to pay a sum of money, in which he declares that he does not concede the legality or justice of the claim or his duty to pay it, or that he disputes the amount demanded; the object being to save his right to recover or reclaim the amount, which right would be lost by his acquiescence. Thus, taxes may be paid under "protest."

The name of a paper served on a collector of customs by an importer of merchandise, stating that he believes the sum charged as duty to be excessive, and that, although he pays such sum for the purpose of getting his goods out of the custom-house, he reserves the right to bring an action against the collector to recover the excess.

In maritime law, a written statement by the master of a vessel, attested by a proper judicial officer or a notary, to the effect that damage suffered by the ship on her voyage was caused by storms or other perils of the sea, without any negligence or misconduct on his own part.

Notice of protest. A notice given by the holder of a bill or note to the drawer or indorser that the bill has been protested for refusal of payment or acceptance. U.C.C. § 3–509.

Waiver of protest. As applied to a note or bill, a waiver of protest implies not only dispensing with the formal act known as "protest," but also with that which ordinarily must precede it, viz., demand and notice of non-payment.

Protestando /ˈprɔstətændɔ/. L. Lat. Protesting. The emphatic word formerly used in pleading by way of protestation. See Protestation.

Protestants. Those who adhered to the doctrine of Luther; so called because, in 1528, they protested against a decree of the emperor Charles V and of the diet of Spires, and declared that they appealed to a general council. The name is now applied indiscriminately to all the sects, of whatever denomination, who have seceded from the Church of Rome.

Protestation. In old pleading, the indirect affirmation or denial of the truth of some matter which cannot with propriety or safety be positively affirmed, denied, or entirely passed over. The exclusion of a conclusion.

Protest fee. Fee charged by banks or other financial agencies when items (such as checks) presented for collection cannot be collected.

Prothonotary /ˈprɔðənəˈtəri/ /ˈprɔθərə/. The title given (in e.g. Pennsylvania) to an officer who officiates as principal clerk of some courts.

Protocol /ˈprɔtəkəl/. A brief summary of the text of a document. Also, the minutes of a meeting which are generally initialed by the parties present to reflect their assent to the accuracy of the minutes.

A section of the Department of State charged with the preparation of agreements and treatises. Commonly, term refers to the etiquette of diplomacy and the ranking of officials.

Protutor /ˈprɔtʊtər/. Lat. In the civil law, he who, not being the tutor of a minor, has administered his property or affairs as if he had been, whether he thought himself legally invested with the authority of a tutor or not. He who marries a woman who is tutrix becomes, by the marriage, a protutor. The protutor is equally responsible with the marriage.

Protut a patet per recordum /próut péydst pár rákordám/. As appears by the record. In the Latin phraseology of pleading, this was the proper formula for making reference to a record.

Provable. Susceptible of being proved.

Prove. To establish or make certain; to establish a fact or hypothesis as true by satisfactory and sufficient evidence. Lawson v. Superior Court In and For Los Angeles County, 155 Cal.App.2d 755, 318 P.2d 812, 814. The word "prove" as used in legal matters and proceedings means to establish, to render or make certain. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Flowers, Tex.Civ. App., 336 S.W.2d 907, 914. See also Proof.

Prover. In old English law, a person who, being indicted of treason or felony, and arraigned for the same, confessed the fact before plea pleaded, and appealed or accused others, his accomplices, in the same crime, in order to obtain his pardon.

Provide. To make, procure, or furnish for future use, prepare. To supply; to afford; to contribute.

Provided. The word used in introducing a proviso (q.v.). Ordinarily it signifies or expresses a condition; but this is not invariable, for, according to the context, it may import a covenant, or a limitation or qualification, or a restraint, modification, or exception to something which precedes.

Provided by law. This phrase when used in a constitution or statute generally means prescribed or provided by some statute.

Province. The district into which a country has been divided; as, the province of Quebec in Canada. More loosely, a sphere of activity or a profession such as medicine or law.

Provincialis /pravínshiýélá/. Lat. In the civil law, one who has his domicile in a province.

Provision. Foresight of the chance of an event happening, sufficient to indicate that any present undertaking upon which its assumed realization might exert a natural and proper influence was entered upon in full contemplation of it as a future possibility.

In commercial law, funds remitted by the drawer of a bill of exchange to the drawer in order to meet the bill, or property remaining in the drawer's hands or due from him to the drawer, and appropriated to that purpose.

Provisional. Temporary; preliminary; tentative; taken or done by way of precaution or ad interim.

Provisional committee. A committee appointed for a temporary occasion.

Provisional court. A federal court with jurisdiction and powers governed by the order from which it derives its authority. A provisional court established in conquered or occupied territory by military authorities, or the provisional government, is a federal court deriving its existence and all its powers from the federal government.
